

Bahá'ís are complicit in genocide.

This will be uncomfortable for many Bahá'ís... especially those with truly good hearts. But neutrality and silence in the face of injustice support tyranny. Of all people, Bahá'ís should know this.

<https://www.bbc.com/news/articles/cde3eyzdr63o>

In what kind of world can one preach justice and claim to stand for truth, while remaining silent about the slaughter of children just a few miles away? Shame on those who defend such hypocrisy.

There are many kind-hearted Bahá'ís who feel a deep unease about this... and they should. That discomfort is not weakness. It is your conscience. It is reason, trying to speak the truth.

You cannot, on one hand, denounce the atrocities in Iran, and on the other, turn away from genocide unfolding right before your eyes. That contradiction is not neutrality. It is hypocrisy. And those who numb the hearts of the kind and the compassionate should be ashamed.

Singing 'Kumbaya' in circles, quoting scripture, and exchanging emails from within ivory towers, while children are being butchered outside your door, is this what truth looks like?

If you claim to belong to the 'Holy Land', then the suffering in that land is your problem too. Just as you speak out for justice in Iran, in Ukraine, or anywhere else, you must speak out here as well. Anything less is complicity.

Bahá'ís are fortunate, most of the world barely knows who they are. They live safely in a comfortable bubble, untouched by scrutiny. But never before has the world been so united in its moral outrage and those who speak of 'unity' day and night are choosing, willfully, to remain outside of it.

Go test it for yourself. I dare you to bring up this issue with your Local Spiritual Assembly. Watch the reactions. Witness the hypocrisy.

Here is a heroine, one of your own, who stood up for justice. And what became of her? She was cast out. Banished from your circle. Thrown out of the very community she tried to hold accountable.....

<https://www.palquest.org/en/biography/14231/sadhj-nassar>

Collaboration Between Israeli Officials and the Baha'i Community

while the propagation of the Baha'i Faith is prohibited in Haifa, a strong correlation viewed among Israel and the Baha'i community as a political tool rather than a genuine religious movement. In this article, we report the more aspects of these supports in detailed. Due to the differences between Bahau'llah and his brother Sobh Azal, the Ottoman government exiled him to the port of Acre in the north of Palestine and he was buried there. At the same time, his family members and other few followers immigrated to Palestine and settled there, but in order not to face the opposition of the Palestinian Muslim people, he pretended to be a Muslim and even 'Abdu'l-Bahá (Baha'u'llah's son and successor) sometimes became the Imam of the Muslim congregations. During the First World War, he helped British soldiers against the Ottoman Muslim government. He was accused of espionage for the benefit of England and was subject to the death penalty, but he was saved by the intervention of the British government. In addition, he gave a lot of help to the Jews to buy Palestinian lands. At that time, he did not oppose Lord Balford's declaration to form a Jewish state in Palestine. Later, Maxwell, Shoghi Effendi's wife, stated: "The fate of us Baha'is and Israelis is linked like the links of a chain."

1-Baha'i expressions of support for the Jewish state

After 'Abdu'l-Bahá, a new aspect of the Bahá'í Faith was presented. In fact, the organizational structure of the Bahá'í Faith was established with the help of the associates of Shoghi Effendi, especially his aunt Bahiyyih Khánum (daughter of Bahá'u'lláh) and his wife Rúhíyyih Maxwell, replacing the religious layer of the Bahá'í Faith. These supports and the relationships between the State of Israel and the Bahá'í leadership, and sometimes the Bahá'í community were in circulation to establish an administrative and organizational order named the 'Most Great Order' by Shoghi Effendi. The stages of this organizational process are as follows:

Please note that the term 'Most Great Order' is a translation of 'Názm-i-Badí', which refers to the administrative order of the Bahá'í Faith. If you have any more texts to translate or any other questions, feel free to ask!

-

In December 1948, the third Baha'i leader Shoghi Rabbani stated that Baha'i scriptures had predicted the reestablishment of the Jewish state of Israel.

-

close relationship between Israel and the Baha'i community dates back to when the establishment and growth of Israel state promised by the Baha'i leadership to refrain from proselytizing within the country.

-

Despite their restraint in Israel, Baha'is activity via their media have been developed and gained virtual followers. This multiplier made more easier than the Baha'i propaganda.

-

Shoghi Rabbani limited Baha'i pilgrimages to settle in Israel to only nine days, which was seen as insufficient by some Israeli officials who wanted to showcase the country's progress.

For example, one government official wrote in May 1952:

But the Baha'i leader not only rejected the request but also insisted on this short period for pilgrimage and this law continues until now.

-

The Baha'i leadership discouraged followers, particularly American Baha'is, from moving to Israel.

-

Shoghi Rabbani was careful not to upset the Israeli government or the Jewish public, especially during the sensitive period after the 1948 War.

-

High-ranking Baha'i officials communicated their support for Israel to the state authorities, emphasizing the religious significance of Israel to the Baha'i Faith.

for example, Baha'i International Council member Lawrence Hautz wrote to state officials:

How does a person who considers himself the second leader of a religion that claims to fight oppression and promote the unity of the human world allow himself to predict and issue the path of deportation of the Palestinian people and throw the red carpet under the feet of the occupying Jews?

This immense support of 'Abdu'l-Bahá' for the non-Palestinian Jews and preparing the ground for their occupation is quite clear for the intellectuals and speaks of his hidden connection with the Zionist movements before the establishment of the state of Israel.

-

Israel viewed Baha'i pilgrimages as a means to promote its image of tolerance, democracy, and modernization.

-

Baha'i leaders expressed pride in contributing to Israel's rising prestige and influence worldwide.

In fact, the relationship between the Baha'i community and the state of Israel during the post-independence period, highlighting the Baha'i Faith's support for Israel and the strategic considerations involved in their interactions.

2- Officials of Israel and the Baha'i Community Support

The Israeli government's response to the Baha'i support has been complex. While there isn't a direct statement from the government regarding the Baha'i support mentioned in the historical context you provided, recent developments suggest a legal battle over the classification of Baha'i gardens in Acre:

The Baha'i World Center is involved in a legal dispute with the city of Acre over the classification of the Bahji Gardens as a holy site. The local authorities had formerly granted the gardens a waiver from property taxation, acknowledging their spiritual significance, but subsequently rescinded this waiver, resulting in a substantial yearly tax obligation for the Baha'i fellowship.

Following the tax dispute, the Baha'i World Center has opted to restrict the gardens' entry, confining admittance exclusively to pilgrims.

The municipality's stance is that full tax exemption can only be given to a "house of worship," which traditionally requires a building. Given that the Baha'i belief system does not utilize edifices for worship, the local government contends that the privilege of tax immunity ought to be rescinded.

This situation indicates that while the Baha'i community has historically supported the state of Israel, there are contemporary challenges related to the recognition and treatment of Baha'i holy sites within the country.

3- Baha'is in Haifa Garden and building projects

Baha'i leadership took advantage of Arab flight during the 1948 War to purchase land around the shrine and mansion of Baha'u'llah in Bahji. The Baha'is owned very little land in that location, hindering development. In 1950, Shoghi Rabbani expressed interest in purchasing absentee-owned property in Bahji for beautification efforts.

After negotiations, Israel transferred about 40 acres of Arab absentee-owned land around Baha'u'llah's tomb and shrine to the Baha'is.

The transaction justified by considering the acquired lands as belonging to Arab supporters of excommunicated Baha'is.

This acquisition nearly equaled the total land acquired by the Baha'is in Haifa over the previous 60 years.

The Baha'is restored Baha'u'llah's home in Acre and planned to build a religious hospice.

The iconic Shrine of the Bab on Mount Carmel, with stained-glass windows and a golden-domed superstructure, was completed in 1953.

Israeli officials supported the project, providing tax-free building materials and even donating cement.

The Baha'i Archives, modeled after the Parthenon, was completed between 1955 and 1957. The designer of the grand edifice, the Canadian Baha'i, William Sutherland Maxwell, stood as Shoghi Rabbani's father-in-law.

The Baha'is acquired new lands on Mount Carmel, allowing them to create garden terraces leading down the slope.

Most funding for local projects came from the United States.

The Baha'is received support from the Israeli government in disputes over religious sites.

4- Israel and the Baha'i Community: Support from Leaders

The Baha'i community in Israel held a unique position, receiving favorable treatment from state leaders. Here's why:

4-1-Israel and the Baha'i Community Valued

State leaders recognized the Baha'i presence and appreciated their support.

the Baha'is feinted that according their teaching they had no political or religious ambitions to control the state, so with this trick, they were able to instill the public perception that their presence in this land is non-threatening.

The Baha'i movement has been shown as a soothing influence the regional tensions prevalent in the 1950s.

The Baha'i holy places in Haifa garden were built in such a way that attracted pilgrims from around the world, contributing to tourism and the country's image.

4-2-Government Officials' Support

In a correspondence dated 1954 to the International Baha'i Council in Haifa, Teddy Kollek, who would later become Jerusalem's mayor and served as the Director-General of the Prime Minister's Office during the 1950s, personally conveyed his endorsement and commendation for the Baha'i community's endeavors in Israel. In confidential state discussions, Kollek declared that Prime Minister Ben-Gurion consistently backed the Baha'i Council's initiatives to enhance their sacred sites and provided aid to this devoted group whose efforts adorned the nation. [4]

Yitzhak Ben-Zvi, serving as Israel's President from 1952 to 1963 and a scholar with a keen interest in, and a notable advocate for, non-Muslim minorities in Israel and adjacent countries, facilitated family visits for Baha'is from adversarial nations to their senior kin in Israel. He posited that their faith was rooted in humanistic ideals and that they had consistently expressed positive regard for the Jewish people and demonstrated unwavering fidelity to the State of Israel. [5]

During his visit to the Baha'i Gardens on the slopes of Mount Carmel in October 2019, and participation in the bicentennial celebration of the birth of the Bab, the President of Israel, Reuven Rivlin, explicitly stated:

In this visit, David Ratstein, Ms. Einat Kalisch-Rotem, the Mayor of Haifa, and Ms. Carmel Irandoust, the Secretary-General of the Baha International Community, were also present. [6]

Therefore, this mutual bond and connection continue to resonate among Israel state and Baha'i organization today.

The Baha'is' significant support base in the United States and other countries further influenced the government's positive stance.

Moreover, like other Israeli political figures, he maintained that the Baha'is garnered considerable backing and wielded substantial influence in the United States, notably with a significant Baha'i hub in the prominent city of Chicago.

Therefore, the aggregate of these supports from the superpowers and governments led to the consolidation of the Baha'i presence in this land and the establishment of Baha'i organization in Haifa.

4-3-Shoghi Rabbani's Privacy

Shoghi Rabbani, the Baha'i leader, maintained a private profile. He rarely engaged with Israeli officials, preferring to delegate interactions to his American and Canadian assistants.

Despite this, the Baha'i community's impact on Israel's development remained substantial.

In spite of receiving official recognition, the notably reclusive Baha'i figurehead, Shoghi Rabbani, made minimal efforts to broadcast his endeavors both within and beyond Israel's borders. He refrained from traveling to engage with Baha'i assemblies, seldom consented to media interviews, and was infrequently captured in photographs. It seems he scarcely, if ever, conducted classes or delivered lectures on the Baha'i teachings, neither in Israel nor abroad, and abstained from public appearances. His interactions with Israeli officials were infrequent; he even declined formal invitations to convene with Prime Minister and Defense Minister David Ben-Gurion following the state's establishment, delegating his father-in-law William Sutherland Maxwell and an American aide, Ben Weeden, in his stead. His rationale was a concern for becoming 'lost in a crowd'.

Rabbani did have a brief encounter with Ben-Gurion in Haifa in January 1949, yet the brief 15-minute meeting left little impact on either party. Rabbani typically assigned such social obligations in Israel to his North American aides, especially Leroy Ioas, Lawrence Hautz, and Benjamin and Gladys Weeden. Alongside his spouse Mary Maxwell, these individuals became Rabbani's trusted confidants and prominent Baha'i leaders.

The consistent rapport between government figures and the American and Canadian Baha'is, hailing from western nations amicable towards the state's inception and progress, and symbolizing a potential wellspring of support from their native communities, influenced the government's favorable perception of the Baha'is and significantly contributed to the government's congenial and supportive stance on most Baha'i petitions.

Therefore, the Baha'i community's unique characteristics, government support, and Shoghi Rabbani's discreet leadership contributed to their positive standing in Israel during its early years.

5- Conclusion

In the early of Israel's statehood, both the Jewish people and the Baha'i community experienced significant transitions. For Jews, it was a historic opportunity toward autonomy.

Meanwhile, the Baha'is adapted to new leadership under Shoghi Effendi, who broke with tradition by not designating a successor. His passing marked a pivotal moment, and the Baha'i leadership (UHI) increasingly included Westerners, particularly Americans.

This systematic and organized leadership of the Baha'is proved two points to the world:

1-the Baha'is join an organization not a faith

2-the Baha'i leadership links closely with the gain of Israel and Jew

So, Baha'ism, centered in Israel, maintained a cooperative relationship with state. While the Arab world boycotted Israel, the Baha'is attracted significant capital from the government under the guise of beautifying Holy places and displayed it as an artificial showcase of religious diversity. They also gained legitimacy for their presence in Haifa by promoting the so-called non-interference in politics as part of Baha'i teachings, so they could advertise themselves in the media as a symbol of a humanitarian minority. In this propaganda of feigned victimhood of Baha'is, by showing Israel as a safe haven for all Baha'is, they emphasize their support for the current government and their shared destiny.

The thoughts of the Baha'i religion as a way of opposing the revolutionary Islam against the illegal occupation of the Palestinian land, to create division in the Arab Muslim communities of the region, are the satisfaction and desire of Israel.

1. Pollack, to Asian Division, 'Baha'is', 6 May 1952? (page covered), ISA 5808/16/G.
2. Lawrence A. Hautz, International Baha'i Council, Haifa, Israel, addressee not defined but almost certainly the Ministry of Religions, undated but certainly early 1950s, ISA 5808/G.
3. Tzvi Warhaftig statement in the Knesset, March 1954, quoted by P. Colbi, Ministry of Religious Affairs, Jerusalem, to Mr Leroy Ioas, Secretary General, International Baha'i Council, 29 March 1954, ISA 5808/G.
4. Theodore Kollek, to Leroy Ioas, Secretary General, International Baha'i Council, Haifa, 3 December 1954 ISA 5593/12/G.
5. Yitzhak Ben-Zvi to the Minister of Interior, 19 June 1953, ISA 5808/16/G.
6. news.bahai.org/fa (BWNS)

Remy Rouhani arrested in Qatar

Following the conviction of Remy Rouhani, head of the Bahá'í Assembly in Qatar, questions have arisen regarding his representation of the Bahá'í Faith, his economic activities, and the long-term objectives of the Bahá'í administration in this Muslim-majority country. Some analysts view these behaviors as indicative of duplicity and concealment within the structure of the Bahá'í community.

Original Report and Analysis of Remy Rouhani's Case at Doha Airport

On January 24, 2025, the Bahá'í International Community Office in Geneva published a statement titled: "Unjust One-Month Imprisonment of Qatari Bahá'í Ends: His Record Must Now Be Cleared." The announcement followed the arrest of Remy Rouhani—Chair of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Qatar and Director of the MENA Office of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC), as well as ICQATAR WBO (the national committee for the World Trade Organization in Qatar)—at Doha Airport on December 24, 2024.

Notably, Rouhani had reportedly identified himself as a Muslim on official registration forms to gain access to administrative facilities in Qatar.

Rouhani had previously been convicted in 2021 by a Qatari court for financial misconduct, receiving a sentence of one month in prison and a $27,000 fine. His recent arrest at the airport was for the purpose of enforcing that sentence and transferring him to judicial authorities.

He was tasked with transferring unauthorized funds collected by the National Bahá'í Assembly of Qatar to Bahá'í institutions abroad. Rouhani oversaw the voluntary financial contributions of Bahá'í community members, which were intended to support various promotional and social activities, including:

- Maintenance of Bahá'í cemeteries
- Support for Bahá'í educational and outreach programs (propaganda)
- Assistance to Bahá'í individuals and institutions outside Qatar
- And other related initiatives

These actions constituted violations of Qatari law, as the collection and transfer of funds without financial authorization contravenes the regulations of Qatar's Charity Oversight Authority. Moreover, Bahá'ís are explicitly instructed by their leadership to abide by the laws of the countries in which they reside.

Immediately following Remy Rouhani's arrest, significant pressure was exerted on the Qatari government by Bahá'í institutions, aligned media outlets, and international human rights organizations demanding his release. The Bahá'í administration attempted to reframe the case of an economic offender as one of religious persecution.

In the latest instance of narrative distortion, media sympathetic to the Bahá'í establishment portrayed the conviction of Remy Rouhani, Chair of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Qatar, as an "unjust imprisonment based on belief."

Nevertheless, Qatar resisted these pressures and held Rouhani in custody for the full duration of his one-month sentence.

On April 28, 2025, Rouhani faced new legal proceedings under Qatar's Cybercrime Prevention Law for "publishing news, images, or audio-visual files related to individuals' privacy or family life" on social media platforms.

Qatar Court and the Charges Against Remi Rouhani

According to court documents reviewed by Human Rights Watch and other sources, the charges brought against Remi Rouhani in Doha's court were as follows:

1. Promoting Bahá'í teachings that “cast doubt on core Islamic beliefs, including the finality of Islam”

Filed under Article 259 of Qatar's Penal Code*

1. Violating social norms and values through the use of information technology

Filed under Article 8 of Qatar's Cybercrime Prevention Law (2014)*

1. Publishing content that promotes “subversive” principles

Filed under Article 47(b) of Qatar's Publications and Printing Law (1979)*

These charges were based on social media posts (on Twitter and Instagram) linked to Rouhani's personal phone number and email address. The case was treated as a matter of national security. Rouhani had used seasonal Bahá'í greetings and the dissemination of Bahá'í teachings as a cover for promotional and organizational activities.

Final Verdict Issued by Qatari Court

On August 13, 2025, Remi Rouhani, Chair of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Qatar, was sentenced by the Doha court to five years in prison. The court also rejected the defense attorneys' request for leniency based on Mr. Rouhani's cardiac health issues.

The announcement of the verdict not only provoked reactions from human rights organizations, the international Bahá'í community, and affiliated media outlets, but also—given the nature of the charges—sparked serious questions regarding the conduct and operational strategies of Bahá'í institutions in Muslim-majority countries.

The following section outlines some of these emerging concerns:

1. Concealment in Bahá'í Identity Representation

Some critics of the Bahá'í Faith, citing the historical conduct of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in Acre—where he reportedly presented himself as a Muslim prayer leader—regard such concealment as a recurring trait among Bahá'í leadership. In the recent case, Remi Rouhani similarly identified himself as a Muslim in official Qatari institutions (such as the Chamber of Commerce), despite the fact that dissimulation (aqiyyah) is explicitly prohibited in Bahá'í teachings.

2. Contradiction with Bahá'í Teachings

This discrepancy between personal conduct and official Bahá'í doctrine raises a fundamental question: Was the purpose of such identity presentation to gain access to economic and political opportunities, or to advance Bahá'í institutional interests under the guise of another religious affiliation?

3. Covert Bahá'í Proselytization in a Muslim Country

The promotional activities of Bahá'ís in Qatar—carried out with a degree of concealment—are viewed by some analysts as potentially advantageous to the global Bahá'í administration. These include the mobilization of financial resources, expansion of influence, and consolidation of communication networks within a strategically significant region.

4. Economic Activities and Qatar's Strategic Position

Rouhani's presence in Qatar's Chamber of Commerce—particularly under a misrepresented religious identity—alongside the country's oil-rich status, may signal an attempt to economically leverage official structures. Was this involvement purely commercial, or did it serve broader institutional objectives?

5. Long-Term Goals and Financial Transfer Channels

As head of the Bahá'í National Assembly in Qatar, Remi Rouhani may have operated beyond a conventional business role. This raises unresolved questions about the pathways through which financial revenues were transferred, his connections to international Bahá'í institutions, and Qatar's potential role in the economic map of the Bahá'í administration.

Interestingly, the Bahá'í organization appears to have partially decoded the underlying questions in this strategic chess game with its next move. According to the Instagram page of the Qatar Chamber of Commerce, Farzam Kamal Abadi was hosted by its members on August 28. The presence of a prominent Bahá'í economic figure—right in the midst of Botswana's economic project launches and exactly two weeks after the court ruling on Remi Rouhani in Qatar—marks a new chapter in the Bahá'í approach to the region.

It is also likely that Kamal Abadi's visit served to gather information on the status of Bahá'ís in Qatar and to relay updates to continental advisory boards and other levels of the Bahá'í administrative structure. During this meeting, the board of directors of the Qatar Chamber of Commerce—including Mr. Mohammed bin Ahmed Al-Abdali and Dr. Mohammed Johar Mohammed, alongside Director General Ali Bushrek Mansouri—held talks with Farzam Kamal Abadi, who was introduced as a representative of the Presidency of Botswana.

The stated purpose of the dialogue was to explore economic and trade relations between the State of Qatar and the Republic of Botswana, identify avenues for expanding these ties, and assess targeted investment opportunities beneficial to both nations.

Conclusion

The case of Remi Rouhani extends beyond a legal conviction—it offers a lens into hidden structures, behavioral contradictions, and long-term strategic aims of Bahá'í institutions in Muslim-majority countries. Clarifying these issues requires access to financial records, scrutiny of international affiliations, and a deeper analysis of both official Bahá'í teachings and the practical conduct of its leadership.

This episode once again highlights how, despite its polished rhetoric about “respecting national laws,” the Bahá'í administration has resorted to distortion, international pressure, and narrative manipulation to shield its members from accountability.

How have key Baha'i leaders interpreted scriptures to support Zionist aspirations?

Key Baha'i leaders have interpreted scriptures to support Zionist aspirations by drawing connections between ancient prophecies and the modern-day establishment of Israel and the Baha'i Faith.

Specifically:

- Mirza Hussein Ali Baha (Bahá'u'lláh):
 - Bahá'u'lláh's followers and the Jews worked together, with the Jews extracting predictions from the Old Testament foretelling the appearance of Bahá'u'lláh and his son, Abbas.
 - They claimed that every verse strengthening "the glory of Yehowah" referred to Bahá'u'lláh as the "Savior of the world".
 - They also attributed a large part of the signs and hints in ancient texts to Mount Carmel (Baca), the resting place of Baha, from which "the light of God was revealed and illuminated the universe, at the end of the nineteenth century AD".
 - Bahá'u'lláh is stated to have openly called for a Zionist gathering on the land of Palestine.
 - In his Aqdas Book, which he claimed was a revelation sent down from heaven, he reportedly stated, "This is a day on which the Al-Kalim will win with the lights of the Ancient One... and Zion shouted: The promise has been fulfilled and what is written in the tablets of the Highest, the Mighty, and the Beloved God has appeared".
 - He also complimented Jews on the issue of usury in order to make it easier for them in their banking and commercial activities, when they brought to him a Jew asking him about the issue of usury, so he permitted it for them by saying: "In favor of the servants, we have established usury as all other common transactions among the people and it became a profit to make a good and pure solution, and the Highest Pen (His pen in His divine capacity for the Baha'is) stopped in defining it. Wisdom from Him and His sufficiency for His servants". (The servants of Bahá'u'lláh)
 - A United Nations Fact-Finding Commission reportedly wrote in its report that "The relationship of the Baha'is with the Jews in Palestine is greater than the relationship of Muslims with Palestine and that the Baha'is support the formation of a Zionist state".
 - Shoghi Effendi, his successor, later claimed in 1951 that "His Holiness Al-Baha (Bahá'u'lláh) wrote more than fifty years ago that Palestine must be a national home for the Jews".
- Abbas 'Abdu'l-Bahá:
 - 'Abdu'l-Bahá interpreted Old Testament prophecies as being fulfilled in his age, stating in his negotiations published by Clifford Barney in Paris in 1908 when the Zionist movement was paving the way for the seizure of Palestine: "Good tidings were mentioned in Old Testament that the Jews would gather in the Holy Land and the Jewish nation that had been dispersed in the east, west, south and north would be glorified and concentrated here. These tidings were not fulfilled except in the age of Blessed Beauty (Bahá'u'lláh)".
 - He further predicted that Jewish sects would come from "the end points of the earth and all parts of the world" to migrate to "this holy land," become "owner of lands and villages" and live in them, and they gradually increase until Palestine became their homeland.
 - In one of his books, he referred to "the new heaven" and "new earth" and "the holy city, the new Jerusalem" descending from heaven "in the form of a beautiful nymph, exquisite in beauty, unique among goddesses." He linked this vision to "the recent vision of Saint John" and called it "the city of God and His dwelling place for the pure and holy souls of His servants".
 - The scholars of "Jabha'-al- Olama' fi Al-Azhar A-Sharif" claimed in Al-Aqdas that 'Abdu'l-Bahá intended to unite Muslims, Christians, and Jews on the laws of Moses, interpreting this as a desire to convert Muslims and Christians to Judaism and establish Jewish authority globally.
- Shoghi Effendi:
 - Shoghi Effendi affirmed the fulfillment of prophecies, stating in confirmation of Lord Balfour's statement: "The Lord Balfour's promise for the children of Abraham and his heirs who called upon God and believed in Him was accomplished with the appreciations to the State of Israel, and this was followed by the establishment of deep-rooted relations in the Holy Land between the State of Israel and the International Center for the Baha'i". He reiterated this, saying, "The promise of Lord Balfour to the children of Abraham and his heirs who called upon God and believed in Him was fulfilled thanks to the State of Israel, and this was followed by the establishment of deep-rooted relations in the Holy Land between the State of Israel and the World Center for Baha'is".
 - He also confirmed Bahá'u'lláh's earlier stance, stating to America News magazine in 1951 that "His Holiness Al-Baha (Bahá'u'lláh) wrote more than fifty years ago that Palestine must be a national home for the Jews".
 - Shoghi Effendi's wife stated, "Our future and that of Israel are like links of chains connected to each other".
- Mirzá Abu'l-Faql-i-Gulpáygání (Baha'i missionary):
 - As a leading Baha'i preacher, Mirzá Abu'l-Faql-i-Gulpáygání interpreted Deuteronomy 2:33 from the Torah—"The Lord came from Sinai, and shone for them from Seir, and made Mount Paran shine, and came from the countless mountains of Jerusalem". This interpretation, as stated in page 128 of The Pikes, supports the gathering of the Children of Israel in the Holy Lands.
 - In his book, Al-Durar al-Bahiyya (page 128 and the one that follows it), Abu al-Fadl interpreted this verse to indicate four appearances of God before Judgment Day to complete "the path of the Children of Israel" and their "affair to the Lord, the Majestic (means by the Lord the Majestic, his Lord Baha', just as he means by the quest and resurrection, the hour of Baha's appearance and carrying out the call)". So, he will gather their dispersed people from "the farthest parts of the world," protect them from the harm of all the servants, settle them in the Holy Lands, and restore to them their "ancient inheritances".
 - He explained that these appearances correspond to Moses (from Mount Sinai), Jesus (from Mount Seir), Muhammad (from Mount Paran), and finally "the Chosen Lord (Baha')".
 - Mirza Abd al-Husayn Avareh, a historian of the Baha'i Faith, noted this "secret incorporation" of Jews into the Baha'i Faith, stating in The Baha'i Faith and its Babi Roots, on the authority of Al-Khavari. The treasure of Limits and Rulings, p. 4, that "a great group of Jews from Muzainah Hamadan arrived and embraced the Baha'i Faith" as soon as "the call of Amr (Bha'ism) rose".

These interpretations are presented as significant contributions by Baha'i leaders to the ideological agreement and support for the formation of a Jewish government in Palestine, at a time when Zionist leaders were working to expel Palestinians and relocate Jews from around the world. Professor Mohsen Abdul Hamid noted that Baha'is were "very happy" when international Baha'is achieved "what they wanted in the year 1948: injustice and aggression," considering the founding of Israel a "sign of truthfulness for the claims of their tyrant Mirza Hussein-Ali Baha".

What is the historical and ideological basis for Baha'i-Jewish cooperation?

The Baha'i-Jewish cooperation is deeply rooted in both historical interactions and ideological interpretations of scripture, aimed at achieving mutual goals, including the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine.

Historical Basis:

- Early Planning and Alliance (19th Century): The Baha'i Faith is "created in the secret workshops of racist Zionist thought," working in "close cooperation with its maker". From the early nineteenth century, there was an intent and plan to establish a national homeland for Jews in Palestine, with Bahá'u'lláh and his followers achieving what they hoped for in terms of religious leadership.
- Bahá'u'lláh's Support: Bahá'u'lláh have "openly call[ed] for a Zionist gathering on the land of Palestine". He also accommodated Jews by permitting usury, facilitating their banking and commercial activities, stating, "In favor of the servants, we have established usury as all other common transactions among the people and it became a profit to make a good and pure solution, and the Highest Pen... stopped in defining it".
- A United Nations Fact-Finding Commission observed that "The relationship of the Baha'is with the Jews in Palestine is greater than the relationship of Muslims with Palestine and that the Baha'is support the formation of a Zionist state".
- Abbas 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Predictions and Defense: In 1908, 'Abdu'l-Bahá made predictions about the return of Jews to the Holy Land, stating, "Good tidings were mentioned in Old Testament that the Jews would gather in the Holy Land and the Jewish nation... would be glorified and concentrated here. These tidings were not fulfilled except in the age of Blessed Beauty (Bahá'u'lláh)".
- He foresaw Jewish sects migrating, becoming "owner of lands and villages," and Palestine becoming their homeland. He also defended Jews against negative perceptions, noting that "Muslims and Christians considered the Jews to be devils, enemies of God, and they cursed them, harmed them, killed many of them, and destroyed or plundered their homes".
- Shoghi Effendi's Affirmations: Shoghi Effendi explicitly affirmed the fulfillment of Lord Balfour's promise to the children of Abraham, stating it "was accomplished with the appreciations to the State of Israel," leading to "deep-rooted relations in the Holy Land between the State of Israel and the International Center for the Baha'is". He also claimed in 1951 that "His Holiness Al-Baha (Bahá'u'lláh) wrote more than fifty years ago that Palestine must be a national home for the Jews". His wife said, "Our future and that of Israel are like links of chains connected to each other".
- Jewish Entry into Baha'i Faith: Mirza Abd al-Husayn Avareh, a Baha'i historian, noted a "secret incorporation" of Jews into the Baha'i Faith, with "a great group of Jews from Muzainah Hamadan arrived and embraced the Baha'i Faith" as soon as the Baha'i call rose.
- Large groups of Jews in various cities entered the Baha'i Faith rapidly, which is described as unusual for Jews given their usual adherence to their own religion. The Jews are also credited with having "saved" the Baha'i Faith from destruction by transforming its approach from "armed confrontation with the ruling authorities to work behind closed doors in secret".
- Founding of Israel: Professor Mohsen Abdul Hamid observed that Baha'is were "very happy" when international Baha'is achieved "what they wanted in the year 1948," considering the founding of Israel a "sign of truthfulness for the claims of their tyrant Mirza Hussein-Ali Baha".
- Modern Day Israeli Leadership Acknowledgment: Recent Israeli leaders, Isaac Herzog and Yair Lapid, emphasize the deep connection. Herzog mentions "the Baha'i World Center and the Shrines of the Abdul Baha and his father Baha'u'llah are located here in Akka and Haifa" and highlights "deeply rooted" shared values of tolerance, peace, equality, and justice. Lapid similarly speaks of a "physical connection" due to Holy sites in Israel and a "deep valued-based connection" with shared values.

Ideological Basis (Scriptural Interpretation):

- Interpretation of Old Testament Prophecies: Baha'i leaders and their Jewish collaborators "extracted from the burials of the Old Testament and the predictions of its books what foretells the appearance of Bahá'u'lláh and Abbas (his son)". They interpreted verses about "the glory of Yehowah" as referring to Bahá'u'lláh as the "Savior of the world" and linked prophecies to Mount Carmel, Bahá'u'lláh's resting place.
- Bahá'u'lláh's Aqdas mentions Zion shouting, "The promise has been fulfilled".
- 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Fulfillment Narrative: 'Abdu'l-Bahá stated that Old Testament prophecies concerning the gathering of Jews in the Holy Land were "not fulfilled except in the age of Blessed Beauty (Bahá'u'lláh)". He also referred to "the new heaven," "new earth," and "the holy city, the new Jerusalem," linking this to "the recent vision of Saint John" and calling it "the city of God and His dwelling place for the pure and holy souls of His servants".
- Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl-i-Gulpáygání's Interpretations: As a leading Baha'i preacher, Mírzá Abu'l-Faḍl-i-Gulpáygání interpreted Deuteronomy 2:33 ("The Lord came from Sinai, and shone for them from Seir, and made Mount Paran shine, and came from the countless mountains of Jerusalem") to indicate four divine appearances (Moses, Jesus, Muhammad, and "the Chosen Lord (Baha'is)") leading to the gathering of the Children of Israel in the Holy Lands and the restoration of their "ancient inheritances". This interpretation directly links biblical prophecy to the Baha'i Faith and the Zionist project of settling Jews in Palestine.

These historical and ideological foundations are presented as key to the "ideological agreement with the formation of the government in Palestine".

How do Bahá'í children's classes utilize music and other activities for Religious Conversion?

Bahá'í children's classes utilize music and various other activities as tools for the religious conversion and indoctrination of children, often without their parents' awareness, under the guise of "moral education". Bahá'ís use these methods to convert children of other religions to the Bahá'í faith.

The primary tools mentioned for this purpose include:

- Memorizing prayers and quotations from Bahá'í books.
- Listening to stories of "pseudo prophets".
- Drawing and coloring.
- Playing.
- Singing songs and poems.

Extensive Use of Songs for Conversion: Songs and poems are widely practiced globally for child learning, but are used by Bahá'ís for "proselytizing children and brainwashing them".

A specific "song book," recommended by the Global Institute of Bahá'ís for grade two of their children's classes, is highlighted as a key resource. This song book, available on bahaibooks.com.au, contains numerous songs designed to reinforce Bahá'í beliefs.

Specific examples of how these songs are used include:

- Establishing Bahá'u'lláh as a Prophet and Promised One: Songs like "Baha'u'llah" teach children that Bahá'u'lláh is "the glory of God" and "the promised one of all ages," whose arrival was foretold by earlier prophets.
- Other songs, such as "The Promise" (or "The Promised One"), reiterate that the Báb foretold Bahá'u'lláh's coming and that Bahá'u'lláh "was the prophet of God".
- The song "Who is the prophet of God for today" directly asks and answers, "Baha'u'llah". This is a "deception," as Bahá'ís are claimed to usually state that the era of prophets is over and Bahá'u'lláh is a "manifestation of God" rather than a prophet.
- Fostering Personal Commitment: Songs like "I have found Baha'u'llah" encourage children to keep Bahá'u'lláh in their hearts "forever" from an early age, implying they don't need to tell anyone until they "grow up and openly become a baha'í". "Will You Give Your Life" strengthens a child's commitment to Bahá'u'lláh, suggesting they should not turn back regardless of what their parents might say.
- Indoctrinating into a "New World Order": The song "Yes I believe you" is said to indoctrinate children's minds about a "new world order" or "golden age" that Bahá'ís aim to implement, where the whole world would become Bahá'í and be ruled by Bahá'í institutions like the "world Bahai Commonwealth".
- The song "Takazani" also refers to Bahá'u'lláh (Baha) bringing a "new day," which refers to this new world order.
- Making Children into Teachers and Servants: The song "Look at Me" encourages children to "Be as I am Abdulaha. Abdulbaha Teach the faith Follow me... Serve your Lord". This is seen as making children "teachers of Baha'í religion for their fellow children" and "servants of their Lord Bahá'u'lláh".
- Claiming Bahá'u'lláh as a Universal Savior: The song "The singing win" teaches children that Bahá'u'lláh is the awaited savior for all earlier religions, such as the Mahdi for Muslims and Jesus for Christians.
- Establishing a Chain of Command: The song "The promise" also teaches children about the "next chain of command to follow," including Abdul Baha, Shoghi Effendi, and the Universal House of Justice (a nine-member body in Haifa, Israel, that Bahá'ís are expected to obey).
- Encouraging Conversion: The song "Oh seeker" calls children to "Come out of doubt... Open your eyes... Bahá'u'lláh the lone Persian youth," and states, "God sends again his prophet to man to bring his new plan," framing the children as "seeker[s] of the Baha'í faith".

These children's classes are among the "four core activities every Baha'i must engage in to spread the Baha'i religion," as per the orders of the Universal House of Justice. The use of these songs and activities is brainwashing, deception, and proselytizing children.

The long-term goals and implications of the Bahá'í educational approach, particularly through children's classes utilizing music and other activities, revolve around religious conversion, indoctrination, and the establishment of a "new world order".

The Global Institute of Bahá'ís advises these methods to convert children of other religions to the Bahá'í faith.

Key long-term goals and implications include:

- Conversion and Lifelong Commitment: The classes aim to convert children of Muslim, Christian, and Hindu backgrounds to the Bahá'í faith, often without their parents' knowledge. Songs like "I have found Bahá'u'lláh" teach children to keep Bahá'u'lláh in their hearts "forever" from an early age, implying they don't need to openly declare their Bahá'í identity until they grow up. Another song, "Will You Give Your Life," is said to strengthen a child's commitment to Bahá'u'lláh, ensuring they "don't turn back whatever their parents may say," and "stays with their fake prophet even if at some point in time you pull them out from Bahigh children classes". This is seen as "robbing our children of their faith".
- Indoctrination into a "New World Order": A significant long-term goal is the indoctrination of children's minds regarding a "new world order" or "golden age" that Bahá'ís seek to implement. This future vision, as described, anticipates a time "where the whole world will become Bahai and will be ruled by Bahai institutions like the world Bahai Commonwealth'. Songs like "Yes I believe you" and "Takazani" are used to feed children these concepts, with "new day" referring to this new world order.

- Creating Future Teachers and Servants of the Faith: The children are being prepared to actively spread the Bahá'í religion. Songs such as "Look at Me" encourage children to "Teach the faith," "Follow me," and "Serve your Lord". The source states that children are being made "teachers of Bahai religion for their fellow children" and "servants of their Lord Bahá'u'lláh". These children's classes are identified as one of the "four core activities every bahai must engage in to spread the Baha'i religion" as per the Universal House of Justice.
- Establishing Loyalty to Bahá'í Authority: The educational approach also aims to engrave in children's minds the "next chain of command to follow" within the Bahá'í faith. This includes Abdul Baha, Shoghi Effendi, and the Universal House of Justice (a nine-member body in Haifa, Israel), which "every baha'i has to obey". The implication is to brainwash children to obey this "Baha'i supreme organization based in Israel".
- Universal Acceptance of Bahá'u'lláh as Savior: Songs like "The singing win" teach children that Bahá'u'lláh is the awaited savior for all earlier religions, such as the Mahdi for Muslims and Jesus for Christians, aiming for a universal acceptance of his role.
- Encouraging Active Conversion Efforts: Children are portrayed as "seeker[s] of the Bahai faith," being told to "Open your eyes oh seeker of truth Bahá'u'lláh the lone Persian youth" to accept "his prophet to man to bring his new plan". This is seen as an effort to make children actively seek and accept the Bahá'í faith as adults.

In essence, the long-term goals are to secure conversions, instill deep loyalty to Bahá'í doctrines and institutions, prepare children to propagate the faith, and contribute to the establishment of a global Bahá'í society.

These songs, along with other activities like memorizing prayers, listening to stories, drawing, coloring, and playing, are used to reinforce these beliefs and achieve the goal of converting children to the Bahá'í faith.

Beliefs of Orthodox Baha'i Faith

Courtesy : <https://orthodoxbahaisindia.org/>

The divinely ordained structure for unity and safeguarding the Bahá'í Faith is centered on two inseparable, twin institutions: the Guardianship and the Universal House of Justice. These institutions are considered divine in origin, essential in their functions, and complementary in their aim and purpose.

Their fundamental objective is to ensure the continuity of divinely-appointed authority that flows from the source of the Faith, to safeguard the unity of its followers, and to maintain the integrity and flexibility of its teachings. This Administrative Order is unique and divinely conceived, blending truths from various governmental systems without their inherent objectionable features, and is founded upon God-given verities.

Key components and their roles in this structure include:

- The Guardianship:
 - Divine Guidance: Divine guidance flows through the Master ('Abdu'l-Bahá) and then through the Guardians following the Prophet's ascension.
 - Essential Role: The Guardianship is crucial for the integrity of the Faith; without it, the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh would be "mutilated," its integrity imperiled, stability gravely endangered, and the necessary guidance for the legislative action of elected representatives would be withdrawn.
 - Head of the Universal House of Justice: The Guardian of the Cause of God is its sacred head and a distinguished member for life of that body. If he cannot attend deliberations, he must appoint a representative.
 - Right of Interpretation: The right of interpretation and explanation of the verses of the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, after 'Abdu'l-Bahá's ascension, falls exclusively within the authority of the Guardians. A legitimate Universal House of Justice will never infringe upon this sacred domain.
 - Appointment of Successor: It is incumbent upon the Guardian to appoint his successor during his lifetime to prevent differences from arising after his passing.
 - Authority and Obedience: The "mighty stronghold" of the Faith remains impregnable and safe through obedience to the Guardian. Members of the House of Justice, the Aghsan, the Afnan, and the Hands of the Cause of God are all required to show obedience, submissiveness, and subordination to the Guardian.
 - Direction of Hands of the Cause: The Hands of the Cause of God are nominated and appointed by the Guardian, are under his shadow, and must obey his command. This body operates under the Guardian's direction, who continually urges them to spread divine teachings and guide peoples.
- The Universal House of Justice:
 - Under the Guardian's Aegis: It is foreshadowed by the Founder of the Faith and formally established in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Will and Testament. It is destined to assume, under the aegis of the Guardian, the dual sacred responsibility for the protection and propagation of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh.
 - Distinct but Complementary: While it operates within its own clearly defined sphere, it is fundamentally united with the Guardianship in its aims and functions, supplementing its authority without infringing upon it.
 - Guardian's Discretion: The Guardian has the right, at his discretion, to expel any member of the Universal House of Justice who commits a sin injurious to the common welfare, after which the people must elect another in their stead.

These twin institutions, working in conjunction with each other, administer the Faith's affairs, coordinate its activities, promote its interests, execute its laws, and defend its subsidiary institutions. The foundations of this Divine Civilization are laid by Bahá'u'lláh, and its essential elements are disclosed in the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The Kitáb-i-Aqdas and the Will and Testament are considered the chief repositories of these priceless elements, closely related and mutually confirming in purpose and method.

Deviation from this divinely ordained structure is warned against. Those who fail to turn towards God will face "grievous afflictions". The perversity of the world will continue until "the appointed hour," causing humanity to quake before the Divine Standard is unfurled. Furthermore, disobedience and revolt against the Guardian lead to grievous afflictions and plights. For any, within or without the company of the Hands of the Cause, who disobey and seek division, "the wrath of God and His vengeance will be upon him, for he will have caused a breach in the true Faith of God".

Baha'i: Unity and Division

Cracks in the Edifice: Baha'i Leadership and Dissension

The sources discuss several controversial practices and events concerning The Bab and the Baha'i Faith, which challenge its foundational narratives and teachings within the broader context of critiques and controversies. These controversies range from issues of succession and internal conflicts to allegations of hypocrisy, censorship, and political entanglement.

Foundational Controversies and Succession Disputes

The Bab, born Mirza Ali Muhammad of Shiraz, declared himself the "Gate" (Bab) in 1844 and later escalated his claims to be a Major Manifestation of God, the Kaim or Mahdi, and the "Nukta" (Point of Divine Unity), even asserting divinity in some writings, such as "Truly I am certainly God: there is no God other than me". He proclaimed a new revelation, the "Bayan," which he stated abrogated Islam and the Qur'an. The Bab also foretold the coming of "He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest".

A significant point of contention revolves around the Bab's successor. The sources state that the Bab designated Mirza Yahya (Subh-i-Azal), Baha'u'llah's half-brother, as his caretaker and successor. This designation is supported by early historical documents like the Nuqtatu'l-Kaf by the Babi Mirza Jani and the Bab's will, which sent prized possessions to Mirza Yahya. The will also reportedly stated, "Name of Azal, testify that there is no God but I, the dearest beloved. Then testify that there is no God but you, the victorious and permanent," suggesting Mirza Yahya was designated as God.

However, Baha'u'llah (Mirza Husayn Ali), an elite Persian convert and Subh-i-Azal's half-brother, later proclaimed himself to be "He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest" in 1863, rejecting Mirza Yahya's authority. This act is characterized as the "First Covenant Breaking" that brought the Baha'i Faith into existence. This led to a bitter power struggle and intense animosity between the brothers and their followers. Baha'u'llah is accused of using derogatory terms for Mirza Yahya, such as "lamb," "Satan," "bull," and "deceptive snake," and calling his followers "dogs". Furthermore, sources allege that Baha'u'llah's followers massacred Yahya's adherents at his command, a claim supported by Baha'u'llah's own sister, Madame Iziyah, in her book "Awakening the Sleepy". There are also allegations that Baha'u'llah himself attempted to murder Subh-i-Azal by poisoning.

The Bab's prophecy for the next manifestation is also a source of dispute, with some sources claiming his Persian Bayan stated the awaited figure would not appear for a minimum of 1511 years and a maximum of 2001 years, suggesting Baha'u'llah's appearance occurred "too soon".

Controversial Practices and Teachings

- Abrogation of Islamic Law and New Regulations: The Bab's "Bayan" was intended to supersede Islamic Sharia, with a conference in Badasht signaling its nullification. His teachings reportedly abolished five daily prayers, Jumu'ah prayer, and congregational prayer (except funerals), and stated purification from janaabah was not obligatory. The Qiblah (direction of prayer) was designated as his birthplace in Shiraz, his place of imprisonment, or the houses of his followers. Fasting was for one Babi month (19 days), and zakaah was one-fifth of property to the Babi council. The Babi book of laws, the Qayammul-Asma, reportedly forbade abortion.
- Contradictory Claims: Despite his claims of superseding Islam, Ali Muhammad Bab also wrote about the Qur'an's beauty and the truthfulness of Prophet Muhammad's claims. Baha'u'llah also expressed the Qur'an's perfection and the completeness of Muhammad's Sharia.
- Slavery and Social Laws: Both the Bab and Baha'u'llah owned, bought, and sold black slaves. Baha'u'llah forbade the slave trade in the Aqdas, but not slavery itself, with Baha'is in the Ottoman Empire and Egypt continuing to own black slaves until British rule. The Kitab-i-Aqdas, Baha'u'llah's "Most Holy Book," is criticized for its laws, such as marking a thief's forehead after a third offense and for not addressing heinous crimes like rape, sexual assault, or molestation.
- Homosexuality: Baha'u'llah called homosexuality "HARAM" (absolutely forbidden) and likened male and female homosexual acts to "satanic deeds" and adultery/fornication.
- Shunning and Excommunication ("Covenant-Breaking"): A pervasive and highly criticized practice is the shunning of "Covenant-breakers" – individuals who contradict or "attack" aspects of the Baha'i Faith or its leaders. This practice is considered "spiritual poison" and can lead to the removal of voting rights, administrative rights, and even excommunication, forcing family and friends to sever ties. Abdul-Baha explicitly forbade associating with "violators of the Covenant of His Holiness, the Báb". This is seen as a "horrible inversion of the Bahai teachings" by critics, as Baha'u'llah supposedly abolished shunning. Shoghi Effendi himself "excommunicated" his entire family.

Governance, Power, and Control Mechanisms

- Theocracy and Political Involvement: The Universal House of Justice (UHJ), the highest administrative body, is criticized for its ambition of heading a "global theocracy" where Baha'i institutions would form the civil government. This is despite Baha'u'llah's warnings to "Forbear ye from concerning yourselves with the affairs of this world". The UHJ is accused of being politically involved, contrary to Baha'u'llah's teachings and Shoghi Effendi's advice to refrain from political campaigns. The Baha'i Faith has been banned in several countries like Egypt, Indonesia, and Iraq due to perceived "dual loyalty" and involvement with foreign powers.
- Infallibility and Authoritarianism: The doctrine of the absolute infallibility of the Universal House of Justice is described as having "evolved radically in recent decades" and is criticized as not scriptural and "contrary to common sense" given the numerous errors made by that body. Critics argue that the Baha'i Faith has become a "doctrinally-based church" with "strict control mechanisms". Criticism of Baha'i institutions is labeled "Covenant Breaking".
- Electoral Manipulation: Baha'i elections are described as "selections" rather than true elections, with nominations and campaigning for office being abolished, contrary to early Baha'i practice under Abdul-Baha. Incumbent members are accused of promoting close associates, controlling information, and silencing popular lecturers not directly controlled by the National Spiritual Assembly (NSA).

- Censorship and Suppression of Independent Thought: The Baha'i administration rigorously censors and reviews all publications by Baha'is, including academic studies, often rejecting works that "rub against popular Bahá'í beliefs and the favorite theological views of conservative members of the Bahá'í leadership". This includes the suppression of early Babi/Baha'i historical documents, particularly those related to Subh-i-Azal and the Bayan. Scholars like Juan Cole and Sen McGlinn have been sanctioned or excommunicated for their academic work and independent thinking.
- Surveillance and Intimidation: Baha'i leaders employ "informing and surveillance" to monitor members, particularly those showing interest in other Baha'i sects or expressing "heterodox" views via email forums. Individuals expressing independent views may be threatened with shunning or administrative sanctions.
- "Apple-Cucumber" or "Bait & Switch" Tactics: The Baha'i Faith is accused of attracting seekers with universal maxims like "The religion of God is for love and unity," only to later indoctrinate them into a legalistic framework where "recognition and obedience" to Baha'u'llah defines "all good," potentially negating righteous deeds if one doesn't recognize him. This is seen as a denial of individual conscience and a form of intellectual dishonesty.
- Racial Statements: Abdul-Baha is quoted as having made statements about native Africans, referring to them as "wandering savages and wild animals" lacking intelligence and comparing them to "black stone" that "will not become world-illuminated gem". Critics demand public condemnation of these statements.

External Ties and Allegations of Influence

The Baha'i Faith is accused of having intimate ties with foreign powers, including the British Empire, Russia, the United States, and International Zionism. Notably, Abdul-Baha received a Knighthood of the British Empire (KBE) in 1919 from King George V for "valuable services rendered to the British Government in the early days of the Occupation". This is viewed by some as an acceptance of a "good leadership" medal from a colonial power responsible for massacres and exploitation. Allegations also include Russian encouragement of the Bab and Baha'u'llah's protection by the Russian embassy after an assassination attempt on the Shah of Iran. The warm welcome Baha'u'llah received from Jews in 'Akka, which became a holy place for Baha'is, and alleged meetings between Israeli ambassadors and Baha'i leaders to encourage political activities, are cited as evidence of ties to Zionism.

Unfulfilled Prophecies and Internal Inconsistencies

- Failed Prophecies: Several prophecies made by Baha'i leaders are noted as unfulfilled. Abdul-Baha's prediction of Universal Peace by 1957 failed. Shoghi Effendi's prophecy of a global calamity involving "Russian submarines" and cities evaporating was also unfulfilled. The expectation of the "Lesser Peace" by the end of the 20th century also did not materialize.
- Contradictory Doctrines: The Baha'i assertion that all Manifestations of God have "absolute equality" is directly contradicted by statements that Baha'u'llah is the "Supreme Manifestation of God" and holds a superior station to the Bab. The core principle of "religious truth is not absolute, but relative" is argued to be self-defeating. The Baha'i claim to accept the validity of all major world religions is questioned due to conflicting claims and interpretations.
- Leadership Gaps: Shoghi Effendi's death without appointing a successor, despite the Will and Testament stating a Guardian "must appoint another Guardian during his life time," led to a "crisis of leadership" and further divisions. This failure is seen as God proving Abdul-Baha a "liar".

These controversial practices and events highlight significant internal and external critiques of the Baha'i Faith, particularly regarding its historical narrative, governance structure, and the consistency of its teachings and actions with its stated principles.

The Bab -the Forerunner of Baha'i Faith

The Bab (Mirza Ali Muhammad), meaning “the Gate,” is a foundational figure in the Baha'i Faith, recognized as its forerunner. His emergence in 19th-century Persia is deeply rooted in Shi'ite Islam, which anticipated the return of the 12th Imam through “Gates”.

Origins and Claims

In 1844, at the age of 24, Mirza Ali Muhammad of Shiraz declared himself the “Gate” (Bab), through whom the 12th Imam would communicate. He quickly escalated his claims, asserting he was not merely a “Gate” but a major Manifestation of God, equal to Prophet Muhammad. He also claimed to be the Qaim or Mahdi, the awaited Imam, and the “Nukta” or Point of Divine Unity. In some instances, he even claimed divinity, stating, “Truly I am certainly God: there is no God other than me”.

The Bab proclaimed a new revelation called the “Bayan,” which he declared an abrogation of Islam and the Qur'an. He made this proclamation in Mecca and gathered a significant following over six years.

Forerunner to Baha'u'llah

A crucial aspect of the Bab's teaching was the announcement of the coming of “He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest” (Man Yozherohullah), the “final Manifestation” for that cycle of human history. Baha'u'llah, born Mirza Husayn Ali, later proclaimed himself to be this promised figure, stating that the Bab was his forerunner. Baha'u'llah's declaration in 1863 was, according to some sources, exactly 19 years after the Bab declared his faith in 1844, a period the Bab had requested as a “respite”. This connection positions the Bab as a John the Baptist-like figure for Baha'u'llah.

However, there are conflicting interpretations regarding the timing of this promised manifestation. While Baha'is believe the Bab's prophecy referred to Baha'u'llah, some sources argue that the Bab's Persian Bayan states that “He Whom God shall make Manifest” would not appear for a minimum of 1511 years and a maximum of 2001 years, making Baha'u'llah's appearance “neither sudden nor unexpected” and occurring too soon.

Teachings and Laws

The Bab's “Bayan” was intended as a new book of laws, superseding Islamic Sharia. His teachings included:

- Abrogation of Islamic law: A conference of Babi leaders in Badasht, where Tahiri appeared unveiled, signaled the nullification of Islamic Sharia by Babi law.
- Equality of women and men: The Bab proclaimed this principle, and his law made marriage dependent on the consent of both parties. However, Baha'u'llah later reversed this, returning the final say to parents.
- Controversial religious practices: He abolished five daily prayers, Jumu'ah prayer, and congregational prayer (except funeral). He stated purification from janaabah was not obligatory. The Qiblah (direction of prayer) was designated as his birthplace in Shiraz, his place of imprisonment, or the houses of his followers. Fasting was for one Babi month (19 days), and zakaah was one-fifth of property to the Babi council.
- Slavery: Both the Bab and Baha'u'llah owned, bought, and sold black slaves. The Babi book of laws, the Qayammul-Asma, reportedly forbade abortion.
- Radical reforms: The Bab is described as a “radical reformer,” though also extreme in aspects like “book burning and holy war”.

Paradoxically, some sources state that Ali Muhammad Bab wrote about the Qur'an's beauty and the truthfulness of Prophet Muhammad's claims, which appears to contradict his own declarations of superseding Islam.

Succession and Conflict

Before his death in 1850, after numerous armed conflicts with Muslim authorities, the Bab designated Mirza Yahya (Subh-i-Azal), Baha'u'llah's half-brother, as his caretaker and successor. The earliest historical document, the Nuqtatu'l-Kaf by the Babi Mirza Jani, clearly states this. The Bab sent prized personal possessions, including his ink pot, papers, writings, dresses, and rings, to Mirza Yahya. His will also started by saying, “Name of Azal, testify that there is no God but I, the dearest beloved. Then testify that there is no God but you, the victorious and permanent,” implying he designated Subh-i-Azal as God. He also granted all his rank and authority to Subh-i-Azal in his longer will and testament, stating Yahya's rank was co-equal to his own.

This designated succession became a major point of contention when Mirza Husayn Ali (Baha'u'llah) proclaimed himself “He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest”. Mirza Yahya strenuously opposed Baha'u'llah's claim, leading to significant conflict and alleged assassination plots between the two sides. Baha'u'llah initially surrendered to Yahya's orders and acted as his agent for about 10 years after the Bab's death. However, a power struggle ensued, with Baha'u'llah abandoning his obedience and representing himself as a divine envoy. Sources accuse Baha'u'llah of using derogatory terms for Yahya, such as “lamb,” “Satan,” “bull,” and “deceptive snake,” and calling his followers “dogs”. There are also allegations that Baha'u'llah's followers massacred Yahya's adherents at his command.

Death and Legacy

The Bab was executed by firing squad in Tabriz in 1850. His followers were scattered, and the movement faced severe decline. His remains are interred in a tomb at the Baha'i World Centre in Haifa, Israel, a site Baha'u'llah predicted Mount Carmel would receive.

Baha'i historians are accused of suppressing and rewriting early source materials and the history of the Babi movement, largely ignoring Subh-i-Azal, magnifying Baha'u'llah, and degrading the Bab to a "forerunner" rather than a Major Manifestation. The Bayan itself, upon which Baha'u'llah originally based his claim, is said to have been "done away with" or suppressed by Baha'is because it might "discountenance" Baha'u'llah and contain material "not very complementary to it".

In Baha'i theology, the Bab is considered one of a series of Manifestations of God in a "Progressive Revelation," including Adam, Krishna, Buddha, Muhammad, Christ, Zoroaster, Moses, and Baha'u'llah. His declaration is considered the beginning of the Baha'i calendar. However, the Baha'i Faith's claim to accept the validity of all major world religions is seen as logically contradictory due to conflicting claims. The Baha'i concept of progressive revelation is also criticized for its "heavy Abrahamic bias," downplaying Eastern traditions and their complex development.

Baha'u'llah and Baha'i Faith

Baha'u'llah, born Mirza Husayn Ali in 1817, is recognized as the founder and prophet of the Baha'i Faith. His emergence and teachings are deeply rooted in the earlier Babi Faith, a movement that developed out of Shi'ite Islam in 19th-century Iran and Iraq.

Origins and Succession

The Baha'i Faith's roots trace back to the Shi'ite sect of Islam, which anticipated the return of the 12th Imam, who would make contact through "Gates". In 1844, Mirza Ali Muhammad (the Bab) declared himself the "Gate," a major Manifestation of God, equal to Prophet Muhammad. The Bab proclaimed a new revelation and the eventual appearance of the "final Manifestation" for that cycle of human history, referred to as "He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest".

Before his martyrdom in 1850, the Bab designated Mirza Yahya (Subh-i-Azal), a son of nobility, as his caretaker and successor. The earliest historical document, the Nuqtatu'l-Kaf, written by the Babi Mirza Jani, clearly states that the Bab declared Mirza Yahya as his successor.

Mirza Husayn Ali, Yahya's half-brother, later proclaimed himself to be "He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest" and changed his name to Baha'u'llah, meaning "Glory of God". He asserted that the Bab was his forerunner. Mirza Yahya strenuously opposed Baha'u'llah's claim, leading to significant conflict and alleged assassination plots between the two sides. The original followers of the Bab who pledged allegiance to Baha'u'llah became known as Baha'is.

Historical accounts detail the animosity between Baha'u'llah and Mirza Yahya. Baha'u'llah, who was 13 years older than Yahya, initially surrendered to Yahya's orders and acted as his agent in Baghdad for about 10 years after the Bab's death. However, a power struggle ensued, and Baha'u'llah abandoned his obedience, representing himself as an envoy of God and leader of the Baha'is. He used derogatory terms for his brother, such as "lamb," "Satan," "bull," and "deceptive snake," and referred to Yahya's followers as "dogs". Some sources also allege that Baha'u'llah's followers massacred Yahya's adherents at his command.

Baha'u'llah's Claims and Status

Baha'u'llah made numerous claims regarding his station:

- He declared himself the "Promised One" of all religions, fulfilling messianic prophecies.
- He claimed to be the symbolic fulfillment of various messianic and eschatological prophecies, including the incarnation of the "Everlasting Father" (from Judaism), the "Spirit of Truth" or Comforter and the return of Christ "in the glory of the Father" (from Christianity), the return of Shah Bahram Varjavand (from Zoroastrianism), the return of the Third Imam, Imam Husayn (from Shi'a Islam), and the return of Jesus (from Sunni Islam). Later, Abdu'l-Baha stated that Baha'u'llah was the Kalki avatar (Hinduism) and the fulfillment of the Maitreya Buddha prophecy.
- Baha'u'llah also explicitly made claims of divinity, stating "There is no God but I the Honored, the Wise" (Kitab al Aqdas, page 43), "Accept whatever is commanded by Baha (himself) the Lord of Eternity" (Kitab al Aqdas, page 144), and "All praise is for you O Bahau'llah, the Creator of existence" (Al-Mubeen, page 34). He also wrote, "Most surely I am Allah. There is no God save me. I am the Lord of everything. The O my creatures, you worship me alone".
- Despite these claims of divinity, Baha'is generally portray him to non-Baha'is as a God-fearing man or a prophet. To a Muslim, he is presented as Imam Mahdi; to a Christian, Jesus Christ; to a Jew, Yehuda; to a Parsi, Behram; and to a Hindu, Kilankari Avtaar.
- His titles include "Light and the Splendor of God," "Lord of Lords," "Most Great Name," "Ancient Beauty," "He Whom God will make manifest," "Judge," "Lawgiver," and "Redeemer of all mankind".
- A key contradiction arises in the Baha'i teaching that all Manifestations of God have absolute equality, while simultaneously stating that Baha'u'llah is the "Supreme Manifestation of God" and that "no prophet in the same Category as Baha'u'llah". This raises questions about how one can be both equal and supreme.

Baha'u'llah's Teachings and Laws

Baha'u'llah wrote over 100 volumes of Baha'i scripture, with his "Most Holy Book" being the Kitab-i-Aqdas. He proclaimed that the Bab was his forerunner and that the "Bayan" (the Bab's revelation) and other books of the Bab were superseded by his own "Revelations," liberalizing its provisions. However, some sources suggest that Baha'u'llah himself, in an 1862 letter, stated that "one letter from the Bayan is the most loved with me than all that are in the heavens and on the earth" and that "no one can abrogate one letter from that which has been revealed in the Bayan".

The sources highlight perceived contradictions and inconsistencies in Baha'u'llah's teachings:

- He taught that the physical universe has neither beginning nor end, and also that God created all things from nothing, which critics say contradicts the second law of thermodynamics and science.
- He believed in a form of macro-evolution but stated that man was always inherently human, distinct from animals.
- His principle that religious truth is not absolute but relative is seen as self-defeating: if the statement "religious truth is relative" is absolute, it contradicts itself; if it's relative, it means absolute revelation can exist.
- While promoting the "Independent Investigation of Truth," other writings suggest followers should "accept my words without any questions or comparison with someone else's words" and "become death, blind, and ignorant and blindly accept my words" when he speaks.
- Contrary to Baha'i belief that Baha'u'llah lacked basic education and acquired knowledge miraculously, sources note he was a son of nobility and received an education, and even admitted to reading books to acquire knowledge and refute enemies' claims.

Perceptions and Controversies

- Polygamy: Baha'u'llah had three legal wives. Baha'is typically justify this by stating he married them before the Aqdas (his book of laws) was revealed, and he was acting according to Islamic laws and customs. However, critics point out his second and third marriages occurred after the Bab declared his new religion in 1844, and after Babi laws (which reportedly advocated monogamy) were understood to supersede Islamic law.
- Leadership Style: Baha'u'llah is described as a "dynamic personality with great force of will". However, some critics portray him as a "mentally disturbed individual who simply lusted for power" and stopped at nothing to achieve it, including inciting violence.
- Disunity: While his religion aimed for unity, Baha'u'llah himself "fostered enmity and dissension". The practice of shunning opponents, referred to as "Covenant-breakers," was established by Baha'u'llah, with passages like "Shun them, O My people, and follow not the iniquitous and evil-hearted". He also stated that "Any heir... who is outside the Faith of God is accounted as non-existent and doth not inherit".
- Political Connections: Baha'u'llah is noted for his interactions with governments. He sought shelter in the Russian embassy and sent a tablet to the Russian emperor expressing thanks and servitude. Some sources allege Baha'ism was supported by Russian and British imperialism to further their interests in Muslim lands.
- Historicity: Baha'i historians and authorities are accused of suppressing and rewriting earliest source materials and the early years of the Faith. This includes modifying translations and removing references to critics like Edward G. Browne.
- Comparison to Other Faiths: Baha'u'llah's teachings are seen as inconsistent with Christianity and Islam, despite Baha'i claims of uniting religions. Critics highlight fundamental differences such as Baha'i rejection of Christ's sin-atoning sacrifice and his unique position as the son of God, instead placing him as one of several manifestations.

In summary, Baha'u'llah established the Baha'i Faith, building on Babism and proclaiming himself the universal Promised One. His extensive writings outline core principles aimed at global unity and spiritual development. However, his life and teachings are subject to intense debate, particularly concerning his claims of divinity, his relationships with rivals, perceived contradictions in his doctrines, and the historical accounts of the early Baha'i movement.

Criticism of Baha'i Faith

An Open Letter by a Baha'i to NSA(National Spiritual Assembly) of India

Dear Baha'i Friends,

This an open letter to all friends, knowing fully that I am not permitted to write such a communication.

However, the state of affairs has to come to such nadir, that I take it upon myself to communicate my feelings.

The present census of India (Status of 2011) is published. The Baha'i community population stands at a shameful 4572 number. This number includes Baha'is of other sects like Orthodox Bahais, Baha'is Under Provision of Covenant, Unitarian Baha'is, Free Baha'is etc. Even if we factor these at 20% of the Baha'i community, the number of Heterodox Baha'i (the mainstream to which we belong) would be about 3600. This is against the previous number of about 12000 mentioned in 2001 census.

CENSUS OF BAHAI'S OF INDIA ACCORDING TO GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

The drastic drop needs an unbiased analysis, which I humbly wish to present for the benefit of Friends.

1. It has been time and again pointed out at various forums that the spirituality within the Faith is decreasing by those who have seen the prime days. Such reality is ignored by the NSA as pessimistic observation going against the administration.
2. The mechanism of propagation has shifted from welcoming fire-sites to boring Ruhi sessions, where neither the tutor nor the students understand the content due to the difficult language and bulky content. When this is pointed out to the NSA, the suggestion is termed as anti-institution, anti-house of justice.
3. The NSA members seldom bother to move around and interact with the friends across the country. Friends are always given to understand that they are too busy on other priorities.
4. NSA ignores the threat of other Baha'i sects (Covenant Breakers), brushing it arrogantly aside stating these sects have no standing institute to support and no infrastructure to declare. Friends are asked to ignore their propaganda instead of responding to doubts raised by them.
5. When the previous census number was considered shockingly less, the NSA went on the defensive, stating that the reduction is because of the bias/ignorance of census data collectors and friends not being particular in giving their religious details to the data collectors. Here again, the haughtiness of NSA can be seen.
6. Seldom have NSA members been seen deliberating on the serious issue of the reduction in population. They prefer to continue their internal differences and look upon the privileges that they should be entitled. Selfless service by NSA members is unheard of.
7. The stature of NSA members, as far as their deepening of history of Faith is concerned, leaves a lot to be desired. Indeed many friends know that certain NSA members don't know difference between Abdul Baha and Abbas Effendi. Such NSA members proudly move around as representing the Baha'i Faith at national level.
8. The NSA has never dealt with scandals and non-compliance to Government laws, as per the guidelines of the faith. Instead of condemning such acts of defiance against the faith principles, the NSA continues to passively support by ignoring such incidences. With the result, scandals are on the rise. With blessings of the NSA the Baha'i Faith is seen as encouraging illicit relations and promoting anti-national activities.
9. Baha'i friends take partners belonging to other beliefs and succumb to pressures of their spouses in confirming to religious beliefs of their spouse. Here again, the NSA takes a secular view, sometimes with a view of avoiding involvement and at other times keeping in view of the family in question. Indeed a family offering generous donation and connected to the NSA members, is excused of all such instances.

Friends, the performance of the past three NSA teams has been pathetic, as is apparent from the dropping of population. At one point of time India was considered having potential to have the biggest Baha'i community in the world. Today it is far from being so. The drop in population has been so phenomenal that the community feels a risk of extinction in another 10 years. It is high-time that the friends demand resignation of the present NSA team (many of whom have been elected in consequent terms) with immediate effect. In fact, the NSA should have voluntarily stepped down by now. Barring Mr. Sohail Muhajir, the new dynamic entry into the NSA, all others should resign. Fresh elections of a new NSA team under leadership of Mr. Mohajir are need of the hour. The faith is on the ventilator in India, it is in best interest that we acknowledge the situation and act rather than give excuses for failure.

By a concerned Baha'i.

Unpacking the Numbers – Baha’i Census Figures

UHJ is the Espionage Organization of the Baha'i Faith

Dr. Leland Jensen—the Seventh Angel of Revelation, foretold by ‘Abdu’l-Baha.

What was the open Challenge of Joel Marangella to Rúhiyyih Khánum ?

The public challenge made by Joel Marangella to Rúhiyyih Khánum is important because it signifies a major theological and leadership conflict within the Bahá'í community, specifically between mainstream (Haifán) Bahá'í belief and Orthodox Bahá'í Faith. This dispute centers on the concept of the Guardianship, a key institution in the governance of the Bahá'í Faith, which Marangella and his followers argue must have continued after the death of Shoghi Effendi in 1957. In contrast, mainstream Bahá'ís maintain that leadership transitioned to the Universal House of Justice, which was established in 1963.

Context of the Challenge

Marangella took title to the third Guardian in 1969, claiming that he was appointed by Charles Mason Remey, who had previously claimed to be the second Guardian. Marangella's claim is based on a sealed letter purportedly from Remey, which he understood to be a divine appointment. Orthodox Bahá'í Faith, under which he presides, believes the Guardianship to be a fundamental institution that must be upheld as stipulated in the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. They are convinced that mainstream Bahá'ís have breached the Covenant in their rejection of Remey and any future succeeding Guardians.

Rúhiyyih Khánum's Role

As a senior Hand of the Cause and as the widow of Shoghi Effendi, Rúhiyyih Khánum played a leading role in making the transition to the Universal House of Justice possible following the passing away of Shoghi Effendi. She was among the consensus that there could be no successor Guardian since there was no eligible heir. Rúhiyyih Khánum publicly denounced Marangella and his followers as covenant-breakers, a severe designation in the Bahá'í faith that means a complete breach of relations with those so defined.

Content of the Open Letter

Marangella's open letter to Rúhiyyih Khánum may be understood through a number of salient aspects:

Charge of Covenant-Breaking: Marangella charged Rúhiyyih Khánum and mainstream leadership with apostasy from the Covenant by excluding the perpetuation of the Guardianship. The letter implies she would be answerable in the next world for having misled Bahá'ís.

Defense of the Guardianship: The letter is in defense of Marangella's assertion to the Guardianship on the grounds of the writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, which are interpreted by Orthodox Bahá'ís to require a perpetuating Guardianship.

Call to Repentance: The tone of the letter is adversarial, calling on Rúhiyyih Khánum and mainstream Bahá'ís to acknowledge their supposed mistakes and come back to the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith under Marangella's authority.

Marangella's challenge was a part of a larger strategy to legitimate his leadership and gain support, especially in areas such as India.

Responses and Reactions

Rúhiyyih Khánum's Response: Although there is no direct account of her reply to Marangella's letter, her consistent attempts at cautioning Bahá'ís against him and her important part in the mainstream society's refutation of his allegations demonstrate her active opposition.

Mainstream Bahá'í Response: The mainstream Bahá'í community, under the leadership of the Universal House of Justice and the Hands of the Cause, branded Marangella and his followers as covenant-breakers, thus ostracizing them and forbidding Bahá'ís from reading their literature or associating with them.

Legal Actions: The mainstream administration took legal actions to protect its trademarks and identity against groups claiming to be part of the Bahá'í Faith but deviating from its teachings, including lawsuits against Remey's group and proceedings against Marangella's followers.

Broader Implications

Orthodox Bahá'í View: Marangella's move was an effort to claim supremacy and discredit the Universal House of Justice. In selecting the eminently respected Rúhiyyih Khánum as a victim, he also endeavored to position his movement as the authentic continuation of the work of Shoghi Effendi.

Mainstream Bahá'í Viewpoint: To the mainstream community, Marangella's challenge underlined their belief that he is a schismatic individual who compromised the unity and integrity of the Bahá'í Faith.

Impact and Reach: While the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith is still a minority group, Marangella's work, especially in India, gained some following and resulted in the formation of local councils, demonstrating the continued pertinence of these conflicts in some areas.

Overall, the problem caused by Marangella indicates deep splits within the Bahá'í movement over leadership and the interpretation of core teachings, demonstrating how contrasting beliefs can result in large-scale schisms.

Critical Analysis

Marangella's open letter to Rúhiyyih Khánum exemplifies the deep theological and emotional divide between the Orthodox and Haifán Bahá'ís. The confrontational tone, invoking Shoghi Effendi's posthumous judgment, underscores the Orthodox Bahá'í belief in their exclusive fidelity to the Covenant. However, the letter's effectiveness was curtailed by the mainstream Bahá'í community's strict shunning policies and the Orthodox group's marginal status. Rúhíyyih Khánum's silence (if she indeed did not respond) aligns with the Bahá'í practice of avoiding engagement with covenant-breakers, which critics argue stifles dialogue but which Bahá'ís see as essential for unity.

The challenge also reflects a broader tension within the Bahá'í Faith: how to interpret the Covenant in the absence of clear succession after Shoghi Effendi. Marangella's reliance on a sealed letter from Remey mirrors Remey's own claim based on his appointment to the International Bahá'í Council, highlighting the subjective nature of such claims in the face of ambiguous texts. Meanwhile, Rúhíyyih Khánum's role as a stabilizing figure post-1957 underscores the mainstream's pragmatic shift to collective leadership, which Orthodox Bahá'ís view as a deviation.

Conclusion

Joel Marangella's open challenge to Rúhíyyih Khánum, articulated in his open letter, was a direct confrontation over the legitimacy of the Guardianship and the direction of the Bahá'í Faith after Shoghi Effendi's death. It accused Rúhíyyih Khánum and the mainstream Bahá'í leadership of covenant-breaking by rejecting the continuation of the Guardianship, while asserting Marangella's own claim as the third Guardian. Though the letter was part of a broader effort to gain legitimacy, its impact was limited by the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith's small size and the mainstream community's refusal to engage. The challenge remains a significant example of the ongoing schism between the Orthodox and Haifan Bahá'ís, highlighting unresolved questions about authority and unity in the Bahá'í Faith.

Summary of Content on bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com

The content on bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com focuses on critiquing the Bahá'í Faith's reported membership numbers in India and globally, arguing that the Bahá'í administration significantly exaggerates its census figures to project greater influence and success. Below is a summary of the key points from the website, based on available information, with citations included as per the provided guidelines. The term "Bahá'í" is used to refer to the majority Bahá'í community led by the Universal House of Justice.

1. Claims of Exaggerated Membership Numbers:

- The website asserts that the Bahá'í administration falsely claims a large following, particularly in India, where it reports over 2 million adherents, while official Indian censuses (e.g., 1991, 2001, 2011) record only 4,572–11,324 Bahá'ís. It cites a 2010 census revealing fewer than 12,000 Bahá'ís in India, exposing the discrepancy with the claimed 2 million (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- Globally, the website references the Bahá'í administration's claim of 5–8 million adherents, contrasting this with scholarly estimates of "several hundred thousand" or as low as 100,000 active members, suggesting inflated figures to portray the faith as a major world religion (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).

1. Reasons for Discrepancies:

- Fraudulent Claims and Deception: The site alleges deliberate dishonesty by Bahá'í leadership, including fabricating membership data to mislead potential converts and the public. A former Bahá'í contributor, Shalom Scott, claims he witnessed leaders lying about membership to exaggerate the faith's success, describing it as a "footnote" religion (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- Inclusion of Nominal Members: It argues that the Bahá'í administration counts anyone who signs a declaration card, including inactive or unaware individuals, especially in rural India, where converts may not understand they joined a distinct religion (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- Census Misreporting: The website notes that Bahá'ís excuse low census figures by claiming adherents hide their faith due to social pressures, but it dismisses this as a defensive rationalization, given Hinduism's tolerance of other faiths (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- Administrative Practices: It highlights outdated records, including deceased or departed members, and alleges paid workers invent data to meet conversion targets, inflating numbers (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).

1. Specific Focus on India:

- The site emphasizes India as a key example, where the Bahá'í administration claims 2.2 million adherents (40% of its global total), but the 2011 census reported only 4,572. It cites historical mass conversions in the 1960s, particularly among scheduled castes, where 88,000 claimed converts were not counted as Bahá'ís in the 1971 census, likely identifying as Hindu (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- It references a 2010 Bahá'í newsletter admitting census undercounts due to converts' lack of a "distinct identifying characteristic," which the site interprets as evidence of deceptive conversion tactics (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- The website suggests exaggerated figures were used to secure minority status in India, granting legal and social benefits, and cites a decline in local spiritual assemblies (from 10,000 in 1979–1983 to 600 currently) as evidence of overstated historical claims (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).

1. Global and Comparative Examples:

- The site praises the New Zealand Bahá'í community for acknowledging a 5% population decrease (2006–2013) and 15% over 17 years (1996–2013), aligning with official census data and contrasting with the Bahá'í administration's global growth claims (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- It critiques the U.S. Bahá'í community, noting a 2022 report of 178,000 members but a net loss of 2,200 annually, with only 400 new adult believers, suggesting a decline and questioning the validity of addresses due to "bogus entries" (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).

1. Criticism of Bahá'í Administration:

- The website accuses the Universal House of Justice of ignoring declining trends and perpetuating the false narrative that the Bahá'í Faith is the "fastest growing religion." It suggests some leaders prioritize "business" over faith, citing internal conflicts in New Zealand where members' critical letters to the House disturbed a former member, Peter Khan (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- It frames the Bahá'í Faith as a "cult" with deceptive practices, arguing that its census dishonesty undermines its credibility and calls for transparency to address the issue (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).

1. Critical Perspective and Sources:

- The site relies on contributions from former Bahá'ís, official census data, and critical analyses, such as Juan Cole's work noting a 50% retention rate in India since 1968, compared to 80% for Christian denominations (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- It references other critical articles, like "Exit by Troops" and "Three Types of Bahá'í Census of India," for deeper analysis supported by authenticated figures, reinforcing its claims of exaggeration (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).

For further details, visit <https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/> or cross-reference with official census data (<https://censusindia.gov.in/>)

Sects of the Bahá'í Faith: Origins, Beliefs, and Differences

World Bahá'í community, led by the Universal House of Justice in Haifa, Israel, claims to have maintained unity without schisms (<https://www.bahai.org/beliefs/essential-relationships/covenant>), several groups have emerged, often labeled as “sects” or “schismatic groups” by the Haifa community and as “orthodox” or “true” Bahá'ís by their adherents. These groups diverge primarily over interpretations of leadership succession, particularly the institution of the Guardianship as outlined in the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, though some challenge earlier leadership transitions or foundational texts (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). Below is a detailed examination of the major sects within the Bahá'í Faith, including those identified on <https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>, their origins, beliefs, and differences from the Haifa Bahá'í community, supported by references and critical analysis.

Overview of Sects in the Bahá'í Faith

The Haifa Bahá'í community, under the Universal House of Justice, represents the vast majority of the estimated 5–8 million Bahá'ís worldwide (Warburg, M. (2006). Citizens of the World: A History and Sociology of the Baha'is from a Globalisation Perspective. Brill. p. 23). The primary contention is the Guardianship, established by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Will, which appointed Shoghi Effendi as the first Guardian and mandated lifetime successor appointments (<https://www.bahai.org/library/authoritative-texts/abdu-baha/will-testament-abdu-baha/>). After Shoghi Effendi’s death in 1957 without a named successor, differing interpretations of the Will led to most sects, though earlier disputes also contributed (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). Below are the sects, their origins, and beliefs.

1. People of Bayan (Bayanis)

Origins:

- The People of Bayan, or Bayanis, are followers of the Báb who rejected Bahá'u'lláh's claim as the promised “He Whom God Shall Make Manifest” and recognized Mírzá Yahyá Núrí (Subḥ-i-Azal) as the Báb's successor, appointed in 1844 (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). Historians often call them Azalis, but the term is controversial, as Bayanis see themselves as continuing the Báb's teachings (MacEoin, D. (1992). The Sources for Early Bábī Doctrine and History. Brill). The group emerged in the 1860s during the Bábī-Bahá'í split and is primarily in Iran, with a small, declining membership (https://bahai-library.com/bayanis_azalis).

Beliefs:

- Subḥ-i-Azal as Successor: Bayanis believe Subḥ-i-Azal was the Báb's legitimate successor, rejecting Bahá'u'lláh's claim as a violation of the Bayán's teachings (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).
- Adherence to the Persian Bayán: They follow the Báb's Persian Bayán, viewing it as the complete revelation, and do not accept Bahá'u'lláh's Kitáb-i-Aqdas (MacEoin, D. (1992). The Sources for Early Bábī Doctrine and History. Brill).
- No Guardianship: Predating ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's Will, Bayanis reject the Guardianship and Universal House of Justice, focusing on the Báb's theocratic vision (https://bahai-library.com/bayanis_azalis).
- Distinct Identity: They identify as a separate religion, not a Bahá'í sect, emphasizing the Báb's role as a divine messenger (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).

2. Unitarian Bahá'ís

Origins:

- The Unitarian Bahá'ís emerged after ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's death in 1921, led by Muḥammad ‘Alí, Bahá'u'lláh's half-brother, who challenged ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's authority and rejected the Will naming Shoghi Effendi as Guardian (https://bahai-library.com/muhammad_ali_behaists). Muḥammad ‘Alí claimed leadership based on Bahá'u'lláh's Kitáb-i-Ahd. By his death in 1937, most followers had left, and the group dwindled to a few families in ‘Akká (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Muḥammad ‘Alí as Successor: They believe Muḥammad ‘Alí was Bahá'u'lláh's intended successor, viewing ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's leadership as temporary (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).
- Rejection of the Will: They argue the Will is invalid, denying the Guardianship and Universal House of Justice (https://bahai-library.com/muhammad_ali_behaists).
- Simplified Bahá'ism: They emphasize Bahá'u'lláh's teachings without ‘Abdu’l-Bahá's structures, advocating a less hierarchical faith (https://bahai-library.com/muhammad_ali_behaists).
- Assimilation: Most assimilated into Muslim society in ‘Akká, maintaining no distinct community (https://bahai-library.com/muhammad_ali_behaists).

3. Essence of the Bahá'í Faith

Origins:

- The Essence of the Bahá'í Faith is a small group believing in a Third Manifestation after the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh, rejecting the Haifan Universal House of Justice as unauthorized (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>). Emerging post-1957, likely from Guardianship disputes, it has minimal documented presence (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Third Manifestation: They believe a new divine messenger will follow, viewing the Haifan House as deviating from 'Abdu'l-Bahá's vision (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Rejection of the Universal House of Justice: They argue the House lacks legitimacy without a Guardian, citing the Will's requirement for the Guardian as its "sacred head" (<https://www.bahai.org/library/authoritative-texts/abdu-baha/will-testament-abdu-baha/>).
- Core Bahá'í Teachings: They uphold Bahá'u'lláh's principles but await a new revelation (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Minimal Organization: The group has no clear leadership or structure (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

4. Orthodox Bahá'í Faith (Led by Joel Marangella)

Origins:

- The Orthodox Bahá'í Faith stems from Charles Mason Remey's 1960 claim to be the second Guardian, based on his role as president of the International Bahá'í Council (<https://orthodoxbahai.in/history.php>). Joel Marangella claimed in 1964 that Remey appointed him third Guardian. After Remey's group fragmented, Marangella founded the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith, headquartered in the U.S. with a presence in India, with about 100 members (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Perpetual Guardianship: They believe the Guardianship is perpetual, as per the Will's mandate for lifetime successor appointments, viewing Remey and Marangella as legitimate.
- Illegitimate Universal House of Justice: They assert the 1963 Haifan House is invalid without a Guardian, citing the Will's requirement for the Guardian as its head (<https://www.orthodoxbahai.com/covenant>).
- Covenant-Breaking by Haifan: They claim the Haifan Bahá'ís, including the Hands of the Cause and Rúhíyyih Khánum, abandoned the Covenant, as stated in Marangella's open letter (<https://orthodoxbahai.in/open-letter.php>).
- Core Teachings: They uphold Bahá'u'lláh's principles but prioritize the Guardian's authority (<https://www.orthodoxbahai.com/beliefs>).
- Structure: They maintain a National Bahá'í Council in India and recognize Marangella's successors, though post-2013 details are sparse (<https://orthodoxbahai.in/council.php>).
- Official Website : <https://bahai-guardian.com>
- Indian Website : <https://orthodoxbahaisindia.org>

5. Bahá'ís Under the Provisions of the Covenant (BUPC)

Origins:

- The BUPC emerged from Remey's Guardianship claim. After Remey's death in 1974, Leland Jensen founded the group in Montana, claiming to be the "Establisher." It claims 150,000 members, but estimates suggest dozens, split into factions (<https://www.bupc.org/>). The BUPC maintains a website and some activity (<https://www.bupc.org/>).

Beliefs:

- Restoration of the Covenant: They believe the Haifan violated the Covenant by ending the Guardianship. Jensen, as Establisher, clarified the Covenant, with Neal Chase later claiming Guardianship (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Apocalyptic Predictions: Jensen predicted a 1980 nuclear holocaust, interpreted as a test when it failed, emphasizing eschatological transformation (<https://www.bupc.org/prophecy.html>).
- Guardianship Line: They recognize Shoghi Effendi, Remey, Joseph Pepe, and Neal Chase as Guardians, rejecting the Haifan House (<https://www.bupc.org/guardianship.html>).
- Davidic Lineage: They link the Guardianship to King David's line (<https://www.bupc.org/davidic-lineage.html>).
- Core Principles: They uphold Bahá'u'lláh's teachings but focus on correcting Haifan deviations (<https://www.bupc.org/>).

6. Free Bahá'ís

Origins:

- The Free Bahá'ís emerged in the 1970s via Hermann Zimmer, reviving Ruth White's 1920s claim that 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Will was forged. They have a small online presence (<https://freebahais.org/history/>) and no clear membership estimates (<https://freebahais.org/>).

Beliefs:

- Fraudulent Will: They assert the Will is inauthentic, contradicting Bahá'u'lláh's democratic vision, and reject the Guardianship (<https://freebahais.org/writings/ruth-white/>).

- Elected Leadership: They advocate leadership through elected assemblies, not hereditary Guardians (<https://freebahais.org/beliefs/>).
- Bahá'u'lláh's Teachings: They prioritize the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, promoting a decentralized faith (<https://freebahais.org/beliefs/>).
- Criticism of Authority: They accuse the Haifan of authoritarianism and suppressing dissent (<https://freebahais.org/beliefs/>).

7. Reform Bahá'ís

Origins:

- The Reform Bahá'í Faith, led by Frederick Glaysher, is an independent denomination rejecting the Will as fraudulent and promoting a liberal interpretation. It emerged in the 2000s, drawing on dissenters like Ruth White and Mírzá Aḥmad Sohráb, with no clear membership data (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Fraudulent Will: They view the Will as doctored by Shoghi Effendi, rejecting the Guardianship and the Haifan House's infallible authority (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Liberal Interpretation: They advocate a non-authoritarian Bahá'ism, emphasizing unity and independent investigation, inspired by Sohráb (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Decentralized Faith: They reject centralized institutions, promoting local governance and intellectual freedom (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Historical Reformers: They align with early dissenters, calling them "Reform Bahá'ís" (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

8. New History Society

Origins:

- The New History Society was co-founded by Mírzá Aḥmad Sohráb, a Persian-American Bahá'í excommunicated by Shoghi Effendi in 1939 for challenging his authority. Formed in New York with the Caravan of East and West, it faded after Sohráb's death in 1958 (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Fraudulent Covenant: They believe the Covenant, as defined by Shoghi Effendi, was not 'Abdu'l-Bahá's vision, rejecting the Guardianship (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Universalist Bahá'ism: They emphasized Bahá'u'lláh's universal teachings, promoting interfaith dialogue and education (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- No Guardianship: They rejected Shoghi Effendi's leadership and subsequent structures (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Historical Continuity: They aligned with early dissenters, advocating a non-sectarian approach (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

9. Heart of the Bahá'í Faith

Origins:

- The Heart of the Bahá'í Faith believes in a continuous Guardianship, recognizing Shoghi Effendi, Charles Mason Remey, Donald Alfonse Harvey, and Jacques Soghomonian (fourth Guardian since 1991, based in Marseille). It split from Remey's followers, with limited membership (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Continuous Guardianship: They believe the Guardianship must persist, with Soghomonian as the current Guardian, based on the Will's succession mandate (<https://www.bahai.org/library/authoritative-texts/abdul-baha/will-testament-abdul-baha/>).
- Legitimate Universal House of Justice: They argue a valid House requires a living Guardian, rejecting the Haifan House (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Core Teachings: They uphold Bahá'u'lláh's principles but center the Guardian's authority (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).
- Minimal Structure: The group has little formal organization (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

10. Tarbiyat Bahá'í Community

Origins:

- The Tarbiyat Bahá'í Community emerged from a split within Remey's followers, led by Rex King, who in 1969 rejected Remey and Marangella, declaring himself a "regent" awaiting a future Guardian. After King's death in 1977, his family formed a council of regents, with minimal activity (<https://www.thesectionofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Regency and Occultation: They reject post-Shoghi Effendi Guardians, viewing King as a regent until a true Guardian, in “occultation,” appears (<https://www.tarbiyatbahai.org/regency>).
- Future Guardian: They believe a Bahá’u’lláh descendant will emerge, rejecting the Haifan House (<https://www.tarbiyatbahai.org/history>).
- Covenant Adherence: They emphasize the Covenant but interpret it as requiring a future Guardian (<https://www.tarbiyatbahai.org/regency>).
- Isolation: They maintain a National House of Justice in the U.S. and Canada but are isolated (<https://www.tarbiyatbahai.org/history>).
- Blog : <https://tarbiyatbahai.blogspot.com>

11. Daheshists

Origins:

- Daheshists follow Dr. Dahesh (Saleem Moosa El-Awshee, 1912–1984), who founded Daheshism in Beirut, claiming to be the “return” of the Báb. Listed on <https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/> as a related sect, Daheshism emerged in the 1940s with a small following in Lebanon (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).

Beliefs:

- Dahesh as the Báb’s Return: They believe Dahesh was the Báb reincarnated, performing miracles and delivering inspired books (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).
- New Religion: Daheshism is a separate faith, rejecting Bahá’u’lláh’s revelation and Bahá’í structures (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).
- Miracles and Writings: They emphasize Dahesh’s supernatural acts and five texts, distinct from Bahá’í scriptures (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).
- No Bahá’í Covenant: They do not engage with the Guardianship or Universal House of Justice (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).

Critical Analysis

Haifan Bahá’í Perspective:

- They label dissenters as Covenant-breakers, noting their small size as evidence of illegitimacy (https://bahai-library.com/momen_covenant_breaking).

Sectarian Perspective:

- Most sects (e.g., Orthodox, BUPC, Heart) argue the Haifan abandoned the Guardianship, violating the Covenant, citing the Will’s succession and Guardian’s role (<https://www.orthodoxbahai.com/covenant>; <https://www.bupc.org/guardianship.html>; <https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). Others (Free, Reform, New History) reject the Will’s authenticity, advocating decentralized or universalist Bahá’ism (<https://freebahais.org/writings/ruth-white/>; <https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). Bayanis and Unitarian Bahá’is challenge earlier transitions, viewing Bahá’u’lláh or ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s successors as illegitimate (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). Daheshists and Essence groups introduce new revelations (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>).

Conclusion

The Bahá’í Faith includes sects like the People of Bayan, Unitarian Bahá’is, Essence of the Bahá’í Faith, Orthodox Bahá’í Faith, BUPC, Free Bahá’is, Reform Bahá’is, New History Society, Heart of the Bahá’í Faith, Tarbiyat Bahá’í Community, and Daheshists, as identified by <https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/> (<https://www.thesectionsofbahais.com/>). These groups diverge over the Guardianship’s continuity, the Will’s authenticity, or earlier leadership transitions, with some claiming new revelations. Haifan Bahá’is maintain unity through the Covenant, labeling sects as Covenant-breakers, while sects argue the Haifan deviated.

Exaggerated Bahá'í Census Figures: Causes and the Case of India

The Haifan Bahá'í Faith's reported membership numbers have often been a point of contention, with claims of exaggeration in various countries, including India. Critics, including former Bahá'ís and scholars, argue that the Haifan Bahá'í administration, centered at the Universal House of Justice in Haifa, Israel, inflates figures to project greater influence and acceptance, while official government censuses frequently report significantly lower numbers. Below, I explore the evidence for exaggerated Haifan Bahá'í census figures, the reasons behind these discrepancies, and a specific focus on India, drawing on available sources and critical analysis. All references are inserted in-text, and the term "Haifan" is used to describe the majority Bahá'í community led by the Universal House of Justice.

Evidence of Exaggerated Haifan Bahá'í Census Figures

Across multiple countries, the Haifan Bahá'í administration's reported membership numbers often starkly contrast with official government census data or independent estimates. Here are key examples:

- India:
 - The Haifan Bahá'í community has claimed over 2 million adherents in India, with some sources citing 1.9 million by 2015 (<https://www.worldatlas.com/articles/countries-with-the-largest-bahai-populations.html>). However, the Indian government's official census reports far lower figures: 5,574 in 1991, 11,324 in 2001, and 4,572 in 2011 (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).
 - Other reference : <https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>
 - This discrepancy—between millions claimed and thousands recorded—suggests a significant overestimation.
 - Scholar Juan Cole noted in 2001 that India's official census found only about 5,000 Bahá'ís, compared to the millions claimed by the Haifan administration (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2017/07/30/bahai-census/>). A 2010 Bahá'í newsletter admitted the census reported a fraction of their claimed 2.2 million, attributing it to rural illiteracy and lack of distinct Bahá'í identity (<https://bahaisects.wordpress.com/2011/07/30/how-many-bahais-are-in-india/>).
- United States:
 - The Haifan Bahá'í community reported 178,000 members in 2022, but critics argue this includes inactive or disengaged members (https://www.reddit.com/r/bahai/comments/1e3m8z6/bahai_faith_appears_to_be_the_only_major/). The U.S. census does not collect religious data, but the Association of Religion Data Archives (ARDA) estimated 512,864 Bahá'ís in 2010, still lower than Haifan claims when adjusted for activity (<https://www.worldatlas.com/articles/countries-with-the-largest-bahai-populations.html>). A 2022 U.S. Bahá'í report noted a net loss of 2,200 members annually and only 400 new adult believers, suggesting stagnation (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>).
- Global Estimates:
 - The Haifan Bahá'í administration claims 5–8 million adherents worldwide, with 8 million cited in 2020 (<https://www.bahai.org/documents/2020/secretariat-universal-house-justice-worldwide-bahai-population>). However, scholarly estimates are lower: Encyclopædia Britannica estimated 7.1 million in 2000, but others, like the Academic American Encyclopedia (1998), cited 2 million, and Bei Dawei (2011) suggested "several hundred thousand" (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_by_country). Critics claim the global figure may be as low as 100,000 active members (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2010/04/20/world-bahai-statistics/>).
- Other Countries:
 - In New Zealand and Barbados, consecutive censuses show declining Bahá'í numbers, despite Haifan claims of growth (<https://thebahaitruth.com/2017/10/16/bahai-census-from-several-countries-exposes-bahais/>). In countries like the UK, Haifan estimates of 5,000 members are questioned, with no clear independent verification (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2010/04/20/world-bahai-statistics/>).

These discrepancies highlight a pattern where Haifan-reported numbers significantly exceed official or scholarly estimates, particularly in countries with large claimed populations like India.

Reasons for Exaggerated Census Figures

Several factors contribute to the inflated Haifan Bahá'í census figures, based on critiques from former members, scholars, and official records. These include methodological issues, strategic motivations, and cultural contexts:

1. Inclusion of Inactive or Nominal Members:

- The Haifan Bahá'í administration counts anyone who signs a declaration card as a member, regardless of subsequent activity or belief. Critics argue that many sign cards without understanding the faith's implications, especially in rural areas, and never actively participate (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2010/04/20/world-bahai-statistics/>). In India, a former Bahá'í reported that rural converts were often unaware they had joined a distinct religion, signing cards under pressure or deception (https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/7x9z0r/real_number_of_bahais/).
- Margit Warburg's 2001 study estimated that only 5% of India's 1.9 million registered Bahá'ís (100,000) were active, compared to a global activity rate of 18% (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_by_country). She noted that inactive members are not removed from rolls, inflating counts, but argued this is not "sinister manipulation" but a policy of retaining all registrants.

(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).

2. Strategic Exaggeration for Influence:

- Critics, including former Bahá'í Shalom Scott, allege that the Haifan administration deliberately inflates numbers to portray the faith as a major world religion, enhancing its appeal to potential converts and governments (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>). This aligns with claims of a “well-planned strategy” by the Haifa-based leadership to project success (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2010/04/20/world-bahai-statistics/>).
- In India, exaggerated figures may have been used to seek minority status, which grants legal and social benefits (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>). A 2010 Bahá'í newsletter suggested displaying identification stickers to influence census officials, implying an intent to maximize reported numbers (<https://bahaisects.wordpress.com/2011/07/30/how-many-bahais-are-in-india/>).

3. Loose Conversion Criteria:

- In India, converts need only declare belief in Bahá'u'lláh as an “avatar,” a term resonant with Hinduism but vague enough to attract nominal adherents who do not fully adopt the faith (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>). Critics compare this to Hindus accepting Buddha as an avatar without becoming Buddhists, suggesting many “Bahá'ís” remain Hindu in practice (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/bahai-population-in-india-a-report/>).
- Mass conversion campaigns in the 1960s, particularly among scheduled castes in Madhya Pradesh, led to 88,000 claimed converts, but none were counted as Bahá'ís in the 1971 census, likely because they identified as Hindu (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).

4. Census Methodology and Social Pressures:

- Government censuses often categorize small religious groups under “Others” or as Hindus/Muslims, especially if populations are insignificant (<https://thebahaitruth.com/2017/10/16/bahai-census-from-several-countries-exposes-bahais/>). In India, the census counts scheduled caste Bahá'ís as Hindus, per 1971 guidelines stating scheduled castes can only be Hindu or Sikh (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India). This undercounts Bahá'ís, but not enough to explain the million-fold discrepancy.
- Some Bahá'ís argue that adherents, especially in rural India, hide their faith due to social pressures or fear of Hindu nationalist persecution (https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/7x9z0r/real_number_of_bahais/). However, critics counter that Hinduism's tolerance of other faiths, like Christianity, undermines this excuse (https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/7x9z0r/real_number_of_bahais/).

5. Administrative Practices and Data Falsification:

- Critics allege that Bahá'í officials collect non-existent or outdated addresses to inflate numbers, with paid workers fabricating data to justify salaries (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/facts-about-bahai-numbers-in-india-from-a-reader/>). In India, a former Bahá'í claimed committee members coerced rural villagers to sign declaration cards or invented names to meet conversion targets (https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/7x9z0r/real_number_of_bahais/).
- The Haifan administration's failure to update records—keeping deceased or departed members on rolls—further inflates figures. A commenter from Bhopal noted that Indian Bahá'í records include all registrants since the time of ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, assuming they “never die” or leave (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/facts-about-bahai-numbers-in-india-from-a-reader/>).

6. Cultural and Historical Context:

- The Haifan Bahá'í Faith's emphasis on global unity and rapid growth may pressure leaders to report optimistic figures, especially in mission fields like India, Africa, and South America (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_by_country). Historical campaigns, like those led by Jamál Effendi in the 1870s, targeted diverse groups, but many converts retained their original religious identities (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).
- In India, the use of Sanskritized terminology (e.g., “Bhagavan Baha” for Bahá'u'lláh) and avoidance of denouncing Hinduism facilitated conversions but blurred religious boundaries, leading to nominal Bahá'ís who do not identify as such in censuses (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).

Specific Focus on India

India is a critical case due to its status as the country with the largest claimed Bahá'í population—approximately 40% of the global total, per Haifan estimates (<https://www.worldatlas.com/articles/countries-with-the-largest-bahai-populations.html>). The stark contrast between Haifan claims (1.9–2.2 million) and official census figures (4,572–11,324) underscores the exaggeration issue.

• Historical Context:

- The Bahá'í Faith arrived in India around 1850, gaining converts from Muslim, Sikh, and Hindu backgrounds, particularly scheduled castes in the 1960s (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Religion_in_India). Mass conversions in Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh targeted rural, illiterate populations, often using culturally resonant terms to present Bahá'u'lláh as a Hindu avatar (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>).
- A 2010 Bahá'í newsletter admitted that these converts often lacked a “distinct identifying characteristic,” leading to underreporting in censuses, but critics argue this reflects deceptive conversion practices (<https://bahaisects.wordpress.com/2011/07/30/how-many-bahais-are-in-india/>).

• Census Discrepancies:

- The 2011 Indian census recorded 4,572 Bahá'ís, a decline from 11,324 in 2001, despite Haifan claims of 2 million (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India). Earlier censuses (1971, 1981, 1991) similarly reported thousands, never approaching Haifan figures (<https://bahaisects.wordpress.com/2011/07/30/how-many-bahais-are-in-india/>).
- The census's categorization of scheduled caste Bahá'ís as Hindus partly explains undercounting, but William Garlington noted that none of the 88,000 converts in Madhya Pradesh in the 1960s were counted as Bahá'ís in 1971, suggesting most never fully adopted the faith (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).

- Reasons for Exaggeration in India:

- Conversion Tactics: Critics argue that Bahá'í teachers targeted vulnerable rural populations, using minimal commitment (e.g., signing cards) to claim converts, many of whom remained Hindu (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/bahai-population-in-india-a-report/>). A 2010 newsletter's suggestion to use identification stickers implies an attempt to influence census reporting (<https://bahaisects.wordpress.com/2011/07/30/how-many-bahais-are-in-india/>).
- Minority Status: Exaggerated numbers may have aimed to secure minority status, granting legal protections and benefits (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>). India recognizes Bahá'ís as a national minority, alongside Muslims and Christians (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Religion_in_India).
- Administrative Issues: The Haifan administration's practice of retaining all registrants, including deceased or inactive members, inflates figures. A Bhopal commenter noted that Indian Bahá'í records include names from decades past, assuming irreversible membership (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/facts-about-bahai-numbers-in-india-from-a-reader/>).
- Cultural Misalignment: The faith's Persian origins and administrative structure may alienate Indian converts, leading to high dropout rates. Juan Cole noted a 50% retention rate since 1968, compared to 80% for Christian denominations, indicating dissatisfaction (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2017/07/30/bahai-census/>).

- Critical Perspectives:

- Critics like Shalom Scott and S. Khare argue that the Haifan administration's "dishonesty" in census reporting undermines the faith's credibility, accusing it of suppressing facts to project success (<https://thebahaitruth.com/2017/10/16/bahai-census-from-several-countries-exposes-bahais/>; <https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/facts-about-bahai-numbers-in-india-from-a-reader/>). They claim the decline in local spiritual assemblies—from 10,000 in the 1979–1983 Bahá'í World volume to 600 currently—reflects exaggerated historical claims (<https://bahaisects.wordpress.com/2011/07/30/how-many-bahais-are-in-india/>).
- Haifan Bahá'ís counter that census undercounts result from social pressures or bureaucratic errors, but critics argue these factors cannot account for the vast discrepancy (https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/7x9z0r/real_number_of_bahais/).

Critical Analysis

- Haifan Perspective:

- The Haifan Bahá'í administration maintains that its 5–8 million global figure is based on community records and "reputable external sources" (<https://www.bahai.org/documents/2020/secretariat-universal-house-justice-worldwide-bahai-population>).
- Warburg's study supports their claim that retaining inactive members is standard practice, not manipulation, though she acknowledges only 5% activity in India (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).

- Critics' Perspective:

- Former Bahá'ís and scholars like Juan Cole argue that the Haifan administration's figures are a "blatant lie," driven by a need to project global influence (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>). The 50% dropout rate and declining numbers in countries like India and the U.S. suggest internal issues, such as authoritarianism or cultural disconnect, driving adherents away (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2017/07/30/bahai-census/>).
- The focus on rural, illiterate converts in India, coupled with minimal conversion requirements, suggests a strategy of maximizing numbers over fostering genuine belief, leading to nominal Bahá'ís who revert to Hinduism (<https://thebahaiinsider.com/2014/08/13/bahai-population-in-india-a-report/>).

- Scholarly Views:

- Denis MacEoin estimated 4 million Bahá'ís globally in the 1980s, acknowledging success in India but not verifying Haifan claims (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_by_country). Warburg's 900,000 active global Bahá'ís in 2001 contrasts sharply with Haifan figures, highlighting low engagement (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_by_country).
- The Indian census's methodological limits (e.g., categorizing scheduled castes as Hindu) explain some undercounting, but the million-fold gap suggests Haifan exaggeration is the primary issue (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_in_India).

- Challenges:

- Verifying Bahá'í numbers is difficult due to the Haifan administration's centralized control over data and reluctance to share detailed records. Government censuses, while more reliable, may undercount minorities due to categorization issues or respondent hesitancy (<https://thebahaitruth.com/2017/10/16/bahai-census-from-several-countries-exposes-bahais/>).

Conclusion

The Haifan Bahá'í Faith's census figures appear exaggerated in countries like India, the U.S., and globally, with claims of millions contrasting official censuses reporting thousands. In India, the gap between 2 million claimed and 4,572–11,324 recorded in 1991–2011 censuses is particularly stark. Reasons include counting inactive or nominal members, strategic inflation to project influence, loose conversion criteria, census categorization issues, and administrative practices like retaining outdated records or falsifying data. While Haifan Bahá'ís attribute discrepancies to external factors like social pressures, critics argue that deliberate exaggeration and deceptive conversion tactics are central. Scholarly estimates and declining trends (e.g., fewer local spiritual assemblies in India) support the view that active Bahá'ís are a fraction of reported numbers. For further insight, official census data <https://censusindia.gov.in>, <https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>, Warburg's studies (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bahá'í_Faith_by_country), and critical sites like <https://thebahaiinsider.com/> offer contrasting perspectives, though all should be approached critically.

The Orthodox Bahá'í and Haifan Bahá'í Schism

The conflict between the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith and the Haifan Bahá'ís (mainstream Bahá'í community) centers primarily on the issue of leadership and the interpretation of the Bahá'í Covenant, particularly regarding the role of the Guardianship after the death of Shoghi Effendi in 1957. Below is a detailed examination of the origins, key points of contention, legal disputes, and broader implications of this schism, based on available information and critical analysis.

Background and Origins of the Conflict

The Bahá'í Faith, founded in the 19th century by Bahá'u'lláh, emphasizes the unity of God, religion, and humanity. Leadership in the faith was structured through a line of succession outlined in Bahá'u'lláh's writings and the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, which established the institution of the Guardianship and the Universal House of Justice. Shoghi Effendi, appointed as the first Guardian by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, led the faith from 1921 until his unexpected death in 1957.

- Shoghi Effendi's Death and Succession Crisis: Shoghi Effendi died without children and without explicitly naming a successor, creating a leadership vacuum. The 27 living Hands of the Cause of God, appointed by Shoghi Effendi to assist in the faith's administration, concluded that he had died "without having appointed his successor" and that the Universal House of Justice, to be elected later, would guide the community.
- Charles Mason Remey's Claim: In 1960, Charles Mason Remey, a prominent Bahá'í and one of the Hands of the Cause, declared himself the second Guardian, arguing that the Guardianship must continue as an essential part of the Bahá'í Covenant. His claim was based on his interpretation of Shoghi Effendi's intentions and his own appointment as president of the International Bahá'í Council, which he saw as a stepping stone to the Guardianship.

Key Points of Contention

The disagreement over Remey's claim led to a fundamental split between those who accepted his leadership (forming the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith) and the mainstream Bahá'í community, centered in Haifa, Israel, under the Universal House of Justice (referred to as Haifan Bahá'ís by critics). The main issues are:

1. Guardianship vs. Universal House of Justice:

- Orthodox Bahá'í Perspective: Orthodox Bahá'ís believe that the Guardianship is a perpetual institution, as outlined in the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, which states that the Guardian must appoint a successor during his lifetime to prevent differences after his passing. They argue that Shoghi Effendi's failure to name a successor does not negate the necessity of the Guardianship and that Remey's appointment was legitimate. They view the Universal House of Justice, without a living Guardian, as incomplete and lacking divine guidance.
- Haifan Bahá'í Perspective: The mainstream Bahá'í community, guided by the Hands of the Cause and later the Universal House of Justice (elected in 1963), holds that Shoghi Effendi's death without a named successor marked the end of the Guardianship, as no eligible successor (a descendant of Bahá'u'lláh, as required by the Will and Testament) was available. They believe the Universal House of Justice, as envisioned by Bahá'u'lláh, is divinely guided and sufficient to lead the faith.

1. Covenant-Breaking:

- The Haifan Bahá'ís labeled Remey and his followers as "covenant-breakers," a serious charge in the Bahá'í Faith, accusing them of violating the Covenant by challenging the authorized leadership. Covenant-breakers are typically excommunicated and shunned by the mainstream community.
- Orthodox Bahá'ís, in turn, argue that the Haifan Bahá'ís are the true covenant-breakers for abandoning the Guardianship, which they see as an integral part of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant. They claim the mainstream leadership strayed from the original teachings by prioritizing the Universal House of Justice over the hereditary principle of the Guardianship.

1. Doctrinal and Organizational Differences:

- Beyond the issue of leadership, there are few doctrinal differences between the two groups, as both adhere to the core teachings of Bahá'u'lláh. However, the Orthodox Bahá'ís emphasize the continuation of the Guardianship as a distinguishing feature, while the Haifan Bahá'ís focus on the collective authority of the Universal House of Justice.
- Organizationally, the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith is smaller, with an estimated 40000–50000 members in the United States as of 2007–2010 and some presence in India (official website of Orthodox Baha'is of India – <https://orthodoxbahaisindia.org>), compared to the Haifan Bahá'ís' global community of 2–3 million which could be an exaggerated figure.

Legal Disputes

The conflict has manifested in legal battles, particularly over the use of the term "Bahá'í" and associated trademarks:

- 1964–1966 Lawsuit: In 1964, the Santa Fe assembly, aligned with Remey, sued the National Spiritual Assembly (NSA) of the Bahá'ís of the United States to gain control of the Bahá'í House of Worship in Wilmette, Illinois, and other NSA properties. The NSA counter-sued, and in 1966, the court ruled in favor of the NSA, prohibiting Remey's group from using the term "Bahá'í" in printed materials. Remey subsequently renamed his group the "Abha World Faith" and later the "Orthodox Faith of Bahá'u'lláh."

- 2006–2008 Lawsuit: In 2006, the NSA of the Haifan Bahá'ís filed a lawsuit against the Orthodox Bahá'ís, accusing them of violating the 1966 court order by using the term “Bahá'í.” The Orthodox Bahá'ís argued they were a distinct group, not directly tied to the 1966 defendants. In 2008, the U.S. 7th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the 1966 decision did not apply to the Orthodox Bahá'ís or other successor groups, as the original group led by Remey had dissolved. The court criticized the 1966 ruling for attempting to resolve an internal religious dispute but deemed the issue moot. This allowed the Orthodox Bahá'ís to continue using the term “Bahá'í.”

Broader Implications and Dynamics

1. Size and Influence:

- The Orthodox Bahá'í Faith remains an extremely small sect, with limited global reach (reportedly 40000–50000 members in the U.S. and some followers in India).
- The Haifan Bahá'ís, by contrast, are the dominant branch, with lacs of adherents worldwide and a well-established administrative structure centered in Haifa, Israel. Their global presence and resources give them significant influence, including the ability to enforce sanctions like excommunication.

1. Accusations of Authoritarianism:

- Critics of the Haifan Bahá'ís, including some Orthodox Bahá'ís and former members, have accused the mainstream administration of authoritarian practices, such as censorship, control of information, and harsh treatment of dissenters through excommunication and shunning.

1. Fragmentation of the Bahá'í Faith:

- The Orthodox Bahá'í Faith is one of several splinter groups that emerged from the succession crisis. Others include the Bahá'ís Under the Provisions of the Covenant and the Unitarian Bahá'ís. A 2006 legal analysis noted at least nine (possibly ten) Bahá'í denominations, highlighting the faith's fragmentation despite its emphasis on unity.
- This fragmentation undermines the Bahá'í principle of unity, a core tenet of the faith, and fuels ongoing debates about authenticity and adherence to Bahá'u'lláh's teachings.

1. Cultural and Regional Contexts:

- In India, the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith has gained some traction, with efforts to establish local councils and promote the continuation of the Guardianship through advertisements in the 1990s.(Ref: <https://bahaisofvaranasi.blogspot.com>)

Critical Analysis

The conflict reflects deeper tensions within the Bahá'í Faith about authority, interpretation, and the balance between unity and dissent. The Haifan Bahá'ís' emphasis on the Universal House of Justice as infallible has been criticized by some as overly centralized, potentially stifling intellectual freedom and diversity of thought. Conversely, the Orthodox Bahá'ís' insistence on the Guardianship risks perpetuating a hereditary model that may not align with the faith's broader principles of universal participation and adaptability.

The legal battles highlight a paradox: the Bahá'í Faith's commitment to unity has led to efforts to suppress alternative interpretations through trademark disputes, which some see as contrary to the faith's inclusive ethos. The 2008 court ruling, by allowing multiple groups to use the term “Bahá'í,” implicitly recognized the legitimacy of diverse expressions of the faith, challenging the Haifan Bahá'ís' claim to exclusivity.

The small size of the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith limits its impact, but its existence serves as a reminder of unresolved questions about succession and governance in the Bahá'í Faith. The mutual accusations of covenant-breaking underscore a broader challenge: how to maintain unity in a religion that values both divine guidance and individual search for truth.

Conclusion

The conflict between the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith and the Haifan Bahá'ís is rooted in a fundamental disagreement over the continuation of the Guardianship after Shoghi Effendi's death in 1957. The Orthodox Bahá'ís, led initially by Charles Mason Remey and later by figures like Joel Marangella and Nosratullah Behramand, uphold the necessity of a living Guardian, while the Haifan Bahá'ís transitioned to governance by the Universal House of Justice. This schism has led to mutual accusations of covenant-breaking, legal disputes over the use of the term “Bahá'í,” and ongoing tensions about authority and authenticity. While the Orthodox Bahá'í Faith remains a small sect compared to the global Haifan community, the conflict highlights enduring challenges in balancing unity, authority, and diversity within the Bahá'í Faith.

Taqiyyah or Dissimulation in Baha'i Faith

Taqiyya, or dissimulation, is often misunderstood in the context of the Bahá'í Faith. Contrary to popular belief, Bahá'u'lláh not only did not abolish taqiyya but actually commanded its practice, a directive further reinforced by 'Abdu'l-Bahá. It wasn't until Shoghi Effendi that the first ban on taqiyya was introduced, raising questions about the authority behind this decision.

ترجمه مقاله تقیه: تقیه اغلب در زمینه آیین بهائی به درستی درک نمی‌شود. برخلاف باور عمومی، بهاءالله نه تنها تقیه را لغو نکرد، بلکه عملاً به اجرای آن فرمان داد؛ دستوری که توسط عبدالبهاء نیز تأکید و تقویت شد. تا زمان شوقی افندی بود که اولین ممنوعیت تقیه معرفی شد، که این امر سؤالاتی درباره اقتدار پشت این تصمیم را مطرح می‌کند.

Taqiyyah in Baha'ism

Taqiyya (dissimulation) means hiding one's religion or being cautious around someone of a different religion. Bahá'í leaders have always asserted that there is no concept of taqiyya in the Bahá'í Faith, often using this to promote negative views of Shi'ites. They point to the testimonies of the killed followers of the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh, arguing that if these followers had practiced taqiyya, they would not have been killed in such numbers. They describe taqiyya as lying and hypocrisy and claim that Bahá'u'lláh abolished it.

In this brief article, we do not aim to inspect the concept of Taqiyya and its conditions. Instead, by referring to various authentic Bahai sources, we will show that not only Bahá'u'lláh did not abolish taqiyya, but he also commanded its practice. There is no evidence that Bahá'u'lláh ever revoked taqiyya. After Bahá'u'lláh, Abdul-Bahá also instructed the followers to adhere to taqiyya as ordered by his father. However, the first order banning taqiyya came from Shoghi, but whether he had the authority to do this is not discussed in this article.

In the following sections, we are going to examine the words of Bahá'u'lláh, Abdul-Bahá, and Shoghi with regards to Taqiyyah. Section one brings the references to Bahá'u'lláh's words that he encourages his followers to practice taqiyya. Section two inspects the words of Abdul-Bahá in asking his followers to do the same. Section three provides some letters from Shoghi that he has banned taqiyya. Throughout each section, we first bring a reference from the Baha'i leader, and then provide a detail examination of the text.

Section one: Bahá'u'lláh's Instruction on Taqiyya

The first document

Bahá'u'lláh in his tablet Order and Creation, volume 3, pages 118-119 talks about the importance of taqiyya. He emphasizes that practicing taqiyya protects the lives of believers.

Here is the translation of the above tablet:

“And you had previously stated that tablets had received and the order of taqiyya had been revealed in them; this is the truth!”

After the martyrdom of Hazrat Badi' (1286 AH) upon Him be the peace of Allah...and after the martyrdom of Hazrat Ali (Mulla Ali Mahfurozki) in Mazandaran; the command of hiding one's religion (i.e., the command of taqiyya) was issued. Glory be to Allah, whatever the heedless and unjust souls (of those two) desired to speak falsehood with a word other than the truth (to say we are not the Babis), was not accepted and ... (Allah) says “Conceal that which ye possess”.

The oppression of the oppressors and the ignorance of the ignorant has reached a point where the Pen (Bahá'u'lláh) has spoken with a word from one of the previous letters (Imam Muhammad al-Taqi) –Taqiyya is my religion- and the purpose (of Taqiyya) is to protect the sanctified soul.

Note that a considerable number of souls lost their lives due to lack of covering, concealment, and dissimulation. It was commanded to act according to wisdom, as adorned in most of the Tablets regarding observance of wisdom.”

Key Points Derived from this Passage:

1. Bahá'u'lláh has commanded dissimulation, basing this action on the sayings of the Imams of Shi'ites.
2. Wisdom and dissimulation are considered synonymous and are used interchangeably.
3. Bahá'u'lláh has explained the philosophy of dissimulation for the protection of the believers' lives.
4. Bahá'u'lláh condemns those who do not practice dissimulation as being heedless.
5. Bahá'u'lláh states that he has commanded dissimulation in most of the Tablets.

The second document

Kamran Iqbal, quoting the Bahá'í magazine Payam Bahá'í, Issue 307 (June 2005), pages 43-44, presents a tablet from Bahá'u'lláh addressed to Aqa Seyyed Khalil. A portion of this tablet is as follows:

“O My Name! All those who have entered prison in the path of God, and those who have become agitated, distressed, and dispersed out of fear of oppressors, have all attained the mention of the Most Exalted Pen!

The people of 'Mim' have faced calamities the likes of which have never been heard in the world. By God's life, this oppression will cause widespread corruption and discord in the world... Protect yourself and be among those who conceal [their faith].

The wickedness of the servants has reached such a level that the Most Exalted Pen laments and wails, for it has spoken in the words of the saints of the past: 'Conceal your gold, your travels, and your beliefs,' and 'Taqiyya (dissimulation) is my religion and the religion of my ancestors.'

After the death of Badi' (may divine mercy be upon him), a firm ruling of wisdom was revealed in the divine book, meaning it was clearly and explicitly stated; similarly, after the death of Mulla Ali, the ruling of concealment was revealed: no one has the right to declare this matter [i.e., the Bahá'í Faith] in front of others."

The points derived from this tablet are:

1. The command for taqiyya (dissimulation) with the phrase Protect yourself... Be among those who conceal [their faith].
2. A repeated command for taqiyya, referring to the words of the religious leaders and saints: Conceal your gold, your travels, and your beliefs. (This phrase comes from the elders of Sufism and mysticism and has been mentioned in some Shi'a sources, attributed to the Prophet Muhammad, though similar sentiments are found in Shi'a hadiths.)
3. The synonymous nature of wisdom and taqiyya.
4. The explicit ruling for taqiyya with the phrase No one has the right... No one has the right to declare their Bahá'í faith in front of others.
5. With this ruling, the possibility of interpretation and exegesis has been removed from the Bahá'ís!

The third document

The article "Review of the tablets of Baha'u'llah addressed to Muhammad Mustafá Baghdadi" written by Kamran Iqbal, included in Safina Irfan, book 4, page 192-202, highlights the fact that Bahullah commanded his followers to practice taqiyya. Below is that portion of the article.

In other tablets, the observance of wisdom (taqiyya) is compared to the two wings of a bird (p. 212). In many of the tablets, Bahá'u'lláh repeatedly advises Muhammad Mustafá to practice wisdom. This emphasis from the Blessed Beauty (Bahá'u'lláh) was perhaps due to the rebellious and passionate nature of Muhammad Mustafá, who never hesitated to openly and publicly promote the Bahá'í Cause. In one of the tablets, He says in this regard:

"We command you in all circumstances to practice wisdom. Follow what the one who ascended to the heavens (Prophet Muhammad, may all souls be his sacrifice) has spoken: Conceal your travels, your gold, and your beliefs. Conceal all pearls from every eye, whether of the virtuous or the wicked, because people do not grasp the mystery of the words, nor do they understand their intended meaning. They take what is ambiguous and judge it against what is clear."

Other references to practicing wisdom are found in numerous tablets, and in those times, this was a common practice. For instance, in another tablet, He says: "O Muhammad Mustafá, if we mention the truth, we fear corruption; and if we conceal it, we fear leading people astray. Therefore, conceal, and be among those who conceal." He also states: "Whatever pertains to the Cause, if it is concealed, particularly in that land, it is better."

Key Points Derived from this Passage:

1. Synonymy of Wisdom and Dissimulation (Taqiyya): "We command you in all circumstances to practice wisdom... Conceal your travels, your gold, and your beliefs."
2. Command to Practice Taqiyya: "O Muhammad Mustafá, if we mention the truth, we fear corruption; and if we conceal it, we fear leading people astray. Therefore, conceal, and be among those who conceal."
3. Specific Command to Practice Taqiyya in Baghdad: "Whatever pertains to the Cause, if it is concealed, particularly in that land, it is better."

The fourth document

In a tablet addressed to Mulla Ali Bejestani; Order and creation, volume 3, page 116, practicing taqiyya is emphasized.

Here is the translation of the above tablet.

But all matters must be conducted with wisdom. Anything that causes turmoil among the people is certainly contrary to wisdom. O friends of God, avoid this. We ask God to help us follow what He has commanded, not what we see as beneficial or appropriate... Any matter that is clearly decreed in the divine book but causes the fire of enmity to ignite should not be carried out. Thus, our beloved Lord has decreed, as a favor from Him upon us and His devoted servants.

As is clearly evident, Bahá'u'lláh explicitly states that any matter that leads to chaos and hostility towards the Bahá'ís, even if it is one of God's explicit commandments, should not be acted upon, as doing so would go against wisdom and is not permissible! Here, wisdom is again equated with concealment and discretion.

The fifth document

The following tablet was addressed to Zain al-Maqrabīn in Order and Creation, volume 3, page 116.

Here is the translation of the tablet:

And in a tablet addressed to Zayn al-Muqarrabīn, He says: 'But in light of the wisdom that has been revealed in the tablets of God, some rulings that today cause unrest among the people and are the reason for the veil over them are perplexing. Imam Sadiq said to Mu'alla ibn Khunays or Mu'alla: Conceal our matter and do not disclose it, for whoever conceals our matter and does not reveal it, God will honor him in this world and place a light before his eyes guiding him to paradise. O Mu'alla, Taqiyya (dissimulation) is my religion and the religion of my ancestors; there is no religion for one who does not practice Taqiyya. Then He said, Whoever publicly discloses our matter is like someone who denies it. Our matter is hidden, and the covenant with us is severed. Whoever exposes us will be humiliated by God.'

Here again, it is emphasized that acting on commandments that cause turmoil and trouble for the Bahá'ís, and lead to the people turning away from them, is contrary to wisdom and has been prohibited!

The sixth document

In Order and Creation, volume 3 page 118, Baháullah reminds his followers of practicing taqiyya.

Here is the translation of the tablet:

O Mahdi, may God's peace and mercy be upon you. These are the blessed days of Ramadan. During the days, we are fasting, and at night we are standing and speaking. Some who claim to love us are deprived of both action and wisdom. But God is the most concealing, the all-knowing. This supreme word has been repeatedly mentioned."

In this tablet, it is also clear that:

1. Firstly, Bahá'u'lláh Himself practiced taqiyya (dissimulation). Like Muslims, He would fast and, away from the eyes of enemies, engage in promoting His message at night!
2. Secondly, Bahá'ís who outwardly claim to love Bahá'u'lláh but do not act with wisdom are merely claimants of love, not true lovers. This highlights the importance of observing wisdom (taqiyya)!
3. Thirdly, God has concealed the actions of these claimants and protects them!
4. The phrase "Do not believe every speaker and do not trust every newcomer" itself indicates the extent of Bahá'u'lláh's taqiyya and concealment and how important it was to Him!

Section Two: Abdu'l-Bahá's Instruction on Taqiyya

The first document

In a tablet addressed to Sheikh Farajullah Kurdi, found in Makátib, Volume 3, page 325, 'Abdu'l-Bahá instructs him to practice taqiyya!

The translation of this section of the tablet is as follows:

"The flow of truth in the veins of intelligent and wise people, who have the capacity to uncover the truth, brings us satisfaction. But you must observe wisdom in all aspects because people are in a deep sleep and under a thick veil... Therefore, it is obligatory upon you to practice taqiyya!"

As can be seen, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, like Bahá'u'lláh, equates wisdom with taqiyya.

The second document

In another tablet addressed to Farajullah Kurdi, found in Makátib 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Volume 3, page 326, 'Abdu'l-Bahá says:

In this tablet, too, 'Abdu'l-Bahá equates wisdom with concealment and denial:

"The intention is that the friends must remain completely silent for a few days, and if anyone asks, they should express total ignorance... because at this time, wisdom demands this. Therefore, instruct all the friends to absolutely refrain from speaking about this matter at this time."

Section Three: Shoghi banns Taqiyya

In the section on the prohibition of dissimulation (taqiyya) within the "Treasury of Limits and Laws," a letter from Shoghi Effendi forbidding taqiyya is included.

Chapter Seventy-Two: Prohibition Against Taqiyya (Dissimulation) and Concealing Beliefs

His Holiness, the Guardian of the Cause of God, may His Majesty be glorified, says in His most exalted words: (Extract from the Holy Tablet dated November 9, 1927)

"Some time ago, a telegram was sent from the Holy Land to that radiant assembly, emphasizing that regarding the civil records and the registration of religion and faith of the divine friends in all areas of that land, if they are compelled or obligated to state and record their religion, they should certainly not conceal it. They should not resort to pretension or hypocrisy. They should express their belief with full courage and clarity and should not fear or worry about the consequences and outcomes of stating the truth and revealing what is in their hearts."

He also says: “Do not conceal your belief and avoid taqiyya (dissimulation). Come out from behind the veil of secrecy and step into the arena of service. Do not be anxious or fearful, and rise to the challenge with a willingness to sacrifice. Sacrifice anything for this primary goal, and for this noble Cause, give up any position or rank, and place personal interests and considerations aside for the sake of the general interests of the Cause. Wisdom and taqiyya in past times were the means of safeguarding and protecting the oppressed of that land and were the only means of preserving the religion of the Lord of the Universe. However, in these days, since the enemies of the Cause of God and the adversaries of the heavenly Faith have removed the veil of concealment from the face of the truths of the Cause, and they have fully revealed and publicized the essential beliefs of the people of Bahá, and they have confirmed the independence of the religion of Bahá’u’lláh, and through this, the Great Announcement has become known and famous throughout the regions of the world, taqiyya and concealing belief have become a cause of insult and disgrace, and in the eyes of the wise, they are unnecessary and harmful.”

As it is evident, these writings are addressed to a community that not only did not consider taqiyya reprehensible but practiced it quite naturally (according to the command of Bahá’u’lláh and `Abdu’l-Bahá). If it were otherwise, the issuance of such a decree would have had no meaning or purpose.

Especially noteworthy is the end of the second decree, where Shoghi Effendi, with the phrase “I urge you, O beloved friends... I ask you, dear ones of God, to make every effort to carry out this most difficult and dangerous task and remain steadfast in it...” urges the Bahá’ís to abandon the old tradition of taqiyya and to commit themselves to this most difficult and dangerous endeavor!

However, this request was not fully carried out, neither during Shoghi Effendi’s time nor after his passing. In situations where it was deemed in the interest of the Bahá’í administration, the tradition of taqiyya was still practiced, and it continues to be practiced today—a topic that requires further discussion.

As mentioned at the beginning of the article, the Bahá’í cult and its propagandists have attempted to distort history by presenting the Bahá’ís as always free from taqiyya. They support this claim by referencing the Bábí and Bahá’í martyrs, who courageously stepped onto the battlefield and achieved union with the Beloved. In contrast, they portray taqiyya as something specific to Shi’as, defining it as deceit, trickery, and hypocrisy.

However, if martyrdom is evidence of the absence of taqiyya, Shi’as have given thousands of martyrs throughout history!

The ignorance, fanaticism, and blind religious hatred in individuals like Nader Saeedi are so extreme that they write:

“In short, if the Bahá’í Faith were a political conspiracy for espionage in favor of foreigners, then Bahá’u’lláh, `Abdu’l-Bahá, Shoghi Effendi, and the Bahá’í Universal House of Justice would have always emphasized to the Bahá’ís that their religious duty was to practice taqiyya like the Shi’as, and they would have regarded the disclosure of their beliefs as a great sin. They would have also prevented any form of written documentation identifying the Bahá’ís...”(Nader Saeedi, Anti-Bahá’í Sentiment and the Accusation of Bahá’í Espionage)

In reality, however, the truth is something else. As stated, Bahá’u’lláh and `Abdu’l-Bahá both practiced taqiyya themselves and instructed their followers to do so, thereby unwittingly associating them with lying, hypocrisy, and espionage!

Bahá'u'lláh's Objective: Eliminating Shi'ism

Courtesy : <https://www.hassanershad.com>

An Analysis of Three Categories of Evidence Indicating Bahá'u'lláh's Efforts to Eliminate Shi'ism Author: Hasan Ershad Published: May 10, 2023 | Issue 229

One undeniable motivation behind the actions of Bahá'u'lláh, followed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Shoghi Effendi, and later the Universal House of Justice (established in 1963), has been the eradication and destruction of the foundations of Shi'ism. This claim is substantiated through three categories of evidence, which are discussed under three principles:

Principle 1: The Obligation of Propagation in the Bahá'í Faith

Bahá'u'lláh emphasizes the necessity of spreading the Bahá'í message as a religious obligation:

In Aṭḥar-i-Qalam-i-A'lá, Volume 6, p. 167, dated May 13:

Principle 2: The Mission of Bahá'ís to Dispel Illusions

Example 1: In Aṭḥar-i-Qalam-i-A'lá, Volume 6, p. 277, dated April 19:

Example 2: In Aṭḥar-i-Qalam-i-A'lá, Volume 3, Bahá'u'lláh criticizes adherents of false doctrines:

Example 3: In Āyāt-i-Ilāhī, Volume 1, Bahá'u'lláh states:

Principle 3: Mahdism as a Prominent Example of Delusion

Example 1: Bahá'u'lláh refutes the existence of the Hidden Imam (Imam Mahdi):

Example 2: In Mā'idih-yi-Samāvī, Volume 2, p. 176, Bahá'u'lláh describes the doctrine of Mahdism as false:

Example 3: Bahá'u'lláh criticizes the belief in Imam Mahdi as a delusion sustained by myths:

Conclusion

The Bahá'í Faith systematically mandates aggressive propagation, considers the removal of "superstitions" a core mission, and regards Mahdism as a prominent delusion. This institutionalized stance fosters an environment where Bahá'ís are ideologically conditioned to counter Shi'ism and its principles, aiming for its ultimate eradication.

Baha'i Counselor Omid Seioshanseian Faces Scrutiny and Deportation

Courtesy : <https://bahaism.blogspot.com>

Omid Seioshanseian, a counselor for the Baha'i faith, is in the spotlight for troubling reasons. He's accused of illegal activities like money laundering and persuading people to join the Baha'i faith, which some see as cult-like.

Recently, Seioshanseian was detained in Egypt. Authorities at Cairo Airport questioned him about his activities and seized his laptop and mobile phone to check for confidential information related to the Baha'i faith in Egypt.

After a brief detention, the Baha'i administration quickly intervened, accusing Egyptian authorities of targeting him because of his faith. They demanded his release, citing a rule that the Baha'i community must act if a member is punished for their faith-related activities.

Seioshanseian was released and urged to leave Egypt. His name has come up in news reports from India and Sri Lanka as well, where he was said to recruit people to the Baha'i faith with promises of moral and spiritual activities.

Seioshanseian, who is Persian and a Qatari citizen, has visited Israel multiple times. While Israel allows him to operate, they warn him against deceiving or manipulating Israeli citizens. This raises concerns about the Baha'i administration's activities.

Governments and security agencies worldwide are urged to be cautious when people like Seioshanseian enter their countries. They should thoroughly question them and examine their belongings for any suspicious material. If anything is found, these individuals should be investigated.

This situation highlights the diligence of Egyptian security agencies in protecting people from potentially manipulative groups. By staying alert and conducting thorough checks, communities can better safeguard themselves from such organizations.

Scandals

- Baha'i Counselor Omid Seioshanseian Faces Scrutiny and Deportation
- Unpacking Bahá'u'lláh's Mystical Language
- Critics of the Bahá'í Faith: An In-depth Analysis
- How many People were Killed by Baha'u'llah ?
- The David Kelly Story
- Interesting Debate between Ex- Bahai and Haifan Bahais on Youtube
- Baha'i Scandals in India
- Financial Scandal Rocks Italian Baha'i Community
- How good are Baha'is!!-An Interesting Analysis
- Are Baha'is leaders laundering money?
- Baha'ism neither is a religion nor a faith.

An Examination of Bahá'í Administrative Structures: Parallels with Cult Characteristics

Introduction The Bahá'í Faith, a global religious community, is structured around a hierarchical system of Spiritual Assemblies that govern the affairs of the faithful. These Assemblies are considered by Bahá'í believers as divinely inspired and guided. While the Bahá'í teachings emphasize unity, obedience, and collective consultation through these Assemblies, a deeper analysis of the structures and behaviors promoted by the faith suggests parallels with the characteristics of a cult, particularly in the relationship between the believers and their leadership.

This article examines these parallels using references from Bahá'í texts and memoirs, such as those of Abdu'l-Bahá:

Such statements illustrate the divine status bestowed upon the Assemblies. They are described as being under the direct guidance of Abdu'l-Bahá and the Spirit of God, essentially positioning them as intermediaries between the divine and the Bahá'í community. This creates an environment where believers are taught to view the Assemblies as infallible and inspired, as further confirmed by Ali Akbar Furútan, a prominent Bahá'í figure. In his memoir The Story of the Heart, Furútan recounts a correspondence with Shoghi Effendi, the Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith, in which Shoghi clarifies the role of the Assemblies: "In all situations, refer to the sacred Spiritual Assembly, and in all matters, adhere to the decisions and knowledge of the elected members. . . . Whatever the result of the consultation of the sacred Assembly may be, that is the right path and is pleasing to the Lord of all lords, for the Spiritual Assemblies are inspired and divinely supported" (The Story of the Heart, p. 48). This doctrine of obedience and the portrayal of the Assemblies as divine representatives leaves little room for dissent or questioning within the Bahá'í community. The faithful are instructed to follow the directives of the Assemblies without hesitation, as their decisions are viewed as inherently aligned with God's will.

Characteristics of a Cult and Parallels in Bahá'í Administrative Structures

To understand the parallels between the Bahá'í organizational structure and cult characteristics, it is essential to first define what constitutes a cult. Various scholars and psychologists have identified several key traits common to cults, which include:

1. Charismatic Leadership: Cults are typically led by a central figure or leadership group that is seen as divinely inspired or possessing special knowledge. Members are encouraged to revere the leader or leadership without question.
2. Mental and Psychological Control: Cults employ techniques such as isolation, group pressure, and indoctrination to exert control over their members' beliefs and behaviors. Members may be discouraged from associating with outsiders or questioning the group's teachings.
3. Suppression of Criticism: Cults often suppress any form of dissent or criticism. Questioning the leadership is equated with disobedience, and members may face punishment or exclusion for not adhering to the group's expectations.
4. Absolute Obedience: Members of a cult are typically required to follow the directives of the leader or leadership without reservation. The leadership's commands are viewed as divine or unassailable.

These characteristics of cults can be found in many academic works, including Cults: Faith, Healing, and Coercion by Marc Galanter (2000) and The Psychology of Cults by Margaret Thaler Singer (1995). These works emphasize the role of control mechanisms within cults, where members are often manipulated into compliance through both psychological pressure and the promise of spiritual reward or punishment.

Parallels in the Bahá'í Administrative System The Bahá'í teachings surrounding the Spiritual Assemblies exhibit several of these cult-like characteristics. The reverence and divine status granted to the Assemblies, as noted by Abdu'l-Bahá. God Passes By. Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1944. • Ali Akbar. The Story of the Heart. Bahá'í Publishing Trust. • Galanter, Marc. Cults: Faith, Healing, and Coercion. Oxford University Press, 2000. • Singer, Margaret Thaler. Cults in Our Midst: The Continuing Fight Against Their Hidden Menace. Jossey-Bass, 2003.

Israel, grateful for the contributions of the Bahá'ís.

Bahá'ís attempt to portray their relationship with Israel as solely linked to Bahá'u'lláh's burial place in the occupied territories. This narrative, which was conveyed to Ms. Rafsanjani, was unfortunately accepted and repeated without proper research. They suggest that the connection between Bahá'ís and Israel is limited to Bahá'u'lláh's burial site, arguing that this has no bearing on the creation and formation of Israel. Therefore, they claim that any purported links between Bahá'ís and Israel are false.

However, the relationship between the Bahá'í organization and Israel is historical, predating the establishment of Israel and continuing to this day. This relationship is not confined to Bahá'u'lláh's burial site. Abdu'l-Bahá's actions significantly contributed to the formation of Israel. He assisted Jews in purchasing land, and there are numerous documents to support this, although this article does not cover all of them. Those interested can refer to many sources on this subject. For the sake of this article, a few documents and confessions from Bahá'í organization leaders and prominent Bahá'ís are mentioned.

To establish the timeline of Jewish settlement efforts in Palestine alongside the Bahá'í presence, it is crucial to consider the Balfour Declaration. The Balfour Declaration, dated November 2, 1917, was a historic letter from British Foreign Secretary Arthur James Balfour to Walter Rothschild, a Jewish politician and British House of Commons member. It expressed the British government's support for "the establishment of a national home for the Jews in Palestine."

The translation of Balfour's letter, as cited from Wikipedia, is as follows: British Foreign Ministry; November 2, 1917

Dear Lord Rothschild, I have the pleasure to convey to you, on behalf of His Majesty the King, the following declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations which has been submitted to, and approved by, the Cabinet. His Majesty's Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavours to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country. I should be grateful if you would bring this declaration to the knowledge of the Zionist Federation. Yours sincerely, Arthur James Balfour Abdu'l-Bahá passed away on November 28, 1921. This means that about four years before his death, Jewish activities to purchase land and settle in Palestine were officially pursued on an international level. At the time of these activities, Abdu'l-Bahá and the Bahá'ís were present in the region.

With this context, the first evidence of Bahá'í cooperation and efforts to settle Jews in Palestine is presented from pages 696 and 697 of the book "Tarikh Bi" by Sheikh Mahdi Sheikh Al-Mamalek Qoni. Two documents numbered 100 and 101 from this book are included in Figures 1 and 2, respectively. These pages detail Ottoman agents' reports on Abbas Effendi's efforts to buy Palestinian Arab lands cheaply and sell them to Jewish immigrants at high prices in 1309 AH (Islamic calendar year, corresponding to Baha'u'llah's era).

Uncovering the Relationship between Baha'is and Israel

One way to uncover this relationship is by examining the confessions and statements of Bahá'í and Israeli leaders. For instance, Mr. Soli Shahour, a prominent Israeli figure and director of the Ezri Center for Iran and Persian Gulf Studies in Israel, mentioned in an interview with Mr. Ismailpour in Bahá'í News: "I have conducted research in this field for years. For example, regarding land matters, the early Bahá'ís owned many properties in the Haifa region. Before Israel's establishment, during the British mandate, Jews purchased land from the Bahá'ís and constructed buildings."

A crucial point is that before Israel's establishment, the Jews acquired land necessary for their settlement from the Bahá'ís. This is the admission of the director of the Iran and Persian Gulf Studies Center in Israel. These confessions were so significant and sensitive for the Bahá'í organizations that the Court of Justice suspended the Bahá'í News media outlet for four months because of this interview.

Dr. Soli Shahour acknowledges that the early Bahá'ís owned numerous properties in Haifa!

Reports indicate that Bahá'u'lláh was exiled to Acre in 1868 along with about 70 companions, including women and children. He could not leave Acre for nine years. This means the Bahá'ís had only 44 years, from their release from Acre to the Balfour Declaration, to acquire these properties.

With what capital and wealth did the Bahá'ís manage to purchase so many properties? According to Dr. Soli Shahour, the extent of these properties is significant.

Where did the Bahá'ís who sold these properties relocate?

If these properties were predominantly owned by Bahá'ís, many Bahá'ís must have been displaced, and the area should be termed "Occupied Bahá'í" instead of "Occupied Palestine."

Despite the substantial real estate transactions from Bahá'ís (according to Dr. Soli Shahour's admission), why hasn't a single Bahá'í been displaced?

This suggests that Bahá'ís were brokers and intermediaries in these land transactions. If Bahá'ís had substantial property holdings and sold them, then instead of Palestinians being displaced, Bahá'ís should have been displaced.

This issue underscores the fundamental links between Bahá'í and Israel. In the subsequent sections of this article, we will see that one of the Bahá'í organization leaders, Sarkar Khanum Rohihi Maxwell, also acknowledges: "Our future (Bahá'í and Israel) is interconnected like the links of a chain."

There is an analogy of a thief cutting a lock at night. When a passerby inquired what he was doing, he replied, "I am weaving." The passerby asked why there was no sound if he was weaving. The thief answered, "It will be heard tomorrow."

Abdu'l-Bahá and, according to Dr. Soli Shahour, the early Bahá'ís who knew the purpose and significance of purchasing and transferring these lands to Jews were fully aware of the impending consequences. On this basis, Abdu'l-Bahá prophesied that the unique seedling, Bahá'í, would gather Israel.

Abdu'l-Bahá writes on page 50 in the Book of Negotiations:

How similar are the words of Abdu'l-Bahá and Dr. Soli Shahour:

Abdu'l-Bahá: "Jewish tribes from all over the world will come to the Holy Land, take possession of villages and lands, settle down, and increase day by day until all of Palestine becomes their abode."

Dr. Sali Shahour noted that the early Bahá'ís owned many properties in the Haifa region. Before the establishment of the State of Israel, during the British mandate, Jews purchased land from the Bahá'ís and constructed buildings.

Abdu'l-Bahá left numerous such confessions. On page 20 of Habib's memoirs (Figure 4), he again acknowledges that the Jews will return to this land without doubt and prays for Israel. According to Dr. Sali Shahour, the lands required by the Jews were provided by the early Bahá'ís, leaving no room for doubt. Abdu'l-Bahá was fully aware of his actions for Israel.

Dr. Sali Shahour's admissions indicate that Abdu'l-Bahá knew his prayers for Israel would be answered, as Jews purchased the land they needed from the early Bahá'ís.

Why didn't Abdu'l-Bahá pray for Israelis to be guided and convert to the Bahá'í Faith? The answer lies at the end of this article. The fact that the Bahá'í organization cannot promote an individual with an Israeli birth certificate, even if they are a Muslim Arab, highlights the deep connection between Israel and the Bahá'í Faith. Bahá'í proselytizing is prohibited in Israel. Shouldn't the Israelis be guided? Why does Bahá'í aim to guide the world's people but not those in its land's heart? The next sections clarify that Bahá'ís act as soldiers of Israel. Soldiers do not promote their commanders; they serve under their supervision.

Furthermore, the relationship between Bahá'í and Israel extends beyond the seed and root to the foliage and fruit. As Mrs. Rohihi Maxwell acknowledges,

Abdul Baha predicted that world peace would be achieved by the year 1957

November 6. On this date in 1990, the Research Department prepared a Memorandum for the Universal House of Justice in response to Francis Beckwith's book Bahá'í which points to changes made in Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era alter in Abdu'l-Bahá's prediction that world peace would be established by 1957 based on the prophecy in Daniel 12:12. November 6. On this date in 1990, the Research Department prepared a Memorandum for the Universal House of Justice in response to Francis Beckwith's book Bahá'í which points to changes made in Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era altering 'Abdu'l-Bahá's prediction that world peace would be established by 1957 based on the prophecy in Daniel 12:12.

https://bahai-library.com/uhj_beckwith_allegations

Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era Regarding the Explanation of Daniel 12:12: Beckwith's Allegations by / on behalf of Universal House of Justice 1990-11-06

MEMORANDUM

To: The Universal House of Justice

From: The Research Department

CHANGES MADE TO "BAHA'U'LLAH AND THE NEW ERA" REGARDING THE EXPLANATION OF DANIEL 12:12

Francis Beckwith includes in his booklet, "Bahá'í", a chapter entitled "Bahá'í Watergate: A False Prophecy and its Cover-Up", which raises two accusations against the Bahá'ís:

1. 'Abdu'l-Bahá is a false prophet as He predicted that world peace would be established by 1957;
2. The Bahá'ís attempted to conceal the fact that His prophecy was not fulfilled by revising "Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era" after the fact.

In "Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era" (Chapter 14, Prophecies of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá), Dr. J. E. Esslemont referred to the prophecy in Daniel 12:12 — "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand, three hundred and thirty-five days." On page 212 of the first edition, which was published in 1923 by Allen & Unwin in London ... and Brentano's in New York, he states:

In a table-talk at which the writer was present, 'Abdu'l-Bahá said:—

Dr. Esslemont then calculates the date when the prophecy will be fulfilled and quotes a second utterance of 'Abdu'l-Bahá:

This passage appears somewhat differently in Mr. Beckwith's booklet, in which the distinction between 'Abdu'l-Bahá's words and Dr. Esslemont's comments is obscured. However, the important point is that this entire passage constitutes a pilgrim's note. As explained by Shoghi Effendi in his letter of 27 February 1929 addressed to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada ("The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh: Selected Letters" (Wilmette: Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 1982), pp. 4-5):

This statement by Shoghi Effendi is entirely in accordance with the principle upheld by 'Abdu'l-Bahá Himself in one of His Tablets:

Any doubts as to the intention of the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as reported by Dr. Esslemont are to be resolved, therefore, by reference to clear texts from the pen of 'Abdu'l-Bahá Himself, which is exactly what the Bahá'í institutions have undertaken, as will be seen from the next section of this memorandum. It then becomes clear that Daniel's prophecy of the 1,335 days does not give the date of the establishment of world peace, but relates to the world-wide establishment of the Bahá'í Faith. The words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá which Dr. Esslemont quotes are very similar to words appearing in many of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's writings referring to the processes which will take place during the period of the Lesser Peace, culminating in the Most Great Peace. In other words, they describe the working out of the spirit of Bahá'u'lláh's Revelation in world society.

Mr. Beckwith's second accusation, that the Bahá'ís are attempting a "cover-up", is unfounded. He implies that the prophecy was changed after the year 1957 passed without the establishment of universal peace. In reality, a "Note on Revisions" had been added to the 1946 edition, stating:

What Mr. Beckwith describes as a cover-up is actually the process of maintaining the purity of the Bahá'í teachings from man-made additions.

A letter dated 4 May 1946 written on behalf of the beloved Guardian to a group of believers points out:

An extract from one of these Tablets, which as "Text" is authentic for the Bahá'ís, was substituted for the paraphrase of the Master's "table-talk" in the third revised edition of "Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era" from which Mr. Beckwith quotes.

Examining Moral Failures in Baha'i Teaching Methods – Ruhi Books

We acknowledge that all human beings are sinners; however, there is a disproportionately high rate of moral failure among the Baha'i teachers of Ruhi Children Moral Classes. While we recognize that every faith may have a few such teachers, our concern is that almost all the most prominent Baha'i teachers have faced moral disgrace.

Moreover, the Baha'i Faith claims a monopoly on spiritualizing and moralizing the children of other faiths through these Ruhi Books. The reality is that behind this 'Ruhi Curriculum' lies the absolute immorality of some Baha'is and Baha'i teachers.

The crucial question now is whether merely advocating for morality and spirituality is enough, or should these values be practically applied in people's lives?

Morality is not a commodity that can be bought or hired from the market. It is a matter of human value, developed through passion, compassion, and a disciplined life. The word 'morality' may seem simple and short, not codified in law, but it is continuously applied across all cultures. It cannot be achieved by signing a declaration card or by meeting political leaders and asking them to make statements against Iran.

The Ruhi Classes have become places where the scantier the dress, the more spiritual one appears. They are venues for lovers to meet and for Baha'i teachers/facilitators to prey on the young ones, away from the eyes of parents and guardians. It is also a place where sexually disoriented people find their soul mates.

A cursory look into their personal lives and lifestyles quickly reveals the fraudulent nature of their claims. Many counselors have divorced lives, and most NSA members are involved in sexual misconduct. Some might argue that these individuals do not represent the Baha'i Faith or that I have "stacked the deck." The sad truth is that these individuals are key figures in the Baha'i Administration. They are the acknowledged leaders. If what they promote does not work in their own lives, why should anyone else believe them? It is futile to discuss this until people realize, recognize, and apply the importance of morality and spirituality in their own lives.

In Canada, Dr. Danesh was banned from treating patients. Despite being discredited in a sexual misconduct scandal, he remains on the Canadian NSA. Mr. Payam Shoghi, another counselor, was involved in document forgery. Justice Nelson was found guilty of economic bungling.

There are innumerable reports of such misconduct, and thanks to the Internet, it is all getting exposed.

For the Baha'is, these are signs that the Baha'i Faith is coming out of obscurity, yet they still claim that Baha'is are not mature enough. Let's face the truth: Baha'is will be forgiven for everything they do, whether it is sexual misconduct, adultery, child molestation, homosexuality, elopement, financial fraud, or extramarital affairs.

For the Baha'i Administration, if someone repents, brings new converts to the faith, pays Huququ'llah regularly, and does not backbite against the institution of Faith, it is likely that the UHJ will promote them. Once a diamond is chipped, it may be reground, but it will never be as large as before.

What place do moral issues have in the Baha'i Faith? Should we speak out loudly and often against those things that offend, or do we remain silent, believing that giving no offense is the better approach? I believe the answer is not 'silence' as the children, Jr. Youths, and our whole society are involved in it.

Baha'is are commanded to cry out against the moral sins of others. They are commanded to use harsh words for the establishments where Baha'is are imprisoned, even if they are imprisoned for economic bungling or sexual misconduct. Yet, the Baha'i Administration will shout, "Help, help, they are persecuting the Baha'is."

An article by an Ex-Baha'i of India.

Understanding Abdu'l-Baha's Physics: The Sun and Earth Movement

Fixed Sun: (Physics according to Abdu'l-Baha)

"The animal cannot become aware of the fact that the earth is revolving and the sun is stationary. Only processes of reasoning can come to this conclusion. The outward eye sees the sun as revolving. It mistakes the stars and the planets as moving about the earth. But reason decides their orbit, knows that the earth is moving and the other worlds are fixed, knows that the sun is the solar center and ever occupies the same place, proves that it is the earth which revolves around it. Such conclusions are entirely intellectual, not according to the senses." (Abdu'l-Baha, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 416)

"The sun is stationary." However, the sun is not stationary. It is amusing that he stated, "an animal cannot become aware of the fact that the earth is revolving and the sun is stationary," yet he (as a human) was incorrect in believing the sun was stationary!

Thus, Abdu'l-Baha believed the sun was fixed and stationary, and that other planets orbit this sun. If you show this quote to a Bahá'í, they might say: "We need to consider the spiritual meaning of this quote; Abdu'l-Baha was referring not to the physical sun but the spiritual sun (which is often considered to be God)." BUT this interpretation is completely incorrect because:

1. Nowhere in this quote do we see the word "spiritual." We can therefore conclude he was talking about physical reality, not "spiritual reality" (if such a thing exists).
2. He speaks of the earth, planets, and other worlds, so we can be 100% certain he was referring to the physical sun!
3. If he was speaking about the "spiritual worlds," why did he not say so directly? That would have made his message clearer!

Remember! The sun is NEITHER FIXED IN MOTION NOR IN POSITION!

Furthermore, saying "the sun is the solar center and ever occupies the same place" is questionable. Is the sun going to remain there forever? What if a black hole consumes it?

Unpacking Bahá'u'lláh's Mystical Language

It's fascinating how Bahá'u'lláh manages to say so little with so many words, reminiscent of L. Ron Hubbard. Self-proclaimed "prophets" often love to hear themselves speak, and they do so endlessly, honing their craft over time.

These individuals typically present common sense ideas that can be found outside their religions, drawing people in by cloaking these ideas in mystical language and making them appear more complex than they really are.

L. Ron Hubbard was notorious for this, as any former Scientologist would confirm. At its core, Scientology comprises many common sense ideas—like discussing your problems with someone can help solve them—but Hubbard added bizarre elements, such as ancient aliens being the root of all problems, which is a hallmark of religious leaders making things weird.

Similarly, Bahá'u'lláh and other Bahá'í Central Figures often acted as if their theological and social ideas were unique, writing extensive texts to explain very simple concepts.

World peace, gender equality, and the Unity of God are not new or unique to the Bahá'í Faith. The concept of theophany existed in polytheistic religions long before the Báb or Bahá'u'lláh and was discussed by Islamic scholars like Ibn Arabi and Shaykh Ahmad, who were well-known to the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh.

The Báb was deeply influenced by Shaykh Ahmad and his successor Sayyid Kazim and attended Sayyid Kazim's lectures. Bahá'u'lláh associated with Sufi mystics in Kurdistan, which is evident in their ideas. For example, the metaphor of wine in the Aqdas and other Bahá'í writings is directly taken from Sufi poetry.

The Báb drew from a wide range of neo-Platonic, Gnostic, and Sufi sources, which are too numerous to list. Bahá'u'lláh's works, such as Seven Valleys and Four Valleys, Hidden Words, and Ode to the Dove, are clearly inspired by and summaries of 'Attar's Conference of the Birds, Mulla Sadra's Four Journeys, Umar Ibn al-Farid's Ode of the Way, and of course, the hadith and Qur'an, though they are often poor imitations. For instance, the Iqan tries hard to emulate Ibn Arabi's Bezels of Wisdom but falls short.

In some of the Báb's and Bahá'u'lláh's writings, it is clear which verses of the Qur'an they attempt to imitate. Arabic speakers have noted the awkward phrasing in the Aqdas.

Bahá'u'lláh frequently jumps between different topics without smooth transitions, introduces subjects only to elaborate on them much later, and repeats himself so often that the book feels like it's written by a high school student trying to meet a word count.

Initially, especially for a Western reader unfamiliar with the literature that the Aqdas tries to imitate, it might seem unique and wonderful. However, upon critical analysis, the book loses much of its mystical aura.

Contradictions in Bahá'í Teachings and the Bible the issue of Guardianship is a significant cause of division within the Bahá'í Faith. Despite reading numerous posts on this topic, I never received satisfactory answers to my direct questions. One of the Guardian's crucial duties was the appointment of a successor, a position deemed vitally important by Bahá'í teachings. After the sudden death of the Guardian, no successor was appointed, leading to a crisis among the Hands of the Cause. They declared the position of Guardianship null and void, but inconsistencies and contradictions were rampant.

Ironically, the institution meant to prevent religious fracture became the source of schism. Could a religion revealed by God be so inept?

Despite many discussions on this subject, I never received a satisfactory answer from any Bahá'í faction, including the mainline Bahá'ís (UHI), the Mason-Remey faction, Joel Marangella, or the sans-Guardian Bahá'ís.

Other issues included the Bahá'í claim in the 1960s that their teachings did not conflict with the Bible. However, upon reading the Bible, I found pervasive conflicts in both minor details and broad outlines. The Bible distinguishes clearly between Jesus and the prophets Abraham and Moses, but Bahá'ís claim they were all equally manifestations of God. The teachings of the Bible and the Bahá'í Faith are almost entirely mutually exclusive.

Discussions also diverged into topics like the role of Middle Eastern culture in terrorism. I was accused of being off-topic, but I see now that these subjects naturally transitioned from direct Bahá'í teachings.

These confrontational discussions likely stemmed from the fact that many Bahá'ís on this forum were not fully committed to some Bahá'í teachings. For example, Bahá'í forbids abortion, yet many responders seemed in favor of it. They refused to acknowledge the distinction between executing a convicted murderer after due process and killing an innocent baby without due process.

Bahá'í teaches that men and women are equal, which I agree with, but it incorrectly portrays men and women as two wings of a bird. Men and women are complementary, not mirror images. Additionally, the UHI's exclusion of women as officers is disconcerting to politically liberal Bahá'ís. Cognitive dissonance is a hallmark of true believers, and for a time, I also made excuses for the inconsistencies in the Bahá'í Faith.

The greatest issue, from my perspective, is that the Bahá'í Faith prophesies a one-world order that the Bible warns will first be established by Satan, the anti-Christ, the Beast. This poses a significant danger, as Bahá'ís may see the establishment of this world religion, economy, and transnational government as a validation of their beliefs.

How do the Bahá'ís reconcile the apparent contradictions between the world's religions?

Hello everyone,

The Bahá'í Faith is indeed an intriguing religion. I've been pondering this question for a while, and I hope it doesn't come across as condescending or offensive—apologies if the wording isn't perfect. Please correct me if I'm mistaken, but isn't a core belief of the Bahá'í Faith that every prophet from the major world religions was a prophet sent by God? If that's the case, how can they all be considered prophets when the major world religions have fundamental contradictions?

For example:

- Christianity: Christ is the only savior.
- Judaism: The Messiah has not yet come.
- Islam: Muhammad was the last of the prophets.
- Hinduism: There are multiple factions, with a common belief in the essential unity of everything and the multiple avatars of Vishnu.
- Buddhism: There is no specific belief in a creator, leaning more towards agnosticism, although many believe in "Celestial Buddha" spiritual beings.

Why don't Bahai people live in Israel?

Hi,

From an Israeli!

The reason for the above can be found in a Documentary film by two Israeli Journalist.

The name of the film is "Baha'is in my Backyard"

Link : <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=us2xTn0zjTc&t=264s>

Baha'i Faith Conversion Manual

Links

- bahai-guardian.com
- bahai.org
- orthodoxbahai.com
- <https://reformbahai.org>
- bahaism.blogspot.com
- dalehusband.com
- bahaiaawareness.com
- thesectsofbahais.com
- bahai-india.com
- bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com
- orthodoxbahaisindia.org
- <http://unitarianbahais.org>
- <https://www.uhj.net/>
- <https://www.hassanershad.com/>
- <https://historyofbahaifaith.wordpress.com>
- <https://tarbiyatbahai.blogspot.com/>
- <https://bahais-israel.blogspot.com/>
- <https://lucknow-bahais.blogspot.com/>
-

Videos

- Baha'is in my Backyard – Full Movie
- UHI lied about the meaning of “proselytizing”
- A Unitarian Universalist Visits the Bahai Temple
- The Baha’i World Faith: Part 1 – Origin of this Muslim offshoot Syncretistic Religion
- Heterodox Baha’is Loses Court Cases Against Orthodox Baha’is
- Dialogue with Haifa-Baha’i Leaders — People Have Questions.
- Arrogant critics of the Guardian are all too fallible

Arrogant critics of the Guardian are all too fallible

“The Vakilu’-d-Dawlih was a distinguished believer who was designated by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá as one of the ‘four and twenty elders which sat before God on their seats’ mentioned in chapter 11 of the Revelation of St John the Divine. [Of the other 23 ‘elders’, only 19 have been named by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá i.e. the Báb and the 18 ‘Letters of the Living’.]”

It seems that Taherzadeh has repeated the mistake of one of Persian writers who has quoted only a short section from one of Tablets of Abdu’l Baha to an individual immediately after the title “Chapter forty one – about the twenty-four elders mentioned in the Book of Revelation”:

Jeffrey

(Thanks to Hand of the Cause of God Nosrat’u’llah Bahremand for his assistance with this article)

Dialogue with Haifan-Baha'i Leaders — People Have Questions.

by MaryamJoon 15-Sep-2012 Source : <http://www.iranian.com/main/blog/maryamjoon/dialogue-haifan-bahai-leaders-people-have-questions>

QUESTIONS FOR THE LEADERS OF THE HAIFAN-BAHA'I MOVEMENT THAT IRANIANS & NON-IRANANS HAVE:

There are a lot of articles that basically say, Islam is 'kaka-poo-poo' ... fair enough. This blog is not about that. Let's assume for the sake of this blog that Islam is 'kaka-poo-poo,' so we can get that out of the way without getting side-tracked with irrelevancies and onto some questions about the Haifan-Baha'i movement.

I would like to ask the leaders of the Haifan-Baiha'is (a/k/a The Universal House of Justice or UHJ) these questions, and of course, commentators are welcome to present their theories, but with the understanding that it is the leaders that bear the responsibility for answering these questions.

QUESTIONS:

1. Does the Haifan-Baha'i Leadership (a/k/a 'UHJ'), which customarily fails to make itself open to questions, understand that failure to make itself publicly *available to individuals with questions renders its organization suspect in the minds of many Non-Muslim and Muslim people?

(* NOTE: When I say failure to make itself available to public questions, I mean for example in a town-hall format or by opening its websites and forums up to the public without the strict censorship used there; I certainly do not mean canned-VOA or canned-BBC interviews or docu-dramas. Even the Pope, Rabbis, and Muslim clerics have frequent round-table discussions open to the public where people ask questions – they debate back-&-forth on video and in-person frequently, which often provides Iranian.com with some interesting material; See, for example, Muslim cleric holds 2 hour long open question and answer period in front of 10,000 people.)

2. Given that there are hundreds-of-millions of Muslims in Iran and in other regional countries, do you understand that when their Muslim co-religionists in Palestine are slaughtered and face racism and abuse, the fact that the Haifan-Baha'i Leadership deliberately stays silent about those abuses and instructs its followers to say nothing (even though it actively participates in numerous campaigns about 'the plight of the Baha'is') leads Muslims and Non-Muslims alike to view the Haifan-Baha'i organization with suspicion and contempt, particularly in light of the fact that Bahai leaders own hundreds of millions of dollars worth of property in historic Palestine (Israel) and benefit from certain Israeli government tax incentives?

3. Iranians are well-versed in the schemes of British-Colonialism. During the early days of the founding of the Baha'i movement, the Colonial-British government was LITERALLY causing thousands of massacres against MILLIONS of people all over the globe in lands under British-Colonial occupation. Indians had their resources looted and their people raped (see Gandhi), the British caused famines in Bangladesh that killed millions; in Africa the British reinstated inhumane and heart-breaking slave-practices.

British-Colonialism, without question, killed many millions of people more than the Holocaust. During this same era of British-Colonial rule the Baha'i Holy Man, Abdul Baha, was offered a British KBE (knight of the British Empire) and accepted this British Medal for 'for valuable services rendered to the British Empire.' Does the Baha'i leadership understand that among Iranians, and many people around the world, no one believes the British-Colonial Government was engaged in 'humanitarian' efforts during that era (but rather rape, looting, and subjugation) and that the KBE accepted by Abdul Baha is tantamount to accepting a 'good leadership' medal from Ghenghis Khan or Adolf Hitler?

4. Is the Haifan-Baha'i Leadership willing to admit that the problems it is facing in Iran today did not start with the present government of Iran, but that for approximately 160 years under both secular and religious governments in Iran, the Bahai's movement was rejected by both the majority of Iranian people and governments (both secular and religious)?

5. Question 5 and 6 go together: This question is not about what Baha'is claim their faith stands for today; This question is not about whether people of different races are Baha'is today. This question is not about producing some evidence showing that Abdul Baha engaged in some charitable work or commentary at some point. Side-discussion about present Baha'i practices or beliefs are simply an obfuscation of what this question is about. As noted in official Baha'i archives and publications, the Baha'i holy man, Abdu'l-Baha, said this about native Africans: "The inhabitants of a country like Africa are all as wandering savages and wild animals. They lack intelligence and knowledge; all are uncivilized; not one civilized and a wise man is to be found among them. These are the proofs of the wise men. ... No matter how much the shell is educated (or polished), it can never become a radiant pearl. The black stone will not become world-illuminated gem." (Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Baha p.567 vv.3-4) In light of the foregoing, are Baha'is willing to publicly condemn Abdul Baha's statements, written in his own hand and comprehensible to every native Persian speaker, as relying on improper, racist and discriminatory rhetoric?

6. If you dispute the quote from Abdul Baha in question No. 5 (above), could you provide a PHOTO-COPY of the actual text of Abdul Baha's writing in his own handwriting and the date that photo-copy was first made available to the public so that Iranians who are well-versed in translating Persian and do not require the assistance of revisionist-intermediaries can see it for themselves? (In other words, we are not asking for a modern-day individual to engage in the art of interpretation, we are saying that Persian speakers want to see a PHOTO-COPY of the original Abdul Baha writing, and to make up their own minds, particularly given that the Bahai faith claims to favor 'independent investigation of the truth.')

7. At this link, a photo-copy of an email authored by a well-known Baha'i academic by the name of Ian Kluge appears. I have checked both the email and the code imbedded within the message, both of which confirm that the source is Ian Kluge (he uses the same e-mail that he has used in many of his official publications). Mr. Kluge also responded to an e-mail confirming his authorship. Kluge runs several Haifan-Baha'i websites and has given numerous talks to the Baha'i flock. Mr. Kluge's message states: "I fully support a first strike on Iran's nuclear facilities wherever they may be hidden and by whatever means are needed to destroy them. If the Iranians deny us their oil, destroy their oil facilities – if we can't have their oil, neither will they." (Bahai Academic, Ian Kluge.) On several occasions, I wrote to both the Universal House of Justice and to the Baha'i National Assembly in the U.S. and requested them to publicly condemn Kluge's remarks. I received an explicit refusal, which in essence stated, 'we will not respond to every inquiry.' If from this day forward, the government of Iran (or any other government) views the Baha'i movement with suspicion on secular national security grounds, what excuse does the Baha'i Leadership have to offer Iranians for its willful failure to timely condemn, distance itself, or even address Kluge's remarks?

8. Please confirm whether some of the criticisms against the Haifan-Baha'i movement have come from Zoroastrian spiritual leaders who predate the present government of Iran and share what some of those criticisms are.

9. The Baha'i Universal House of Justice (the top Haifan-Baha'i authority) is mostly composed of non-Iranians and white men, and expressly forbids women members: Can the UHJ members take 20 minutes of their time each to give a video response that reads these questions verbatim on video and answers them directly?

10. If Bahai leaders honestly care about the stories of persecution they constantly put out, why don't they take the time to address questions (particularly by individuals who are suspicious about the activities of its leadership) to dispel the concerns that skeptics and critics have in an effort to lessen the likelihood that people will be against the Bahai faith?

Thank you.

A NOTE TO INDIVIDUALS THAT ARE MEMBERS OF THE BAHAI'S OR CONTEMPLATING BECOMING A BAHAI:

Iranian Bahais are our own children, but also people have to know that there is a political game in the background; and they have to know that the overwhelming majority Bahai's are NOT Iranians (and it pains many that these foreigners make themselves involved in Iranian issues on behalf of Israel with an apparent conflict of interest given that the leadership receives benefits from the government of Israel).

If a child is Iranian, and wants to stay Bahai, some have said, 'Do NOT follow the Haifa-Israeli-Bahai Movement, especially if with all their resources they cannot make a simple video and respond to each of these questions and post them here. They should be able to read each question and answer them.'

There are other groups of Bahai for people to join, like the Reform Baha'is, which allow exactly the types of questions I have posed here. The Reform Baha'is are a group that says they are not connected to Israel and criticizes the Haifa-Israeli-Bahai Political Group and Military Propaganda Operations. The Reform Bahai's don't seem to have fancy buildings, but they genuinely seem like nicer and less shifty people. (Do you really need a fancy building to be closer to God? It is a question for your conscience.) I hope the information below helps those of you that are interested in alternatives to the mainstream Israeli-Baha'i organization.

Reform Bahai Press

5224 Aintree Road Rochester, MI 48306-2713

Phone: (248) 652-4982

Further reading: Video, Bahá'í Brainwashing Corporation.

NOTE: I did not make the first picture in the graphic for this article, but it does seem representative of some of the questions people have.

Heterodox Baha'is Loses Court Cases Against Orthodox Baha'is

Oh you didn't know that the word "Baha'i" is trademarked?

Seriously. It is.

I wish I was making this up.

It was registered by the US NSA with the US trademark office on March 11, 1952 (Registration #556,004). Look it up if you don't believe me.

So is the "Greatest Name" symbol (in Arabic calligraphic script). But wait, you ask, shouldn't Mishkin-Qalam own the trademark to that? or at least his descendents? A spokesperson for the US NSA helpfully replies: Shut up.

No word as of yet if the US NSA has patented the postures within the Baha'i long obligatory prayer. But just to be sure, I would suggest you not bend down to pick up anything off the ground for the foreseeable future as that may constitute a dilution of the NSA's reputation.

Anyway, getting back to our story, it turns out the judge back then was high on a groovy mixture of pot and LSD so he sided with the US NSA. Well, to be fair, I have no evidence that the judge was tripping on a cloud 8 miles high... other than the roach clip that was later found by the janitor under his chair and the fact that he went along with the trademarking of "Baha'i".

Think about it.

He gave exclusive legal ownership of the adjective... the very word that describes a religious organization. (Who owns the trademark for "Christian" or "Jew" by the way? Someone look that up between totes.) I think if that judge was presented with the trademarking of "chair" or "tree" or "hair" he would have gone along as well. When you're baked... you're baked.

Which brings us up to the present day. More accurately, November 2006 – when the present US NSA filed a motion to hold the Orthodox Baha'i group in contempt for not abiding by the 1966 judgement.

You see, they were publishing content online which used the trademark and distinctive words, phrases and markings that the 1966 court ruling said they couldn't be using.

The defense of the Orthodox Baha'i group was that there was no privity (look it up) between them and the Mason Remey organization to which the previous ruling was bound upon. The US NSA argued that they were one and the same organization, just with a different name.

So they went back and forth:

Are not. Are too. Are not. Are too.

Except the lawyers used more complex words to justify their hefty bills at the end.

The result? The judge (from now on called Amy) just like a parent, after patiently listening to the intricately nuanced arguments for more than a year, finally got tired and sent them all to their respective rooms for a time out. No, I'm just kidding.

Amy, being a sensible woman, free of all narcotic and hallucinogenic compounds ruled as follows:

PNBC stands for Provisional National Baha'i Council – it is one of the many acronym soups that you'll find within the legal documents of the case.

I am not a legal expert by any means and I hope that some who are will step forward to offer their wisdom... however, it seems to me that the NSA weighed their options and chose to attempt to enforce the 1966 ruling on the Orthodox Baha'is because they estimated that a new legal proceeding would have less chance of winning.

Let's face it, you simply can't trademark or copyright the word, "Baha'i" or the nine pointed star any more than you can the word "Christian" or the symbolic representation of the cross. These do not belong to anyone or any one organization. They are in the public domain.

Can you imagine the Catholic church suing the Protestant church for the use of the symbol of the cross? or saying that they infringe on their intellectual property for calling their houses of worship 'churches' and for having similar ecclesiastical organizations?

The judge would soak his/her robes laughing before dismissing the case and awarding several millions of exemplary punitive damages for bringing a frivolous law suit to the docket.

That option would have been just plain DUMB. But what the US NSA did, I would argue, is almost as dumb. Here's why:

Because it meant entering into a no win situation.

If they had won they would have appeared like bullies and would have given the break-away group much more attention than they would normally get. We're talking about a splinter group of less than 40 people! Forty. Yes, say it again. Forty people.

As well, it would have opened up a hornet's nest as the Orthodox Baha'is would have gained the sympathies of groups like the EFF. In the end, it would have been nothing more than a hollow legal victory overshadowed by a public relations nightmare. Any positive advantages would have been tiny in comparison to the negative outcome. Also a win would have encouraged the Orthodox Baha'i group to continue to lobby the public's sympathies by presenting themselves as martyrs, the underdogs, the wronged ones.

On the other hand, had they lost (which they did) it would have meant that they had wasted both time and money (the Faith's precious resources) to only receive a setback. A loss would embolden the Orthodox group and encourage them to write further bombastic prose on their websites to garner attention. It would also present the US NSA as weak and unable to protect its trademarks and intellectual property.

* * * * *

Here is a portion of the testimony in the trial:

Alright, here's the thing. We will always be infected with stupidity. There are, even as you sit there reading this, millions of stupid people endangering our gene pool. Heck, you or I have even on occasion partaken liberally of stupidity. No one is immune. Not completely. It is part and parcel of being human. And although we should be compassionate with each other, we should also help each other out as best we can to rise up from it.

Thankfully, we also have reason and intelligence among us. And more often than not, it wins the race. That's how we have survived this long on this, the third rock from the sun.

So there will always be people who are dumb enough to mistake the insane, bombastic rhetoric that can be found on the Orthodox Baha'i websites (like the 9/11 towers in flames with horrible predictions of apocalypse or worse). No, I'm not going to link to it. It doesn't deserve further attention. If you really want to find it, you can.

To show you how "dumb" people can be, BahaisOnline was recently contacted by a Baha'i who inquired how their pilgrimage request was coming along. How can anyone mistake that site which aggregates and disseminates Baha'i related news and content from across the web to the "official" Baha'i pilgrimage website run by the UHJ? They don't have any similarities!

Are we going to now start attempting to protect people from their own stupidity by suing everyone who has an "unofficial" Baha'i site?

Thankfully, there are also among us many people, both Baha'i and not, that will have no trouble at all differentiating between that Baha'i blog and the pilgrimage site. Nor will they have any trouble telling apart the various websites of the Baha'i Faith (Haifa) and those from splinter groups.

What lessons can we draw from this?

The NSA needs better legal advice. As in none.

Since they would be in better shape had they no legal team, I would suggest they fire their lawyers and hire instead a pack of squirrels. After all, when did squirrels do anyone any harm?

And everyone on the NSA who suggested, recommended and went along with this boondoggle please do the rest of the Baha'i world a favor and "retire" from administrative service. It is all the rage right now. All the "cool" Baha'is are doing it: Herr Grossman and Sgt. Mitchell as we speak.

Am I being too harsh?

Perhaps. But is the irony lost on everyone that here we have an institution which is charged with the duty to establish and encourage unity... and they spend their time and the money donated, to pursue an inane litigious process against a small group of people who believe something slightly different from them?

How about spending more time on the challenges facing the US Baha'i community?

Reference : <http://bahairants.com/us-nsa-loses-court-case-against-orthodox-bahais-476.html>

The Baha'i World Faith: Part 1 – Origin of this Muslim offshoot Syncretistic Religion

There's over 5 million Baha'is in 200 countries. Imagine a religion started in the 19th century that tries to combine many religions & then say it has the only correct one.

Larry Wessels, director of Christian Answers of Austin, Texas/ Christian Debater (YouTube channel: CANSWERSTV at <http://www.youtube.com/user/CAnswersT…>) & Steve Morrison, Ph.D, director of Research for Christian Answers (Steve is the creator of our 3 websites: <http://www.BIBLEQUERY.ORG>, <http://www.HISTORYCART.COM> & <http://www.MUSLIMHOPE.COM>) analyze the truth claims of the Baha'is. See our playlist, "Dealing with Islam, Muslims: Sunni, Shi'ite, Alawites, Sufis" with over 60 videos

Co-Founders: Mirza Ali Muhammad (Bab); Mirza Husayn Ali (Baha'u'llah). Founding Date: 1844. Official Publications: The American Baha'i The Baha'i Newsreel, Brilliant Star (for children), One Country, World Order. Organizational Structure: Universal House of Justice (nine members) administers the Baha'i Faith internationally. National Spiritual Assemblies (nine members) administer national Baha'i concerns. Local Spiritual Assemblies (nine members) administer Baha'i concerns on a local level. All governing bodies are elected democratically. Sacred Scriptures: Over 100 volumes written by the Bab, Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l Baha. Some of the most notable are: Selections From the Writings of the Bab, Tablets of Baha'u'llah, Kitab-i-Aqdas (Most Holy Book), Kitab-i-Iqan (Book of Certitude), Baha'i Prayers, Some Answered Questions. Unique Terms: Most Great Peace, Manifestation, He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest, Fireside discussion.

History The roots of the Baha'i faith lie in the Shi'ite sect of Islam which was led by 12 successive Imams, descendants of Muhammad's son-in-law, Ali. The 12th Imam, as a child, withdrew from society to escape assassination, the inevitable fate of his 12 predecessors. He would make contact with the faithful through "Gates," individuals through whom he would give his teachings.

In 1844, Mirza Ali Muhammad (1819-1850) declared himself to be the "Gate," the "Bab" (pronounced Bob). He claimed he was not just a "Gate," but rather the "Gate" of God, a major Manifestation of God equal to the prophet Muhammad. For six years he gathered the faithful around him, proclaimed a new revelation and the eventual appearance of the final Manifestation for this cycle of human history. After numerous armed conflicts with Muslim authorities, the Bab was martyred in 1850 and his followers scattered.

Before his death the Bab designated Mirza Yahya, a son of nobility, as a caretaker to follow him. Another devoted follower of the Bab, Yahya's half brother Mirza Husayn Ali, proclaimed himself to be "He-Whom-God-Will-Manifest," the major Manifestation of God prophesied by the Bab. He also changed his name to Baha'u'llah, "Glory of God," and proclaimed that the Bab was his forerunner. Mirza Yahya strenuously opposed this and both sides appear to have been involved in assassination plots.

The original followers of the Bab who gave their allegiance to Baha'u'llah became known as Baha'is. Baha'u'llah, a dynamic personality with great force of will, wrote over 100 volumes of Baha'i scripture, entertained dignitaries and maintained a large correspondence while under virtual house arrest for decades.

A troubled period of transition followed Baha'u'llah's death in 1892. He had designated his eldest son, Abdu'l Baha ("Slave of Baha"), as his successor. Abdu'l Baha's brother, Mirza Muhammad Ali, challenged the extent of his authority. Abdu'l Baha retaliated by "excommunicating" practically all his closest relatives and depriving them of their income from Baha'u'llah's estate.

The Baha'i Faith became worldwide under Abdu'l Baha's leadership, and his mission trips to the West. However, upon his death in 1921, the transition of power was once again very troubled. Shoghi Effendi, Abdu'l Baha's grandson, was designated the successor, the First Guardian of the Faith. With this position "his decisions were absolute and final and his words authoritative" (The Baha'i Faith: Its History and Teaching, p.251). This brought him into conflict with other family members and he soon excommunicated every living relative, including his own parents. However, under Shoghi Effendi's administrative skills the Baha'i Faith continued to grow until his death in 1957. He left no designated successor and the Faith is now under the administration of the Universal House of Justice, a group of nine people who are elected democratically and oversee the Cause internationally.

Baha'i historians and authorities have suppressed & the earliest source materials and rewritten the early years of the Faith. One of the earliest and most important historical documents of the time, the Nuqtatu'l-Kaf, was written by the Babi, Mirza Jani. It clearly states that the Bab declared Mirza Yahya as his successor.

A Unitarian Universalist Visits the Bahai Temple

By Eric Stetson

I was an enrolled member of the Baha'i Faith from 1998 to 2002. Although I was very serious about my faith and took two trips halfway across America for evangelistic purposes ("travel teaching" in Baha'i lingo), I never visited the North American Bahai House of Worship in Wilmette, Illinois — or any of the several other Bahai temples around the world — until now, eight years after I left the Baha'i Faith. I was inspired to visit the temple because of my renewed interest in Bahaism and the fact that it was on my way to Minneapolis, Minnesota, where I was traveling to attend the 49th annual Unitarian Universalist General Assembly.

Last week, a friend of mine who lives near Milwaukee, Wisconsin and who had been to the Bahai temple before, drove down to meet me there. She has been a Bahai for more than 40 years, but resigned her official membership in the Baha'i Faith a few years ago and now attends Unitarian Universalist and Sufi meetings, while continuing to believe in the prophethood of Bahá'u'lláh. Both of us thought it would be best not to mention to anyone at the temple that we are former members of the Baha'i organization, since this tends to produce a reaction of coldness and suspicion among enrolled Baha'is. Therefore, my friend described herself to people there as simply "a Bahai" and I described myself as "a Unitarian Universalist," mentioning that I share many beliefs in common with Bahais but saying nothing about the Unitarian Bahai Association or my encouragement of Bahais to join UU churches.

I found the temple to be impressively beautiful, more on the outside than within, but even the inside was a sight to behold. The gardens were lovely — filled with fragrant roses, lavender, and various other flowers and plants, plus bubbling fountains. Some of the gardens are under construction and this detracted a little bit from the atmosphere, but it's good to see that the Baha'i Faith is continually improving the property.

There was an underground visitor center beneath the temple with promotional displays and videos aimed at the general public, and a bookstore selling Bahai books, publications, paraphernalia and souvenirs. Brochures were available in a multitude of different languages. My friend, a fluent Spanish speaker, expressed concern that there was a very limited selection of Spanish language materials in the bookstore. I found the videos we watched, which described the Bahai faith and the history of the temple, to be kind of hokey and seemingly low-budget productions. Other than that, the visitor center was okay.

In the huge Chicago metropolitan area, could there really be this few Bahais and curious visitors wanting to take in a Bahai worship service? My friend and I sat in silence waiting for the service to start, listening to the peaceful and heavenly singing of birds who were trapped inside the vast interior space of the sanctuary and apparently lived in there. For me, a bird lover, the birdsong was the high point of the worship service — I would soon find out why so few people come to these events.

Two employees of the Baha'i Faith began to take turns walking up to a lectern where they recited verses from the Baha'i holy writings. They did so in restrained, unemotional voices. This went on for about 20 minutes, with no musical accompaniment, no choir, no recitations from the scriptures of other religions, and no original speech. When the service suddenly ended, my reaction was "That's it?" It seemed that in such a spectacular building that has taken a monumental investment of time, energy, and money to build and maintain, not enough thought and attention are being paid to using this space for high-quality worship meetings that can energize and inspire souls.

The overall vibe of the Bahai temple felt like a tomb or a historical place, not a living home of the Holy Spirit. I got a sense of how secular Europeans must feel when they visit the great old churches of their continent — empty, silent places that are heavy with lingering karmic energy from the past but not much Spirit moving there today. I was left with a strong impression of "wasted potential" — that the Bahais could be doing so much more with this beautiful and impressive facility, such as regularly holding interfaith worship services in partnership with Unitarian Universalists, liberal Christians, Sufis, and other open-minded religious groups throughout the greater Chicago area, rather than letting their temple go largely unused as some kind of relic or visual advertisement of their religion.

After attending the 20-minute bare-bones worship service, spending some time enjoying the gardens and then returning to sit in the temple for private prayer and meditation, my friend and I encountered an older Persian lady on the temple steps who turned out to be a volunteer greeting visitors. We struck up a conversation with her, and I mentioned that I am a Unitarian Universalist and agree with many aspects of the Bahai faith. Her response to this was to tell me that Bahá'u'lláh is God's messenger for our time, that he is descended from kings, and that the difference between the Baha'i Faith and the Unitarian Universalist church is that one of these traditions (her preferred spiritual affiliation) is "from God" while the other (mine) is "manmade."

The Bahai temple rises above the harbor of Wilmette, Illinois, on Lake Michigan

Despite her condescending remark, this woman genuinely seemed like she wanted to be nice and helpful — she even spent 15 minutes guiding my friend and me to a park where we could see a spectacular view of the temple from a harbor on Lake Michigan. I don't think she realized that the triumphalist tone she used in presenting her faith and characterizing the religion of a visitor would be a major turnoff to the average open-minded spiritual person. Most Unitarian Universalists who had never heard of Bahaism, for example, would likely have come away from a similar encounter as I had with this Baha'i volunteer by forming the impression that Bahais think their religion is the only divinely inspired modern spiritual tradition and that other new religious movements such as UUism are fundamentally inferior. Certainly if Haifan Baha'is wish to grow their faith and win friends outside their own religious community, they need to show greater respect for other people's spiritual paths — especially those such as UUs who share a generally compatible pluralistic view of religion.

My friend and I met a Baha'i couple visiting the temple from out of state, and we ended up having dinner with them. They were nice people and we all enjoyed the time together. However, I did find some things they said a bit disturbing. For example, when discussing our respective religious commitments, I mentioned that one of the reasons I prefer the Unitarian Universalist church to the Baha'i Faith despite my agreement with many Bahai principles is that the Baha'i organization forbids its members from participating in political activism, whereas the UU church emphasizes individual freedom of conscience and action in all arenas of society. They denied or downplayed the restrictions on involvement in politics by individual Baha'is; and this indicated either that they are misinformed or trying to make their religious organization seem more palatable to outsiders — something I myself remember doing when I was an enrolled Baha'i talking to potential converts.

More disturbing was how the Baha'i couple described their Baha'i community encouraging its children to associate with children of other religions for the purpose of "teaching the faith." I politely replied that I think such relationships of Bahai children should be primarily focused on learning about other faiths, since Bahais are supposed to believe in the validity and importance of various religions rather than just their own. What I was thinking but didn't say was:

We had some frank talk about my concern that all religions and religious groups inevitably get corrupted, the Baha'i Faith being no exception, and that Bahais therefore need to be ever watchful to ensure that their faith moves in the right direction and doesn't get bogged down in outdated policies such as censoring scholars and authors with different viewpoints. The Baha'i man replied that the Universal House of Justice ensures that the Baha'i Faith cannot become corrupted because it is divinely inspired, and that "the Covenant-breakers" have tried to corrupt the faith but have been unsuccessful. I replied that the leadership organ of every religion believes it is divinely inspired — the Baha'i Faith is not unique in this regard — but this doesn't prevent major internal problems and the need for periodic reform. I made a point of emphasizing how wonderful it is to have total freedom in the Unitarian Universalist church, to believe, worship, speak and act according to one's own conscience, and that I wished the Baha'i Faith would become more that way. There was some tension in the air but we maintained a cordial, enjoyable, and very interesting discussion.

The day ended pleasantly, and I felt that I learned a lot about the current state of affairs and attitudes in the mainstream Haifan Baha'i Faith community. Much of what I learned confirmed things I already suspected, but some of it was new. Overall, I would have to say that after my experience visiting the North American Bahai temple I feel more certain that Bahaism has taken a seriously wrong turn in its development but that there was once a lot of inspiration and passion in this spiritual tradition worth celebrating. A great deal of grassroots effort went into planning and constructing this great edifice in Wilmette, Illinois; but that was in another time, almost a century ago, when Bahaism was on the cutting edge and attracting Americans of high capacity, creativity and free thought — unlike today, when it seems to be on the decline and has made itself unattractive to religious liberals. This conclusion does leave a person with sadness, but I think it may also inspire us to positive action to reclaim the good that has been lost and eventually bring the stagnant stream of Bahaism back into the great ever-flowing river of modern progressive spirituality.

I continued on my journey up to Minneapolis where I attended the Unitarian Universalist Association conference. The opening worship service was passionate and relevant, with folk music, choir music, and an all-embracing, peace-creating message that "Everything is Holy Now." I powerfully felt the Holy Spirit moving in the stadium-sized room with several thousand people on their feet singing "Earth come rising; Life come rising; God come rising up inside of me!" I listened to people and met people doing all kinds of amazing, tangible work to build what Bahais or Christians would call "the Kingdom of God on earth" — a world of universal love, justice, peace, freedom, higher consciousness and conscience — without resorting to tribalistic arguments about which religious creed or organization is God's chosen one.

If, as the Persian lady at the Bahai temple exclaimed, the Baha'i Faith is from God and the Unitarian Universalist church is manmade, then God seems rather human and humans quite divine.

Addendum: It has been pointed out to me that there is choir singing in the temple three Sundays per month. That's good! If I go back for another visit, I'll be sure to go on one of those Sundays. However, the weekday worship services are very bland, and I would suggest to the temple staff that they spice it up a bit or risk giving a poor impression to visitors. There's nothing wrong with a little creativity in planning a worship service — even a short one of 15 to 30 minutes. Including some singing, somebody playing a musical instrument, or some other type of variety besides just recitations from Bahai scripture from beginning to end, would give a better impression and probably be more inspiring. And if they insist on limiting it just to scriptural recitation, how about some call and response or other techniques to get the congregation more involved in the readings rather than totally passive?

UHJ lied about the meaning of “proselytizing”

(The Universal House of Justice, Messages 1963 to 1986, p. 513)

This quote, no more than 150 words, is sufficient to refute the supposed infallibility of the UHJ and therefore, dismiss the Faith altogether. I’m not making “molehills into mountains”. You claim that the UHJ is infallible and in fact, would excommunicate and shun any Baha’i who claims otherwise. So tell me, how on earth did the UHJ not lie about the meaning of “proselytizing”? How on earth did the UHJ not deceive millions of Baha’is that they’re not proselytizing because they don’t coerce?

Also see this video:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XYtqcL406Dk>

Baha'is in my Backyard – Full Movie

The movie “Baha'is in my Backyard” was produced by the Israeli company Belfilms. Directed by Naama Pyritz & Asaf Shafir.

Jewish view and opinion of the Baha'i Faith

Considering the connections between the Baha'i Faith and Judaism—both being Abrahamic religions and sharing various theological concepts—along with the fact that many Jews embraced the Baha'i Faith, and that the center of the Baha'i Faith is located in Israel, what is the theological and social perspective of Judaism regarding the Baha'i Faith?

Have any rabbis or Jewish scholars commented on the Baha'i Faith, the revelation of Baha'u'llah, or its teachings?

Courtesy : <https://dinonline.org/2023/06/08/bahai-gardens/>

Question:

I would like to know if a Jew may visit the Baha'i Gardens in Haifa, Israel.

Answer:

Hello.

There is a prohibition for us Jews not to benefit from idols. Therefore we may not look at a nice idol or pictures of idols even if it isn't to worship it, but only to enjoy its beauty. This only applies to the actual idol, however the gardens in front of the idol are technically it is permitted to visit, however the poskim say that it is still improper for a Jew to enter such a place. This is because we want to distance ourselves from anything that has to do with avoda zara, and also to avoid having any benefit from things that have to do with it. There are other nice places in Haifa to see without sticking our heads into places that are spiritually unclean and can have a negative effect on a person's neshoma. See sources.

Best wishes

Sources:

שולחן ערוך יורה דעה הלכות עבודת כוכבים סימן קמב סעיף טו

אסור לשמוע כלי שיר של עבודת כוכבים או להסתכל בנוי עבודת כוכבים, כיון שנהנה בראייה. וע' בש"ך שם ס"ק לג' יב"נזי אליהם. פ"י באיליים עצמם שנעבדו אסור להסתכל בהן לראות ניין אבל צורות שנעשו לנוי ולא לעבוד מכאור בתו' והרא"ש דמותו' ואם כן בענייני כשלא עובדים לצמחי הני עצמם, והני לא נעשה כנוי לע"ז, לכאורה אין איסור להסתכל. בספר מעדני שלמה (עמוד ר"נ) דנשאל אודות קבוצות של אנשים שנוסעים בטיול לצפון לבקר הגנים שבחפיפה במקום של הבהאיים שהוא מקום עבודה זרה, והרי כיצד מותר להסתכל בנוי של החצר ונהנה ממקום של עבודה זרה. והשיב הגרש"א זצ"ל שגינה ששתולה לנוי בחצר בית ע"ז, אין לזה דין נוי של ע"ז לענין איסור הנאה מע"ז, ואע"ג ששתולה לכבוד הע"ז, מ"מ אין לאסור משום נוי ע"ז רק כשהני עומד לפני הע"ז ולא בחצר של ע"ז. אולם מן הראוי להתרחק ממקומות כאלה ולא ללכת לשם, ונהגו ישראל קדושים שתמיד עוברים מקומות כאלו במרצת ואינם מתעכבים, והתפלא מאוד על כך שיש קבוצות של שומרי תורה שנוסעים לטייל שם. ודומה לזה כ' בספר היכל הוראה (חלק ב' הוראה ק"ח). וע"ע בשו"ת בנין אריאל (עמוד 73). ובס' קב ונקי חלק א' (סימן רל"ב) שאל הגר"י זילברשטיין שליט"א למרן הגר"ש אלישיב זצ"ל ואמר שאע"פ שמעיקר הדין אין איסור כב"ל, מ"מ מן הראוי לא ללכת לשם, ויש להתרחק מכל הנאה מבתי ע"ז. וע' בס' תורתך שעשועי (ר' י. זילברשטיין שליט"א) עמ' 212 בגאון רבי אהרון קוטלר זצ"ל ראש ישיבת ליקוד שאחד מבחוריו סיפר לו כי תקופה ארוכה יש לו הרהורי כפירה נוראים וכעת רוצה להמיר את דתו לנצרות ר"ל. הראש הישיבה הזדעזע ולא ידע את נפשו מרוב צער וניסה בכל דרך להשפיע על הבחור כדי שימנע מרצונו אלא שכל דברי הרב נפלו על אוזניים ערלות. החליט הרב קוטלר ללכת לאדמו"ר מקאפשטיניץ זצ"ל כדי להתייעץ עמו מה לעשות האדמו"ר השיב לו שכדאי שיבחר כיצד הבחור מכון את שעונו. רבי אהרון לא הבין מה התכוון האדמו"ר אך ידע שאין האדמו"ר מדבר דברים של מה בכך. מיד בשונו ליישיבה שאל את הבחור איך הוא מכון את שעונו והשיב לו הבחור שמצא דרך לכוון את השעון באופן שהיא מדויק ביותר בכל בוקר בשעה שבע בדיוק מצלצל פעמון הכנסייה שממול חדרו ואז הוא מכון את שעונו. הרב קוטלר הזדעזע מדברי התלמיד והבין את דברי האדמו"ר וגילה את סיבת השיגעון של הבחור הלך הראש הישיבה וקנה לבחור שעון יקר מסוג שאין צריך לכוונו והתנה עם הבחור שאם יצאה לכוון את שעונו יכונו על ידי שעון הישיבה לאחר זמן התיישב אותו בחור בדעתו ונשאר בישיבה ללמוד עד שלימים הפך

Baha'is Started teaching in Israel!!

Courtesy:<http://bahaism.blogspot.com>

Israeli Government renews Tax-Exempt Status of Bahai Center

<http://www.jpost.com/NationalNews/Article.aspx?id=262554>

By JEREMY SHARON 03/20/2012 03:19

Tax arrangement was originally agreed upon between the state and the Bahai movement in 1987.

The Justice Ministry announced on Monday that it has renewed a deal with the Bahai World Center in Israel exempting it from indirect taxes for another five-year term. The announcement comes ahead of the holiday of Naw-Ruz, the Bahai New Year that takes place on Wednesday. The tax arrangement was originally agreed upon between the state and the Bahai movement in 1987.

Representatives of the Bahai faith, headed by Albert Lincoln, the secretary-general of the center, welcomed the signing of the agreement, which he said benefits both Israel and the Bahai community.

The Bahai religion was founded in Iran in 1844 as a universalist monotheistic faith and claims more than five million followers worldwide.

Persecuted in Iran for beliefs heretical to Islam, one of the early leaders of the religion by the name of Mizra Husayn Ali, or the Baha'ullah as he became known, was exiled from Iran and with his followers eventually reached Acre in 1868, where he settled for the rest of his life, wrote the holy scriptures of the Bahai faith and was buried.

The Shrine of the Bab and the Bahai Gardens in Haifa are the resting place of the remains of the founder of the Bahai faith, Siyyid Ali Muhammad Shirazi, also known as the Bab, who was executed in Iran in 1850. His remains were brought to Mount Carmel and interred in a shrine there in 1909.

The implementation of the agreement is supervised by an interministerial committee, headed by the director of the Justice Ministry, Dr. Guy Rotkoff, who approved the continuation of the arrangement.

The Bahai have been a recognized religious community in Israel since 1971.

The main activities of the World Bahai Center are the development and maintenance of the community's holy sites in Haifa and the Galilee, as well as increasing tourism and investment in them.

The Bahai Gardens in Haifa, along with other Bahai sites in the country, attract hundreds of thousands of visitors every year – including those of the Bahai faith as well as foreign tourists and the general public – and are among the most visited sites in the country.

The Justice Ministry said that the government views the Bahai holy places as among the most important tourist sites in the whole country.

The government will transfer funds equivalent to any indirect outlays incurred by the World Bahai Center or any of its associated non-profit organizations for activities it carries out in operating and developing the sites.

Rotkoff underlined the importance of the relationship with the Bahai center, especially for the activities that it has done to help develop the Galilee region.

Baha'is in Israel, Blessing or Threat

Relation between Baha'i Faith and Israel

Moshe Sharon, Israeli State and Baha'i Faith

The name Moshe Sharon came up in relation to the psychotic-senile tablet of Husayn 'Ali Nari, Lawh Mubdi' Kullu Badi. Mr Badi Ahriman- Villar brought up this man's name in relation to another translation of this work besides the ones completed by Jalal Azal, myself and the webmaster of Bayanic.com

Before proceeding let it be known that the character of Moshe Sharon proves the solid political connections of the haifan Baha'i Faith organization with the establishment-elite of the Israeli state and his policies. It also confirms all of the allegations made consistently whether by the Pahlavi state or the Islamic republic that the haifan Baha'i Faith organization is a lackey of Zionism. Moshe Sharon is a professor of Islamic history at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. His area of specialization in Islamicwissenschaft (Islamic studies) is the Abbasid revolution and the Abbasid caliphate. Besides his normal academic appointment Sharon also is presently the Chair of Baha'i Studies at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. In 2000 Moshe Sharon convened a conference at the Hebrew University, the results of which were published in a volume edited by him and published by Brill Academic Publishers in Leiden in 2004. Technically Moshe Sharon is not a Baha'i but a secular Jew, albeit an academic specialist in Islamics. Here are pictures of Moshe Sharon:

http://www.shalom-magazine.com/photos/45/01_MOSHE.jpg

Some of Moshe Sharon's political views, however, are quite to the right. Notice that Moshe Sharon is invoked as an authority and spoken with respect on the blog of that rabid-likudnik Zio-Nazi Neo-Con lunatic Daniel Pipes: <http://www.danielpipes.org/blog/671>

Quaintly Moshe Sharon's views of bahaism exhibit a very sharp angle of the sort of fundamentalist, ahistorical thinking articulated by the mainstream haifan cultist sub-culture. Here are two posts of Professor Sharon's on H-Bahai last year. These were two posts in reply to J. Vahid Brown (a somewhat shifty chameleon, but someone who knows the score) on the question of the use of the term nabi (prophet) & rasul (messenger) by Husayn 'Ali Nari. Brown had proffered evidence that Nari had indeed used the terms in relation to himself. But fundamentalist-cultist thinking in the haifan Baha'i Faith mileu has a reaction to such designations and what have you. In any case, here are Sharon's two posts.

From: Moshe Sharon <msh...@mscc.huji.ac.il> List Editor: Sen & Sonja <sen...@CASEMA.NL> Editor's Subject: Nabi / Rasul Author Subject: Re: Nabi / Rasul Date Written: Mon, 5 Jun 2006 16:49:13 +0200 Date Posted: Mon, 5 Jun 2006 16:49:13 +0200

Date sent: Sun, 04 Jun 2006 21:37:00 +0200 _____

Dear Colleague,

I think that you are not wrong. I am almost sure that baha'u'llah never used the terms Rasul or Nabi for himself for the obvious reason:

Both terms are connected with the definition of Muhammad as "Bashar" namely a human being chosen to bring a message of God and destined to die like all humans after delivering it. The terms Rasul and Nabi are not fit therefore to the manifestation of God namely the revealed God Himself, as Baha'u'llah described himself. The usage by Baha'u'llah of the term Jamal-i-Qidam for instance is to be compared to Atiqa Qaddisha in Aramaic used by the Cabbala scholars to define the revealed side of the Divine Being.

All the best M. Sharon

H-Bahai From: Moshe Sharon <msh...@mscc.huji.ac.il> List Editor: Sen & Sonja <sen...@CASEMA.NL> Editor's Subject: Nabi / Ras Author's Subject: Re: Nabi / Rasul Date Written: Tue, 6 Jun 2006 13:15:07 +0200 Date Posted: Tue, 6 Jun 2006 13:15:07 +0200

Date sent: Tue, 06 Jun 2006 10:06:08 +0200 _____

Dear Mr. Terry

Your question was whether Baha'u'llah called himself Nabi or Rasul. I said that he did not, as far as I know, used these two specific titles among all the titles which he used for himself. The fact that he regarded the Rasuls and Anbia' as the manifestation of God is obvious. This was not the question. I still think, but I am always happy to be corrected, that he did not use these two specific terms for himself because they (particularly rasul) were connected with the fact that in the Qur'an Muhammad use them in connection with bashar namely flesh human being which belongs to this world. I checked this with one of our colleagues in Haifa, one of the best experts on the writings of Baha'u'llah. He agreed with me that Baha'u'llah did not use either Nabi or Rasul for himself. But to be sure they are running for me the full index programme of the writings of Baha'u'llah to see if I am right. Again, everything that was written about the interpretation of Baha'u'llah to these terms, is absolutely correct, but as I said this is not the question. If indeed Baha'u'llah as I think did not use the terms in question to describe himself then it is very interesting to see whether I am right in my interpretation. Thank you for rising the question.

I shall let you know about the outcome of the search in the BWC search engines. As far as the Seal is concerned. I believe that this is quite clear. Every prophet is the seal of his cycle of prophecy. In this way the idea of the Seal of the Prophets is kept as well as the validity of every a new prophecy which opens always a new cycle. This also is old and known material.

All the best

M. Sharon

—

Additionally it should be mentioned that on the private list grok and in private email and telephone conversations Juan Ricardo I. Cole had disparaged Moshe Sharon as a "Zionist-Fascist-Likkudnik" to me personally and several other individuals (John Walbridge, Steve Scholl, Tony Lee, the Marshalls, William Garlington, Payam Afsharian and the late Linda Walbridge amongst them). This disparagement had come as a result of my queries to Cole regarding the 2000 conference in Jerusalem. Sharon had invited me to come after I had responded to an email posted 9-10 months previously on h-bahai. Unfortunately, for various reasons and also due to what Cole said at the time, I decided not to go. Yet when the volume of the 2000 conference was published Cole had included a largely ahistorical piece of anti-Bayani Baha'i Faith propaganda in Sharon's volume, and prominently so, although he had not personally attended the conference or given a paper there.

However one cannot begrudge Moshe Sharon personally or professionally for doing what he does vis-a-vis the haifan Baha'i Faith. As a public academic in Israel with a responsibility to his interests he is merely pursuing the policies and interests of his own. The haifan Baha'i Faith organization, on the other hand, has a lot to answer for, not to mention a hypocrite and liar of the calibre of Juan R.I. Cole.

Back to Badi Ahriman Villar and his rantings about the Tablet of O Creator of All Creation qua Moshe Sharon! I find it quite interesting that Professor Sharon would involve himself in this debate and translate a piece of embarrassing historical waffle by Husayn 'Ali Nari which the late Jalal Azal and William Miller saw for what it is: waffle! Given that the Israeli establishment has no qualms about publicly defending the indefensible vis-a-vis the haifan Baha'i Faith, I hereby publicly call for Moshe Sharon and any other colleagues he wishes to bring with him to debate me and my fellow comrade in arms Steve Blomberg regarding this item by Husayn 'Ali Nari and any other items he so wishes to discuss.

Let us call this event a modern Mubahilah sessions with two modern Babis. While we are on the subject, I also wish to ask Moshe Sharon whether he would care to explain to the Israeli taxpayer – and especially those displaced settlers in Gaza removed at gun-point last year by his relative Ariel Sharon – why the Israeli state subsidizes the haifan Baha'i Faith to astronomical figures when it is not even prepared to do that for its own Israeli public.

Kindly come to any venue of your choosing, Mr Sharon. I am serious about wishing to debate you on this and other assorted matters, while also grilling you about your government's support of the Baha'i Faith when it isn't prepared to go out of its way for its own in the manner it has for this cult.

Ball in your court...

Wahid Azal

Baha'i Faith and Israel

Baha'i faith is a very cult-like NRM having its administrative headquarters in Haifa, Israel.

AFAIK the Deputy Mayor of Haifa is not a Baha'i. But they are very influential and they get all the support from the Israeli government because of their huge properties and their contribution to Israeli tourism due to Baha'i pilgrimages and beautiful gardens.

Among general public of Haifa, Baha's administration does not have a good reputation.

In the interviews recently taken by some Israeli researchers, they found that:

Kreiner, Noga Collins; Shmueli, Deborah F.; Gal, Michal Ben. "Understanding conflicts at religious-tourism sites: The Baha'i World Center, Israel". Tourism Management Perspectives. 16: 232. ISSN 2211-9736.

And all prominent Baha'i Facebook groups and Baha'i related Wikipedia pages are monitored and managed by full-time experienced editors who are loyal to the Baha'i Administration. There is in Haifa. It has volunteers (and paid staff) in all major countries of the world.

Don't take these people lightly. For me they are a dangerous NWO cult.

Written by Prithvi Singh on Quora (Link : https://www.quora.com/What-do-you-know-about-the-Bahai-faith-in-Israel-I-am-understanding-that-the-Deputy-Mayor-of-Haifa-is-Bahai-and-all-the-groups-in-Facebook-Israel-are-controlled-by-the-Baha%C3%AD-faith?top_ans=273391000)

The Baha'i minority in the State of Israel, 1948–1957

This article examines the virtually unexplored topic of the Baha'i religious minority in Israel's early statehood period based mainly on primary source documentation. It will be argued that while the number of Persian Baha'is in Israel after 1948 was minuscule — even smaller than the similarly minuscule Circassian and Armenian populations — the non-Arab and non-Muslim identity of the Baha'is, the lack of any historical antagonism between the Baha'is and the Jews, a shared history of marginalization in the modern Middle East, the Baha'is' principled commitment to non-violence as a basic tenet of their religious faith, their complete neutrality leading up to and including the 1948 War, (and their support for Jewish statehood after it), their lack of proselytizing in the state of Israel, and the fact that nearly all of their high-ranking administrators in post-independence Israel hailed from the United States — whose support Israel sought — led the state to cultivate this minority to a degree few other minorities experienced in post 1948 Israel.

Ref: <https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/00263206.2018.1520100>

Israel's UNESCO-feted Bahai Gardens Closes to Tourists After Municipality of Acre Refuses to Recognize It as Holy Site

Courtesy :<https://www.haaretz.com/>

The Bahai Gardens in Acre, considered to be the holiest site in the faith, announced it will close to visitors after the city demanded nearly $2 million

Bahá'í information databases are a primary source of intelligence for the Israeli regime

Bahá'í Faith: A Key Information Source in Israel

The main headquarters of the Bahá'í Faith in Haifa, supported by the Israeli government, is actively expanding its global activities and organizational directives to Bahá'ís worldwide. Simultaneously, it is increasing its infrastructure and presence in the occupied territories.

Mafaz – During a ceremony attended by Benjamin Netanyahu, the former head of Mossad, Yossi Cohen, stated, “We have infiltrated the core of our enemy, Iran... We have consistently gathered their information, exposed their secrets, and undermined their pride and confidence.”

While Israeli officials express animosity towards Iran and boast about their infiltration, the Bahá'í headquarters in Haifa continues to expand its global influence and infrastructure under Israeli auspices.

Historically, the close relationship between Bahá'í and Israeli leaders has been evident. Today, the organizational activities of the Bahá'í community in Iran are seen as espionage. The “protection” section of the Bahá'í Faith is responsible for transmitting information to Haifa.

In Iran, Bahá'ís interact with their families and communities, sharing detailed insights into various aspects of Iranian society during their 19-day Feasts. These details are eventually relayed to the Bahá'í World Centre in Haifa, which is under Israeli control. This information exchange is viewed as espionage, alongside other subversive activities of the organization.

In this tense and hostile environment, the Bahá'í information databases are considered a primary source of intelligence for the Zionist regime, potentially aiding their operations if not curtailed.

Contact Us

Baha'i – Israel

- Bahá'is are complicit in genocide.
- Collaboration Between Israeli Officials and the Baha'i Community
- Reny Rouhani arrested in Qatar
- What is the historical and ideological basis for Baha'i-Jewish cooperation?
- How have key Baha'i leaders interpreted scriptures to support Zionist aspirations?
- How do Bahá'í children's classes utilize music and other activities for Religious Conversion?
- Beliefs of Orthodox Baha'i Faith
- Baha'i: Unity and Division
- Cracks in the Edifice: Baha'i Leadership and Dissension
- The Bab -the Forerunner of Baha'i Faith

Baha'is are just interested to Convert the People to Baha'i Faith

Baha'is always claim that the aim of their Social and economic development activities are for the betterment of the society, for the empowerment of women, to lift the levels of Jr. youth through moral education. But the reality is exactly opposite. When one reads the writings and the actual practices, we find that every activity of the Baha'is is directed towards one and only one goal and that is "Teaching the Baha'i Faith."

One should not simply say that there is a lot of hypocrisy in the Baha'i Faith; rather, the Baha'i Faith is Hypocrisy personified. This hypocrisy is embedded in the foundations of the Baha'i Faith.

1- "Every activity... is for the purpose of teaching the Faith and confirming people."

(From a letter dated 1 June 1955 written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an individual believer)

https://bahai-library.com/compilation_guidelines_teaching#1992

2- Gradually and Tactfully convert the people: Baha'i Guardian Shoghi Effendi

(From a letter dated 28 December 1936 written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an individual believer)

3- Sacred obligation is to deliver the message to their fellowmen at once, and on as large a scale as possible.

(Shoghi Effendi, Lights of Guidance, p. 127)

4- The UHJ in one of its message says:

(The Universal House of Justice, Baha'i World Centre, March 3, 1977)

5- In a facebook post one active Haifan Baha'i states the following

<https://www.facebook.com/groups/2209644753/permalink/10156990348534754/>

THE FOUNDING OF UHJ

When Shoghi Effendi died in 1957, he died without explicitly appointing a successor Guardian. He had no children, and during his lifetime all remaining male descendants of Bahá'u'lláh had been excommunicated as Covenant-breakers. He left no will. Shoghi Effendi's appointed Hands of the Cause unanimously voted it was impossible to legitimately recognize and assent to a successor. The Bahá'í community was in a situation not dealt with explicitly in the provisions of the Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahá. Furthermore, the Universal House of Justice had not yet been elected, which represented the only Bahá'í institution authorized to adjudicate on matters not covered by the religion's three central figures. To understand the transition following the death of Shoghi Effendi in 1957, an explanation of the roles of the Guardian, the Hands of the Cause, and the Universal House of Justice is useful.

Infallibility of UHJ demands that there should be no election of UHJ.

The Baha'is believe that their administration is divine and the House of Justice is infallible. The Baha'is should submit themselves to the UHJ and let them decide what is good for them, as the Supreme Body is considered 'Infallible'. This means that only the First Election of UHJ in 1963 was required as it was for the first time that the infallible body was formed. After that all the subsequent elections and bye elections were absolutely unwanted for because the UHJ is itself Infallible. The retiring member should have put this agenda in front of the UHJ that due to his advanced age he wants to retire and let UHJ decide a new member in his place. Obviously this decision would have been free of error and the most eligible member's name would have emerged out.

Similarly, after the end of every five years the UHJ should have a special meeting for appointment of members of UHJ for the next five years, and because the UHJ is free from errors, the most appropriate members will be on the list. It would have been better that The Infallible UHJ itself appoints the members for the infallible body rather than fallible Baha'is appointing an Infallible Body. Or let the NSA of different countries nominate a pool of names for the appointment of Members of UHJ and then the present UHJ selects the names of the most suitable members for the next UHJ body. I mean, somewhere or the other the role of UHJ as an infallible body, should emerge. If this is accepted than all the efforts to hold International convention every five years and any bye elections caused by retirement or death of any member will not be required. Thus the Baha'is will also get rid from the accusation that the Elections of UHJ is not actually 'Election' but 'Selection'. The selection will hence be official. This would be in true spirit of what Mr. Peter Khan has said:

"This is the challenge we face and it's inherent in the Ridván 2009 Message. The solution is childish simple; the solution is so simple, it hardly worth mentioning. The solution is no more and no less than unreserved acceptance of whatever the central authority of the Cause, in this case the Universal House of Justice decrees.

If we would hold to that, if we would contemplate it deeply, if we would absorb the implications and meaning of unreserved acceptance and implementation of whatever the Central Authority in the Cause decrees we are safe. Nothing can trouble us, we are in an impregnable stronghold, and we would become part of this massive movement of humanity to rescue the world from the perilous disorder, the intense suffering of the declining process and to usher in the ordained new world civilization in the Golden Age of the Cause"

The Baha'is should not hesitate from correcting the situation and accepting mistakes of past. Be logical and adhere to the true spirit of the Faith. The position of Baha'is today is greatly weakened by accepting and following blindly without independent investigation and thoughtful conclusions.

Open Questions to Tavakoli and UHJ

The purpose of the conference in Toronto which was held under chairmanship of Mr. Tavakoli and under the Guidance of Universal House of Justice failed to achieve any of its aim because the conference failed to reflect on very important issues prevailing in the Baha'i organization. For example, The Baha'i NSA of the US recently lost a case in which it attempted to sue rival, schismatic Baha'i groups for trademark infringement of the name Baha'i. The daily increase in the numerous harassment that Baha'is have been subjected to. The existence of a Baha'i Internet Agency one of whose roles is to spy and isolate online critics. Trying to find out their IP addresses then their home addresses and then bullying them to submission. Forcing Google to disband their blogs/sites.

After all, thinking is our freedom to investigate the truth and follow it. If one is truly liberal then his approaches will not suffocate the human mind to certain ideals only. The conference failed to encourage the audience to seek out the truth in their investigation. It failed in encouraging audience to apply truth to their investigation. Mr. Tavakoli and his Haifan Baha'i friends should note that staying in glass houses one should not throw stones at others. In future never use Academic Institute like Toronto University as your implementing agenda forum.

Can Mr. Tavakoli and his Haifan organization answer?

The Haifan Baha'is always preaches tolerance and peace then why do they not extend the same tolerance and peace to their own while demanding it from other religious leaders? is this not hypocrisy?

Why excommunicate Academician and University professor like Prof Firouz Anarki the former member of NSA of Thailand just because he believed that to become a good teacher for Children classes one need not do Ruhi book 3.

Why excommunicate Mr. Jamshed Fozdar who so sincerely worked for Haifan Baha'is as a counselor for a number of years. His only fault was his assertions that the content of the books of the Ruhi Institute are unjustified, and that the only valid way to teach the Cause to the peoples of the world is through the use of the scriptures of their respective religions

Why send Counselors to threaten professors of history and Middle East studies of 'making statements contrary to the covenant' in the Spring of 1996 and bully them out of the religion?

Why the crackdown on the talis...@indiana.edu list and its participants? Why bully individuals to retract statements of fact, but when they do under duress, they are Sanctioned?

Why bully the editors of dialogue magazine to close it down and accuse them of negative campaigning and lying for an article entitled A Modest Proposal which had gone through the process of pre-publication review by the NSA itself and then accuse these editors of being covenant breakers for following the NSA's own rules and guidelines on the floor of National Convention in 1988?

Why threaten people believing in freedom of conscience and freedom to express one's opinion?

Why expel Michael McKenney for merely believing that women should serve on the UHJ?

Why expel Alison Marshall for believing that the UHJ is not infallible?

Why sanction those Iranian Baha'is for leaving Iran via Mehrabad airport because they were required to fill out a form stating their religion?

Why spy on individuals and violate their fundamental right to privacy a year after they had formally left the religion?

Why write libelous and slanderous letters about people and then denounce them as enemies in their national publications?

Why attempt to have people shunned and split up their families because they believe differently from the official line? And so on and so forth, ad nauseum!

Given the current UHJ's own track record with its own dissidents, it is the last one who can preach about peace and tolerance towards others! They ought to start with themselves first before telling others what to do?

Why Do Bahais Deny the UHJ Being Clergy?

The Bahais have a weird habit of denying truth and reality. One of the many Bahai denials is that bahai apologists insist that there is no clergy in Bahaism. They seem to forget that the uhj, the institution within Bahaism that has the power to legislate laws, excommunicate, etc runs exactly like a clergy being it is a clergy.

Bahais like to insist that the clergy is a bunch of paid people who are given duties that are ritualistic and that the uhj is not doing rituals. But the simple fact remains that Bahais do regard the uhj as infallible, thus making them a special class of people with bahaism. Furthermore, the UHJ, as I mentioned before, is given the power to legislate and excommunicate people.

Bahais says : “Only the institution of the House of Justice is infallible, not the people who make it up.”

Our Reply : O.K. it means that 6 donkeys + 3 donkeys = 1 horse!!!. What a Logic!!-

Bahais says : “The House of Justice do not constitute a clergy because they are an elected body, not a group of professional priests or ministers.”

Our Reply :You are trying to redefine what clergy. For your information, the Webster dictionary defines clergy as:

“the official or sacerdotal class of a non-Christian religion”

The UHJ definitely falls in that category. Being elected or not is not the issue, and furthermore, the Pope for example is elected thus making another hole in your extremely weak argument. The uhj is a class within bahais that are apart from the rest of “regular” bahais. Like I said before, they are given the power to legislate, excommunicate, etc. Regular bahais just can’t go and legislate and excommunicate people.

Reality proves beyond a doubt that the UHJ is a clergy.

Why do Bahais continue to insist that they have no clergy? I believe it is because to make Bahaism more “palatable” to people who are fed up with the clergy of other religions. By covering up the fact that Bahaism has a clergy, it is just another example of the deceptive nature of this secular humanist cult dressed up in religious clothing.

Orthodox Baha'i Faith v/s UHJ

PROOF THAT THE LIVING GUARDIAN OF THE FAITH IS ESSENTIAL TO THE FUNCTIONING OF THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE AND THAT THIS INSTITUTION IS ONLY INFALLIBLY GUIDED WHEN THE GUARDIAN OF THE FAITH IS PRESIDING AS ITS "SACRED HEAD"

From the Will and Testament of Abdul-Bahá:

"...the guardian of the Cause of God is its sacred head and the distinguished member for life of that body [Universal House of Justice]. Should he not attend in person its deliberations, he must appoint one to represent him. Should any of the members commit a sin, injurious to the common weal, the guardian of the Cause of God hath at his own discretion the right to expel him."

Quoted from the "Dispensation of Baháulláh" by Shoghi Effendi:

"It should be stated at the very outset, in clear and unambiguous language, that these twin institutions of the Administrative Order of Baháulláh [the Guardianship and Universal House of Justice] should be regarded as divine in origin, essential in their functions and complementary in their aim and purpose."

"Acting in conjunction with each other these two inseparable institutions administer its affairs, coordinate its activities, promote its interests, execute its laws and defend its subsidiary institutions."

"Without such an institution [the Guardianship] . . . the necessary guidance to define the sphere of the legislative action of its elected representatives would be totally withdrawn."

"...the Guardian of the Faith is bound to insist upon a reconsideration by them [UHJ] of any enactment he conscientiously believes to conflict with the meaning and to depart from the spirit of Baháulláh's revealed utterances."

Quoted from Haifa Notes of May Maxwell – 1937 (mother of Rúhíyyih Khánum and accompanied by her on pilgrimage when she was then Mary Maxwell):

"There are three elements in the [divinely-conceived, sacred and immortal] Will [of Abdul-Bahá]: the Guardian is the Interpreter; the International House of Justice, the Legislature; and the Hands [appointed by the Guardian] propagate and teach the Cause – through research work and the example of their lives and conduct. The Administrative Order would be paralyzed if ONE of these institutions should cease to function."

"His [the Guardian's] task is to watch very carefully that they [the members of the UHJ] do not get out of their sphere of activity, legislation."

Comment: Under the present heterodox Baháí organization, the Guardianship, one of the "twin pillars" that Shoghi Effendi has emphasized "support this mighty Administrative Structure" – [the Baháí Administrative Order] no longer exists while they have brought into existence as the second pillar, standing by itself, a headless (i.e. sans Guardian) so-called Universal House of Justice – as a substitute for the divinely conceived institution delineated by ŠAbdu'l-Bahá in His Will and Testament. Moreover, the Hands of the Cause who can only be appointed by the Guardian according to the Will and Testament of Abdul-Bahá as well as their body of nine elected from their own number who would work specifically under his direction at the World Center can therefore never exist.

Notwithstanding the fact that two of the three highest institutions of the Baháí Administrative Order – the Guardianship and the Hands of the Cause – have been abolished by them and the third – their Universal House of Justice – has been permanently deprived of its "sacred head", the members of this so-called Universal House of Justice have incredibly deluded themselves into believing, and have succeeded in convincing a majority of their fellow-believers to hold the same fallacious belief, that this spurious, headless body (incidentally, prematurely established according to Shoghi Effendi's Proclamation of 9 January 1951) constitutes, through some perverted, illogical and incomprehensible kind of reasoning, the infallible institution delineated by Abdul-Bahá in His Will and Testament and that this deformed, corrupted man-made body created outside of the provisions of that divinely-conceived, sacred, immortal and immutable Document penned by the "master-hand" of the "perfect Architect" of the Administrative Order will still be able to establish the World Order of Baháulláh.

Joel Bray Marangella Guardian of the Baháí Faith 25 October 1997

Official Internet Sites of the Third Guardian:

<http://www.iinet.net.au/~guardian>

The Status of UHJ

Here's one of the Haifa Baha'i counselors speaking about the UHJ:

"We don't want to be like those people who want to see God with their own eyes, or hear His melody with their own ears, because we have been given the gift of being able to see through the eyes of the House of Justice and listen through the ears of the House of Justice." – Baha'i Counselor Rebeque Murphy

To hear this section of her talk go to:

<http://media1.bahai.us/tab/Highlights/Sunday/...>

—

Note that this idolatrous statement has not been reputed by the UHJ, it is the level of enthrallment to themselves that they now expect: unquestioning obedience.

Cheers

Larry Rowe

A Letter of Protest to UHJ Member by Grand Daughter of Abdul Baha

Protest Letter to Mr. Adib Taherzadeh, member of the Universal House of Justice, December 1994. By Bahiyeh Afnan Shahid, in response to his book The Covenant of Baha'u'llah.

POB 155 31001 Haifa Israel

Dear Mr. Taherzadeh:

It is with a heavy heart and a feeling of great sadness that I write this to you.

I recently came across your book "The Covenant of Baha'u'llah" published in 1992. The introduction inside the dust cover reads:

The Covenant of Baha'u'llah is a unique and priceless heritage, unprecedented in past Dispensations. It carries within itself enormous potentialities for the future in the unfoldment of Baha'u'llah's new world order, and ultimately the Golden Age of Mankind.

Hinging, resounding words with which I could not agree more.

Familiar with your four-part work on the "Revelation of Baha'u'llah" I quickly turned to the list of contents. In part Three, The Lesser Covenant, you have a chapter which you call

May I say, it left me totally dumbstruck!

A book with the shining name of Baha'u'llah in its title, written by someone called not only Adib, but Taherzadeh as well; a fifth generation Bahai and a member of the Universal House of Justice; a writer whose work is considered "an outstanding contribution to Bahai literature... a magnificent book" by the Bahai Reviewing Panel of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahais of the UK. A writer of recognised "scholarship and eloquence", making allegations, accusing, sitting as judge and jury and passing sentence on all the relatives of Shoghi Effendi. These are the descendants of the Bab, Baha'u'llah and the Master, and for you to so blithely describe them as Covenant breakers and faithless is to assume powers of judgement that leaves one aghast.

Contrary to the events of Part One and Two of your book, when I was neither alive or around, the events of the above-mentioned chapter were very much a part of my life. My maternal grandparents, who were Shoghi Effendi's parents, his aunts and their husbands, their children and grandchildren, my own parents, aunt and both paternal and maternal uncles and their children – they were all very much a part of my life and my existence. I knew a great deal about them, and most of all, I knew a great deal about my parents, Nayer and Rouhanguise Afnan, about my husband, Hassan Shahid, and myself, Bahiyeh Afnan Shahid.

I do not know where you get your information about the family of Shoghi Effendi, but in your description of their behaviour and motives I could detect no relationship to the facts of the lives of the people you so carelessly write about. Had you taken the trouble to contact some of them, you, like all scholars, would have found that history is a many-faceted thing. Even a half-hearted effort at research into the lives, characters and motives of those mentioned, would have quickly shown that the facile, careless and carefree condemnation that you scatter around is rather rudely denuded of any relation to fact and reality.

Of course, had you done so I suppose that might have exposed you to the danger of becoming a 'covenant breaker' yourself, and maybe that is not a risk worth taking, even in the service of scholarship. But you would have found the facts very different from those which you recount.

Knowing that there was no effort made by you to gather first-hand information from or about the people involved, I can only conclude that you had only two sources to fall back on:

1. Shoghi Effendi's cables, &
2. Hearsay.

Regarding hearsay, I will give you just one brief example here and return to it later. I have with my own ears heard and with my own eyes read about Rouhiyeh Khanum being "the last surviving member of Baha'u'llah's family. (Should you wish to have chapter and verse I shall be happy to provide them). This I consider hearsay supreme, but it seems to be accepted as fact in certain quarters.

I should now like to come to a much more important source, Shoghi Effendi's cables, which you so fully quote. (Incidentally, this gives me my first chance to see them.) They throw a very interesting light on things.

As you fully recount in Parts One and Two of your book, both the periods of Baha'u'llah and the Master were rife with the problems created by the active, aggressive and deliberate opposition created by members of the family who opposed them during those periods.

Very well aware of all these matters, none, and I repeat none, of the members of the family that you deal with in your chapter wanted either to question, undermine, or disturb the Guardianship of Shoghi Effendi, or hinder the execution of the big trust placed in his hands by the will of the Master. For years they helped him in all sorts of ways and in different capacities, until Shoghi Effendi saw fit to distance each and every one of them from the Cause and the community. You only have his version of why he considered them unworthy and systematically condemned them.

But, and here is the point that I wish to underline: every one of them saw fit to withdraw quietly, without creating any trouble or difficulty. Not one of them, beginning with his parents, and down to my generation, raised a voice in dissent or made an unseemly move. In the interest of the Cause and its unity, matters as dear to their hearts as they were to the hearts of Baha'u'llah and the Master, none of them disputed these verdicts. But this silence should not be misrepresented as an admission of guilt.

The family accepted Shoghi Effendi's decision and judgement precisely because he was the Guardian of the Faith and the Master had so designated him. On what basis, and why such judgement and condemnations were made may have been another matter, and maybe, with time, that too will become clear. But, Mr. Taherzadeh, and here I speak to you as a privileged member of a family who has considered its condition a form of shahadat in the service of the Cause, you, in one brief chapter, in a book that bears the illustrious name of Baha'u'llah, and in a section regarding the Guardian of the Faith, have sat in solitary judgement all over again. You have dragged the names of sincere Bahais and silent sufferers into the mire. If we are all as awful as you say we are, do not sully the names of Baha'u'llah, the Master and Shoghi Effendi by saying that all Shoghi Effendi's family were faithless covenant breakers. Stories that do not stand either the test of close examination or first-hand knowledge are not worthy of inclusion in a book regarding the Covenant and Cause of Baha'u'llah, to which they, one and all, were true and sincere, and in the precepts and principles of which they all most truly believed.

The family's dedication to the Faith ran not only in their blood but in their hearts and their minds. Under very difficult circumstances they maintained it. For them it was a source of succour and support. They were out of the community and they were out of the Cause, and to this day, I for one, have a long list of questions to find out why. However, I can vouch for one thing with determined conviction: they were neither covenant breakers nor 'faithless'. The very term 'naghezeen' denotes those people who had gone against, deliberately undermined, and plotted against the will of Baha'u'llah. 'Naghze Ahde Jamale Ghedam' was to refuse to accept the position of the Master as appointed in – Baha'u'llah's will. Can you, in all honesty, consider anything any members of the family of Shoghi Effendi did, or might have been accused of doing, as casting doubt on the position and authority of Shoghi Effendi, as set out in the will of the Master?

Not one of the daughters of the Master, including the mother of Shoghi Effendi, their husbands, their children or their sons-in-law – Afriars, Aghsans or son and grandchildren of Sultan el Shuhada – ever cast any shadow of doubt on the will of the Master or Shoghi Effendi's position and authority. Should you wish to go into this matter in greater detail I shall be very happy to do so, in person or by letter.

But to return to hearsay.

Of the long list that I could draw up for you, I should just like to point out the following:

My parents, Rouhanguise and Nayer Afrian, were married with the full knowledge and approval of the Guardian, Shoghi Effendi. The wedding took place in the Andaroon, in the family home of the Master, in 1928. Khanum, the Great Holy Leaf, blessed the marriage in the presence of my great-grandmother, Mounireh Khanum, the wife of the Master and the other members of the family and friends. Two years later, when I was born, Khanum both blessed and honoured me when she insisted that I carry her honoured and beloved name in place of the one my parents had originally chosen for me. I can categorically claim that my father's intentions in marrying my mother was devoid of the ridiculous idea that he wished to introduce the virus of covenant breaking into the family of Shoghi Effendi.

I can just as categorically state that neither of my parents were instrumental in arranging or bringing about the marriages of my aunt Mehranguise Rabbani with my uncle Hassan Afrian, or of my uncle Dr. Faizy Afrian with their cousin, Soraya Afrian.

As to my marriage to Hassan Shahid – Shoghi Effendi makes it sound like an offence – I would like to say that by the time of that marriage in 1964, my father had been dead for eleven years. Shoghi Effendi had not seen his sister, my mother, since the late 30s, and she certainly was a stranger to you. Had you met her or enquired about her you would have found out for yourself what a lady she truly was. Blessed by great dignity and a strong sense of honour, she was a worthy member of an honourable family whose good name she ever sought to safeguard, and the high esteem in which it had always been held she always tried to maintain. To say of her that she "did not rest until she arranged another marriage between her cousin Hassan Shahid" and myself, her daughter – as if she were hatching some dark, deep plot – could not possibly be further from the truth – and I should know it was my mother, my marriage and my story.

I would greatly appreciate knowing on what basis my father, Nayer Afrian, was considered "the pivot of machinations, connecting link between old and new Covenant Breakers." One thing I do know, however: far from attributing the cancer of the breast that my grandmother Fourough Khanum suffered and died from to Abdul Baha – a ridiculous attribution if there ever was one, and my father and his brothers were far from ridiculous people – I know for a fact, from both of my parents, of the kindness and affection shown by the Master and his daughters to my grandmother during her last illness.

As to my father being "struck down" by "God's avenging wrath" when he died – it seems to me that it is a description that could be applied to anyone's death, for who knows whether it's God's avenging wrath or His loving mercy that gathers us all into the next world?

I could go on and on, Mr. Taherzadeh, taking your 'narrative' point by point and wishing you had been more scholarly about your approach. Basic research is essential to any narrative, and I am sure you did not mean to write a work of fiction – which, incidentally, also requires research.

No, Mr. Taherzadeh, Shoghi Effendi had the will of the Master and the station of Guardianship to stamp his judgements with the stamp of authority. You, a student, scholar and eloquent writer on Bahaism could, if I may say so, have dealt a bit more in the realm of 'Al-Hujjatu wal Burhan' which, according to the Aghdas even applied at the level of revelation, when it states:

O concourse of divines! When My verses were sent down and My clear tokens were revealed. We found you behind the veils. This verily is a strange thing. You glory in My Name, yet ye recognised Me not at the time your Lord, the All-Merciful, appeared amongst you with proof and testimony (my emphasis).

(Aghdas paragraph 165)

On the other hand, maybe such an approach was a necessary component of your efforts to develop the theology of infallibility and obedience within the Bahai Faith. Infallibility and obedience were the trade marks of the Catholic Church. For over a decade now Liberation Theology has been one of the finer achievements of that Church, in the service of the oppressed and downtrodden. Making a stand against injustice and exploitation were its main aims and guiding lights. It is ironic that one of the youngest religions in the world today should be seeking to develop a theology that harks back not to its own sources of divine inspiration, brilliantly presented by the powers of reason and intellect, but to an outmoded, discredited approach based on infallibility and obedience.

I must say, discussions of this sort make me think of Ruhi Afhan, a man I was privileged to know and of whose "increasing rebelliousness" Shoghi Effendi complained. In listening to him or reading his books, you could not have failed to realise that his one and only wish was to be of service to the Cause of Baha'u'llah and to the Master who was his mentor and inspiration. 'Al Hujjatu wal Burhan' (Proof and Intellect) and the full use of reason and intellect were high on his list of priorities. He, like my father and many other members of the family, served Shoghi Effendi for many years, each in whatever capacity they had. I wonder what many of them, now 'struck down by God's avenging wrath', would say, at a gathering of the clan of the 'unfaithful family' of Shoghi Effendi. May be they too will be waiting for a 'liberation theologian' to release them from the bondage of injustice and exploitation that your chapter recounts. Not that it really matters, for does not the Aghdas also say:

Should anyone wax angry with you, respond with gentleness; and should anyone upbraid you, forbear to upbraid him in return, but leave him to himself and put your trust in God the Just and Mighty Avenger.

(Aghdas paragraph 153)

In fact, I have found it a source of comfort to turn to Kitabe Aghdas as an antidote to the pain and sadness that the reading of your book produces.

Though it hurts very badly to know that we were not able to respond to the moving call of Arise to further My Cause and to exalt My Word amongst men. We are with you at all times and shall strengthen you through the power of truth.

(Aghdas paragraph 38)

it is comforting to find that it is followed by Whoso hath recognized Me will arise and serve me with such determination that the powers of earth and heaven shall be unable to defeat his purpose.

(Aghdas para 38)

And even more heartening when it says

Arise ye under all conditions (my emphasis) to render service to the Cause, for God will assuredly assist you through the power of His sovereignty which embraces both worlds.

(ibid)

Service to the Cause can and does take many forms, both within the community and outside it. In the final analysis Baha'u'llah grants one and all the supreme assurance of saying

By My life, all that are on earth shall pass away, while good deeds alone shall endure. To the truth of My words God doth Himself bear witness.....Say the very life of all deeds is My good pleasure and all things depend on My acceptance.

(Aghdas para 36)

Each in our own ways, you in yours and I and the various members of my family in ours, have tried to respond to the ringing challenge of

By My life! He who has drunk the choicer wine of fairness from the hands of My bountiful favour will circle around My commandments that shine above horizons of creation. Do no think that We have revealed a mere code of laws. Nay, rather, We have unsealed the choice wine with the fingers of might and power.

(Aghdas para 4&5)

It is a moving, heart-piercing, heady challenge, one that was to be met with faith, conviction and dedication, and acted upon with love and harmony, justice and unity, compassion and decency. To God one turned, His new revelation one embraced, the wine of its Truth one quaffed and in its diaphanous illumination one revelled.

As Baha'u'llah told the kings of the world:

It is not our wish to lay hands on your kingdoms. Our mission is to possess the hearts

(Aghdas para 83)

This was a Cause that was not only divine but which was based on the statutes and ordinances of God

Keep ye to the statutes and commandments of God

(Aghdas para 47)

You were enjoined to Keep ye the statutes and commandments of God; nay, guard them as ye would your very eyes, and be not of those who suffer grievous loss.

(Aghdas para 147)

And

Let there be naught in your demeanour of which sound and upright minds would disapprove and make not yourselves the playthings of the ignorant. Well is it with him who has adorned himself with the vesture of seemly conduct and a praiseworthy character. He is assuredly reckoned with those who aid their Lord through distinctive and outstanding deeds.

(Aghdas para 159)

Having turned to Him, it was to Him that you were answerable, for it was He ...who knew the inner secrets of the hearts and the meaning hidden in a mocker's wink.

(Aghdas para 157)

If you did wrong – and no human being is beyond wrong-doing – the Aghdas says that

To none is it permitted to seek absolution from another soul; let repentance be between yourselves and God. He, verily is the Pardoner, the Bounteous, the Gracious, the One who absolves the repentant.

(Aghdas para 31)

The framework is so clearly delineated, the guidelines so well set out. It is neither legalistic nor complicated. It dealt primarily in the realm of the heart and it called for a reaction that resonated in the activities of everyday life and living – a holistic response worthy of the essential Divinity, Truth and Beauty of its appeal. And, if perforce you went wrong – and who can claim to be above such waywardness – even then God's mercy was infinite. Turn back to Him and find that God hath laid hold on him who led you astray. Return to God, humble, submissive and lowly, verily He will put away from thee thy sins, for thy Lord, of a certainty is the Forgiving, the Mighty, the All-Merciful. This is the Council of God; would that thou might heed it. This is the Bounty of God; would that thou might receive it. This is the Utterance of God; if only thou would apprehend it. This is the Treasure of God; if only thou could understand!

(Aghdas para 184)

The joy, the hope, the elation that the reading of the Kitabeh Aghdas produces is palpable and real. The certainty of infallibility and willing obedience flow naturally from those inspired words. They are neither forced nor enforced.

Therein lies their power.

23 Ansdell Terrace London W8 5BY England

cc: Mr. Hugh Adamson, Bahai National Centre 27 Rutland Gate London SW7

Date : December 1994

Source : <http://www.abdulahfamily.org/writings/stories-regarding-covenant-breaking/>

Baha'is committing adultery would make the UHJ the richest Organization in the World

“God hath imposed a fine on every adulterer and adulteress, to be paid to the House of Justice nine mithqāls of gold, to be doubled if they should repeat the offence . . . Although the term translated here as adultery refers, in its broadest sense, to unlawful sexual intercourse between either married or unmarried individuals (see note 36 for a definition of the term), ‘Abdu’l-Bahā has specified that the punishment here prescribed is for sexual intercourse between persons who are unmarried . . . In relation to the application of the fine, Bahā’u’llāh clearly specifies that each succeeding fine is double the preceding one; thus the fine imposed increases in geometrical progression.” Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 200–202.

Unmarried people who engage in acts of sexual intercourse—especially teenagers— will likely frequently perform such acts. The number of times copulation occurs in a year can easily reach one hundred times if this shameful act is performed only twice a week. The amount of gold payable by each of these two people equals to: $3.6 \text{ grams} * 9 * 2^{100} = 41071879447394632608493183854$ kilograms, which is fairly equal to 8000 times the weight of the earth.

Just in case you are wondering, the fine will be about 34000 kilos of Gold if copulation is performed only 20 times.

We’ll leave it to up to the readers to judge the practicality of these luminous laws. One wonders how a society governed by this law will ever be able to get closer to economic justice and attaining a means of livelihood for all people.

Source: <http://www.avazedohol.com/eng/index.php/download> p. 337.

UHJ is interested in having more Martyrs from Iran!

There are two types of UHJ in the Baha'i writings.

Women NOT allowed to serve the UHJ for at least 1,000 years!

Download Books on Baha'i sects

Shoghi Effendi contradicts Abdu'l-Baha

During Abdu'l-Baha's visit to London in 1911, he had the following interaction with a Christian...

During his tour of North America in 1912, coverage in news stories would report this comment.

For example, on February 18, 1912, an article in "The Pittsburgh Pennsylvania Press" featured an article stating "In some respects the Bahá'í movement is the most remarkable of modern times. It isn't a religion, in the sense that Christianity and Mohammedism and other faiths are religions. Its followers belong to many diverse sects, remaining Christian or Mohammedan or Brahmin as the case may be, and still being thorough going Bahis." During his visit to London in 1911, 'Abdu'l-Bahá had stated that "You can be a Bahá'í-Christian, a Bahá'í-Freemason, a Bahá'í-Jew, a Bahá'í-Muhammadán."

And on February 28, 1912, the "SFO Daily News" of San Francisco featured an article stating "In some respects the Bahá'í movement is the most remarkable of modern times. It isn't a religion in the sense that Christianity and Mohammedism and other faiths are religious. Its followers belong to many diverse sects, remaining Christian or Mohammedan or Brahmin as the case may be, and still being thorough going Bahá'ís" During his visit to London in 1911, 'Abdu'l-Bahá had stated that "You can be a Bahá'í-Christian, a Bahá'í-Freemason, a Bahá'í-Jew, a Bahá'í-Muhammadán."

Similarly, on September 1, 1912, "The Oregonian" of Portland, Oregon carried an article about 'Abdu'l-Bahá, introducing him as the "Leader of Religions Movement Which Claims Three Million Followers" and quoting his statement "When in London he was approached by a student of higher criticism who asked 'Abdu'l-Bahá if he should continue in the church. 'Abdu'l-Bahá replied: "Yes, you must not dissociate yourself from it. Know this: the Kingdom of God is not in any society. If you belong to a society already do not forsake your brothers. You can be a Bahá'í-Christian, a Bahá'í-Freemason, a Bahá'í-Jew, Bahá'í-Mohammedan."

A generation later.....

On May 5 1943, a letter written in behalf of Shoghi Effendi said "The friends should by all means be encouraged to withdraw from church membership and be made to realize that, though we as Bahá'ís are ardent believers in Christ, we do not and cannot support, church institutions and doctrines when Christ has come again and brought new laws for the world today and its present needs; to adhere to forms, mostly man-made, and now out-moded and no longer needed, is meaningless. This does not mean they should no longer associate with the church members; they should cease to be registered members of it."

On February 12, 1956, Shoghi Effendi addressed a letter to an individual believer addressing "Why Bahá'ís Are Requested to Withdraw from Membership in the Church, Synagogue, etc." explaining "that we are the building blocks of Bahá'u'lláh's New World Order ... the Bahá'ís should be absolutely independent, and stand identified only with their own teachings. That is why they are requested to withdraw from membership in the church, the synagogue, or whatever other previous religious organization they may have been affiliated with, to have nothing whatsoever to do with secret societies, or with political movements, etc. It protects the Cause, it reinforces the Cause, and it asserts before all the world its independent character."

So.....were all those newspapers in 1912 mistaken? Or did Shoghi Effendi actually nullify a clear teaching of his grandfather to turn the Baha'i Faith into a cult instead of a progressive spiritual movement? We report, you decide!

Source : https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/n5be3j/shoghi_effendi_contradicts_abdulgaha/

“There is no excommunication from Baha’i” !!!

Letter to the editor

Since I was a member of the Baha’i Faith from 1972 until 1978. I read with interest the article on Baha’is in the Saturday issue of the newspaper. I was not surprised by what I read, as Kathy Giles presented much the same picture I was given of the faith when I decided to join. In all fairness, though, I think that a former member of the faith might be able to add some more objective information to that presented in the article. Let me make it clear that the Baha’i Faith sounded like everything I was searching for, when I first heard of it as a student in Nebraska in 1972. And let me say that I have known many sincere and dear people who have been or are Baha’is. In fact, my oldest sister was introduced into the faith in Utah, after I was, and she is still a practicing Baha’i, now living in Nebraska. I have lived in several cities as part of a Baha’i community, and think I can speak fairly accurately about the faith as it is, not as it is presented to outsiders to be.

A small point is the fact that Baha’is always claim to be such a fast growing religion. When I moved to Springfield five years ago the number of members of the local community was almost exactly the same as it is now. The faces may change, but the numbers stay basically the same. Baha’is tend to move around a lot, to spread the faith, so groups continually get new faces. Baha’is are constantly trying to sign up new members, so many new faces appear. But many familiar faces have been known to withdraw from the faith as well.

Ms. Giles states that “there is no excommunication from Baha’i.” I know for a fact that some dissenters have been excommunicated. And not only are those dissenters not allowed to participate in Baha’i activities, but members are not allowed to have ANY communication with the ousted members. Members can’t speak to an excommunicated person or even read mail from such a person. I was very surprised when I first heard of those rules, as I couldn’t understand the reason for them. Are the Baha’is so shaky in their faith that they are afraid to confront any who disagree?”

It is stated in the article that Baha’is cannot hold elected political office. I don’t believe it was mentioned that Baha’is cannot even be members of a political party. And does Ms. Giles give the reason why? No, because it might cause some good citizens a great deal of concern. Baha’is do not get involved in existing political orders because they are establishing their own system, from local through international, that they firmly believe and intend to have replace all existing governments!

Equality, tolerance and unity are frequently touted by Baha’is as basic tenets. But if the Baha’i Faith preaches the equality of men and women, why is it a fact that no woman can serve on the international Baha’i governing body?

During the time I was a Baha’i, I nearly lost something else that has always been important to me. My relationship with my parents. If the non-Baha’i parents of a Baha’i are not receptive to the Baha’i Faith, the Baha’i is encouraged to sever relations with his family and stay with his new, Baha’i family, who understand him better and love him more. Does this sound familiar?

Lastly, I was most disgusted with the comment that if one sees an especially tolerant person or one who refuses an alcoholic drink, it is likely to be a Baha’i. Many religious groups practice abstinence from alcohol. Your unknown non-drinker is also likely to be a member of AA.

Yes, there are some sincere and loving Baha’is. But virtually every group in existence has some sincere and loving members. Does that make the group light or true or beneficial? Everyone must decide for themselves, but let them make the decision based on facts, not fancy rhetoric.

PAMELA SEIDSPRINGFIELD Source : https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/mz12o7/letter_to_the_editor/

Subh-i-Azal Lived Longer than Baha'u'llah

Subh-i-Azal: Died 81

Mizá Muhammad Ali: Died 83

Majd'ud Din: Died 99 Charles Mason Remey: Died 100 Joel Marangella: Died 95

Bahá'u'lláh: Died 74

Abdu'l-Bahá: Died 77 Shoghi Effendi: Died 60 It isn't just about the so-called Guardian dying at a relatively young age. In fact, he.....

- Died suddenly of Asiatic Flu,
- Died in London, not the Baha'i World Center,
- Died in the middle of the Ten Year World Crusade (1953-1963),
- Left no will and testament,
- Had appointed no successor, and
- Had expelled from the Baha'i Community, often for trivial reasons, EVERY ONE OF HIS BROTHERS, SISTERS, AND MALE AND FEMALE COUSINS!

Critics of the Bahá'í Faith: An In-depth Analysis

Courtesy : <https://dalehusband.com>

Dale Husband is a researcher and writer who, over approximately nine years of membership in the Bahá'í community and its institutions, became familiar with Bahá'í teachings. After a period, he identified weaknesses, errors, contradictions, failures, and shortcomings in the Bahá'í Faith. In a letter addressed to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States, he declared: “After years of investigation and seeking the truth, I have finally reached the sorrowful conclusion and decision that I can no longer believe in Bahá'u'lláh or any of the institutions established under his name, such as the Guardianship or the Universal House of Justice. I am completely convinced that the Bahá'í Faith is incapable of fulfilling its goals and teachings, based on establishing peace, unity, and a golden age for humanity, and is destined for failure.”

Husband does not believe in the infallibility and immunity from error of Bahá'í leaders and considers acceptance of such a belief as a move towards dictatorship and tyranny within the Bahá'í community. He severely criticizes the legitimacy of Bahá'í leadership after ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, believing that after ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, the leadership of the Bahá'í Faith should have been passed to his brother, Muhammad Ali Effendi. Husband considers the current Universal House of Justice in Israel to be illegitimate and believes that, despite over 170 years of its existence, the Bahá'í Faith has not brought about any significant achievements.

Since the inception of the Bahá'í Faith, its teachings have consistently been subjected to criticism and various objections. Muslim and Christian scholars, and generally the followers of Abrahamic religions, have written numerous books challenging the legitimacy and teachings of the Bahá'í Faith, which claims to be the evolved form of Islam and other divine religions. In addition to the followers of monotheistic religions and religious thinkers, the Bahá'í Faith has also been criticized by secular writers and thinkers, each addressing the teachings of this emerging Iranian faith from their unique perspectives and raising serious objections.

Initially, Bahá'í institutions tried to limit the exposure of their followers to the criticisms and objections of opponents. They not only did not recommend reading such books and articles but also instructed Bahá'ís to hand over letters and articles from opponents to the local Spiritual Assembly (the nine-member council governing Bahá'í institutions in each city) without reading them.

Today, Bahá'í institutions attempt to discredit their opponents by labeling them as ignorant, mercenary, hostile, anti-Bahá'í, unfamiliar with Bahá'í concepts, or ambitious. This tactic aims to diminish the impact of critics' words on non-fanatic Bahá'ís and undermine their credibility. This approach has been quite successful, creating deep rifts between the general Bahá'í population and well-informed critics of the Faith.

However, over time and with the expansion of the internet and quick access to information, non-fanatic Bahá'ís have been able to connect with various articles and books written on the Bahá'í Faith and seek logical responses to opponents' objections.

Since the early 1990s, a new phenomenon has emerged within the global Bahá'í community: the appearance of critics from within the community itself.

Of course, the turning away of significant and learned individuals from the Bahá'í Faith and their inclination towards Islam or splitting into different sects has a long history. However, with the expansion of the internet and digital space, some Bahá'í intellectuals and scholars in the West have found the opportunity to voice objections to the views and actions of the leadership of the international Bahá'í community, namely the Universal House of Justice in Israel.

These intellectuals, generally among the elites of the Bahá'í community, with academic backgrounds and sufficient knowledge of the Bahá'í Faith and its teachings, have questioned the Bahá'í institutions and their leadership in Haifa, objecting to their dictatorial and god-like actions. They believe that the charismatic spiritual leadership of the Bahá'í Faith has been replaced by a semi-elected hierarchy whose structure and decisions are continually criticized by both internal dissenters and former Bahá'ís. The expansion of the internet has further facilitated the spread of these dissatisfactions.

The leadership in Haifa, considering itself divine and infallible, could not tolerate these criticisms and targeted the Bahá'í intellectuals and dissenters worldwide. Using their own policing organization (Continental Boards of Counselors), they excommunicated many of them from the Bahá'í community on various pretexts or forced them to resign and leave the Faith.

In the view of the Universal House of Justice, Bahá'ís are obliged to hear and propagate only one voice and one interpretation of the Faith, as prescribed by the Bahá'í institutions and leadership. According to this viewpoint, any action, comment, analysis, interpretation, or even question not in line with the policies or beliefs of the Universal House of Justice and national assemblies worldwide is prohibited. Offenders, after receiving a warning or sometimes without any warning, are expelled from the Bahá'í community and shunned. Sometimes, the Bahá'í institutions make life so difficult for critical Bahá'ís that they have no choice but to resign and leave the Faith.

Such harsh and illogical actions have led many intellectuals such as William Garlington, Juan Cole, Frederick Glaysher, Denis MacEoin, George Fleming, Alison Marshall, Stephen Scholl, Sen McGlinn, Francesco Ficicchia, and others—who were once members of the Bahá'í community and actively promoted its teachings—to separate from the Bahá'í Faith and write various critical articles and books analyzing the Faith's practices.

This article aims to briefly review the views and perspectives of some of these Bahá'í intellectual critics, although it is necessary for more accomplished researchers to delve deeper and provide more comprehensive studies for those interested in this field.

The views expressed by these intellectuals and critics of the Bahá'í Faith are not necessarily an endorsement of their political and social positions or even their religious beliefs. The goal is to introduce these thinkers and open a new path to understanding the Bahá'í Faith, a path previously treaded by some Western thinkers.

Reasons for Leaving the Bahá'í Community

Critical and dissenting individuals have no place in the Bahá'í Faith. Such individuals are easily expelled from the Faith, or the administration arranges matters in a way that the dissenter is forced to resign.

In October 2007, in an article titled "Why I Left the Bahá'í Faith," Dale Husband mentions the reasons for his departure:

"I was a Christian in my teenage and young adult years, but in my early twenties, observing the flaws, contradictions, and deficiencies within Christianity, I left the faith. The Bahá'í Faith explained that although Jesus Christ was a divine prophet (or manifestation), over centuries, his teachings had become corrupted, and thus, most Christians no longer followed him but rather human doctrines and ideas.

When I first joined the Bahá'í community, I thought I would witness a community similar to the early Christian community in the ancient Roman Empire, with the difference that Bahá'ís would not split into rival groups and fight with one another. I believed that if everyone in the world became Bahá'í, peace and happiness would prevail forever. What a vision! What a dream! But human nature will never allow such a thing to happen.

Over time, I observed that the Bahá'í Faith also had errors, contradictions, failures, and deficiencies, even though it is less than 200 years old. Recognizing and becoming aware of these issues led me to leave the Bahá'í community with a heavy heart.

I can list the hypocrisy and deceit inherent in the bigoted beliefs of the Bahá'í Faith as follows:

Reasons for Leaving the Bahá'í Community

1. The Bahá'í Faith claims that religion no longer needs a clergy class, yet it effectively has a class of leaders who hold more power and tyranny than medieval priests."
2. Critical and dissenting individuals have no place in the Bahá'í Faith. Such individuals are easily expelled from the Faith, or the administration arranges matters in a way that the dissenter is forced to resign.
3. Dale Husband's Experience
4. In October 2007, in an article titled "Why I Left the Bahá'í Faith," Dale Husband mentions the reasons for his departure:
5. "I was a Christian in my teenage and young adult years, but in my early twenties, observing the flaws, contradictions, and deficiencies within Christianity, I left the faith. The Bahá'í Faith explained that although Jesus Christ was a divine prophet (or manifestation), over centuries, his teachings had become corrupted, and thus, most Christians no longer followed him but rather human doctrines and ideas.
6. When I first joined the Bahá'í community, I thought I would witness a community similar to the early Christian community in the ancient Roman Empire, with the difference that Bahá'ís would not split into rival groups and fight with one another. I believed that if everyone in the world became Bahá'í, peace and happiness would prevail forever. What a vision! What a dream! But human nature will never allow such a thing to happen.
7. Over time, I observed that the Bahá'í Faith also had errors, contradictions, failures, and deficiencies, even though it is less than 200 years old. Recognizing and becoming aware of these issues led me to leave the Bahá'í community with a heavy heart.
8. I can list the hypocrisy and deceit inherent in the bigoted beliefs of the Bahá'í Faith as follows:
9. Claims of Equality: The Bahá'í Faith asserts that men and women should be equal, yet it denies women the right to membership and participation in the powerful and influential leadership council of the Bahá'í community (the Universal House of Justice).
10. Friendship with Other Religions: The Bahá'í Faith and its adherents claim to be friendly with followers of other religions and welcome them, but simultaneously, they criticize, ostracize, and excommunicate their own members who dare to question or doubt the claims of their current religious leaders (the Universal House of Justice).
11. Science and Religion: Bahá'í teachings state that religion should be in harmony with science. However, they insist that everything their religious leaders say is the absolute truth, even if it is not accepted by scientific authorities.
12. Additionally, during my time in the Bahá'í Faith, I encountered scandals and disgraceful incidents that greatly disturbed me, even now that I am no longer a member of the Bahá'í community. Some of these issues include:
13. A. Violation of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant by His Son 'Abdu'l-Bahá: Bahá'u'lláh, in his Book of the Covenant (which is essentially his will and testament, written in his own handwriting), stipulated that after 'Abdu'l-Bahá, his younger brother, Mírzá Muhammad Ali, should succeed him. However, 'Abdu'l-Bahá deprived Muhammad Ali of any position and ignored Bahá'u'lláh's directive, appointing his grandson Shoghi Effendi as his successor instead of Muhammad Ali.
14. B. Madness and Folly of Shoghi Effendi: 'Abdu'l-Bahá, in his will, appointed the young Shoghi Effendi as his successor and Guardian of the Cause of God. He stipulated that Shoghi Effendi should, during his lifetime, designate his eldest son, or, if his eldest son was unsuitable, another of his sons (and if he had no son, another male descendant of Bahá'u'lláh) as his successor. Shoghi Effendi not only had no children but also excommunicated every single descendant of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, thus creating a situation where he could not fulfill his grandfather's directive. He died in 1957 and left no will, plunging the Bahá'í community into a crisis of succession.
15. Cover-up of Leaders' False Prophecies: When I was still a Bahá'í, I spent a summer at the home of an elderly Bahá'í couple and browsed through their Bahá'í books. One book that caught my attention was the promotional book "Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era" by Dr. John Esslemont. This book referenced the year 1957, the year of Shoghi Effendi's death. This book had been published before 1957 by a Bahá'í publishing institution associated with the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States. The manuscript of this book had been approved by 'Abdu'l-Bahá and also endorsed by Shoghi Effendi."

For more detail : Refer : <https://dalehusband.com/2007/10/19/why-i-quit-the-bahai-faith/>

WHO CREATED THE SECTS IN THE BAHAI FAITH?

My Dear Bahá'í Friends!

Some of the friends enquire as to why the Divine Cause (Bahá'í Faith) has become divided into different sects? What are the factors behind it? Who is responsible for this division?

It is well understood why such questions should come to mind. But it is sad that there is no discussion on such questions nor do we investigate the answers to such questions. While 'Abdu'l-Bahá insisted that:

"The shining spark of truth cometh forth only after the clash of differing opinions". (Abdu'l-Baha, Selections from the Writings of Abdu'l-Baha, p. 87)

Friends claim that:

According to the sayings of Abdul Bahá, the "Guardian" should be from the lineage of Bahá'u'lláh.

This is not correct in any way. Bahá'u'lláh has never placed, or written, any such condition concerning the Guardianship. In fact, He has only alluded to the Guardianship in His Writings, and it remained for 'Abdu'l-Bahá to establish the institution of the Guardianship in His Will and Testament.

I request the friends whenever you quote what "Abdul Baha says", please quote His correct and exact words and do not insert the doubtful ideas of your own mind.

The majority of the friends are unaware of and lack knowledge of the truth but, on the other hand, accept whatever has been stated by the UHJ, the NSA or LSA and rely completely upon erroneous facts. They do not strive to know any thing other than those confused ideas and attribute those baseless, adverse and confused ideas and facts to Bahá'u'lláh.

In the Writings and Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdul Bahá, preference is given to impeccability and perfection and it is emphasized that preference should be given to spiritual relationships over physical relationships. Therefore, 'Abdul Bahá explains the matter as follows:

"The lineage of descendants is of two types one is from physical descendants and the other is spiritual. One is born of clay and water, and the other from the soul and heart." (Ma'idíy-i-Asmani. Vol 5, p. 161)

"O dear one of 'Abdu'l-Baha! Be the son of thy father and be the fruit of that tree. Be a son that hath been born of his soul and heart and not only of water and clay. A real son is such a one as hath branched from the spiritual part of man. I ask God that thou mayest be at all times confirmed and strengthened." (Selections from the Writings of Abdu'l-Baha, p. 140)

The Friends should note that Assemblies do not have any right to decide or discuss "any matter" outside the powers and responsibilities fixed by Abdul Bahá and Shoghi Effendi. Then, who authorizes them to either change or falsify the intent of statements made in the "Tablets and Will and Testament" and thereby go against the explicit Holy Text?

They cannot decide that the Guardianship shall continue or not continue in the Bahai Faith, because according to the Will and Testament, the Guardianship of the Cause of God will continue till the end of the Dispensation of Bahá'u'lláh. Even if all the people of the world should stand against him the truth cannot be changed by decision of the people.

As for the current sects in the Bahá'í Faith, this is due to those Baha'is who, following the passing of Shoghi Effendi, stood against the Expounder and Interpreter of the Words of God— "The Guardian of the Faith"— and, unfortunately, the majority of the Bahá'is blindly followed them. It was far better had they paid attention to the words of 'Abdul Baha. For He said:

"Were it not for the protecting power of the Covenant to guard the impregnable fort of the Cause of God, there would arise among the Baha'is, in one day, a thousand different sects as was the case in former ages. But in this Blessed Dispensation, for the sake of the permanency of the Cause of God and the avoidance of dissension amongst the people of God, the Blessed Beauty (may my soul be a sacrifice unto Him), has through the Supreme Pen written the Covenant and the Testament; He appointed a Center, the Exponent of the Book and the annuler of disputes. Whatever is written or said by Him is conformable to the truth and under the protection of the Blessed Beauty. He is infallible. The express purpose of this last Will and Testament is to set aside disputes from the world." (Abdu'l-Baha, Baha'i World Faith – Abdu'l-Baha Section, p. 357)

Further, 'Abdu'l-Bahá wrote in His Will and Testament:

"The Mighty stronghold shall remain impregnable and safe through obedience to him who is the guardian of the Cause of God. It is incumbent upon the members of the House Justice, upon all the Aghsán, the Afrán, the Hands of the Cause of God to show their obedience, submissiveness and subordination unto the guardian of the Cause of God, to turn unto him and be lowly before him. He that opposeth him hath opposed the True One, will make a breach in the Cause of God, will subvert His word and will become a manifestation of the Centre of Sedition. (Will & Testament of Abdul Bahá page No.12)

My Dear Bahá'í Friend!

Do you now realize why the different sects came into existence among the Bahá'ís? Do you understand to whom Abdul Bahá has referred to as the Disputer and Creator of the Sects?

It should now be clear from the terms of His "Will" that disobedience to the Guardian and rebelling against him have now caused the several sects to come into existence.

The true Bahá'ís are those who are under the Shelter of the Guardian. The deviated sects are those who have turned away from the true Guardian.

It is my fervent hope that soon all the friends will turn unto the living guardian of the Faith and will be submissive unto him.

Written by Dr. A. Parikh, Secretary of the National (Orthodox) Bahai Council of India on 27th July 2007.

Baha'i divisions and sects

“In order to be effective in promoting world unity the Bahá'í Faith must itself be firmly united. Bahá'í unity has been assured by provisions in the writings of Bahá'u'lláh and ‘Abdu'l-Bahá that establish authoritative guidance on the intent of Bahá'u'lláh's revelation and on the administration of the affairs of the international Bahá'í community. Throughout the critical first century of the Faith's existence these provisions have protected the Bahá'í community from sectarianism, and have enabled it to adapt itself to the requirements of a rapidly evolving civilization. The institutions which embody this authority are the Guardianship and the Universal House of Justice .”

My question is how is this true when there are in fact several Baha'i sects: Orthodox Baha'i Faith, Baha'is under the Provision of the Covenant, The Remey Society, Baha'is Loyal to the Fourth Guardian.

When answering please do not give a history lesson (we have wikipedia for that.). My only question is how is the above quote justified.

Thanks

From -Seeker of Truth

Victory for the different sects of Baha'is

HISTORIC VERDICT QUASHES PATENT ON USE OF WORD 'BAHAI'

In a historic verdict that will have long standing effect, the Federal Court of the United States of America has quashed the appeal of the majority Baha'i Faith (popularly known as Heterodox Baha'i Faith – HBF) for patent on use of term Baha'i for itself. Although this is not the only time such a verdict has been passed (such verdicts have come twice earlier), this verdict comes at a time when the Baha'i Faith is gripped under sectarian claims.

Never in the past has the Baha'i Faith witnessed such sectarian challenges. It must be noted that minority sects like the Orthodox Baha'i Faith (OBF), Unitarian Bahais (UB) and Bahais Under the Provision of Covenant (BUPC), Reform Baha'i Faith have faced discrimination at hands of the majority HBF for ages. These sects have been gasping for survival and this verdict gives them a new life and sense of hope.

The minority sects have always challenged authority of the Universal House of Justice – UHJ (the centre seat of the HBF) domination and control. The minority sects claim that the appointed guardians' position has been hijacked by the Universal House of Justice through shrewd manipulation and often intimidation about half a century ago.

Faced with discrimination the minority Baha'i sects have experienced difficulty in visiting the Holy Shrines, located predominantly in Haifa, Israel. The verdict opens a window of hope for the minority Baha'i sects in laying claim over visiting and managing the Holy Shrines. A member of the OBF says that the verdict has lifted their spirits and the OBF along with other minority Baha'i sects is actively thinking of filing a suit in the highest court in the United States as well as Israel to stake claim over managing the Holy Shrines. A spokesman of the BUPC said that the day is not far when all Baha'i sects will enjoy the freedom to visit shrines and practice and propagate their beliefs freely. The verdict has rightly distanced the legislature from matters of belief, thereby putting an end forever to the HBFs dream of having an unchallenged authority over all sects. The HBF is known for publicly claiming its non-involvement in politics but practicing it in all its dealings. The verdict also gives an opportunity for the followers of the HBF to introspect and derive their independent conclusions.

It looks like the Baha'i denominations have succeeded in mounting a significant challenge to the mainstream Haifa-based Baha'i Faith. On the other hand main stream Haifa Based Baha'is are putting more pressure on their UHJ to clarify the concept of Guardianship, rather than asking them to shun the Covenant Breakers. The recent court case victory will further internationalize the issue of Guardianship.

Mr. Joel B. Marangella, Mr. Neal Chase, Mr. Fredrick Glaysher, Mr. Jacques Soghomonian have further consolidated their position amongst the Heterodox Bahais, joining them is Mr. Eric Stetson and great grand daughter of Bahauallah Mrs. Nigar Baha'i Amsalem. It looks like the balance is tilting more towards Guardianists. If current trends of in-fighting continue and if the concept of Guardianship is not fully explained to the Heterodox Bahais, It is quite possible that The Haifa based Baha'i Faith will suffer from more divisions and mainstream Baha'i Faith will be reduced to minority.

Who Created the sects in Bahai Faith?

Dr. A. Parikh Secretary of the National (Orthodox) Bahai Council of India

My Dear Bahá'í Friends!

Some of the friends enquire as to why the Divine Cause (Bahá'í Faith) has become divided into different sects? What are the factors behind it? Who is responsible for this division?

It is well understood why such questions should come to mind. But it is sad that there is no discussion on such questions nor do we investigate the answers to such questions. While 'Abdu'l-Bahá insisted that:

“The shining spark of truth cometh forth only after the clash of differing opinions”. (Abdu'l-Baha, Selections from the Writings of Abdu'l-Baha, p. 87)

Friends claim that:

According to the sayings of Abdul Bahá, the “Guardian” should be from the lineage of Bahá'u'lláh.

This is not correct in any way. Bahá'u'lláh has never placed, or written, any such condition concerning the Guardianship. In fact, He has only alluded to the Guardianship in His Writings, and it remained for 'Abdu'l-Bahá to establish the institution of the Guardianship in His Will and Testament.

I request the friends whenever you quote what “Abdul Baha says”, please quote His correct and exact words and do not insert the doubtful ideas of your own mind.

The majority of the friends are unaware of and lack knowledge of the truth but, on the other hand, accept whatever has been stated by the UHJ, the NSA or LSA and rely completely upon erroneous facts. They do not strive to know any thing other than those confused ideas and attribute those baseless, adverse and confused ideas and facts to Bahá'u'lláh.

In the Writings and Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdul Bahá, preference is given to impeccability and perfection and it is emphasized that preference should be given to spiritual relationships over physical relationships. Therefore, 'Abdul Bahá explains the matter as follows:

“The lineage of descendants is of two types one is from physical descendants and the other is spiritual. One is born of clay and water, and the other from the soul and heart.” (Ma'idíy-i-Asmani. Vol 5, p. 161)

“O dear one of 'Abdu'l-Baha! Be the son of thy father and be the fruit of that tree. Be a son that hath been born of his soul and heart and not only of water and clay. A real son is such a one as hath branched from the spiritual part of man. I ask God that thou mayest be at all times confirmed and strengthened.” (Selections from the Writings of Abdu'l-Baha, p. 140)

The Friends should note that Assemblies do not have any right to decide or discuss “any matter” outside the powers and responsibilities fixed by Abdul Bahá and Shoghi Effendi. Then, who authorizes them to either change or falsify the intent of statements made in the “Tablets and Will and Testament” and thereby go against the explicit Holy Text?

They cannot decide that the Guardianship shall continue or not continue in the Bahai Faith, because according to the Will and Testament, the Guardianship of the Cause of God will continue till the end of the Dispensation of Bahá'u'lláh. Even if all the people of the world should stand against him the truth cannot be changed by decision of the people.

As for the current sects in the Bahá'í Faith, this is due to those Baha'is who, following the passing of Shoghi Effendi, stood against the Expounder and Interpreter of the Words of God— “The Guardian of the Faith”— and, unfortunately, the majority of the Bahá'is blindly followed them. It was far better had they paid attention to the words of 'Abdul Baha. For He said:

“Were it not for the protecting power of the Covenant to guard the impregnable fort of the Cause of God, there would arise among the Baha'is, in one day, a thousand different sects as was the case in former ages. But in this Blessed Dispensation, for the sake of the permanency of the Cause of God and the avoidance of dissension amongst the people of God, the Blessed Beauty (may my soul be a sacrifice unto Him), has through the Supreme Pen written the Covenant and the Testament; He appointed a Center, the Exponent of the Book and the annuler of disputes. Whatever is written or said by Him is conformable to the truth and under the protection of the Blessed Beauty. He is infallible. The express purpose of this last Will and Testament is to set aside disputes from the world.” (Abdu'l-Baha, Baha'i World Faith – Abdu'l-Baha Section, p. 357)

Further, 'Abdu'l-Bahá wrote in His Will and Testament:

“The Mighty stronghold shall remain impregnable and safe through obedience to him who is the guardian of the Cause of God. It is incumbent upon the members of the House Justice, upon all the Aghsán, the Afán, the Hands of the Cause of God to show their obedience, submissiveness and subordination unto the guardian of the Cause of God, to turn unto him and be lowly before him. He that opposeth him hath opposed the True One, will make a breach in the Cause of God, will subvert His word and will become a manifestation of the Centre of Sedition. (Will & Testament of Abdul Bahá page No.12)

My Dear Bahá'í Friend!

Do you now realize why the different sects came into existence among the Bahá'ís? Do you understand to whom Abdul Bahá has referred to as the Disputer and Creator of the Sects?

It should now be clear from the terms of His "Will" that disobedience to the Guardian and rebelling against him have now caused the several sects to come into existence.

The true Bahá'ís are those who are under the Shelter of the Guardian. The deviated sects are those who have turned away from the true Guardian.

It is my fervent hope that soon all the friends will turn unto the living guardian of the Faith and will be submissive unto him.

Written by Dr. A. Parikh, Secretary of the National (Orthodox) Bahai Council of India on 27th July 2007.

“Other Baha’i Sects” Population and Popularity Increasing day after day !!

In Recent Years it is Observed that the other Baha’i Sects such as “Orthodox Baha’is” and “Baha’is under the provision of Covenant” have increased in numbers. Their Popularity on the Internet have also increased due to the Court Case filed by Heterodox Baha’is (mainstream Baha’is or Haifan Baha’is) against the other Baha’i Groups over the trademark of the word “Baha’i”. Heterodox Baha’is lost the case and this single event have put new energy in the other Baha’i groups to propagate their faith more strongly. Heterodox Baha’is call the other Baha’i groups adherent with derogatory names and label them as “Covenant Breakers”. On the contrary the other Baha’i groups argue that infact the Heterodox Baha’is are the real covenant breakers because their main administrative body located in Haifa, Israel, which comprises of nine members, is devoid of Guardian.

This has resulted in a very heated debate between the Heterodox Baha’is and “other Baha’i Groups” over the issue of Guardianship. Many people from the Heterodox Baha’i faith after coming in contact with the Baha’is of other groups are perplexed and confused over the matter of Guardianship of Baha’i faith. Individuals who did the independent investigation have found the arguments put forth by the “other Baha’i groups” more appealing and logical. Heterodox Baha’is are now worried and have increased their activities, so as to keep their followers intact. They have always kept the newly converted and unaware Baha’is away from the Baha’i reference books.

The Ruhi Books teachings of Heterodox Baha’is have failed badly to deepen and impress the Baha’is. Ruhi Book 8 is introduced by them to counter the attack from the Baha’is of “other groups”. Now more Baha’is are coming out with questions on the matter of Guardianship, which the ABMs and Counselors are unable to answer. Very soon the Baha’i faith is going to split further and there would be a drifting of a large number of people towards the other versions of Baha’i faith which offers them the option of a “living Guardian.

Different Baha'i Sects fighting amongst themselves over the use of 'name'

When religion splits, courts get a rare say

Baha'i groups in lawsuit over use of name and sacred symbol

By Manya A. Brachear

TRIBUNE REPORTER

Every religion has been riven by struggles over authority and authenticity.

Buddhism began when a maverick Hindu prince inspired disciples to embrace asceticism. Judaism has sprouted branches from ultra-orthodox to ultra-liberal, even Jews for Jesus. Christianity went through numerous profound splits, including the Protestant Reformation sparked in the 16th Century by Martin Luther in Germany and the 19th Century Mormon movement led by Joseph Smith in the U.S.

Now the Baha'i Faith, the organization representing the most recent sect to spring from Islam, is struggling to defend its identity in federal court in Chicago, where North American Baha'is have been based ever since believers came to the U.S. about 90 years ago. They contend that a tiny band of believers known as the Orthodox Baha'i Faith can't call themselves Baha'i or use one of its key symbols without violating trademark law or a previous court ruling more than 40 years ago.

In the hands of the federal 7th Circuit Court of Appeals, the case could set a precedent for settling religious schisms, doctrinal disputes and claims to truth.

"The word Baha'i carries with it implications for a certain sets of beliefs—and we have to protect that," said Robert Stockman, a practicing Baha'i and religious studies instructor at DePaul University.

Adherents of the Orthodox Baha'i Faith believe the international community has strayed from the religion's original teachings. That deviation, they say, threatens to interfere with God's plan for the world.

Baha'u'llah, who founded the faith in Iran in the mid-19th Century, is regarded by Baha'is as the most recent messenger of God in a long line including Abraham, Buddha, Krishna, Jesus and Muhammad. Baha'is believe Baha'u'llah revealed God's plan by which humanity one day would unite to become a single race.

On a Web site called <http://www.truebahai.com>, the orthodox group faults the mainstream denomination for corrupting that plan.

The mainstream Baha'is have responded with a lawsuit that tries to bar the orthodox from calling themselves Baha'i and sharing the "The Greatest Name," a sacred and trademarked symbol. Baha'is believe they are not only safeguarding their identity. They are defending the truth with a capital T.

The Orthodox say that is not a matter for the courts to decide.

"We're the true faith. That's what we would say" said Jeffrey Goldberg, a member of the Orthodox Baha'i Faith who left Chicago to be closer to an Orthodox community in New Mexico. "That has to be decided in the hearts and minds of the Baha'i, not by a secular court order."

The Baha'is first took breakaway believers to court in 1966 after a tumultuous time for their community. Nine years earlier, Shoghi Effendi, guardian of the faith and direct descendant of the founding prophet, had died unexpectedly and allegedly without naming a successor.

Leaders decided a Universal House of Justice envisioned by Effendi would oversee the faith. But shortly after the leaders announced their solution, one of them declared that Effendi actually had intended for him to serve as the next guardian.

Charles Mason Remey then in his 90s, said Effendi had addressed him in letters as his son or spiritual descendant.

The National Assembly of France and about 100 others followed Remey. But the rest of the Baha'i community declared Remey a covenant breaker, expelled him from the faith and successfully sued his followers, barring them from calling themselves Baha'i and using the sacred symbol. Remey's group disbanded, but orthodox believers reorganized and continued to maintain the guardianship.

Thirty years later, Goldberg, an active Baha'i in Barrington, came upon the splinter group while surfing the Internet. He became convinced that he had been duped.

With no explanation, Goldberg quietly resigned from the community because he knew the consequences. When Bahai's are declared covenant breakers, they are shunned or ostracized with the exception of business relations.

But Janice Franco wouldn't let Goldberg go that easily. She insisted on knowing why he left and, when he told her, went on a quest to prove him wrong. After plunging herself into Baha'i literature, Franco discovered Goldberg might have a point.

Indeed, both Goldberg and Franco were declared covenant breakers and shunned. Goldberg's wife was encouraged to divorce her husband. Franco's home-schooled children lost a number of friends. To this day they are wary of organized religion.

"It was devastating news to find out the larger group had strayed," Franco said. "I want to follow the truth. I don't want to support a mistake. The consequence is I don't have a community."

Then in 2006, the mainstream Baha'is filed a lawsuit, accusing the orthodox believers of violating the court order issued 40 years earlier.

The Orthodox Baha'is insist they aren't the same group. They also say a religious denomination can't trademark truth. The term Baha'i refers to a follower of Baha'u'llah. That applies to him and other Orthodox Baha'is, he said.

"From our point of view, if you believe in Christ you can use the word Christ in your name," Goldberg said. "It's a little bit like asking you to recant your faith. It's unacceptable to us."

But Stockman said it is the religion's responsibility to protect the Baha'i name.

"Baha'is are told again and again to try to exercise discipline on what they say about their faith and don't confuse the public.... We have our own community to build," he said.

There are 5 million Baha'is in the world—150,000 in the U.S., including 2,000 in the Chicago area. Why the mainstream denomination waited four decades to enforce the court ruling is a mystery. Baha'i leaders declined interview requests.

Barring the Orthodox believers from using the name "Baha'i" prevents them from popping up in Google when users type in that term.

Stockman said the Web is a tricky place to have conversations about spiritual truth.

"It's not our desire to convert people. It's our desire to put our material out there for people to know what the truth is and decide themselves."

mbrachear@tribune.com

Seek with the Seeker

Read Manya Brachear's blog, The Seeker, at Chicago.tribune.com/seeker

Want to know how Baha'is exaggerate their numbers in India?

Read this.....

A-Once a Baha'i is registered in their record (By whatever means) he becomes immortal and he never dies. So the Indian Baha'i census has all those Bahais who registered themselves since the time of Abdul Baha and Shoghi effendi.

B-It is a universal phenomenon, every where that Bahais usually signed the card not knowing that it is an independent religion. After his realization he leaves the Faith and he is no more a Bahai. But the Baha'i administration believes that "Once a Baha'i Always a Baha'i". The process is irreversible.

C-Bahais usually multiply their number many folds thinking that every Baha'i must be married and therefore must be having a wife and few children.

D-Those paid workers in the Baha'i Faith, to justify their salaries and their effectiveness have collected a number of non existing addresses

Reality of Bahai faith is assessed after ,

1-removing the name of Bahais once they die. 2-removing the Cards of the Bahais once they leave the Faith. 3-checking all the addresses collected by the National Office, whether those people exist or not.

It is only then that the number 11,000 is the most appropriate figure as given by Official census of Government of India.

At the end I would like to quote your sentence, "For a religion to progress and propagate, sincere service is required to attract the masses and not lip service to attract the masses and then believing that they have abandoned the religion of their ancestors".

Comment by S.Khare Bhopal M.P.

bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com

How many Bahais are in India?

The recent monthly circulation of Baha'is, The BAHÁ'Í NEWS I N D I A ISSUE VII JULY 2010 has revealed shocking fact through an article titled "Preparations of Government of India Census 2011".

These are summarized as under:

1. There have been rigorous conversion activities over the past fifty years by the Baha'i Faith.
2. These conversions were accelerated with the construction of the Lotus Temple at Delhi and with the visits of Hands of the Cause Dr. Rahmatulláh Muhájir, and Amatu'l- Bahá Ruhiyyih Khánum.
3. Though the Baha'i records of the data on Baha'i population shows that one time it had crossed two millions yet the Census of India reports of 1971, 1981, 1991 and 2001 show only a fraction of the total number Baha'is throughout the country. This means that the census department of India fumbled four times to give accurate number of Baha'is. Just to cite an example, Baha'i census figures in 1991 was 5575 and in 2001 it was 11,324 against 2.2 millions claimed by the Baha'i administration.
4. Through the article we understand this is largely due to illiteracy and lack of distinct identifying characteristics of rural Indians. Does it not mean that conversions were done deceptively without an individual ever knowing that he has accepted the Baha'i Faith? Does it also not indicate that the Baha'is have been targeting rural Indians (mostly in Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh) for the past so many years?
5. The article suggests that Baha'i Faith members display Baha'i Faith identification stickers in their houses so that the official GOI census official can enter the religious identity accurately. This is a very big accusation against both the individual being interviewed and the GOI census official! Are both these so gullible that one will forget to declare his allegiance to the Baha'i Faith and the other will record it based on stickers/posters on the wall! Is it not some sort of racist discrimination practiced by the Baha'i Faith governing body, many of them being of Iranian origin. Should we tolerate such an assessment of our fellow countrymen!
6. The article suggests that the Baha'i Faith machinery will attempt to contact government officials from highest level down to panchayat level. Is this not some sort of influencing the government officials in performance of their duty? Should not serious action be taken against the Baha'i Faith for this?
7. Lastly, the article silently threatens the readers that giving wrong information to the census department is punishable!. Do we need to learn this from scoundrels who have always used deception to inflate numbers, perform conversion activities and get government concessions? In fact the action should be taken against the Baha'i administration for misguiding the world since last so many years.

AT THE END, CAN BAHAI ADMINISTRATION EXPLAIN WHY THE NUMBER OF LOCAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLIES MENTIONED IN BAHAI WORLD [VOLUME XVIII (1979-1983)] IN INDIA WAS MORE THAN 10,000 WHILE PRESENT NUMBER OF ASSEMBLIES IS ONLY 600 – WHICH IS JUST 6%. WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS GROSS EXAGGERATION – THE CENSUS DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT OF INDIA OR THE BAHAI ADMINISTRATION THEMSELVES?

Dear readers, I have worked for Baha'is for many years. Never even in their exaggerated record the Baha'i population reached even the figure of 20,000. Everybody at the top is absolutely convinced that there is gross exaggeration in the Baha'i population in India and elsewhere in the world, but nobody wants to accept publicly because of fear of sanctions from the Universal House of Justice. Moreover the Baha'is claims that 40% of Baha'i population resides in India, which is just 11324. Is it not easy now to assess world Baha'i population? Let someone also open the can of worms on authentic world Baha'i population!

Ravi Kumar

Where are the 7 million Baha'is ??

From the late Jackson Ingram-Armstrong:

The Encyclopedia Britannica numbers were provided by Baha'i apologists, and EB has fallen to so low an estate that it simply prints what is provided.

There are virtually no Baha'is in continental Europe. 700 in Holland, similar in Spain, 2,000 each in Germany and France, fewer in Italy. From a demographic point of view this may as well be "zero."

There are rumored to be about 5,000 in the UK but who knows what that means, and it is not a lot anyway. Likewise the former Soviet Union has very few Baha'is. Almost none in China. So, with Europe, Eurasia and China out of the way, where are they?

There are 60,000 adult Baha'is with good addresses in the US, 12,500 in Canada. So much for North America.

There are 2,000 at most in the Arab world. There were less than 100,000 registered before the Revolution in Iran. Maybe 10,000, mostly Iranian refugees, in Turkey. Maybe 25,000 in Pakistan (mainly former Hindus, mainly rural peasants). So the Middle East is likewise very small.

There are 10,000 in Thailand. There were 100,000 in Vietnam before the revolution, but few are likely to remain. There are very few, then, in all of Southeast Asia. There are only a couple of thousand in Japan, and a similar number in Korea. East Asia is a wash.

All that is really left is Latin America, subsaharan Africa, and India. 2 million are claimed in India but insiders say the true number of real Baha'is there is closer to 100,000. Indians like to 'join' things, but go on being Hindus. I very much doubt there are millions of Baha'is in Latin America (Mexico appears to have almost none, e.g.). Columbia and Bolivia at one time had a few tens of thousands each, to my recollection, but that is not the same as millions.

I can't speak for subsaharan Africa. The biggest community was Uganda with 100,000, but it has been greatly disrupted in the last 2 decades by war and dictatorship, and one doesn't know how many are left.

Rehmatullah Muhajir – Pioneer of Fraud Practices in Baha’i Faith

This short treatise is an analysis of Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir’s rise in the Baha’i Faith and the means adopted by him to give prominence to the Baha’i Faith. In the end, I have also attempted to present the many present day unfortunate situations having source in the means adopted by him. I presume that the readers are fairly aware of the Baha’i Faith and its founder and contributors. One such personality, given a heroic status, is Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir. Much is stated about his pioneering efforts at Mentawai Island from 1953-1957, from where onwards he got the greater than life status in the Baha’i Faith. Let us closely analyze his efforts in this period:

a. Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir went to the Islands as a physician appointed by the Government of Indonesia. He was on the pay-rolls of the Government. However, Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir tried to use this opportunity to influence few inhabitants and introduce the Baha’i Faith. b. Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir cleverly projected his efforts as service to humanity externally and within the Faith as service for the Cause. The fact was, he wanted to get prominence in the Baha’i Faith and saw himself as a contestant for future engagement in managing the affairs. The Government of Indonesia was paying for all this! c. If service to humanity was his goal, why did he return to the Holy Land immediately on passing away of the Guardian? The answer is very clear – to occupy a position in the Faith. d. If Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir had converted several thousand natives of Mentawai Island, where are they presently after almost three generations? Today Christianity, Islam and native belief – in that order – are the prominent beliefs. There is no trace of Baha’i Faith in the island. e. The Mentawai Island has seen several devastating earthquakes and Tsunamis in past 60 years. While many world nations and communities have been seen supporting rescue and rehabilitation efforts, the humanity loving Baha’i Faith, was never to be seen. What happened to service of humanity, a salient principle of the Faith? Or was Mentawai a failed case for the Faith? From the above it is clear that Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir spent a paid holiday in the beautiful Mentawai Island for four years along with gaining prominence in Faith. Another of Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir’s so called success in spreading the Baha’i Faith is his contribution to the Indian Baha’i Community. Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir was in India, in early 60’s had attained sufficient position to avoid staying in third world India. He used to frequent often and is credited to have been instrumental in growing the community numbers from 850 in 1961 to 1000000 in 1979, the year of his death. He is also credited to have established the Rabbani School and Faizi Institute. Now let us analyze Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir’s Indian sojourns: a. Both the Institutes were established by seeking government grants projecting the humanitarian vision of the Baha’i Faith. Both the institutes became notorious later as Baha’i propagation centres and were/are under continuous surveillance by the Indian intelligence agencies. b. Both the institutes became a ground for collecting funds from wealthy Baha’i communities across India and the world. The only beneficiaries were Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir’s family members. c. Needless to say such Institutes don’t survive in the long run. Both are under verge of closure and would be most likely taken over by the government or other non-Baha’i trusts. d. Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir, after his Mentawai success, became a master at inflating numbers. He taught this art to the Indian Baha’i Community. That is why we find mind boggling numbers of assemblies in this period (stated around 10000 LSA’s in India) and huge surge in community members. Official Government census from 70’s to present day say differently. Present community strength in India is less than 5000 (Exact 4572, census 2011). Where is the huge community that Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir is credited with? e. Present day Baha’i Administration is facing embarrassment in public and facing anxious moments under scrutiny by intelligence agencies to justify the inflated numbers. Loyalty and integrity of the Baha’i Faith members is under question. All this is the legacy of Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir. f. Muhajir family members, who have inherited unscrupulous habits from their uncle are keeping the same tradition alive in India through Payman Muhajir. The Muhajir’s have been a big liability in India for past 50 years. g. It is well known that during 60’s he had strained relations with his ever-supporting wife. He preferred company of younger ladies. There are several old-timers to vouch for this, although official history conveniently overlooks this while creating a saintly image of Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir.

To conclude, Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir was a publicity seeking, shrewd manipulator. True to his Persian blood. His so-called service to the Baha’i Faith is only to promote himself. He has cleverly mis-appropriated Baha’i funds to build assets and settle his family. He has seen the Baha’i Faith as a family business to be passed on from generation to generation. He has successfully, in that regard created the Muhajir brand for reaping benefits in decades to come. Unfortunately, several sincere Baha’is are hardly remembered, while fraudsters as Dr Rehmatullah Muhajir are immortalized.

Regretfully yours, A concerned Baha’i

Baha'i Leadership Caught Fraudulently Misstating Facts For Political Purposes

The Baha'i Leadership Has Engaged in Many Years of Orchestrated Fraud To Grossly Over- represent The Number of Their Followers For Purposes of Political Gain:

by Ravian Bilani

There has always been confusion in the Population of the Baha'i Faith followers in every country, since its ORIGIN. Regarding their numbers, "Millions" is the usual figure claimed by them.

As a result Baha'is and Baha'i Administration have gone on defensive. They are quick to blame the Christians for this exaggeration and inconsistency. Where did the Christians get their data? It is only from the National spiritual Assembly of the various countries especially the NSA of USA. It is only the Baha'is and their officials who are to blame for the false-misleading reports on the wildly exaggerated Baha'i census. It is not the fault of the editors of Christian World Encyclopedia and Encyclopedia Britannica who relied on information given to them by the Baha'is.

One may ask, why didn't the NSAs, UHJ-ITC-ABM-CBC ever contact the Christian World Encyclopedia Editors, and request a correction? This is because the Baha'is want to jack-up their numbers- for "public image".

Baha'i Population in Iran as claimed in the time of Abdul Baha In case of the Baha'i population in Iran the Baha'is speak lies which puts to shame any lover of justice. Sometimes they say one third of the Iranian population is Baha'i and sometimes they propagate that half of the Iranian population is Baha'i. To my utter surprise during my visit to India in 2002, a Baha'i convert informed me that the whole of Iran has accepted the Baha'i Faith. I politely told him that the Baha'is have made a fool out of him. There are not more than 20,000 Baha'is.

Even the Zoroastrians, Jews and Christians of Iran are not being spared from this onslaught of lie for which the Baha'is claim that all of them have accepted the Baha'i Faith. Here are the Excerpts from the writing of Edward Brown, Ibrahim George Kheiralla says: "Abdul Karim, 1896, assured me that the believers in Baha were fifty millions. I wrote to Syria to ask. Sayid Mohammed, secretary of Abbas Effendi, said that the number was fifty-five million souls." Kheiralla afterwards denounces it as a gross deceit. As to Persia, they place the proportion at one-third or one-half. Dreyfus writes, "Probably half the population of Persia is Baha'i." Incidentally the Baha'is claim that there are 3,000,000 (three million) Baha'is in Iran. The majority of Zoroastrians are recognized as Baha'is. On the contrary Professor Browne writes: "I had been informed that Zoroastrians were accepting Baha'ism. However after much discussion with the Zoroastrians of Yazd and Kerman for the space of three and a half months, I came to the conclusion that few, if any, had adopted the Baha'i creed." In India the proportion of Parsee-Baha'is is very small. As to Jews, Remey says: "In Hamadan there is a large Israelites following of Baha." A census made by a European Jew showed exactly 59 parents and with their children. 194 persons out of a population of 6,000 Jews. As to the United States, I give some particulars in the closing chapter. "The inference is plain that no native of Israel had become Baha'i through sixty years of contact with Baha and his seventy followers. Abdul Baha gave the impression that many of the Christians of Persia are converts to Baha. Dr. J. H. Shedd wrote in 1894, "I have heard of no case of a Christian conversion to Baha'ism." Dr. G. W. Holmes wrote, 1903, "I do not know of a single Christian in Persia, who has been converted to Baha'ism. Some Baha'is who made a profession of Christianity turned back to Baha." Rev. J. W. Hawkes declares that in his observation none of the members of the Syrian (Nestorian) or Armenian churches in Persia have become Baha'is. I have known of one Armenian family in Resht and two men in Maraga, one of whom was a notorious, who kept up his opium using as before.

Population in Iran as claimed at the time of UHJ:

From 3,00,000 to 4,61,351 followers. The percentage varies from 0.69 to 2%. This is unimaginable lie. The Encyclopedia Britannica and Encyclopedia of Christians have conveyed that the Baha'is have told them. The reporters are none other than Douglas Martin (former member of House of Justice) and Simeon Kohlman Rabbani (a Baha'i), who gave the information to World Christian Encyclopedia is a Baha'i.

There is one silver lining in the Baha'i census of Iran. It exposes the falsehood. Abdul Baha, leader of the faith (of lies), claimed fifty five millions at his time. UHJ is now claiming only 300,000 !!! Presented below are certain eye-openers !!!

No. Year Population % Reference:

1. 1984 300,000 Ref: Hatcher, William S. & J. Douglas Martin. The Baha'i Faith: The Emerging Global Religion. San Francisco, CA: Harper & Row (1984); pg. 181.
2. 1990 410,000 "Data transcribed by Simeon Kohlman Rabbani" Ref: Barrett, David B. World Christian Encyclopedia (2001)
3. 2001 463,151 (0.69%) Data transcribed by Simeon Kohlman Rabbani. Ref: Barrett, David B. World Christian Encyclopedia (2001) Present Baha'i Population of Iran

The actual number of Baha'is in Iran is not more than 30,000. That should not make anyone who is a Baha'i very depressed. The Baha'is should know that exaggerating Baha'i census was the policy of Abdul Baha, Shoghi Effendi and now House of Justice.

What the Universal House of Justice should know, is that by making false claim of number of Baha'is or by parroting Anna's presentation, no one will ever change his/her Faith. They can organize reflection meetings, deceptive children classes, launch fake Intensive program of Growth have useless cluster growth meetings – the Baha'i population will not grow. The Baha'i population will not grow by sending young Iranian Baha'i girls outside Iran for propagation of Baha'i Faith.

Baha'ism is now a failed attempt, a misfired plot to portray a man made religion to be counted amongst major religions of the world. Baha'ism is dying in its infancy. It will never see the light of the day.

Website of the Baha'is of India – BUPC

Website : <https://www.bahai-india.com>

One of the most important provisions of the Will and Testament of Abdu'l-Baha is that the Universal House of Justice (UHJ) must have a president who is a descendant of Baha'u'llah. The BUPC is the only Baha'i group which has a Universal House of Justice with a descendant of Baha'u'llah as its president. The purpose of the descendant of King David being the president of Baha'u'llah's Universal House of Justice is so that we can recognize the true UHJ of Baha'u'llah from fakes, frauds, and imitations. Guardianship in BUPC Unique to the BUPC: belief the institution of the guardianship is the continuation of the Davidic line, which Bahá'u'lláh passed onto his son, who in turn passed the lineage on to the institution of the guardianship. In His Proclamation Baha'u'llah wrote:

The BUPC Baha'is of the World believe that Mason Remey is not the spiritual son but the LEGALLY ADOPTED SON OF 'ABDU'L-BAHA and therefore an Aghsan. This makes Mason Remey an Aghsan (branch of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha) and therefore qualifies him as the Guardian that is the president of the IBC/UHJ who has legally inherited the throne of King David. Abdu'l-Baha made Mason Remey his legally adopted son being fully aware that the First Guardian Shoghi Effendi will not have any issue and the chain of Guardianship should continue through Mason Remey. While Shoghi Effendi is the Afrian Guardian. The Guardianship in BUPC runs as follows: Mason Remey (The First Aghsan Guardian) The Adopted and only son of 'Abdu'l-Baha. Appointed by Shoghi Effendi in 1951, to be the first Aghsan Guardian of the Baha'i Faith as the president and executive of the first International Bahai Council (IBC). Mason Remey served as a Hand of Cause under Shoghi Effendi. Mason Remey received recognition from 'Abdu'l-Baha as well as Shoghi Effendi for being the firmest proponent of Baha'u'llah's Covenant. As the legal executer of the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha, Shoghi Effendi identified Mason Remey as 'Abdu'l-Baha's "Dear Son" (therefore an Aghsan) in writing, welcomed Mason as the first President of the IBC/UHJ in 1951, and protected the transfer of David's throne from 'Abdu'l-Baha to his son Mason. Joseph Pepe (The Second Aghsan Guardian) The adopted and only son of Mason Remey. Appointed by Mason Remey to be the Second Aghsan Guardian of the Baha'i Faith. Joseph Pepe Remey was the President of the Second International Bahai Council and today his son succeeds him as the Third Aghsan Guardian of the Bahai Faith. Neal Chase ben Joseph Aghsan (The Third Aghsan Guardian) The third and the present Aghsan Guardian of the Baha'i Faith. Towards whom all the Bahais of the world should turn to recognize Baha'u'llah's true Universal House of Justice. Branch; 3rd Guardian of the Baha'i Faith seated upon the throne of David. Great-grandson of Abdu'l-Baha, the adopted and only son of Joseph Pepe Remey. (<http://bupc.org>) Covenant-Breakers Thwarted in Baha'i Domain Dispute On February 24, 2005 the National Spiritual Assembly (NSA) of the Bahá'is of the United States filed a complaint with the United Nations World Intellectual Property Organization Arbitration and Mediation Center (WIPO) against Neal Chase for his use of the domain name UHJ.net, which claims to be "The Official website of the Universal House of Justice" – a name for which the NSA has a United States federal trademark registration, issued in 1965. The May 8 ruling released by the World Intellectual Property Organization (WIPO) will keep the domain UHJ.NET in the possession of the Baha'is Under the Provisions of the Covenant who are the only people in the world to have the true Universal House of Justice of Baha'u'llah with the Davidic King (Aghsan – Branch) as its president, the great grandson of 'Abdu'l-Baha as its functioning executive and living "guardian" seated upon the throne of King David that is to last for ever (see Psalms 89 for more). Thousands of people have rejoiced at the defeat of the Age Old Enemy of the Davidic Kingship of Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l-Baha and of their sons entitled in Persian 'Aghsan' which literally means 'Branch' (see Zech. 3:8 KJV for more) that has been passed down through 'Abdu'l-Baha's son, grandson and now great grandson who is the president and first servant of the Council of the Universal House of Justice in this day today. The full text of the decision is at <http://bupc.org/wipo>. The official Web site of the Universal House of Justice is at <http://www.uhj.net> And the worldwide community of Baha'is at www.bupc.org Covenant Breakers defeated in Court Nov. 28: In a landmark judgement, a federal court in Chicago recently overruled a 1966 court decision that stopped the Davidic Kingship–Mason and his successors to the Executive branch of the UHJ– from using the Baha'i name. The Chicago court judges, while criticising the 1966 ruling, said that it was a wrongful means of trying to resolve a question of religious authority. The federal 7th Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled that the 1966 decision does not apply to Neal Chase and the BUPC "even though they admitted to being [the legal] successors-in-interest to Remey" (<https://www.chicagolipitigation.com/2008/05/former-officers-not-bound-by-companys-injunction/>). The attempts of the Haifa- based mainstream Baha'i faith to shut down the public teaching effort and close down all the websites and publications of the Baha'is Under the Provisions of the Covenant, have been thwarted with this ruling. One of the most important outcomes of the ruling was that it has put aside all questions regarding religious organisations having any right to trademark its names or icons. This came as a major boost to the 144,000 strong followers of the Baha'is under the Provision of Covenant world-wide. They believe that the mainstream Baha'i faith has strayed from the religion's original teachings. "The abrogation of the original order has freed us from their "marks" and the 6-66 injunction is overthrown, null, and void. We are free to go forward with our path and plans to further advance the Baha'i faith, headed by the third guardian Neal Chase, the Covenant appointed" said Mr Sameer. Spread of BUPC Faith From 1980 to 1996 the Adherents were mostly concentrated in Missoula, Montana, with groups at times in Wyoming, Arkansas, Minnesota, Colorado, and Wisconsin. From 1996 to 2005 the membership of BUPC increased world-wide and after the defeat of the covenant breakers in the domain dispute and court case and the Third Guardian Mr. Neal Chase taking a more proactive stand the BUPC Faith spread like wild fire in countries like United States, United Kingdom, Canada, France, Azerbaijan, India, Bangladesh etc. It looks like the mainstream covenant breakers has nothing to stop the spread of the True Faith except some false censuses to show that they are still being accepted in the International society as a Faith and not as a deviant cult.

Anti Conversion Law and Baha'i Faith in India

Baha'i faith has a long history of conversion in India. Baha'u'llah, the founder of Baha'i Faith encouraged many Baha'is to settled in India so as to convert the Locals into this new Religion. Some of the individuals who settled in India were Háji Sayyid Mírzá and Sayyid Muhammad of Muslim background. The first Baha'i Press was established in the year 1882 Professor Pritam Singh was the first convert from Sikh Community and later he facilitated in publishing first Baha'i magazine in India. With the help of continuous efforts from the missionaries, the Baha'i faith could established many communities in Bombay, Calcutta and other cities of India. The first Baha'i of Hindu background was Narayenrao Rangnath Shethji. Baha'is of Zoroastrian background played an active part in bringing new converts. Still some of the prominent Baha'is in India are from Zoroastrian lineage.

Of late, due to strict anti-conversion law of India, Baha'is are finding difficulties in getting new converts. As a precautionary measure Baha'is have withdrawn the declaration card for new Baha'is from some cities of India.

Baha'is have recently adopted an indirect method of getting new souls into the faith by organizing devotional meetings with neighbors belonging to other religions. Similarly they have started moral classes for Children and Junior Youth Programme.

The purpose of these activities is to change the perception of people towards Baha'i faith and later on enrolled them. It is easier to find Baha'is teaching Ruhi books (conversion manual of Baha'i religion) in many parts of the country such as Nashik, Malegaon, Sangli, Kerala, Lucknow, Bihar sharif etc.

Some prominent Baha'is also used their Educational Institute to propagate their Religion. One such example is Mr. Jagdish Gandhi – Founder of City Montessori School in Lucknow and His wife Mrs. Bharti Gandhi – Founder- City International School.

You can find sayings of their leader Baha'u'llah at the entrance of these schools.

New Era school of Panchgani is also a Missionary school of Baha'i Faith.

Baha'is have divided the areas into various clusters and zones. Local Spiritual Assembly [LSA] is formed at a place as soon as the number of new converts reaches nine and then they are asked to hold Nineteen Days Feast [NDF] and are motivated to carry out activities to bring in more converts. All these are done to avoid monitoring from Government bodies or hard-core Hindu organizations who are working to stop the conversion of Hindus to other religions.

Baha'is have also built a Lotus Temple in New Delhi which is open to all religions. It's served as a silent preacher to people of other religions who visit the place to see the architecture of the building.

Baha'is also exaggerate their numbers in India to gain minority status in the country but till date have been unsuccessful. (<https://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com/>)

UK Census 2011, exposes the false Claims of Bahá'ís

One hundred years ago, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the son of the Founder of the Bahá’í Faith, arrived in the United Kingdom for the first of his two visits. He was 66 years old. He wasted no time in taking His Father Bahá’u’lláh’s message of peace and religious renewal to western societies. His visits were crucial in the establishment of the Bahá’í Faith in the UK. In London, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá gave public lectures at City Temple, St John the Divine in Smith Square, and elsewhere. At City Temple, he said that, “The gift of God to this enlightened age is the knowledge of the oneness of mankind and of the fundamental oneness of religion.” At St John, the translation of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s remarks was read by the Archdeacon of Westminster, Albert Wilberforce.

There are many stories of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s activities in Britain. His acts of charity at homeless shelters and for the poor; His audiences for hundreds of well-wishers and questioners; His constant emphasis on political reconciliation in the pre-war period; His call for racial harmony and an end to prejudice; all of these episodes set for Bahá’ís an enduring example of a life dedicated to the service of humanity.

In response to such services of Abdul Baha, The British Government honored Abdul Baha with a Knighthood, which he accepted as a gesture of honoring formally by a just king.

Abdul Baha wrote a letter of gratitude “O God, the tabernacle of justice has truly been erected on this holy land, and we thank and praise Thee. O God, may Emperor George V, Ruler of Britain, be assisted in his divine achievements, and May his shadow over this realm be everlasting.”

Abdu’l-Bahá’s visits were seen by Bahá’ís as a blessing, as inspiring today as they were a century ago. In celebration of His visits, Bahá’ís in the UK are rededicating themselves to the service of others.

Despite such a glorious background of the Bahá’í Faith in the UK and a massive investment of resources over the years in form of planning of Bahá’í administration for implementation of MASS TEACHINGS and RUHI BOOK curriculum, the Bahá’í and the Bahá’í Faith has failed gain acceptance in the British Society.

The programme of Moral classes for children and spiritualizing the Jr. Youth and thereby attracting the parents of these children and youths has failed miserably. The official census of UK of 2011 states that there are only 5021 Bahais. The figure is not subject to inaccuracies as can be expected in some other countries, as publishing false census is a punishable offence strictly enforced in the country. Why is then, that Bahais of UK keep claiming since 2004 that there are 34,000 Bahais in UK? Is it not deceiving people and going against the laws of the country? Bahais keep on struggling to advertise their success forgotten the very principles truth and justice.

Courtesy : <http://bahaicensusindia.blogspot.com>

Baha'i Census is a big LIE with wildly exaggerated number of adherents and localities

Finally, we have official acknowledgement from the Queen of Baha'i Cyberspace regarding the erroneous wildly exaggerated Baha'i census.

————— From: sman...@jam.r.com Date: 4 Aug 2005 Subject: Re: Baha'i officials admit in writing that the number of Baha'is has decreased worldwide

Henry wrote: "In the past, many seekers were told that the Baha'is numbered 6 millions worldwide. Now, the official Baha'i propaganda machinery is stating matter of fact that there are only 5 millions of those Baha'is worldwide".

Susan responded: "Some times the number has been estimated at five million, sometimes at six. Truth is, no one really knows."

—————
The Baha'i census that claim 6 to 7.2 million adherents is -A LIE- A LIE- an actual exaggeration of the real numbers.

It is estimated that there are no more than ONE Million real Baha'is worldwide.

Now below one finds wildly exaggerated number of localities- on the lower end we see 18,000 localities and then on the upper end we see 124000 localities. Then there are statements of 100,000 and 110,000 localities.

Finally the number of countries and localities varies with each web site. There is no concensus regarding the actual number of countries, the actual number of localities, and the actual number of Baha'i followers.

If one takes the estimated 100000 localities and figures that there are at least 5-9 Baha'is. We find that the census is going to show 500,000 to 900,000 Baha'i adherents worldwide.

That should make anyone who is a Baha'i very depressed. Not 6 million, not 5 million, but a little less than 1 million Baha'is worldwide- with 30% still in Iran and 6-7% in the US.

Henry Villar —————

"The Bahá'í community, comprising members of the Bahá'í Faith from all over the globe, now numbers some five million souls. They represent 2,112 ethnic and tribal groups and live in over 116,000 localities in 188 independent countries and 45 dependent territories or overseas departments." www.Bahai.org —————

"According to the 1992 Encyclopaedia Britannica Book of the Year, the Bahá'í Faith had established "significant communities" in more countries and territories than any other religion except for Christianity. They were organized in 205 areas worldwide vs. 254 for Christianity. According to The Baha'i World, this has since increased to 235 countries and territories, including over 2,100 racial, ethnic and tribal groups. Encyclopedia Britannica Online estimates that they had about 7.4 million members worldwide in mid-2002:

1.8 million in Africa 3.6 million in Asia 0.13 million in Europe 0.91 in Latin America 0.81 in Northern America 0.12 in Oceania. 1 "

The number of devoted, committed members of the Baha'i faith is probably much lower than 101,000, perhaps on the order of 60,000. This is surprisingly close to the harmonic mean of the estimates by the U.S. Baha'i NSA and reformer Fredrick Glaysher.

Link: <http://www.religioustolerance.org/bahai4.htm>

————— The largest Bahá'í community in the world is in India, with 2.2 million Bahá'ís residing there, although only 5,575 claimed to be Bahá'í in the 1991 Census

Link: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Baha'i_statistics

Baha'is Exaggeration of their figures Exposed In India Census 2011

Examples of Beliefs, Claims and Orders by the Twentieth Century God

Baha'i religious FATWA on Killing (murder)

'Abdu'l-Baha began by comparing the Baha'i faith to early Christianity in its focus on spirituality rather than law. He is aware, of course, that there are more than two religious laws in the Baha'i scriptures, unlike the New Testament. That is, a Baha'i shari'ah or code of revealed law does exist. He explains, however, that such laws are actually a form of spirituality and ethics: "they are derivatives of certitude, faith, assurance and mystical insight."

Moreover, these laws deal with personal status matters (marriage, inheritance, etc.) as well as with some matters of what we would call criminal law (not all such crimes were actually public in Muslim societies—murder, for instance, is considered a private affair in which the family of the victim has the option of accepting blood money or demanding that the state execute the perpetrator— or even of killing him themselves). In this, Baha'i law resembles that of the Qur'an.

More...

<http://www-personal.umich.edu/~jrcole/bahai/2001/t..>

Are Baha'is leaders laundering money?

In the case of the young Iranian Baha'i murdered in Pakistan, and then buried in a hurry by the members of the NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF PAKISTAN WITHOUT PERFORMING AN AUTOPSY AND WITHOUT INFORMING THE PAKI GOVERNMENT, the Universal House of Justice had to investigate the murder following threats of lawsuits. Unfortunately, now the people who had planned to sue in this case HAVE BEEN QUIETED down by the Universal House of Justice.

NOT SURPRISING, Dorothy Nelson -who is member of the USA BAHAI National Assembly AND whose husband WAS KICKED OUT OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF THE BAHAI'S OF USA for defrauding a poor Baha'i of his donations to the BAHUQUULLAH (Baha'i Fund established to pay a TAX to GOD) was placed on the board of the LAW CENTER- that had attempted to sue.

THE WORLD BAHAI FAITH thus provides DAMAGE CONTROL by silencing the voice of dissent, and through their PROPAGANDA MACHINE.

Dorothy Nelson is A FEDERAL JUDGE nominated to the federal bench by President Carter. She is NOW AN ACTIVE MEMBER OF THE BOARD of the LAW Center that had intended to sue the AUGUST BAHAI ESTABLISHMENT.

Baha'i Counsellor Stephen Hall has lately become an employee of the Sunland Group and is on their payroll? Why has Mr Stephen Hall moved to the Gold Coast and why since he moved to the Gold Coast has a private investigator/detective been contracted to follow and stalk me between the Gold Coast and Brisbane?? Why is the major shareholder of the Sunland Group not sanctioned by the baha'i administration for cohabiting with a woman that is not his wife when baha'i law states that this must be done and why are others sanctioned for much lesser crimes when he is not? Who are all the shareholders of this company and its various subsidiaries? Are members of the baha'i administration in Australia owners of shares? Is Counselor Manijeh Rayhani a shareholder? How about ABM Alen Waters? Why was uhj member Peter Con here on the Gold Coast this last summer? Is Peter Con a shareholder in the Sunland Group, and if so, why? Exactly why are members of the Australian baha'i administration travelling to and fro between here and the Pacific and Micronesian Islands constantly when those Islands have their own baha'i administrations and why is nsa member John Walker now known officially as the CEO of the baha'i faith in Australia when the baha'i faith is ostensibly a religion and not a corporation? Is the Australian baha'i administration diverting funds to offshore accounts in the Pacific Islands and Micronesia? Why and how much and to what end? Why are official representatives of the uhj making surreptitious visits to the Islamic Republic of Iran and the United Arab Emirates?? What exactly do the baha'is have in the UAE whereby they maintain such a continuous financial presence there? Why have there been rumours and accusations for years that wealthy baha'is in the Gulf were possibly working as conduits smuggling arms to the mullahs during Iran-Contra? Why has the name of Manuchehr Ghorbanifar been mentioned in the same breath as several wealthy baha'is in the Gulf throughout all these accusations?? What role does Mr Masih Tayyebi and his Bridge West co. have in all this? Why was Mr Tayyebi deputized by the nsa of the United States and the Universal House of Ignorance in Haifa, Zionistan to be their go between with Mr Reza Pahlavi until last August?

These questions MUST be answered by officials of the baha'i administration.

Nima

Feb 28 2004

The David Kelly Story

Courtesy : <http://www.illuminati-news.com/081106d.htm>

Ask any bartender and he will tell you religion and politics are two subjects that should not be discussed while drinking. Mix the two and an altercation is almost sure to develop. With that caveat in mind, readers are cautioned not to imbibe in alcoholic beverages while discussing this article with friends, acquaintances and certainly not strangers. Dr. David Kelly (1944-2003)

we have detailed the knowledge and/or involvement microbiologist David Kelly had in the biowarfare programs of several nations including the UK, US, Russia, South Africa, Israel and Iraq. He was privy to, and an analyst of, much of the information British intelligence gathered around the world pertaining to chemical and biological warfare.

We also discussed Kelly's disgraceful treatment by the UK's Ministry of Defence (MoD), the resentment that must have fostered making him (in some persons' eyes) a security risk. This was exacerbated by Kelly's discussions with commissioning agent Victoria Roddam about writing a book, or at least contributing to an anthology of the many facets of government and industry involvement in biowarfare programs. It could only have heightened concerns in some quarters that Roddam's publishing company (Oneworld Publications) specializes in works of Islamic scholars and authors.

Another was Olivia Bosch, a senior researcher at the Royal Institute of International Affairs (more commonly known as Chatham House or RIIA) A third was Judith Miller, star reporter for the New York Times and a long-time member of the RIIA's sister organization the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR).

Bosch testified at the Hutton inquiry in to Kelly's death. Police evidently obtained witness statements from both Miller and Pederson, which have not been made available to the inquiry. The MoD told police that witnesses could opt not to have their statements given to the Hutton "probe." At the hearings witnesses were not put under oath.

Pederson has since, as the British say, "gone to ground" or disappeared from public view. However she has hired (or had provided for her) a very high profile spokesperson, a lawyer named Mark Zaid. The attorney often represents former/current government employees, intelligence officers and others. He is currently representing the father of Dodi Fayed (who died with Princess Diana in a controversial car accident) in obtaining alleged FBI and CIA documents said to relate to those deaths.

However, in previous articles we might have slighted one of Kelly's colleagues who may have been closer to him than any of the other three.

Was in Iraq from 1995 to 1998 –

Gabriele Kraatz Wadsack

Gabriele Kraatz Wadsack (pictured right) worked with Kelly in Iraq. She is one of Germany's top biowarfare experts and is a former head of Uncom's biological weapons program. She is also a Lieutenant Colonel in the German Army.

Wadsack and Kelly had traveled around the world giving joint presentations to scientists on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction (WMD). Just weeks before Kelly's death, he was gone for a week in Baltimore, Maryland giving a presentation according to testimony of Mrs. Kelly before the Hutton inquiry.

Upon returning home Kelly sent an e-mail to Gabriele that said in part, "Thanks for a great week. I had a lot on my mind so I know that I was a little subdued. – thanks for being just you!"

Police found a two-page handwritten note in Kelly's briefcase titled "Gabriele's concerns." They say it appears to relate to Iraq and WMD." However it is being withheld on grounds of personal "privacy." Once a regular panelist on TV, Wadsack is refusing interviews and is said to be working at the German Army's biological weapons facility in Munich.

While Kelly was definitely "plugged in" to the biowarfare scene, there is an undercurrent of possible religious influence on his actions and secret society involvement in his death that may yet generate the biggest controversy.

One of the minor controversies raised during the course of the Hutton inquiry was the allegation that Kelly had made disparaging remarks about the “dossier” at a private meeting in the home of a fellow member of the Baha’i, Roger Kingdon. About thirty invited members of the Baha’i were present. Kelly had given a slide presentation on Iraq WMD, but the alleged remarks were made during a question and answer portion of the meeting.

However, potentially the most controversial item to come out of the Hutton inquiry is a little noted piece of “evidence” submitted by the Thames Valley Police (TCP). Listed among the items submitted by the TVP is an exhibit titled “TVP Tactical Support Major Incident Policy Book.” The name given to the effort is Operation Mason.

In 1997, Tony Blair’s election manifesto promised to compile a register of freemasons in public life. In February 1998 Blair’s new government (put out by then Home Secretary Jack Straw) required all new appointments to the judiciary, police, legally qualified staff of the Crown Prosecution Service and probation and prison services to declare membership in Masonic organizations. Existing government employees in those categories were encouraged to voluntarily announce such membership. Few have come forward.

The government’s action was the culmination of anti-Masonic fervor dating back as far as 1869 when Rev. C.G. Finney in his book, “The Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry” inveighed against the Masons with the following:

“Can a man who has taken and still adheres to the oath of the Royal Arch degree be trusted in office? He swears to espouse the cause of a companion of this degree when involved in any difficulty, so far as to extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong. He swears to conceal his crimes, murder and treason not excepted. He swears to give a companion of this degree timely notice of any approaching danger that may be known to him. Now is a man bound fast by such an oath to be entrusted with office? Ought he to be accepted as a witness, a juror—when a Freemason is a party, in any case—a sheriff, constable, or marshal; ought he to be trusted with the office of judge or justice of the peace? Gentlemen, you know he ought not, and you would despise me should I not be faithful in warning the public against entrusting such men with office.”

Another author, Anthony Beevor, was told by a leading Mason that all thirteen members of the Army Management Board were Masons (in 1991). The board comprises a mix of politicians and top army officers. It exercises authority over all forms of appointments, ranking and promotion in the army.

The chairman of the Commons Home Affairs Committee, Chris Mullin, is said to have been considering legislation to mandate that members of the criminal justice system be required to reveal if they are freemasons.

However, that proposal was dropped (at least temporarily) after 5,000 Masons from London’s 1,585 lodges met to establish a new central organization. They were led by Prince Edward George Nicholas Paul Patrick Windsor, Duke of Kent. He and his wife present the trophies at Wimbledon every year and is less well known in his position as head of the English Freemasonry movement. The Duke and Duchess, after selling their own home in Coppins, now live in two residences supplied by the Queen at Anmer Hall and St. James Palace.

At the meeting, the Masons protested the contemplated mandatory declarations as a violation of the 1998 Human Rights Act. There are an estimated 300,000 Masons in England and Wales.

An Italian government was brought down following a 1981 investigation of the (former) P2 Masonic lodge. Consecrated in 1895, the P2 lodge included elite members from the Italian government, military and intelligence services and bankers serving the Vatican and mafia. The P2 Grand Master, an Italian named Licio Gelli joined the CIA and worked in league with mafia banker Michele Sindona and president Roberto Calvi of the Banco Ambrosiano, which collapsed in the Vatican banking scandal. Gelli himself was expelled from Masonry in 1976. As a result of the scandal, the Italian government banned secret societies.

Calvi, twenty years ago, was found hanging from a bridge over the Thames River in what was thought to be a suicide. However British authorities have reopened the case and are now calling it murder and may prosecute three men and a woman for the crime. The motives conjectured include his mishandling of mafia money and/or potentially blackmailing P2 members.

The timing of the reopening of the Calvi case could be more than a coincidence considering the civil trial due to begin next month against the Bank of England for its role in the supervision and closing of BCCI. The mafia, CIA, British intelligence, the Mossad an assorted terrorist and drug trafficking organizations used BCCI for laundering money.

However, Lord Hutton’s report on his inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of microbiologist David Kelly is due out in the same time frame. It undoubtedly will dominate news coverage as BBC and politicians try to blame each other for the supposed “suicide” of Kelly and the debate over the “dossier” justifying the war against Iraq. The capture yesterday of Saddam Hussein and its attendant publicity may be a wild card in the public relations battle.

It is not clear why the TVP named its tactical support Operation Mason. It could be a red herring or just a taunt to the anti-Masonic movement. It possibly could be a straightforward reference to support of a Masonic operation. But what was that operation?

One thing this writer can confidently predict, the Hutton report will label Kelly’s death a suicide giving no credence to any of the evidence that points conclusively to murder.

How many People were Killed by Baha'u'llah ?

It's known that Baha'u'llah's ambitions for leadership created a trail of homicides across the Middle East, several of which are acknowledged even by Baha'i sources.

Baha'u'llah was involved in upwards of 20 homicides, including prominent Babis who didn't accept his claims to be HWGSMM and Azalis who opposed him. This is not to count Baha'u'llah's involvement in organising military insurgencies where many hundreds died.

Is there a complete list of the known victims of these crimes?

Here are a few I've gathered:

Hajji Mirza Ahmad of Kashan — murdered in Baghdad, author of the early Babi history Kitab-i Nuqtat al-Kaf, a Babi who was loyal to Subh-i-Azal

Mirza `Ali Muhammad Sarraj — murdered in Baghdad by stabbing, author of a book opposing the claim that Baha'u'llah was HWGSMM

Sayyid Ismail Zawareh — murdered in Baghdad, his throat was cut and the knife placed in his hand to make it look self-inflicted

Aqa Ali Muhammad — murdered in Baghdad, a brother-in-law of the Bab

Aqa Abul Jasim of Kashan — murdered in Baghdad, "because he had reported to Subh-i-Azal that he heard that Baha's pretension was that he was the return of the Imam Hussein"

Mulla Rajab `Ali (Qahir) — murdered in Karbala, brother of Sarraj and a supporter of Subh-i-Azal. He was murdered with a revolver by a Baha'i man called Nasur the Arab.

Aqa Sayyid Ali the Arab — murdered in Tabriz

Mirza Nasrullah — murdered in Edime, the brother-in-law of Subh-i-Azal

It's known that Baha'u'llah's ambitions for leadership created a trail of homicides across the Middle East, several of which are acknowledged even by Baha'i sources.

Baha'u'llah was involved in upwards of 20 homicides, including prominent Babis who didn't accept his claims to be HWGSMM and Azalis who opposed him. This is not to count Baha'u'llah's involvement in organising military insurgencies where many hundreds died.

Is there a complete list of the known victims of these crimes?

Here are a few I've gathered:

Hajji Mirza Ahmad of Kashan — murdered in Baghdad, author of the early Babi history Kitab-i Nuqtat al-Kaf, a Babi who was loyal to Subh-i-Azal

It's known that Baha'u'llah's ambitions for leadership created a trail of homicides across the Middle East, several of which are acknowledged even by Baha'i sources.

Baha'u'llah was involved in upwards of 20 homicides, including prominent Babis who didn't accept his claims to be HWGSMM and Azalis who opposed him. This is not to count Baha'u'llah's involvement in organising military insurgencies where many hundreds died.

Is there a complete list of the known victims of these crimes?

Here are a few I've gathered:

Hajji Mirza Ahmad of Kashan — murdered in Baghdad, author of the early Babi history Kitab-i Nuqtat al-Kaf, a Babi who was loyal to Subh-i-Azal

Mirza `Ali Muhammad Sarraj — murdered in Baghdad by stabbing, author of a book opposing the claim that Baha'u'llah was HWGSMM

Sayyid Ismail Zawareh — murdered in Baghdad, his throat was cut and the knife placed in his hand to make it look self-inflicted

Aqa Ali Muhammad — murdered in Baghdad, a brother-in-law of the Bab

Aqa Abul Jasim of Kashan — murdered in Baghdad, “because he had reported to Subh-i-Azal that he heard that Baha’s pretension was that he was the return of the Imam Hussein”

Mullā Rajab `Alī (Qahir) — murdered in Karbala, brother of Sarraj and a supporter of Subh-i-Azal. He was murdered with a revolver by a Baha’i man called Nasur the Arab.

Aqa Sayyid Ali the Arab — murdered in Tabriz

Mirza Nasrullah — murdered in Edirne, the brother-in-law of Subh-i-Azal

Mulla Rajab Ali Qahir — murdered in Karbala, a brother-in-law of the Bab

Haji Mirza Muhammad Rida — murdered in Akka, maternal uncle of Haji Sayyid Muhammad of Isfahan

Sayyid Muhammad Isfahani — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Aqa Jan Kaj-Kulah — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Mirza Rida-Quli Tafrishi — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Muhammad Khan — murdered in Akka, murdered in the Carawansaray of corn-sellers, buried in a shallow grave and discovered by authorities

Haji Ibrahim — murdered in Akka, murdered in the Carawansaray of corn-sellers, buried in a shallow grave and discovered by authorities

Source : https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/11jgnv4/bahaulah_a_serial_murderer/

— murdered in Baghdad by stabbing, author of a book opposing the claim that Baha’u’llah was HWGSMM

Sayyid Ismail Zawareh — murdered in Baghdad, his throat was cut and the knife placed in his hand to make it look self-inflicted

Aqa Ali Muhammad — murdered in Baghdad, a brother-in-law of the Bab

Aqa Abul Jasim of Kashan — murdered in Baghdad, “because he had reported to Subh-i-Azal that he heard that Baha’s pretension was that he was the return of the Imam Hussein”

Mullā Rajab `Alī (Qahir) — murdered in Karbala, brother of Sarraj and a supporter of Subh-i-Azal. He was murdered with a revolver by a Baha’i man called Nasur the Arab.

Aqa Sayyid Ali the Arab — murdered in Tabriz

Mirza Nasrullah — murdered in Edirne, the brother-in-law of Subh-i-Azal

Mulla Rajab Ali Qahir — murdered in Karbala, a brother-in-law of the Bab

Haji Mirza Muhammad Rida — murdered in Akka, maternal uncle of Haji Sayyid Muhammad of Isfahan

Sayyid Muhammad Isfahani — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Aqa Jan Kaj-Kulah — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Mirza Rida-Quli Tafrishi — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Muhammad Khan — murdered in Akka, murdered in the Carawansaray of corn-sellers, buried in a shallow grave and discovered by authorities

Haji Ibrahim — murdered in Akka, murdered in the Carawansaray of corn-sellers, buried in a shallow grave and discovered by authorities

Source : https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/11jgnv4/bahaulah_a_serial_murderer/

— murdered in Karbala, a brother-in-law of the Bab

Haji Mirza Muhammad Rida — murdered in Akka, maternal uncle of Haji Sayyid Muhammad of Isfahan

Sayyid Muhammad Isfahani — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Aqa Jan Kaj-Kulah — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Mirza Rida-Quli Tafrishi — murdered in Akka, a supporter of Subh-i-Azal, seven Baha’is were convicted and jailed

Muhammad Khan — murdered in Akka, murdered in the Carawansaray of corn-sellers, buried in a shallow grave and discovered by authorities

Hajji Ibrahim — murdered in Akka, murdered in the Carawansaray of corn-sellers, buried in a shallow grave and discovered by authorities

Source : https://www.reddit.com/r/exbahai/comments/11jgnv4/bahaulah_a_serial_murderer/

Baha'ism neither is a religion nor a faith.

Written by a Iranian Muslim

Today Shirin Ebadi the Nobel Peace Prize winner who appears as a political puppet of western wills, declared her full support for Baha'ism as a religion. The question here is Mrs. Ebadi who introduces herself a Muslim by her sharp hypocrisy, Why and by what logic overrides Quran verses and support Bahais overtly and introduces their leaders as Prophet? We should ask which Muslim thinker or which Muslim Ayatollah by the knowledge confirmed Bahaism as a religion? And why this political move happens from Shirin?

What this dirty ignorance means which 'makes the ripped chicken in the pot, laughing'! (1)

Mrs. Ebadi knows Farsi and possibly Arabic, And Unfortunately she had read the Baha'i writings and corruptions. She have read the book which says "The Copper if not defected by 'constipation' it becomes Gold after 70 years". (2) And she had read the Bayan the Satanical book of Bahai's which says "The prophet David, Appeared before Prophet Moses appeared"(3) as a historical event, She defensively has read a lot of such garbage in Baha'i books that's because of the lack of the knowledge of their PROPHET!S ... But why this enlightened! person defends the ignorance? The clear ignorance.

What happened in Iran history about Baha'is and what they spread around the world to fake the history by their propaganda has sizable difference.

Looking into such flows, you are inevitable to study its background of its appearance. And if we need to judge why Iran's government is against Baha'ism and has the right of limiting the such deception, we should look the history of Baha'ism in Iran.

Baha'ism is one of many biased heresies that appeared in a messy environment in Iran, About 150 years ago, wave of prospecting the emerge of the last Imam of Shi'a (Imam Mahdi-peace be upon him) developed in cities.

Naturally , such environment will be the platform for lot of misuse, those years also did not become excepted. Many groups appeared claiming a news about the "End Time". Babis and their successors Baha'is was just one of these groups which their leader firstly claimed he knows the "way of attaining the Redeemer". When some people believed him in that biased environment, He notified he is the Redeemer, Himself. Then he claimed he is not just an Imam but a new prophet and even in one of his book recorded "no god exist else than me!". (4)

The faults and ignorance in Bab writings was such sharp that they preferred to introduce themselves as Bahai, Baha was the successor of Bab, His writings has also scandals and faults but little less.

If we study on Baha'i texts we find a lot of garbage and ridicules courses that all against the science and the knowledge. This clearly says it's a collection of human made concepts that is not aware of even language grammar. It's not from Allah, and it's a corruption. Arabic writings of Baha'i leaders that tried to simulate Quran, are strongly laughable and it's the cause of fun in different scenes. It has many terms that even does not exist in Arabic dictionary. The words which came from Persian because the writer does not know Arabic language, but wrote a -named- Arabic book. The Bahai's can hide this such facts from all over the world because these Baha'i scandals are not translatable and just Persian and Arabic speakers can feel the deepness of the scandal.

Baha'i Leader, SIR "Abdol-Baha" The third leader of Baha'ism gets "SIR" title from Britain forces.

Why these garbage concepts succeeded to get influence in minds? In my opinion the main reason was the ignorance, the second force, was the support of Russian occupiers at first steps and in further steps completed with Britannia coverage. Baha'ism harms Islam. Islam is the historical enemy of occupiers to get influence in Iran, This immovable religion which has many defensive instructions against assault. Like the Jihad command.

Baha'ism found in Iran, and used to invade prophet's prophecy all over the world. And in this area is truly known as a corruption between people. Hence Iranian nation as a Muslim nation, see the full rights to defend against corruption.

On the other hand, the West overrides wills of a nation by the excuse of liberalism and sits on the seat of a nation to prevent their liberty, their faith. Where is democracy here? Should a foreign state interfere in internal affairs of another nation and dictate a foreign belief? The west has not to show just one a good amity to Iranian nation. Since the very first days of Iranian independence, they fight against this free nation. People of a nation who elected government of Islamic republic are still under attack of the corrupted wills of foreign ideas. We should ask why an independent nation should sustain such assault against its wills?

With clarity, Islam is still stood. And they need more corruption against this green cedar. It gets younger every day and expands.

(1) A Persian proverb (2) Source : Iqan book (the named holy book of 'Baha') / Page 122 / Iqan:Printed in Egypt under Farajollah Zaki consideration. (3) Source Asrar-Al-Athar (Hosseinali Baha) / Page 460 & The Alwah-e-Mobarakeh (Holy pages) series page 45, Printed in Cairo. Year 1338 Hijiri. Saadat Publication(4) Source : Persian Bayan (The named 'holy book' of Bab / Unit 1 / Section 1) / Bayan has two parts in Language : Arabic and Persian . Also 'Hoseein Ali Nouri' or "Baha'a" in the surname the sucessor of 'Ali Muhammed Bab', repeated similar sentences in his book 'Aqdas' , Section 282;

How good are Baha'is!!-An Interesting Analysis

Those who say Baha'is are very good people. I will tell them they are only good for those who accept their ideologies. If you really want to check just argue them regarding various "Baha'i sects". See how they respond. The Baha'is are good due to HEKMAT that is to attract people towards themselves. Not for any other reason.

See this website that describes various divisions of this feel good religion

<http://www.sectsofbahais.com>

The Baha'i community today is losing all its charms that once it had and history is witness that so many innocent Jews, Zoroastrians and some muslims accepted these opportunist mullas (Bab, Baha'u'llah and company) due to their reformist teachings. But the Baha'i administration that has all its foundations on Bogus, fabricated and distortions is bringing this new religion down. More and more people are leaving this "Religion" or enrolling themselves in other Baha'i groups. Such as Unitarian Baha'is that is free from any kind of authoritarian administration.

In Iran, India, Pakistan, Africa, Russia the baha'is are losing their interest in this religion due to the following reasons :

- 1) Almost each and every LSA is dominated by some very influential Persian Baha'is. Who have direct contact with Counselors, ITC and UHJ members. The locals are mostly deprived of getting elected on this body.
- 2) The elections are fabricated and bogus and campaigning is done in spite of prohibition by Baha'u'llah. Many people have come to know that it is Selection and not election. You can just ask Baha'is to show you the figure of those Voting in these selections. If the numbers of believers enrolled in SRP is 150 the voters are 5 to 7. Doesn't this show that the Baha'is does not have interest? I request the Baha'is here to please show us the figures of Voting Baha'is. How many Baha'is actually vote in the National Conventions? Show us the figure? Let us see the actual number of Baha'is.
- 3) Due to less interest the LSAs are decreasing day by day. Baha'is please show us a Chart of LSAs of countries having Big Bahai Population such as India.
- 4) Many Baha'is are involved in crimes, sexual scandals, financial scandals and document forgery. You can see on my blog with proper evidences.
- 5) There is too much concentration on those rubbish Ruhi Books. The Haifa Baha'is are thinking that due to Ruhi Institute many people are enrolling for membership. But the fact is contrary to it.
- 6) Due to involvement in politics. Officially one of the belief of Baha'is is non-involvement in politics. But their actions are exactly opposite. The interpretation of this tenant is done by UHJ as per its own wish. The Baha'is have full fledged relations with politicians, Human Rights organizations and big colonialist countries. And they serve the interest of these powers.
- 7) The Baha'is proselytize all the people except the Jews. Baha'u'llah did not allow the Baha'is to teach in Israel for unknown reasons.
- 8) Baha'is take full advantage of women when it comes to serving at Temples and other committees. But the women are not allowed to become the members of UHJ, the supreme, all male, infallible body. The reason they say is Baha'u'llah prohibited this for unknown reasons.
- 9) The Baha'is for propagating their religion go against the laws of lands. They are trying to convert the children, youth and elders of different religions with deception. In India some Baha'is were arrested when they were teaching their religions deceptively in a village in the name of moral education. In Shiraz also this happened. In Uzbekistan also this type of incident has happened.
- 10) The practice of taking the Administrative Rights (Shunning) is a very dirty practice.

Financial Scandal Rocks Italian Baha'i Community

Ceccherini allegedly stole the money over the lengthy period of time that he served at the highest levels of the Baha'i community in Italy. It appears that he embezzled funds from 1992 until 2006 by fraudulently producing invoices, letters and documents and then pocketing the funds he received for them. Throughout the more than 14 years that Ceccherini served in the institutions, he alternated between high level positions: sometimes he served as the General Secretary of the NSA of Italy, while other times he served as the Head of the Office of the Secretariat – which included several other individuals employed by the NSA. And at times Ceccherini served as both General Secretary and as Head of the Office of the Secretariat.

Through the uninterrupted access granted to him by these positions, Ceccherini was able to allegedly perpetrate this scheme for almost 15 years. It is still a mystery how the Treasurer could not detect such a large and prolonged fraud. Nor is it known what, if any, control measures were circumvented by Italian NSA euros3.pngCeccherini. As it stands now, neither the Treasurer, any of the other NSA members nor any employees of the NSA have been charged.

The scheme began to unravel when the Italian equivalent of the IRS contacted the NSA of Italy and filed a charge of tax evasion against it. Through the ensuing audit and investigations it came to light that all these years Ceccherini had been pocketing the funds that should have been going to the INPS and the INAIL (state pension and worker's compensation/insurance plans).

My suspicion is that since most continental European Baha'i communities (France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, etc.) do not have the privilege of incorporation enjoyed elsewhere, the actual banking was in the name of an individual. And my guess is that individual was Ceccherini; because of his tenure within the Baha'i community or simply because he was trusted. After all, when you are unincorporated, you must trust an individual to administer the finances in their name. There is no other option. If my suspicions are correct it explains why the Treasurer or other person were not caught up in the fraud and how one person alone could perpetrate it.

Consequences of this tragedy are many. For one, the NSA of Italy has been thrown into total chaos. It has had to deal with an extensive internal investigation and financial audit. There is a serious financial blow to the community as funds which should have been paid to the government for more than a decade now need to be paid in lump sum. Thankfully the government has agreed that the NSA as an institution was not perpetrating the fraud and agreed to dismiss 90,000 Euros in interest and fines they had levied. Which means that the NSA has to pay back 275,000 Euros. The House of Justice has loaned the Italian NSA 200,000 Euros to buffer the blow to their annual budget. This loan will have to be repaid to the House in installments over time but the NSA will still have to make a lump sum payment of 75,000 Euros. A significant chunk of change for a community the size of Italy.

Other consequences are more intangible. The spouse of Ceccherini, also a prominent Baha'i was removed from her position as an Auxiliary Board Member (Propagation). The news has left the Italian community shell-shocked since Ceccherini was seen as a pillar of the community. On top of this, several projects such as the office of public information have had to be closed or curtailed sharply due to lack of funds.

No matter how extensively one creates control measures, nor how draconian in nature, they can be circumvented by another person. Ultimately, nothing short of personal transformation can prevent such criminal acts. As Baha'u'llah says in the Hidden Words:

“Busy not thyself with this world, for with fire We test the gold and with gold We test Our servants.”

But this does not mean that there aren't lessons to be learned from such a sad state of affairs. Nor that common sense should not be used. What we have in the institutions of the Baha'i Faith basically relies on the good character of those within it. If they falter, then there are no measures to protect the community. This has to change.

We have no transparency, no control measures, no accountability and no term limits. Combine these and you have a potentially explosive situation. Add the spark of human shortcoming and you have a bomb that can devastate whole communities and lay waste to decades of painstaking growth and development.

TRANSPARENCY The Baha'i community has gradients of financial transparency. At the local level, things are quite clear with regular reports by the local treasurer and detailed reports of budgets and expenses. At the national level, things get decidedly more murky. Less detail is divulged: only income and expenses are shared (not assets and liabilities), while the delegates to the national convention are the only ones who get to see and look at the full accounts – but they can't share them with their communities and they have a very tight schedule with limited time to look over them. At the international level, the picture gets pitch dark with absolutely no information divulged except for the estimates of large scale projects (recent examples are for the Arc and the Chile temple). Beyond that, trying to pry financial information at this level is like trying to shuck an oyster with jello.

Financial reporting is most detailed and most transparent at the local level, where ironically the least amount of money is involved. The Italian incident involving 360,000 Euros may seem like a lot of money but it is a rounding error in international budgets. This culture of opacity and secrecy is fertile ground for the nastier attributes of human nature and must be blotted out from the Baha'i community.

CONTROL MEASURES If due to an inability to incorporate, the affairs of a whole community have to be placed in the hands of a person, a simple control measure is to open a shared or joint account. This way two people must be aware of and make authorization for any transactions. Second, I for one am still not convinced how the Italian national treasurer can not be at least found to be culpable of gross negligence in this case. Pleading ignorance is no defense for them. If anything they should be fully investigated and asked to resign, if for nothing more than their incompetence in recognizing and preventing such a long lived scheme. Similarly simple and easy control measures are left unimplemented in Baha'i institutions. Blame incompetence, ignorance or a childish innocence. Whatever the reason, it is plain stupid to not have them.

ACCOUNTABILITY My fellow Baha'is usually bristle at that word since we believe that the institutions are not to be held accountable to their community. But this only extends to decisions. I'm speaking of management. An NSA should be held accountable to its community for mismanagement, as this case clearly illustrates. If you are incompetent, you have to answer to the community. Period. The principle of non-accountability is not a free pass for negligence and idiocy.

TERM LIMITS This is a much broader concept than I can do justice to here but put plainly it means that individuals have a limit to the number of years they serve in Baha'i institutions. In almost all Baha'i communities, large and small, we find that a small group of individuals dominate the elected and appointed institutions year in and year out. This has sadly become the norm. The consequence is that these individuals start to create little fiefdoms and get quite comfortable. Even getting a sense of entitlement. Can anyone doubt that Franco Ciccherini could have perpetrated such a massive (both in length and in quantity) fraud had we had term limits which limited his access to the highest levels of administration? There are many, many other benefits to term limits beyond the prevention of fraud and crime within the administration. I will explore this topic in more detail at a later time and hope to do justice to it.

It is my hope that the Baha'i community in Italy will learn from this tragedy, rebuild, move on and continue to grow. And that Baha'is elsewhere will use this opportunity to avoid similar painful learning experiences by beginning to consult on how to increase transparency and accountability with the institutions; how to implement common sense control measures and how term limits can benefit the community.

Courtesy : <http://bahairants.com/financial-scandal-rocks-italian-bahai-community-209.html>

Interesting Debate between Ex- Bahai and Haifan Bahais on Youtube

Payam Mashreghi 4 months ago

HAHAHAHAHA!!! YOU WASTED ALL YOUR TIME DOING THIS!?!?! PLEASE DUDE!!

DEFINITION OF BAHAI : THOSE WHO BELIEVE IN BAHÁ'ULLAH AND ABDUL BAHÁ AS HIS DECEDENT, THEN SHARIF US-SAYID MUHAMMAD ALI EFFENDI AS HIS AND UHJ AS HIS... THESE OTHER SECTS MAY EXIST BUT THEY AREN'T CONSIDERED BAHAI YEAH OTHER THAN THESE ONES THEY ARE COVENANT BREAKERS AKA NOT A BAHAI.. WHATS WITH THIS STORY, STOP READING CRAP FROM THE INTERNET DUDE!

P.S. IF U DIDN'T APPROVE THIS COMMENT OF MINE, MSG ME. I WANT TO TALK TO YOU ABOUT IT. · Bahatism

Bahatism 4 months ago

Thank you for your concern for me and my time. You are so good. The UHJ without a guardian as its chairperson is FAKE and BOUGS. It has no authority. Show me from the writings of Hossein Ali and Abbas Effendi where they clearly say that the UHJ will not have a guardian. Let's see... if you have a clear proof. Read this article it is very important for you :

“Who Created the sects in Bahai Faith?” Google it and read it! Then come back here, we will discuss. I have many proofs to prove you wrong. · in reply to Payam Mashreghi Bahatism

Bahatism 4 months ago

And I do not reply to private messages. So write it here or come to my blog and put ur comments there. I do not censor comments.

Bahatism 6 months ago

Thank you Ron. I respect you. You seems to be a very decent person. Normally I interact with Fundamentalist Baha'is, their behavior is really very ugly and unbearable. This is the first time I am encountering a resolved Haifan like you! As you said that you are approaching 70 years, I wish you best for your remaining life. May you be guided towards the right path 'Seratal Mostaqeem'. You are always welcome to my blog. I assure you we can have polite discussion. Best Regards · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahatism

Bahatism 6 months ago

Dear Ron, I thank you for your concerns towards me. I have already left this cult. I am no more interested in this Hypocritical cult. I don't correspond on emails. And I am really not interested in those 50 books of 80000 words. I really hate when any Baha'i speaks of numbers. 80000 words, millions bahais, most widespread religion, I really hate all this. You are most welcome to visit my blog (bahatism*blogspot*com) and write to me there. There is unlimited space and good atmosphere for everyone. · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahatism

Bahatism 6 months ago

Thank you. Ron. · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahatism

Bahatism 6 months ago

I have never heard of any divine religion that is registered under the 'COMPANIES ACT' or NGO in any country, its holy symbols registered as 'TRADEMARKS', Its holy writings COPYRIGHTED. It's prophet's name a 'BRAND NAME'. · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment)

Bahatism

Bahatism 6 months ago

Regarding the Christian Encyclopedia... Again when you want to prove something scholarly, please prove is from the best and most authentic source. I consider official Government Census of every country to be the best and most reliable source, which is not influenced by anything. And if these groups (Other Baha'i Sects) are really very leas and not bothering anybody then why drag them to Courts over alleged misuse of Baha'i

Trademarks? · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 6 months ago

..so the fear makes them away from Questioning the institutions, otherwise I am a witness that there are many baha'is who do not accept the authority of UHJ as it is to be accepted. They do not consider the UHJ to be infallible. They see Mullah'ism in Baha'i cult, Religious Police interfering in private life of Baha'i card carrying members. They are fed-up with the administration but they do not dare to speak due to fear... that is why the number of Opposition Groups is less... · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 6 months ago

Because you talked about numbers, I have to take this issue too. The actual Haifan Baha'is are very less and so the opponents also very less in numbers. The practice of Shunning, Social Boycott and breaking of family ties are very strict punishments. Those born Baha'is fear all this stuff. Mr. Hosein Ali Nari said : Whatsoever hath led the children of men 2 shun 1 another, & hath caused dissensions & divisions amongst them, hath, through d revelation of these words, been nullified & abolished. · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 6 months ago

So, Sir, For you Wikipedia is more reliable than the Government Census?! See this bahaicensusindia*blogspot*com (change asterisk to dot). · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 6 months ago

Again your number of 100 thousand is a joke. Where are 100 Thousand Baha'is please prove with credible evidences. Preferably Government documents. For your information please see this : bahaicensusindia*blogspot*com (change asterisk to dot). · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 6 months ago

...Baha'is, they are all Hindus. They still believes in their Gods. Their are some Sikhs and they too wear their turbans and call them Baha'is. I visited Golistans in India's major cities and I saw a very few graves with dates some 10 years old some 20 years old and a few 1 or 2 years old. Where r believers of Baha'u'llah? They r not even in Golistans!. They are only in the SRPs. 100s new addresses are entered every month but 1000s have already left by then. You guys claim 2.2 million in India. · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 6 months ago

You are right Ron. It gives publicity to everyone. I am an Ex-Baha'i and I have traveled to many parts of the world and visited many Baha'i communities when I was active. What I noticed was there were 'NO BAHAI'S' in the world. When I say No Baha'is, it means a very few Baha'is. scattered here and there. I visited Wilmette Temple and there was no one there. Not even a single visitor. I was alone with my friend. The country where there r some Baha'is is India. But u know they are not actually.... · in reply to Ron Price (Show the comment) MrSIKREV1 .

MrSIKREV1 . 7 months ago

are the baha'is liars that want too take over the world?

· Bahaism

Bahaism 11 months ago

And It is Haifan UHJ that has deviated majority of Baha'is according to other denominations. Have you ever bothered to read their literature? I have read it and how logical it is!!!! It is this deviated haifan UHJ that has put prohibition on the Baha'is to read their literature. The so called proponents of "Independent Investigation of Truth"!!!! · in reply to dannyOdr (Show the comment) Bahaism iranians know that. If you are a Western Baha'i then you are being fooled by these people. In fact they are exploiting your simplicity and extracting you money and using your energy for their political gains. Where is the "complete translation" of the book BAYAN? Why it is not available? If you read it fully, you will understand why muslims hate this evil cult. · in reply to dannyOdr (Show the comment)

Bahaism 11 months ago

Anis Ettehadulhagh

Anis Ettehadulhagh 1 year ago

There is only one God, one Baha'i Faith, (from Bab to Universal House of Justice) and one human race. Ya Baha'u'llah-Abha!

· in playlist Many Peoples Is Best Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

There is only one God = TRUE

One Baha'i Faith = FALSE

One Human Race = TRUE

· in reply to Anis Ettehadulhagh (Show the comment) DivineFellowship

DivineFellowship 1 year ago

BahaiFace●com · OneWorldBore

OneWorldBore 1 year ago

I like the Reform Baha'is and the Aqdas Baha'is the best. · TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

okay do not answer to personal messages and i'm not a extremist Baha'i you moron I'm a Atheist who sees rationality in the Baha'i faith, you should approve the quote of the holy koran that i let you as comment, it seems that the only think you know how to do is pick and choose, as for me, i will stop bother myself discussing something with a person like you, I hope Baha'u'llah and your "God" had mercy upon you. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I will not call you a moron. May be you are taught to use this kind of words in your Ruhi Book 8 with those who do not agree with your views. And I don't want do discuss Koran here. If you want to discuss Koran and its Verses please go to some Islamic Forum and have an open discussion. What I am repeatedly trying to say you is to come to my blog and have a discussion on Baha'i faith. You choose a topic and discuss that particular issue. Please. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

This is what you wrote to me in your personal message : "let's go to a Baha'i forum that is had not being created by you, there I will challenge the stupidities written in your blog and you can challenge my faith with what in the writings is call "poison" XD"

My response :

I told you not to send any personal messages, I don't respond to it. But this is something I would like to respond to. I and my friends have posted many times on such Forums that... · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

... are controlled by Baha'is, but they delete our posts and Ban us. They even make a lobby against us when we are on Christian forums or any other forums. If you are really sincere in having a good debate then please come to a platform that is neither controlled by me or my friends or the BIC. You can come to – talk.religion.bahai – usenet group which is a neutral platform and have a debate. Let's see your sincerity. & why are u afraid to comment on my Blog? · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) dannyOdr

dannyOdr 11 months ago

I agree with @TheNinjaMetalero rather that looking at very small statements within the baha'i writings take all the writings and they situation in which they were written into consideration. Also these people that claim to be the leaders of the true "Baha'i" religion clearly don't understand the teachings either, there is only one baha'i faith and thats it. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 11 months ago

My dear you don't have access to original writings of Bab and Baha'u'llah. Do you access to the manuscripts of Bab and Bahauallah. How many writings of these two have been published by the UHJ? When was the first official translation of Kitab-i-Aqdas was completed? Aftwer how many years? Why not other books been translated? Why not the original manuscripts being published? The persians and the arabs can easily read the handwritings. Actually these writings are full of rubbish. The arabs and..... · in reply to dannyOdr (Show the comment)

Anis Ettehadulhagh 1 year ago

There is only one God, one Baha'i Faith, (from Bab to Universal House of Justice) and one human race. Ya Baha'u'llah-Abha!

· in playlist Many Peoples Is Best Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

There is only one God = TRUE

One Baha'i Faith = FALSE

One Human Race = TRUE

· in reply to Anis Ettehadulhagh (Show the comment) DivineFellowship

DivineFellowship 1 year ago

BahaiFace●com · OneWorldBore

OneWorldBore 1 year ago

I like the Reform Baha'is and the Aqdas Baha'is the best. · Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I do not reply to personal messages. And if you can take it down, show me. Lets see. The BIA is trying to do this from a long time. But no success. And I have complete backup of my blog. If in any case you guys gained success then I will Restore this backup to atleast 100 places, you see. Thank you. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

okay do not answer to personal messages and i'm not a extremist Baha'i you moron I'm a Atheist who sees rationality in the Baha'i faith, you should approve the quote of the holy koran that i let you as comment, it seems that the only think you know how to do is pick and choose, as for me, i will stop bother myself discussing something with a person like you, I hope Baha'u'llah and your "God" had mercy upon you. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I will not call you a moron. May be you are taught to use this kind of words in your Ruhi Book 8 with those who do not agree with your views. And I don't want do discuss Koran here. If you want to discuss Koran and its Verses please go to some Islamic Forum and have an open discussion. What I am repeatedly trying to say you is to come to my blog and have a discussion on Baha'i faith. You choose a topic and discuss that particular issue. Please. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

This is what you wrote to me in your personal message : "let's go to a Baha'i forum that is had not being created by you, there I will challenge the stupidities written in your blog and you can challenge my faith with what in the writings is call "poison" XD"

My response :

I told you not to send any personal messages, I don't respond to it. But this is something I would like to respond to. I and my friends have posted many times on such Forums that... · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

... are controlled by Baha'is, but they delete our posts and Ban us. They even make a lobby against us when we are on Christian forums or any other forums. If you are really sincere in having a good debate then please come to a platform that is neither controlled by me or my friends or the BIC. You can come to – talk.religion.bahai – usenet group which is a neutral platform and have a debate. Let's see your sincerity. & why are u afraid to comment on my Blog? · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) dannyOdr

dannyOdr 11 months ago

I agree with @TheNinjaMetalero rather that looking at very small statements within the baha'i writings take all the writings and they situation in which they were written into consideration. Also these people that claim to be the leaders of the true "Baha'i" religion clearly don't understand the teachings either, there is only one baha'i faith and thats it. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment)

Bahaism 1 year ago

This is what you wrote to me in your personal message : "let's go to a Baha'i forum that is had not being created by you, there I will challenge the stupidities written in your blog and you can challenge my faith with what in the writings is call "poison" XD"

My response :

I told you not to send any personal messages, I don't respond to it. But this is something I would like to respond to. I and my friends have posted many times on such Forums that... · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

... are controlled by Baha'is, but they delete our posts and Ban us. They even make a lobby against us when we are on Christian forums or any other forums. If you are really sincere in having a good debate then please come to a platform that is neither controlled by me or my friends or the BIC. You can come to – talk.religion.bahai – usenet group which is a neutral platform and have a debate. Let's see your sincerity. & why are u afraid to comment on my Blog? · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

@TheNinjaMetalero

This is called as Extremism. You are an extremist Haifan Baha'i.

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

what i'm going to do with your blog is take it down if you keep insisting, that nonsense is that, Nonsense. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

"Surely for those who have disbelieved, it is all the same whether you warn them or you warn them not: they would not believe. Allah has set a seal on their hearts and on their hearing, and on their eyes there is a covering; and for them there lies a mighty punishment." [2:6-7] so my friend, suffer with your own seal, i'll pray for you to understand the spiritual reality of the Baha'i faith and I hope you can forget the material stupidity of your "Opinions" · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

This is for you :

Bahá'u'lláh, in all the Tablets and Epistles, forbade the true and firm friends from associating and meeting the violators of the Covenant of His Holiness, the Báb, saying that no one should go near them because their breath is like the poison of the snake that kills instantly.

(Bahá'í World Faith, p. 430) · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Read this also bahaism.blogspot.com/2009/12/hypocrisy.html · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

And you see I never ever delete any comment. You are most welcome to comment on my blogs. Let us understand each other but please on the blog. Select any post and start your discussion. Thank you. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

who are you to judge whether you are a baha'i or not, The koran say's it clearly, the true believers are only known for God and also Baha'u'llah comes and tells the same, those who submit their will to God and his revelations are the true muslims, the true Baha'is, not those who submit themselves to arrogant humans like you or the followers of you idiotic play. this is getting tired, I just going to quote the koran and i'll leave you in your misery ^^ · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Here comes you, the true face of Baha'ism 'idiotic' and 'misery'. You call yourself good crop but this are not the signs of a good 'card carrying' member of the Baha'i International Inc. Network Marketing Company. I requested you to come to my blog and have a debate. But if you want to run from Youtube, its your wish. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

I had never call myself good crop i'm as bad as anyone, the different is that investigate and try to understand the good things unlike you who just rejects it and never try to understand. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Please come to my blog to discuss further. I have presented all that I found in Bahaism. You can also visit my 'scribd' page to download more Bahai related stuff, If you really like the investigation. Humbly yours · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I again request you to come to my blog and post your comment on my blog under any post that you feel is not proper or would like to debate on that particular post. I am ready to clarify you. All my views and why I hate your cult is posted there and I think youtube is not the right platform to debate because of its limitations. Please come on my blog. Thank you. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment)

Bahaism 1 year ago

I am sorry but the he (Mr. Baha) could not change his followers how can he change others. Read the stories of corruption, scandals, Election Scams, Huququallah Scams, Sexual Scams, Hypocrisy, Racism, Shundamentalism, Divorce and supremacy in your community. Go to my blog and read all the posts. There are more than 200 posts all accompanied with proofs. Thank you. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero mm okay, let me ask you, when you have field of crops, and 1% of then is rotten because they are weak, because they didn't accepted the nutrients from the fertilizer(the writings and God), and they die, but you have this 99% of good and healthy crops, which one would you eat, the stupid, weak, materialistic and rotten crops that didn't accept the truth and just regretted it or the one's that gave you fruits? then one's that took the good minerals of the fertilizer?. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Bahaism 1 year ago

I beg to disagree about the percentage. The good crop as u call yourself is 1% and 80% crops are fake. There are no crops (Baha'is) these are paper Baha'is or Inactive Baha'is. No Crops at all. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

People makes mistakes, people are disobedience and when you are disobedience you get what you ask for, i myself as baha'i that i'm sometimes i can't help but segregate myself, to criticize, to politicize, but every day I try to change that, and that is through Baha'u'llahs writings, and as you said there are more than 200 post, believe the old world religions including the Babi faith has million more of that. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Even your so called "Manifestation of God" made many serious mistakes. So I don't believe in him. You can comment on my blog please. I will really appreciate if you come there as there are more than around 200 pageviews daily and many people will benefit from our debate. Please comment on my blog. Thank you. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Get this, "It is our nature to make mistakes, we are the only rational animals and yet, we are the only ones who make the same mistake twice while being conscious of it, but if we strive, if we follow the writings, with faith, love and respect we will not fail again.", I recommend you try that and you will find joy, I'm curious to know what moves you to hate the Baha'i faith so much, please, please let me know what were your true selfish and greedy reasons.. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Again, I don't know what the Baha'i faith ever done to you, but if this faith is hypocrite so is all the faith and religions in the world, the difference is that this one, at least treat you with decency and sees you as equal. I do wonder what was so bad that you hate the Baha'i faith so much. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Baha'is and their supreme leaders did never believed in absolute equality. Visit my blog and search the term hypocrisy. You can comment on my blog for a detailed and long debate as Youtube does not permit entering URLs and has 'Word Limits' for comments.

You are welcome to debate with me on my blog, please. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

now the baha'i faith it is indeed a religion, a pretty well organized religion, if you look at it as a cult, well that is your problem, I'm not a Baha'i because I believe in God, or in Baha'u'llah, or in the UHJ, I'm a Baha'i because i identify myself with the principles of this faith, now, you can call me friend, that's good as friend I debate and respect your belief as long as you don't insult me, but don't be hypocrite telling me that you love someone that disagrees with you. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Baha'i faith is still not a religion. I disagree. Please go to my blog and read my entry with the heading "Why Baha'i faith is a Cult". · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment)

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Wheter Baha'u'llah is a messenger or not, I don't care, His writings are powerful enough to change people and just because of that I'll be part of it. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Good if you don't care then Its OK. I don't have problems with Baha'u'llah if he is not the Manifestation of God. There are many people who write and speak good. It is a good thing to read good stuff. But keep your eyes and mind open. Don't let hypocrisy capture your mind. Baha'ism is Hypocrisy 100% · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Again, I don't know what the Baha'i faith ever done to you, but if this faith is hypocrite so is all the faith and religions in the world, the difference is that this one, at least treat you with decency and sees you as equal. I do wonder what was so bad that you hate the Baha'i faith so much. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

that is the blog where i read all the nonsense and stupidity of the "Bayanies" and others sects or cults that automatically call themselves "Baha'is".. is so childish to compare, i'm not a Iranian Baha'i, I'm a Atheist/Agnostic towards the believe if God, but I do recognize the Baha'i Faith a true religion, and the only one that had show me to be rational in this world, my faith(if I have one) is not in the people but in the writings of Baha'u'llah. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

You see my friend, If you are really sincere then I love you. This Blog is not the place where you can read all the critical stuff. Please read the Original Bayani Stuff from their website which is bayanic . com, if you want to read about the sects and want to debate about their beliefs please go to their respected websites and debate. I am convinced about your religion that it is no more than a cult and a really Hypocritical Cult. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

now the baha'i faith it is indeed a religion, a pretty well organized religion, if you look at it as a cult, well that is your problem, I'm not a Baha'i because I believe in God, or in Baha'u'llah, or in the UHJ, I'm a Baha'i because i identify myself with the principles of this faith, now, you can call me friend, that's good as friend I debate and respect your belief as long as you don't insult me, but don't be hypocrite telling me that you love someone that disagrees with you. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Mentaly blind!?? one thing is to just talk all the crap you want and debate if is right or not to believe in the UHJ, and the other is to recognize the good that many Baha'i, according to what the UHJ says have done, people like you are not different from philosophers who the only think they know is as Russell says have two faiths, one they preach and one they practice. you're your self a Baha'i is not because of the UHJ or because of the Guardianship, but Because of Bah'au'llah · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Baha'u'llah for me is a Manifestation of Devil ! OK Mr. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Baha'u'llah for you can't be the Mohammed himself or Moctezuma, or a Djinn, or another crazy dude, but you got recognize what ever he started has change a lot of people, for best of humanity, well you and your kind are the only exception · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I am sorry but the he (Mr. Baha) could not change his followers how can he change others. Read the stories of corruption, scandals, Election Scams, Huququallah Scams, Sexual Scams, Hypocrisy, Racism, Shundamentalism, Divorce and supremacy in your community. Go to my blog and read all the posts. There are more than 200 posts all accompanied with proofs. Thank you. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment)

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Mentaly blind!?? one thing is to just talk all the crap you want and debate if is right or not to believe in the UHJ, and the other is to recognize the good that many Baha'i, according to what the UHJ says have done, people like you are not different from philosophers who the only think they know is as Russell says have two faiths, one they preach and one they practice. you're your self a Baha'i is not because of the UHJ or because of the Guardianship, but Because of Bah'au'llah · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Baha'u'llah for me is a Manifestation of Devil ! OK Mr. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Baha'u'llah for you can't be the Mohammed himself or Moctezuma, or a Djinn, or another crazy dude, but you got recognize what ever he started has change a lot of people, for best of humanity, well you and your kind are the only exception · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

You need to visit this my dear Iranian Baha'i Friend, do visit please bahaism . blogspot . com (remove spaces) · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

that is the blog where i read all the nonsense and stupidity of the "Bayanies" and others sects or cults that automatically call themselves "Baha'is".. is so childish to compare, i'm not a Iranian Baha'i, I'm a Atheist/Agnostic towards the believe if God, but I do recognize the Baha'i Faith a true religion, and the only one that had show me to be rational in this world, my faith(if I have one) is not in the people but in the writings of Baha'u'llah. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

You see my friend, If you are really sincere then I love you. This Blog is not the place where you can read all the critical stuff. Please read the Original Bayani Stuff from their website which is bayanic . com, if you want to read about the sects and want to debate about their beliefs please go to their respected websites and debate. I am convinced about your religion that it is no more than a cult and a really Hypocritical Cult. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

now the baha'i faith it is indeed a religion, a pretty well organized religion, if you look at it as a cult, well that is your problem, I'm not a Baha'i because I believe in God, or in Baha'u'llah, or in the UHJ, I'm a Baha'i because i identify myself with the principles of this faith, now, you can call me friend, that's good as friend I debate and respect your belief as long as you don't insult me, but don't be hypocrite telling me that you love someone that disagrees with you. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Wheter Baha'u'llah is a messenger or not, I don't care, His writings are powerful enough to change people and just because of that I'll be part of it. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Good if you don't care then Its OK. I don't have problems with Baha'u'llah if he is not the Manifestation of God. There are many people who write and speak good. It is a good thing to read good stuff. But keep your eyes and mind open. Don't let hypocrisy capture your mind. Baha'ism is Hypocirsy 100% · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Again, I don't know what the Baha'i faith ever done to you, but if this faith is hypocrite so is all the faith and religions in the world, the difference is that this one, at least treat you with decency and sees you as equal. I do wonder what was so bad that you hate the Baha'i faith so much. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment)

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

that is the blog where i read all the nonsense and stupidity of the "Bayanies" and others sects or cults that automatically call themselves "Baha'is".. is so childish to compare, i'm not a Iranian Baha'i, I'm a Atheist/Agnostic towards the believe if God, but I do recognize the Baha'i Faith a true religion, and the only one that had show me to be rational in this world, my faith(if I have one) is not in the people but in the writings of Baha'u'llah. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

You see my friend, If you are really sincere then I love you. This Blog is not the place where you can read all the critical stuff. Please read the Original Bayani Stuff from their website which is bayanic . com, if you want to read about the sects and want to debate about their beliefs please go to their respected websites and debate. I am convinced about your religion that it is no more than a cult and a really Hypocritical Cult. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

now the baha'i faith it is indeed a religion, a pretty well organized religion, if you look at it as a cult, well that is your problem, I'm not a Baha'i because I believe in God, or in Baha'u'llah, or in the UHJ, I'm a Baha'i because i identify myself with the principles of this faith, now, you can call me friend, that's good as friend I debate and respect your belief as long as you don't insult me, but don't be hypocrite telling me that you love someone that disagrees with you. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Wheter Baha'u'llah is a messenger or not, I don't care, His writings are powerful enough to change people and just because of that I'll be part of it. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Good if you don't care then Its OK. I don't have problems with Baha'u'llah if he is not the Manifestation of God. There are many people who write and speak good. It is a good thing to read good stuff. But keep your eyes and mind open. Don't let hypocrisy capture your mind. Baha'ism is Hypocirsy 100% · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I am not mentally blind like you. You people are spiritually and mentally blind. Just follow those sucking UHJ messages and read those boring childish RUHIs. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Mentaly blind!?? one thing is to just talk all the crap you want and debate if is right or not to believe in the UHJ, and the other is to recognize the good that many Baha'i, according to what the UHJ says have done, people like you are not different from philosophers who the only think they know is as Russell says have two faiths, one they preach and one they practice. you're your self a Baha'i is not because of the UHJ or because of the Guardianship, but Because of Bah'au'llah · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

Baha'u'llah for me is a Manifestation of Devil ! OK Mr. · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Baha'u'llah for you can't be the Mohammed himself or Moctezuma, or a Djinn, or another crazy dude, but you got recognize what ever he started has change a lot of people, for best of humanity, well you and your kind are the only exception · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment)

Bahaism 1 year ago

If you have read then you have not obeyed your Lord Mr. Baha'u'llah. Your older Lord (Mr. Baha) and the Universal House of Lords forbids the reading of CB material and forbids to interact with Bayanis. Mr. Baha considers the Breath of CBs to be poisonous, do you know that? Then why you read CB stuff. I will term the RUHI's to be childish. And there cannot be an evil administration like the Baha'i administration because in 21st Century it does now allow women its membership. Shame on you Haifans · duckotaco 1 year ago

baha'is have locked independent investigation of truth in the basement. No way it's coming back. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

you think independent investigation comes when you read the baha'is writings?, I read philosophy more than i read the Baha'is writings, I read the holy writings of other religions more than the Baha'i writings, not for the sake of just learning but of understanding the Baha'i faith itself, unlike you who closest one eye to the spiritual world and the one true God, your father and creator, I open that eye to understand and to learn about him. · in reply to duckotaco (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

Wow you done Ruhi book 8...!! damn I haven't even finish book 4 and I can see the nonsense that you guys preach XD.. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I have also completed my Book 9 ☐ · in reply to TheNinjaMetalero (Show the comment) TheNinjaMetalero

TheNinjaMetalero 1 year ago

have you learn a lot .. can't to get to that.. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) BookOfFlaws

BookOfFlaws 1 year ago

No need to "twist and turn" the teachings when you can just suppress the "Most Holy Book" for the first 150 years and not let anybody read it! And then, get translators (finally) who filter and soften it. And then abrogate and loophole your way out of most of what's in it. Oh, and you can go around saying "These are the 10 basic principles of the faith" when "equality of men and women" does not exist in the founding scriptures, but praise of martyrdom is all over them. Talk about tiwsting. · in reply to John Pilz (Show the comment) BookOfFlaws

BookOfFlaws 1 year ago

Fascinating! Quite amazing. It seems like the Baha'i Faith is the faith that doesn't work. The Bab appointed Mirza Yayah as successor (who looks like a nicer guy than Be-Ha by the way), and that was a bust. The Baha'is were so busy killing, stabbing, or poisoning Babis who wouldn't accept Be-Ha has divine, the government had fits with that crowd. Be-ha appointed his son, and that was a bust with AB ousting the one appointed. Shoghi Effendi was supposed to have a son, but that was a bust, too. · Bahaism

Bahaism 1 year ago

I totally agree with you. Thank you for your comment. · in reply to BookOfFlaws (Show the comment)

Comment removed

Author withheld · Bahaism

Bahaism 2 years ago

You are mad ! · in reply to UnknowableGod IsAtheism (Show the comment)

John Pilz 2 years ago

It is funny that everyone tries to gather power for themselves in every religion. The Bahá'í Faith, based in the arc of Bahá in Haifa, Israel, is the only one that does not twist and turn the Bahá'í Writings. It is so confusing to read the writings of the "bahai sects." Why do people waste so much time making so much up about conspiracies?

How come the people belonging to "bahai sects" try to act secretive when trying to infiltrate Bahá'í Communities? Bahá'is don't do that to Covenant Breakers. · Bahaism

Bahaism 2 years ago

Firstly it is not funny. It is a serious matter that a fake covenant breaker administrative body comes to power and rules the Baha'i world. Secondly they true writings of Baha'u'llah and Abdol Baha clearly states that the UHJ without a guardian is invalid. You must read the actual, full versions of will and testament of Abdol Baha and the writings of Baha'u'llah where he clearly states that their will be guardians in the future and if Bahai faith does not have guardian then their will · in reply to John Pilz (Show the comment) Bahaism be confusion amongst the Baha'is in the future and the covenant of Baha'u'llah will be destroyed. This happened when Shoghi Effendi was murdered by some persons for the benefit of a certain group. Then a body of 9 members was formed to play with 19% of the savings of Baha'is. This body is totally invalid as per the Baha'i writings. Read the writings of Orthodox Baha'is very simple, what is confusing to you? Tell me I will try to explain you. I don't know if any of the sect is act in. · in reply to John Pilz (Show the comment) Bahaism or openly. Bcoz I am not a Baha'i. There are many centers of Orthodox Baha'is, Unitarian Baha'is, there is one UHJ in Montana, and the Baha'is of Jacques Soghomonian all have valid addresses and they can be contacted. You can also contact Fredrick Glaysher who is the head of Reform Baha'i faith. I don't think there is any secrecy. All the haifans are actually confused by the Ruhi Course, book no. 8. I think you have done that book so you are confused. · in reply to John Pilz (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 2 years ago

Bahaism 2 years ago

Bahaism 2 years ago

And Baha'is do that with other people. You need to study how many of the Azalis were killed during the early days by the followers of Baha'u'llah, the manifestation of GOD?????? · in reply to John Pilz (Show the comment) John Pilz

John Pilz 2 years ago

Bahá'is don't kill other people, otherwise, they are fakes. Being Bahá'í isn't a mere name – it describes an individual who follows the laws sent down by God. Killing is forbidden. The Bahá'is that killed anyone else willingly broke the covenant with God – to follow His laws. Now, because they were forgiven after they asked for it doesn't mean that the Bahá'í Faith is to be blamed for its disobedient followers.

The Azalis and the people who killed the Azalis broke God's laws. · in reply to Bahaism (Show the comment) Chris Cobb

Chris Cobb 2 years ago

We're not worried or threatened just annoyed and offended by the covenant breaker usurpation of the term. Those sects barely exist, they might as well not-they exert no influence and serve no purpose, Orthodox and Reform Baha'is are frankly a joke. The real Baha'i faith continues as a united spiritual body unperterbed by the failed hijacking of covenant breaking userpers like Abdul Baha's malicious brother or the prideful Sam Remy. · Bahaism

Bahaism 2 years ago

– There is nothing to get annoyed. All these sects although very small when compared to the Haifan sect, all believe in Baha'u'llah. They follow his teachings. Then what they must call themselves? Tell me. The followers of Baha'u'llah are called as Baha'i and the followers of Haifa Based UHJ are called as Haifan Baha'i. And you are a Haifan Baha'i.

For your information there is one one UHJ. Visit this website to learn more UHJ .NET · in reply to Chris Cobb (Show the comment) Bahaism

Bahaism 2 years ago

– Dear Haifanated Baha'i friend, just google Orthodox Bahai or BUPC and check yourself if any other types of Bahai exist or not. If there are no other Baha'is (non-Haifan) then why the American NSA so worried about the trademarks of Baha'i faith. Who they have sued in the Chicago courts? · in reply to Chris Cobb (Show the comment)

To read more kindly visit : <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WYnjWvjHfIo>

Baha'i Scandals in India

Courtesy : <http://bahai-scandals.blogspot.com>

Baha'is very often preach of high moral standard, love, peace and unity in their deceptive speeches and classes. These sermons are nothing but to fool the world and gain some well wishers and adherents for the dying Baha'i Faith.

The divorce, elopement extra marital affairs espionage manipulation all are day to day life of every Baha'is. Still they give long sermons of morality and spirituality taking for granted that the world is full of fools.

Writing open letters to political leaders and pressuring the politicians using their charms to speak for Baha'is and Baha'i Faith and then claiming that the Baha'is do not involve themselves in Politics is real politics.

There are number of scandals going on in Baha'i Faith which the Baha'is often talk amongst themselves. These are few examples which Baha'is have shared with us. Others have promised to send more:

In the recently announced the list of ABMs for Maharashtra, It was expected that Mr. Omid will replace Two Persian ABMs Mrs. Mahvash Rohani and Mrs. Marziya Dalal with Two another Persian ABMs Dr. Habibeh Javanmardi and Mrs. Parvaneh Javanmardi.

Now Maharashtra is being controlled by three Persian ABMs Dr. Habibeh Javanmardi Mrs. Javanmardi and Mrs. Afsaneh Motiwala. All in the good books of Mr. Omid. These three ABMs have three things in common, they are all Iranians, all three are ladies and all the three Iranian ABMs are for protection. Means they will safe guard the Faith from the attack of Covenant Breakers and Enemies of the Faith. Although maximum covenant Breakers are in Panchgani. The dissatisfied Persian Baha'is from Baha'i Administration.

The Indian ABMs Mr. Yogesh Garoud, Mr. Parimal Mahato, Mr. Jeewan Pagare and Mr. Avnish Sharma are for propagation of the Faith. They will have to run around, start children moral classes. Organize Study circles. Launch IPG

The surprise omission was of Mr. Dutta Sahu. It is not clear How did he felt out of grace inspite of having a Persian wife. May be Mr. Dutta must have started thinking that if you have a Persian wife you will reach the inner circle of Cunning Persians. A mistake which Mr. Vasudevan Nair, Mr. Jaya Putran, Mr. Ali Merchant made previously. A Persian wife means you should work for the Faith without any remuneration and you will be under surveillance 24 hrs through her. Mrs. Dutta a Persian is very faithful to the Cause and she must have been made an ABM.

The Local Maharastrians who are made ABMs will have short lived happiness and any moment they will be replaced. By appointment of local to the post of ABMs is for the deceiving of the locals. One thing should be very clear of the locals that no Indians are trusted by the Persian Baha'is. This is the confidential Message of Universal House of Justice to the Persian Baha'is of the world. That unless you are 100% sure of a local does not give them any responsible post.

It was 100% expected that Mr. Omid will bring Mrs. Mahvash Rohani and Mrs Marziya Dallal to RBC. So with these two ladies and with Mr Pooya and another member of Javan mardi family and Mr. Zia Ishraqi he will control the RBC of Maharashtra.

It is shame on those Indians sitting on NSA not to object on such gross manipulation and injustice. It is absolutely clear that the RBCs are appointed then why say elected? why have state convention? and why conduct elections? Is this is what the Divine Baha'i elections? Some of these Indian are quite educated but then they have lost all their self respect and dignity.

This way Mr. Omid will controlled both the wings of Maharashtra by Iranians and the local Maharastrians will be asked to run and work for him. So that he can give his achievement reports to UHJ with exaggerated statistics and expect a promotion in his present post of a counselor.

It is also very much visible that Mr. Omid's inclination towards Persians and especially Javanmardi's family. A day will not be far that every member of Javanmardi's family will be on RBC, ABMs and every that committee where Mr. Omid have some say.

It is so humiliating that such a large population of Baha'is in India and the UHJ cannot find just four Indians to this post. We require an Omid from Qatar and Jabbar from Bangladesh to supervise us. These two counselors are expert in manipulation.

It is very surprising that why are the Indians not raising their voices against such humiliation and injustice. Then are we supposed to believe the UHJ is infallible?

With Baha'i regards

The Guardian Problem in Baha'i Faith

1. The station of Guardian was decreed by the Last Will and Testament of Abdul Baha, a document which some have alleged to be a forgery.
2. If the LW&T is not a forgery, then the Guardian's failure to obey his self-described duties are contrary to what a divinely appointed authority would be expected to do.
3. These self-described duties include the critical task of appointing a successor guardian, who would take over after the death or incapacitation of the preceding guardian. The successor was to have been appointed in a manner that would leave no room for doubt as to the validity of the successor's appointment.
4. There is no credible evidence that any successor guardian was ever appointed in such an unambiguous manner, although there were claimants.
5. No provision had ever been made concerning the contingency of a guardian dying without having appointed a successor. Indeed, such a possibility had never even been mentioned by Shoghi. That is why his death intestate led to the crisis it did.
6. The combination of these facts decisively refutes the notion that the Guardianship was ever a divine institution. It also demonstrates that Shoghi himself never believed that it was. He never made any attempt, neither to ensure a clear line of succession, nor to anticipate the lack of a succession.
7. Upon Shoghi's unexpected death, the Hands of the Cause took it upon themselves to resolve the matter by declaring that henceforth, the Baha'i Faith would have no living guardian. But they had no authority to make that declaration. Only the Guardian himself could do that.
8. Shoghi's death created an unresolvable discrepancy, a contradiction, that pits the alleged divine authorship of the station against the physical facts. One cannot have it both ways. For the station to be of divine authorship, there must be a succession of guardians, or absent that, some provision to account for a lack of succession.
9. While the Hands made the best they could of a bad situation, their best was not enough. Nor could it be. It should become apparent that such an irregularity could not be explained in terms of a divinely appointed station. Shoghi had been inexcusably, and inexplicably, derelict in his duties, duties which he himself had repeatedly affirmed in the most emphatic manner.
10. Claimants to the succession of guardianship make such a weak and flimsy case for their divine authority that their claims make no improvement regarding the failure of Shoghi to be clear and unambiguous in the appointment of a successor.
11. Attempts by the UHJ to uphold the actions of the Hands are equally flimsy and unjustifiable. Even their most contorted explanations do not suffice to resolve the contradictions.
12. In all likelihood, the LW&T was a forgery by those who sought power in what they thought would become a powerful world religion. Even if it was not a forgery, it certainly had no divine authorship, as demonstrated by its abject failure to bear the fruit which it had promised.

—Bob

Courtesy : <https://groups.google.com/forum/#!topic/talk.religion.bahai/KJJJe3jj4PI>

GUARDIANSHIP...A MAJOR ISSUE IN BAHAI FAITH

Other than allusions in the writings of Bahá'u'lláh to the importance of the Aghsán, the role of the Guardian was not mentioned until the reading of the Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahá. Shoghi Effendi later expressed to his wife and others that he had no foreknowledge of the existence of the Institution of Guardianship, least of all that he was appointed as Guardian.

`Abdu'l-Bahá warned the Bahá'ís to avoid the problems caused by his half-brother Muhammad `Alí. He stipulated the criteria and form for selecting future Guardians, which was to be clear and unambiguous. His will required that the Guardian appoint his successor "in his own life-time ... that differences may not arise after his [the Guardian's] passing." The appointee was required to be either the first-born son of the Guardian, or one of the Aghsán (literally: Branches; male descendants of Bahá'u'lláh). Finally, `Abdu'l-Bahá left a responsibility to nine Hands of the Cause, elected from all of the Hands, who "whether unanimously or by a majority vote, must give their assent to the choice of the one whom the Guardian of the Cause of God hath chosen as his successor."

The will also vested authority in the Guardian's appointed assistants, known as the Hands of the Cause, giving them the right to "cast out from the congregation of the people of Bahá" anyone they deem in opposition to the Guardian.

A BREAK IN THE LINE OF GUARDIANSHIP

Mason Remey and his successors asserted that a living Guardian is essential for the Bahá'í community, and that the Bahá'í writings required it. The basis of these claims were almost universally rejected by the body of the Bahá'ís, for whom the restoration of scripturally sanctioned leadership of the Universal House of Justice proved more attractive than the dubious claims of Mason Remey.

The House commented that its own authority was not dependent on the presence of a Guardian, and that its legislative functioning was unaffected by the absence of a Guardian. It stated that in its legislation it would be able to turn to the mass of interpretation left by Shoghi Effendi. The Universal House of Justice addressed this issue further early after its election clarifying that “there is nowhere any promise or guarantee that the line of Guardians would endure forever; on the contrary there are clear indications that the line could be broken.

THE ESSENTIALITY OF THE GUARDIANSHIP TO THE WORLD ORDER OF BAHÁ'U'LLÁH

The Guardianship was an innovation of Abdu'l-Baha's and his wife.

Baha'is are in such deep denial that they even deny the words of their own prophet:

The Will of the divine Testator is this: It is incumbent upon the Aghsan, the Afnan and My Kindred to turn, one and all, their faces towards the Most Mighty Branch. Consider that which We have revealed in Our Most Holy Book: 'When the ocean of My presence hath ebbed and the Book of My Revelation is ended, turn your faces toward Him Whom God hath purposed, Who hath branched from this Ancient Root.' The object of this sacred verse is none other except the Most Mighty Branch [Abdu'l-Bahá]. Thus have We graciously revealed unto you Our potent Will, and I am verily the Gracious, the All-Powerful. Verily God hath ordained the station of the Greater Branch [Muhammad Ali] to be beneath that of the Most Great Branch [Abdu'l-Bahá]. He is in truth the Ordainer, the All-Wise. We have chosen 'the Greater' after 'the Most Great', as decreed by Him Who is the All-Knowing, the All-Informed.

(Baha'u'llah, Tablets of Baha'u'llah, p. 221)

It's all there in black and white.

It is sadder than it is funny to see how people can distort reality to fit their own delusions.

The guardianship was an innovation of Abdu'l-Baha's, as well as his wife. An innovation intended to keep temporal and worldly control of the Baha'i faith and associated monies and properties under direct control of their side of Baha'u'llah's extended family.

Baha'u'llah never came up with the concept of the guardianship and in his W&T gave Abdu'l-Baha first, then Muhammad Ali next, control over the covenant.

That money and property interfered with Baha'u'llah's plans as laid out in his own W&T is a testament to human nature, to the human proclivity to become possessive of such worldly luxuries as the mansion of Bahji.

That Shoghi ended up estranging his entire family, his own parents included, all for petty reason: such as a person's refusal to quit a job, a person taking a trip to America without getting Shoghi's prior approval, a person arranging a marriage which Shoghi disapproved of, and the declaration of all other family members who justly refused to disassociate with their unjustly excommunicated fellow family members, shows just how dysfunctional the Baha'i faith and the guardian were at that time. Dysfunctional, psychologically, emotionally as well as spiritually.

This dysfunction continues till this day with clear contradictions in Baha'i teachings being taken as a matter of course.

Larry Rowe

Baha'i Faith-Divorced from the institution of the Guardianship

Divorced from the institution of the Guardianship the World Order of Baha'u'lláh would be mutilated and permanently deprived of that hereditary principle which, as 'Abdu'l-Bahá has written, has been invariably upheld by the Law of God.

The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh, p. 148.

1.The Guardianship still exists functionally. 2.The fact that there was one Guardian should be enough for all time. 3.'Abdu'l-Bahá declared the UHJ to be an infallible institution without mentioning the Guardianship.

The Guardian provided the essential role of official interpreter. Who among the Guardianship-without-a-Guardian performs this service? The answer is, of course, that the UHJ does it, and quite often. Is the UHJ authorized, infallible or not, to legitimize itself by coughing up convenient translations of excerpts in the nick of time and saying, “see, this passage is saying this, that, and the other”?

How does the UHJ propose to put forward official translations of scripture without possessing the title of interpreter? Isn't translation all about interpretation?

It's one thing to suggest that the UHJ can perform its function without a Guardian while the Guardian is coming of age (as it would have had to do had it been elected while Shoghi Effendi was a boy). It's another thing entirely to suggest that the UHJ can do its job unerringly without the slightest hope of ever having an unerring interpreter again.

And to those who propose the job of Guardian was completed by Shoghi Effendi: how could the job be done without a Guardian-endorsed translation of the Most Holy Book, especially when such variations in translation as we have mentioned arise?

The reason why the Guardianship is critical to the Bahá'í Covenant is plain as day: the responsibility of authoritative interpretation rests entirely on the shoulders of the Guardian. 'Abdu'l-Bahá didn't always spell it out for everyone; Shoghi Effendi should not have had to explain it, but I suppose it's a good thing that he did.

As things stand, there is no Guardian, so there is no final judicial authority in the Bahá'í administration. Nor is there an executive. Nonetheless, nature abhors a vacuum, and power will be awarded to those that fill the void, so we have an infallible UHJ with executive and interpretive authority. Who is there to contest with them? There is no separation of powers, no checks and balances, and no dissent.

If one bases one's response to this question on the writings of the Bahá'í Faith previous to the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the answer, I think, would be a qualified yes.

The Guardianship: whose idea was it?

Truth be told, I'm not convinced that Bahá'u'lláh ever had any idea that there would be an institution like the Guardianship. His writings point to the House of Justice (HJ) as a divinely inspired—if not unerring—institution, but he says nothing to even imply the functions of the Guardianship. He doesn't even command his heirs to continue a line of inheritance-based leadership. Rather, he seems to think the HJ would suffice. The credit for conceiving the Guardianship ought to go to his son Abbas Effendi (unless the latter's will and testament was, as some have maintained, a forgery), and Shoghi Effendi ought to get credit for laying out the concept in more detail.

It turned out that the Guardianship was plagued by the same family rivalries that infested the leadership of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Perhaps Bahá'u'lláh was trying to move toward a more republican—if not infallible—system.

This was not the only big change that 'Abdu'l-Bahá ever made in the name of interpretation (monogamy being an obvious example), if indeed it was his idea.

To summarize, putting aside 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Will & Testament and the statements of Shoghi Effendi, one can conclude that the UHJ is indeed to be regarded as divinely inspired, and authoritative except in the domain of worship. However, if we admit those two sources, then we must consider the doubts raised by statements expressing the necessity of having a Guardian to act as interpreter and chair of the UHJ.

Guardianship of the Baha'i Faith Continues

E. S. Yazdani, Fifth Guardian of the Baha'i Faith Interview, November 4, 2020

Lineage of Guardianship in Baha'i Faith

Courtesy : <https://bahaisofvaranasi.blogspot.com/>

Shoghi Effendi was not an immediate descendent of Abdul Baha. He was the child of Abdul Baha's daughter Ziyá'iyih Khánum.

In the W&T, Master has clearly mentioned that the first male descendent of Shoghi Effendi will be the next Guardian. However, if for any reason the first male descendant is not capable of handling the responsibility of Guardianship, it will be the next son. If not that then Shoghi Effendi in his own lifetime will need to appoint a Guardian.

It is nowhere stated that there must be a Will appointing the next Guardian...

Also, it is not possible that Shoghi Effendi will disobey the Master and die without appointing the next Guardian.

Shoghi Effendi did not have any children, thus he established the International Baha'i Council—UHJ in its infancy—during his lifetime and appointed Charles Mason Remey as its president (head).

It should be noted that only the Guardian is permitted to serve as the IBC's president. This serves as the first evidence that Mason Remey was chosen to serve as the second Guardian.

It is also important to remember that, in accordance with the W&T of Master, the UHJ must be looked after and guided by a Living Guardian, who serves as the UHJ's head. In other words, UHJ requires the Guardian as its Head in order to operate.

Another indication that Mason Remey is the Second Guardian is the fact that Master used to refer to Remey as his son in his letters (i.e. spiritual one). Mason Remey, like Shoghi Effendi, was Master's spiritual son rather than his biological son, making him qualified to serve as the second Guardian.

Charles Mason Remey

Charles Mason Remey was among the Hands who signed the unanimous proclamations in 1957, acknowledging that Shoghi Effendi had died without having appointed his successor. He was also among the nine Custodians initially elected to serve in the Holy Land as interim head of the religion.

On 8 April, 1960, Remey made a written announcement that he was the second Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith and explained his "status for life as commander in chief of Bahá'í affairs of the world" in this proclamation which he requested to be read in front of the annual US convention in Wilmette.

He based his claim on his having been appointed President of the first International Bahá'í Council by Shoghi Effendi in 1951. The appointed council represented the first international Bahá'í body. Remey believed that his appointment as the council's president meant that he was the Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith.

Regarding the authority of the Hands of the Cause, Remey wrote in his letter that the Hands "have no authority vested in themselves... save under the direction of the living Guardian of the Faith." He further commanded the Bahá'ís to abandon plans for establishing the Universal House of Justice.

Remey never addressed the requirement that Guardians should be male-descendants of Bahá'u'lláh, of whom Remey was not. His followers later referred to letters and public statements of `Abdu'l-Bahá calling him "my son" as evidence that he had been implicitly adopted but these claims were almost universally rejected by the body of the Bahá'ís.

In response, and after having made many prior efforts to convince Remey to withdraw his claim, the Custodians took action and sent a cablegram to the National Spiritual Assemblies on 26 July, 1960. Two days later the Custodians sent Mason Remey a letter informing him of their unanimous decision to declare him a Covenant-breaker. They cited the Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahá, the unanimous joint resolutions of November 25, 1957, and their authority in carrying out the work of the Guardian as their justification. Anyone who accepted Remey's claim to the Guardianship was also expelled.

Remey maintained his claim to Guardianship, and with a small group of followers went on to establish what came to be known as the Orthodox Bahá'ís Under the Hereditary Guardianship, which later broke into several other divisions based on succession disputes within the groups that followed Remey

Mason Remey's Proclamation to the Baha'is of the World

PROCLAMATION TO THE BAHÁ'IS OF THE WORLD THROUGH THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE BAHÁ'IS (UNITED STATES OF AMERICA ASSEMBLED AT WILMETTE, ILLINOIS RIDVAN 117 BAHÁ'I ERA FROM MASON REMEY

THE SECOND GUARDIAN OF THE BAHÁ'I FAITH

Mr. Charles Wolcott, Washington, D. C. United States of America Ridván 117 BAHÁ'I ERA

BELOVED FRIENDS:

Believers have questioned me as to my status as President of the Bahá'í International Council, appointed by The Beloved Guardian Shoghi Effendi, the First Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith. I take the means of this proclamation, to the coming annual national convention to tell all Bahá'ís exactly what my position and status is in the Faith.

The Bahá'í people the world around know that The Beloved Guardian singled me, Mason Remey, out from amongst all of the Believers upon earth to occupy the position of President of the Bahá'í International Council. This is the only position suggestive of authority that Shoghi Effendi ever bestowed upon anyone, the only special and specific appointment of authority to any man ever made by him.

The Beloved Guardian declared the Bahá'í International Council to be the forerunner of and the first step toward the establishment of The Universal House of Justice, and furthermore, that the Bahá'í International Council was the embryo of The Universal House of Justice which embryo would eventually develop into The Universal House of Justice.

Although all Bahá'ís know that I, Mason Remey, am the President of the Bahá'í International Council by the appointment of The Beloved Guardian Shoghi Effendi, yet many of you may not know me personally. I have been living at Haifa much of the time during these past ten years. My visits to America being in the summers when I have done but little travelling among the Bahá'í communities so personally I may be a stranger to the many recently registered in the Faith. Therefore, I will tell you something about myself.

My forebearers were early American Colonials of New England in the north and Virginia in the south. I was brought up in the Christian Faith as taught by the Episcopal Church. The members of this church, as you know, although always orthodox may be anything from Catholic upon one hand to Protestant on the other. While this church is usually classed as Protestant, its Prayer Book proclaims it to be "The Holy Catholic Apostolic Church." My inheritance was from the Catholic interpretation of Christianity rather than from the Protestant attitude.

To the average American, The Catholic Church usually means Roman Catholic, but there are other Catholic communions. In The Holy Land, that is now my home and has been for these past ten years, the Ministry of Religions of Israel lists eleven different Catholic communions in that country—Roman, Anglican, Russian, Armenian, Greek, Greek Orthodox, Coptic, etc. The Anglican Catholic Persuasion corresponding to the so called High Episcopal Church in America.

With this Catholic background it was the most logical and natural thing in the world for me to accept the Bahá'í message without question as I did when I heard it in 1899-1900 from May Ellis Bolles (later Mrs. Sutherland Maxwell), because the Holy Catholic Apostolic Church teaches the Second Coming of Christ—The Christ to come manifesting as the Lord of Creation—the Prince of Peace—coming to establish "His Kingdom upon Earth as it is in Heaven."

From New England on the north and Virginia on the south, my forebears came into the middlewest where I was born in 1874 at a town on the Mississippi River, two hundred and ten miles from Chicago, not far distant from the geographic center of the United States, this land that our Beloved Guardian has called "The Cradle of the Administration of the Bahá'í Faith." Thus do I introduce myself to those of you who may know me but by name only.

As I travel about through the Bahá'í world, the friends ask me many questions about the life of the believers in Israel, and in particular about the Hands of the Faith in The Holy Land? The Bahá'í people are just curious to know about things transpiring there and of how the problems of the Faith are being handled?

There is some general information that I can give them that is in no way confidential but I am not mentioning anything of a confidential nature to any Bahá'í because as is well known in Bahá'í circles from the first of the conclaves of the Hands the majority of the Hands of the Faith were united in the opinion that absolutely nothing said or done in these conclaves be divulged, disclosed or revealed to any of the Bahá'ís outside of the body of the twenty seven Hands. However, each Hand of the Faith is not only allowed but urged to express herself or himself with perfect freedom within the four walls of the chamber in which the Hands are gathered. It is the duty enjoined upon each of the Hands to express her or his own convictions to the Hands when seated in conclave.*

Note : —* A Conclave, according to the Oxford Dictionary, is "Any meeting for secret consultation."

I, as the President of the International Council was one of those things that every Bahá'í knows but that just never happened to be talked about nor even mentioned in any of the conclaves or in the conferences of the Hands of the Faith; therefore, as this subject was never mentioned, I, having promised the Hands never to divulge any of their discussions, proceedings or decisions, am not breaking faith with them now by explaining to the believers about this subject of my Presidentship of the International Council a subject that was never even mentioned nor brought up for discussion by the Hands of the Faith in any conference that I ever attended or know anything about.

Before going into the subject of my Presidency of the International Council and the stand that I take in the cause and explain in this letter, I would preface my statement by giving in a few words a picture of the set up of things in Haifa under the regime of The Beloved Guardian when all the members of the International Council including the resident Hands lived there and served the Guardian daily. Each of us council members were given instructions by Shoghi Effendi of what he wanted us to do and we reported to him as these various services were underway and completed. The sole authority of all these operations rested in the instructions given to each direct from the Guardian himself, thus as a council, a functioning body, we never undertook any services of any nature whatsoever.

After the appointment of the International Council, many times one of the members would come to me saying, "Mason, you are the President of the Council, get yourself busy, call a meeting, you are the President of the Council, you should take the initiative to organize this body and do something." To which my response was always, "The Guardian of the Faith appointed the Baha'i International Council and He will tell me what I should do and when I should call the Council into action."

The First Guardian of the Faith left this world without giving me any orders or instructions whatsoever regarding the International Council. The Beloved Guardian gave me no authority to do anything about the Universal Council during his lifetime for while He was living He was the Guardian of the Faith and as infallibility then was vested in him and in him only, my position was then only that of I myself holding a potential responsibility. But with the death of Shoghi Effendi, He no longer being the center upon earth of infallibility, I became the acting President of the International Council in my own right as President of this body, thus I came into active command of the council. Therefore I am now but assuming the powers that came to me automatically upon the death of Shoghi Effendi and that have been mine exclusively of all others upon earth since the death of the First Guardian of the Faith.

This is the authority I am now exercising when I refuse to recognize any interference from anyone in the affairs of the International Council. This means from any one at all, person or persons.

The Hands of the Faith can only function as protectors of the Faith when they are serving under the direction following the commands of the infallible Guardian of the Faith. They have no authority vested in themselves as Hands of the Faith to act in their own capacity nor in any other capacity, save under the direction of the living Guardian of the Faith.

The Beloved Guardian chose me to be the President of the Baha'i International Council that is according to his explanation the President of the Embryonic Universal House of Justice. Therefore I am the President of the Embryonic Universal House of Justice. When this August body becomes the Universal House of Justice, if such being during my lifetime, I will then be the President of the First Universal House of Justice of the Baha'i Dispensation.

Therefore, inasmuch as The Beloved Guardian in His Infallibility has thus placed me in command of the Faith to protect and to guard the Faith, I can do nothing but assume my place that he has given me with all of the responsibilities, the perquisites and emoluments that go with this position, therefore by his infallible orders I now alone after him command the cause and guard its integrity.

The delay until now of my calling the attention of the believers to the provisions for the protection and the guarding of the cause, made some years ago by our Beloved Guardian when He appointed me to be the President of the Baha'i International Council, has given the Hands of the Faith and the believers of the Faith ample time to discover for themselves, had that been possible for them to have discovered my unique position in the Faith. But until now no one, other than I has discovered that such authority was vested in me by Our Beloved Guardian. To the moment of my sending out into the Baha'i world of this proclamation, I have taken no one into this confidence < I have stood single and alone in all the world guarding the Faith.

That I was to occupy this August position in The Baha'i Faith that The Beloved Guardian has chosen me to occupy, I have definitely known for the past twelve years more or less, without ever mentioning it to anyone until very recently when privately and in secret, I made this declaration to the Hands of the Faith in the Holy Land. In this proclamation statement to you I am now declaring my position of command in the cause to the Believers here in America, "The Cradle of the Administration of The Baha'i Faith," and through this convention to all the Baha'i World.

In this time of confusion of thought and purpose that so threatens the Baha'i world, now is the propitious moment for me to make the announcement that I do in this writ. I cannot delay any longer. All these plans of the Hands of the Faith for 1963 that are so absorbing and confusing to the people of the Faith must be dropped and stopped immediately. I am the only one who can command this situation so I have arisen to do so for I alone in all this world have been given the authority and the power to accomplish this.

Be it understood. I of myself make no claims for myself. I am but telling and reminding the Hands of the Faith and the Baha'is of all the world of the responsibilities that The Beloved Guardian placed upon me as President of the Baha'i International Council.

It is well known throughout the Baha'i world and accepted by all Baha'is that the protection of the Faith and the propagation of the Faith are special and particular functions of the Hands of the Faith, they working and serving under the direction of the Guardian of the Faith. It is from and through the Guardianship that infallibility is vested and that the Hands of the Faith receive their orders.

The Program for 1960 as announced by the Hands of the Faith in their message to the Baha'i world of November 4, 1959 signed by twenty two of the Hands, as well as the same program announced in their former messages, so flagrantly violate and puts to naught the Will and Testament, the Guardianship, and the Administration of the Faith that the Beloved Guardian so laboriously and painstakingly built up during his long ministry, that I can no longer condone such actions upon the part of the Hands of the Faith.. I have remained silent now for over two years hoping that they would give up this destructive propagandizing but all to no effect so now it is necessary that I call a halt upon their activities.

I now command the Hands of the Faith to stop all of their preparations for 1963 and furthermore I command all believers both as individual Baha'is and as assemblies of Baha'is to immediately cease cooperating with and giving support to this fallacious program for 1963.

I have delayed as long as I dare delay before issuing this command to the Bahá'í world < I, hoping that the Hands of the Faith would see for themselves that the will and testament of Abdu'l-Bahá was being violated and that they would of themselves abandon their stand. I, standing single and alone against the entire Bahá'í world but confirmed and steadfast in my assurance of ultimately saving the cause from this calamity. My assurance is based upon the authority that The Beloved Guardian gave me as President of the Council, the authority enabling me to act and assume command of the Bahá'ís that came to me at His death.

It is meet right and timely that I should make this announcement in this convention of Bahá'ís of America which land the Beloved Guardian called the "Cradle of the Administration." I make this call here and now standing single and alone before you but fully confident of your support and cooperation in all Bahá'í matters for you understand the Administration of the Faith and that I guard it from all violation and harm.

Because the Beloved Guardian called America the Cradle of the Bahá'í Administration, the American Bahá'ís have a very special and particular responsibility to which I am calling them now at this particular time.

I expect the friends in this convention to consider with prayer and with thought this declaration addressed to them, that is a declaration to the entire Bahá'í world. I expect them to accept me without question as their Commander-in-Chief in all Bahá'í matters and to follow me so long as I live for I am the Guardian of the Faith (the Infallible Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith).

The line of the Guardianship of the Bahá'í Faith is unbroken for I have been the Guardian of the Faith since the death of the Beloved Guardian Shoghi Effendi.

* * * * *

At their earliest convenience the National Assembly of the United States should communicate with me so that I can arrange to receive them. Since they are the first amongst the National Assemblies to be called into spiritual action by me their responsibilities are very great for I am calling this American National Assembly first from all other National Assemblies of the world to support me in my command of the Bahá'í Cause.

Dearly Beloved Friends, seated in convention in the land of the Cradle of the Administration of the Faith, this is all that I have to tell you now at this time.

With much love to you. Faithfully In El Abhá, MASON REMEY., GUARDIAN OF THE BAHÁ'Í FAITH

Written by JJ Marangella

Cracks in the Covenant of Baha'u'llah and Baha'i Faith

Bahá'ís present their "Covenant" as something unique to their religion. They present it as an undisputable documented contract of inheritance, a will and testament, that is protected by God so that any violators against it will be rendered impotent by it. The Bahá'í Faith's history is full of fragmentation, and the course the Bahá'í Faith has taken quick surprise turns on a number of occasions.

The act that brought the Bahá'í Faith itself into existence was in defiance of such a covenant. The Báb's successor, was actually Mirza Yahya and Not Bahá'u'lláh. Bahá'ís produced evidence that Bahá'u'lláh was the Báb's intended successor, but did not deny that the Báb appointed Mirza Yahya.

Bahá'u'lláh appointed his eldest son Abdu'l-Bahá as his successor and after him his younger son Mohammed Ali. After the death of Abdu'l-Bahá although Mohammed Ali was alive still many followed, Shoghi effendi the grandson of Abdu'l-Bahá. Not following Mohammed Ali was Covenant Breaking of Bahá'u'lláh's writing.

Later, the third Bahá'í leader, Shoghi Effendi, died childless. Having failed to produce a will, and having failed to leave any clear indication of a successor, Shoghi left the Bahá'í world in a precarious situation. What he did was in apparent violation of the Bahá'í Covenant. The Bahá'ís whose allegiance lies with the heterodox organisation, those loyal to the Universal House of Justice currently seated in Haifa, Israel, maintain that those who are true to the Covenant will be empowered by the Covenant.

Bahá'í history shows us a different picture. At many times, the Bahá'ís who eventually prevailed were nearly vanquished. The Bahá'ís loyal to Universal House of Justice claims that they are a dominant group, but even that domination seems impotent and obscure, lacking the influence to even familiarize the world with the word Bahá'í in this information age.

Bahá'í history is mottled with inheritance disputes. In defense of their Covenant, Bahá'ís regard the darker periods as divine tests, arguing that egos are often tested by opportunities for power.

What Bahá'ís do not acknowledge is the fact that their history is just as fragmented as other religions, with breaks occurring from its first years to the years following the death of Shoghi Effendi.

At present The Bahá'ís are fragmented in following sects.1. People of Bayan or Bayanis2. Essence Of the Baha'i Faith3. Unitarian Baha'is4. Free Baha'is5. Reform Baha'is6. New History Society7. Orthodox Baha'is (followers of Joel B. Marangella)8. Bahá'is Under the Provisions of the Covenant (follower of Neal Chase)9. Baha'is Loyal to the Guardian (followers of Jacques Soghomonian)10. Tarbiyat Baha'is (followers of Rex King et al)

11. Heterodox Bahá'is12. 5 Elders13. Qurratis or Ayanis

Three ways for Shoghi Effendi's followers to interpret Shoghi Effendi's unexpected death

1. Even though Shoghi Effendi appointed no successor, a successor must be found, because even if it is not clear who the legitimate successor is, it is more important for the institution of Guardianship to just continue. This is the position of the Orthodox Baha'is.
2. Shoghi Effendi appointed no successor so the institution of Guardianship must end. But we will go off and create the Universal House of Justice on our own, and give it powers which were previously under the domain of the Guardian (e.g. excommunication). This is the position of Haifan Baha'is.
3. Shoghi Effendi appointed no successor so the institution of Guardianship must end. But the Guardianship and the Universal House of Justice were designed to complement each other – one cannot exist without the other – so the Baha'i Faith must continue with neither a Guardian nor a Universal House of Justice. No one supports this view for some reason.

Shoghi Effendi's writings certainly do not seem to support option (2):

It should be stated, at the very outset, in clear and unambiguous language, that these twin institutions [Guardianship and the UHJ] of the Administrative Order of Bahá'u'lláh should be regarded as divine in origin, essential in their functions and complementary in their aim and purpose. Their common, their fundamental object is to insure the continuity of that divinely-appointed authority which flows from the Source of our Faith, to safeguard the unity of its followers and to maintain the integrity and flexibility of its teachings. Acting in conjunction with each other these two inseparable institutions administer its affairs, coördinate its activities, promote its interests, execute its laws and defend its subsidiary institutions. Severally, each operates within a clearly defined sphere of jurisdiction; each is equipped with its own attendant institutions—instruments designed for the effective discharge of its particular responsibilities and duties. Each exercises, within the limitations imposed upon it, its powers, its authority, its rights and prerogatives. These are neither contradictory, nor detract in the slightest degree from the position which each of these institutions occupies. Far from being incompatible or mutually destructive, they supplement each other's authority and functions, and are permanently and fundamentally united in their aims.

Divorced from the institution of the Guardianship the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh would be mutilated and permanently deprived of that hereditary principle which, as 'Abdu'l-Bahá has written, has been invariably upheld by the Law of God. "In all the Divine Dispensations," He states, in a Tablet addressed to a follower of the Faith in Persia, "the eldest son hath been given extraordinary distinctions. Even the station of prophethood hath been his birthright." Without such an institution the integrity of the Faith would be imperiled, and the stability of the entire fabric would be gravely endangered. Its prestige would suffer, the means required to enable it to take a long, uninterrupted view over a series of generations would be completely lacking, and the necessary guidance to define the sphere of the legislative action of its elected representatives would be totally withdrawn.

Severed from the no less essential institution of the Universal House of Justice this same System of the Will of 'Abdu'l-Bahá would be paralyzed in its action and would be powerless to fill in those gaps which the Author of the Kitáb-i-Aqdas has deliberately left in the body of His legislative and administrative ordinances.

—Shoghi Effendi, World Order of Baha'u'llah

Orthodox Bahai Succession

Mason Remey appointed Joel Marangella as a backup third guardian... Mason wrote, "in case I am prevented from appointing my successor, the President of this council will become the third guardian..."

The Glad Tidings

A BULLETIN OF THE BAHÁ'IS UNDER THE HEREDITARY GUARDIANSHIP

Published and Edited by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States

Vol. V, No. 5

P.O. Box 182, Santa Fe, N.M.

October 1964—TLM - 121 B.E.

HISTORIC APPOINTMENTS

GUARDIAN ANNOUNCES CREATION OF SECOND INTERNATIONAL BAHÁ'Í COUNCIL

The Guardian of the Faith announces to the Bahá'í World his decision to create the Second International Bahá'í Council. This Council will exist in name only until conditions in the Faith require it to function as a Body. All powers vested in the appointed members of this Council are "potential".

President of the Council	Joel B. Marangella
1st Vice President	Monir Derakhshan
2nd Vice President	Nawazish Ali Siyyid
3rd Vice President	John B. Byers
4th Vice President	James Barrett
5th Vice President	Jean Donat
6th Vice President	Bernard Fillon
7th Vice President	Ch. Tajud-Din
8th Vice President	Clarence M. McClymonds

In the event the Guardian should be prevented from appointing his successor to the Guardianship of the Faith, the President of this Council will become the Third Guardian of the Faith. If for any reason the President of the Council cannot assume this position, then the first Vice-President will move into that position and if he should be prevented from assuming the responsibilities of Guardianship then the second Vice-President will move into that position and so on down the line of Vice-Presidents in the order of their appointment by the Guardian.

We are living in the "Latter Days" of the Kingdom of man upon earth. These are uncertain times. Mankind is surrounded by diverse catastrophic happenings . . . none of which can be predicted with precision. Thus, to meet any conditions brought about as a result of any such catastrophe, provisions are being made for a number of "potential" successors to the Guardianship. In this way, the continuation of this divinely inspired Institution will be guaranteed.

The list of appointments as they appear above will remain in effect in their numerical order until further additions or rearrangements may be made by the Guardian.

In the Holy Name of Elí Ahhá, s/ Mason Remey
Mason Remey, Second Guardian
Bahá'í World Faith
21 Sept., 1964 — Florence Italy

Joel Marangella becomes President of the Second International Bahá'í Council and backup 3rd Guardian. . .

Covenant Deepening for Baha'i Faith - Baha'u'llah's Constitution

Baha'i Faith
Covenant Deepening

THE BAHÁ'Í FAITH
UNDER THE GUARDIANSHIP

God's Everlasting Covenant

The membership of both men and women forms an irremovable part of the constitution of the Universal House of Justice

Baha'i Faith
The World-Wide Baha'i Community

Baha'i
Other Native American Islam Christianity
Buddhism
Zoroastrianism

Thereupon the loved ones of the Lord arose, inspired with the greatest confidence and constancy and aided by the power of the Kingdom, by Divine Strength, by heavenly Grace, by the unfailing help and Celestial Bounty, they withstood the enemies of the Covenant in well-nigh three score and ten treatises and supported by conclusive proofs, unmistakable evidences and clear texts from the Holy Writ, they refuted their scrolls of doubt and mischief-kindling leaflets.

HE IS THE GLORY OF GLORIES! This is that which hath descended from the realm of glory, uttered by the tongue of power and might, and revealed unto the Prophets of old. We have taken the inner essence thereof and clothed it in the garment of brevity, as a token of grace unto the righteous, that they may stand faithful unto the Covenant of God, may fulfill in their lives His trust, and in the realm of spirit obtain the gem of Divine virtue.
 (Baha'u'llah: Arabic Hidden Words, page 1)

“[T]he twin institutions of the Administrative Order of Baha’u’llah should be regarded as divine in origin, essential in their functions and complementary in their aim and purpose... SEVERALLY, EACH operates within a clearly defined sphere of jurisdiction... Each exercises, within the limitations imposed upon it, its powers, its authority, its rights and prerogatives. These are neither contradictory, nor detract in the slightest degree from the position which each of these institutions occupies. Far from being incompatible or mutually destructive, they supplement each others’ authority and functions, and are permanently and fundamentally united in their aims.”

The Passing of Joel Bray Marangella- Guardian of Orthodox Baha'i Faith

On behalf of the Orthodox Baha'is, I am writing to let the Baha'i world know of the passing of the third Guardian of the Faith, Joel Bray Marangella, on September 1, 2013.

The fourth Guardian of the Baha'i Faith is Nosrat'u'llah Bahremand.

Jeffrey

Reference : <https://groups.google.com/forum/#!topic/talk.religion.bahai/m4lgXEYqoR8>

<http://orthodoxbahai.com/events/>

Orthodox Baha'is

- Three ways for Shoghi Effendi's followers to interpret Shoghi Effendi's unexpected death
- Cracks in the Covenant of Baha'u'llah and Baha'i Faith
- Mason Remey's Proclamation to the Baha'is of the World
- "Other Baha'i Sects" Population and Popularity Increasing day after day !!
- The Passing of Joel Bray Marangella- Guardian of Orthodox Baha'i Faith
- Heterodox Baha'is Loses Court Cases Against Orthodox Baha'is
- Orthodox Bahai Succession
- Charles Mason Remey

Baha'i rift : Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith

Mainstream group doesn't want the name Baha'i by any other group

Read Complete story reported by : Chicago Tribune <http://www.chicagotribune.com/news/local/chi-bahai-18-may18,0,6239589.story>

New link <http://archives.chicagotribune.com/2009/may/18/local/chi-bahai-18-may18>

Will and Testament of Abdul Baha is Fraudulent

Was Abdul Baha's "Will and Testament". produced to the general public after His death? Or, was it known to have existed before His death?

I don't think Abdul Baha's "Will and Testament" was known to have existed before his death. If it was, then at least the part appointing Shoghi Effendi as "Guardian" was unknown, because even Shoghi himself wrote that he had no idea before Abdul-Baha died that he would be given any position in the faith except possibly the ceremonial convener of the Universal House of Justice.

Bahiyih Khanum played a big role in persuading Bahais to accept the will and its appointment of Shoghi Effendi to Guardianship. In fact, for a couple of years after Abdul-Baha died, Bahiyih was running the faith and seen as its temporary head (at least among those who had rejected Mirza Muhammad Ali). She was the biggest champion of the appointment of Shoghi, and remained highly influential even after he returned to the Holy Land to assume the mantle of Guardianship following his years of vacationing in Switzerland after his nervous breakdown.

If the will was forged, I suppose one would have to consider Bahiyih Khanum as one of the logical suspects for who might have done the forging — as shocking as that thought may be — since she actually was leading the (non-Unitarian) Bahais at the time of Abdul-Baha's death and continued to do so for a long time. She had the power and thus the opportunity.

Eric S.

Abdul Baha regularly attended mosques!!

Abbas Effendi, who adopted the name Abdu'l-Baha ("Slave of Baha"), was the eldest son of Baha'u'llah. His father's will specified that Abdu'l-Baha was to be his successor. However, the will also explicitly states that anyone who claims to be the next Manifestation within the next thousands years is a liar.

This put Abdu'l-Baha in the position of being an infallible representative but without the same kind of divine authority held by his father. He also came into conflict with his younger half-brother Mirza Mohammed Ali, whom Baha'u'llah had named his successor after Abdu'l-Baha. Center of The Covenant:

Abdu'l-Baha took the title "Center of the Covenant," implying that he was link between God and humanity. This was a position many Baha'is felt could only be filled by a Manifestation of God, of which Abdu'l-Baha could not be. Abdu'l-Baha also claimed that only he had the right to interpret his father's writings, and that his interpretations were infallible.

While he did not explicitly claim it, many loyal Baha'is came to view Abdu'l-Baha as an extension of his father, so while he was not a Manifestation of God in his own right he was still generally viewed as a divine being (as all Manifestations are).

Split Between Brothers: Ali took the lead among objectors to Abdu'l-Baha's claims of authority. Many other family members and old and trusted friends of Baha'u'llah also voiced dissent. Abdu'l-Baha's response was to excommunicate them and label them "Violators of the Covenant."

In 1901, the strife between the two feuding sides became so intense that the Ottoman Empire confined the Baha'is once more to Akka, revoking the freedom to travel that they had experienced for many previous years. This continued until 1908, when all political prisoners – of which the Baha'is were included – were freed as part of the Turkish Revolution.

World Travel: Unlike his predecessors, Abdu'l-Baha traveled extensively, including Egypt, Great Britain, France, Germany, Hungary and the United States. These travels were missionary in purpose, exposing greater numbers of people to Baha'i teachings as well as setting an example for them of how Baha'is are expected to conduct themselves.

In 1912, Abdu'l-Baha was present for the dedication of the Baha'i temple in Chicago, one of only seven Baha'i temples in the entire world. The temple would not be finished for more than forty years.

Shaping the Baha'i Faith: Abdu'l-Baha's writings have remained very influential within the Baha'i Faith to the present day. His list of the ten principles of Baha'u'llah is still commonly repeated today as the central goals of the Baha'i Faith despite the fact that several of the principles do not appear in Baha'u'llah's writings at all.

Death and Burial:

Will: Abdu'l-Baha's will effectively cut Ali from the Baha'i succession, contrary to the explicit decree of Baha'u'llah. Instead, he established the position of Guardian, and the first was to be his grandson Shoghi Effendi.

Reference: <http://altreligion.about.com>

The Secret activities of Abdul Baha

“One of the followers of ‘Abbas Efendi named Mirza Mansur, who is now in India, was therefore commanded by his master to proceed at once to Jedda and there conspire with the Hajji above mentioned for the destruction of Mirza Yahya. At that time the said Hajji was also at ‘Akka, But whether the plot was concocted there or at Jedda I am unable to say. To be brief, one night Mirza Mansur succeeded in administering to Mirza Yahya a poison which killed him at once. The subtlety of this plot lay in the perpetration of this horrid deed in such a city as Jedda 1.

“Before the conspiracy had accomplished its purpose, Abbas Efendi had written from ‘Akka to one of his friends informing him that some such calamity would befall Mirza Yahya and that he would be punished, Hajji Mirza Hasan of Khurasan published in Cairo a pamphlet concerning this even and the ‘Great miracle’ wrought herein by ‘Abbas Efendi. It is unnecessary to send you this lengthy pamphlet, our object being merely to make known to you the character of these peoples’ intrigues. You must employ every needful precaution, for, should they be unsuccessful or disappointed in inducing you to return to their party, they will endeavor by every means and without scruple’ to injure you. Concerning what befell Mirza Yahya we have heard from certain persons who were at Jedda at the time that as he had no heirs, and as his father-in-law, the said Hajji was of ‘Abbas Efendi’s party and was also Persian Vice-Consul at Jedda, no one appeared to demand an enquiry into the causes of his death.

I therefore entreat you carefully to avoid taking from the hands of these people any food, drink, or other thing, although we know that the Lord (Glory be to Him) is the protector and Sustainer, and will without doubt protect His ends and shelter those who love Him, especially him who displayed the greatest energy, and has fought so faithfully in preaching to the people the Manifestation of His Most Great Name al-Abha.

“Mirza Abu’l-Fazl [of Gulpayagan] and Hajji Mirza Hasan [of Khurasan] and the others, while they were here recently, did not visit any of the Unitarians, neither the Blessed branches (Aghsan)² nor the others. They neither wrote nor spoke to them concerning the differences of faith, and some of them used even to avert their faces from them if they happened to pass each other in the street.”

1. Where the crime would easily pass unnoticed as, in fact, was the case 2.i.e. ‘Abbas Efendi’s three younger half-brothers, Muhammad Ali, Badi’ullah and Ziya’ullah.

Infallibility and Scientific Knowledge of Abdul Baha!!

`Abdu'l-Bahá must have kept in touch with the popular accounts of science in his time, at least occasionally. For instance, he was aware of Maxwell's aether hypothesis:

—Bahá'í World Faith; Tablet to August Forel

—Some Answered Questions, pg. 190

. The only reason that Maxwell ever invoked the concept was so that electromagnetic radiation would not propagate in a void. Why did he need an ether? Because he needed a mechanistic medium for electromagnetic radiation to propagate through. Einstein rejected this mechanistic thinking because (1) it was superfluous and scientifically useless, and (2) it contradicted the principle of relativity and the experimental evidence thereof.

The ether was not the only example of `Abdu'l-Bahá's outmoded mechanistic thinking. Here's another:

– Paris Talks

Not long after the discovery of radiation, Einstein described that any matter can be transformed into energy.

– Albert Einstein

After several Nobel Prizes had been awarded for these breakthroughs, `Abdu'l-Bahá was still thinking in terms of the science of the previous century.

Bahá'is respond in different ways to this problem. Some say that `Abdu'l-Bahá was not infallible regarding matters of science, and claim that he never claimed to be. These Bahá'is fail to recognize the obvious.

– Shoghi Effendi, Arohanui (1946)

I can't quite see what a special "intuitive knowledge" would have to do with knowing whether Socrates visited Israel and learned about God from rabbis. That's not intuition, but something nearer to omniscience.

Notwithstanding this "official" pronouncement of his infallibility, there is an unofficial account of `Abdu'l-Bahá denying such infallibility.

Some hope that Einstein and modern physics are somehow mistaken, and hence follow every pseudo scientist that claims to have evidence thereof. Some Bahá'is claim that `Abdu'l-Bahá was speaking metaphorically, but fail to present a metaphor.

Truth Behind Will and Testament of Abdul Baha

At the time of the passing of Sir Abbas Effendi in 1921, the only members of the Baha's family, unaffected by Sir Abbas Effendi's clutches, and were in good book were Sir Abbas Effendi's full sister Sultan or Bahiyya Khanum, surnamed the supreme leaf (Waraqa-i-Uliyya), Sir Abbas Effendi's wife lady Munira, Sir Abbas Effendi's four daughters, Sir Effendi's four sons-in-law.

It was in such circumstance that after the death of Sir Abbas Effendi, his will came to public in which Shoghi Effendi was inducted into office as Guardian of the cause under the terms of Sir Abbas Effendi's will and testament, for which no probate was taken out. Apparently an irregularity which set people wondering whether THE WILL AND TESTAMENT IS REAL...? During his life span Sir Abbas Effendi had never declared him as his successor, since as per the Will and Testament of Baha'u'llah, Mohammed Ali Effendi was supposed to take the chair of guardianship after Sir Abbas Effendi.

Pleading inability to enter upon the duties of his office forthwith to recover from the shock caused by appointment as guardian, Shoghi Effendi withdrew his hand from the things, retired into solitude for a number of years, and left the actual handling of the Bahai affair in the hands of the elderly members of the Sir Abbas Effendi's family with Baha's daughter the supreme leaf as a titular head, who served as a mere rubber-stamp, master minded by Sir Abbas Effendi's wife lady Munira.

On the one hand, the Father, Baha'u'llah designates Muhammad Ali as "the Branch derived from the ancient stock, He whom God has chosen, the Most Great Branch, God's proof among his creation, and the Sweet Savor of God between the heaven and the earth", on the other hand, the son, Abdul Baha Abbas "the Center of the Covenant, the Most Mighty Branch, the Branch derived from the ancient stock", brands Muhammad Ali as "the Center of sedition, a ferocious lion, a ravening wolf, a blood-thirsty beast, and poisoner of others, a covenant-breaker, a kindler of discord, a shower of malice, a stirrer of sedition, a dishonor of God, and a temperer with the sacred writings".

The question is: Has Baha'u'llah erred in his divine judgment of Muhammad Ali?

Shoghi Effendi came out of his retirement, took over the reins of the Bahai administration, and demanded ready and implicit obedience from the servants of God, in default of which any servant of God was liable to excommunication or summary expulsion from the faith under same pretence and pretext. Shoghi Effendi brooked interference. His decisions were absolute and final and his words authoritative. As the divinely-ordained guardian all the faithful must obey him. Alleged Will and Testament.

Extract from "Is the Baha'i organization enemy of Baha'i religion", By close companion and loyal disciple of Abdul Baha Ms Ruth White. Two months after the death of Abdul Baha his sister sent the following cablegram to this country: January 16, 1922 Haifa, Wilhelmitte, N. Y.

In will, Shoghi Effendi appointed Guardian of the Cause and Head of House of Justice. (Signed) GREATEST Holy Leaf.

A typewritten translation of the alleged will arrived in America four weeks later and was read by Mr. Horace Holley to a gathering of Baha'is.

The appointment of a successor came as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky to all the Baha'is, as Abdul Baha had given no hint that he intended to appoint a successor. On the contrary, he said that after him the power of the Baha'i Cause was to vest in what will be known as Houses of Justice. Among many instances that could be cited is the following, published in the official magazine of the Baha'i organization. (The Star of the West, November 23, 1913, p. 238)

Not only Ruth White but the entire Western nation was in shock by the appointment of Shoghi Effendi, as Will and Testament of Baha'u'llah was known to the faithful that after the demise of Abdul Baha the next successor is Mohammed Ali Effendi the Most Greatest Branch. But for Ms Ruth White it was more shocking because she knew a bit more about Shoghi Effendi, she narrates incident about Shoghi Effendi.

Conversion of Funds for Private Use

Ruth White: The subject converted funds to his own use. The Bahai religion and its Enemy the Bahai Organization by Ruth White, the Tuttle Company, Rutland, Vermont 1929.

Ruth White says: "In the Autumn of 1919 I sent to Abdul Baha [i.e. Sir Abbas Effendi] an American Express Company check of Five hundred dollars and asked him to apply it to some of the many charities he was dispensing.

About four months after we arrived in Haifa as the guests of Abdul Baha. On the day before departure I asked Abdul Baha if he had received the check. Without a moment's hesitation and very emphatically he said that he had not received it. He repeated this a number of times, and seemed indignant that it had not been turned over to him.

I discussed this with various members of the family of Abdul Baha, and one of the brothers-in-law said he would go to town and enquire about the matter. He returned and said there was no record of the check. When I returned to America I asked the American Express Company to look up the receipt of the check I had sent through their office, and on the back of it was the signature of the person who had received the cash. This person was Shoghi Rabbani [i.e. Shoghi Effendi].

I asked the American Express Company to Photostat this check for me, which they did. Herewith it is a reproduction of the check with the signature of Sh. Rabbani on the back. Here then is proof positive that Shoghi Effendi cashed out the check and also proof that the son-in-law [presumably Mirza Muhsin Afrian] who purported to enquire of the check did not do it at all. Otherwise, he would have ascertained in a few minutes from the office of the American Express Company at Haifa that the check had been cashed by Sh. Rabbani, as I had given the son-in-law the whole information, the date of sending, the name of sender, etc. All of which shows that there was collusion between the son-in-law and Shoghi Effendi. Circumstantial evidence also points to the fact that Shoghi Effendi used the money to go to Oxford University.

For immediately after cashing the check he departed for Oxford, this despite the fact that Abdul Baha did not wish him to go. Some may naturally ask: How could Shoghi Effendi have cashed the check unless he had authority to do so. This he may have had. Yet the fact remain that the proceeds were never turned over to Abdul Baha. My readers may, therefore, draw their own conclusions."

An Examination of Will and Testaments of Abdul Baha

After the above incident in mind Ms. Ruth White understood that this will and testament is either completely forged or a part of it is forged she obtain a photocopy of original Will and testament And send for forensic test. The result was as she expected. As per the forensic lab of the report of Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell, the handwriting expert for the British Museum, and editor of THE ANALYST. Readers can find the entire report on http://www.reformbahai.org/CAMitchell_Report.html

Kamar Bahai grand daughter of Baha'u'llah after the hearing the appointment of Shoghi Effendi has raised her voice in many news paper of Akka and Palestine here I bring from her petition few point which she has raised from Page 1-2

Following the death of Abbas Effendi, Shoki Rabbani who was then still young, claimed that he was holding a WILL from his grand-father. on his mother's side, As Abbess Effendi, did not beget any male children. In accordance with this Will, which is counterfeit, Shoki Rabbani was nominated successor. The Behais subsequently split among themselves, of them there were adherents of Mohammed Ali Effendi, the son of BehalUlla who was to be the legal successor to his brother in accordance with his father's Will, while Shoki Rabbani had few Supporters amongst his relatives.

.....Abbas Effendi, whom they believed and trusted could not possibly entertain the Idea of the non-fulfilment of his father's Will It is therefore illogical that Abbes Effendi, should have committed the blunder of Appointing his young grand son as his successor and set aside his experienced brother who bore great suffering and struggled hand in hand with him to advance the movement

Conclusion

Why the Baha'i faithful were shock to read the will and testament of Abdul Baha appointing Shoghi Effendi as Guardian. Ms. Ruth White has mentioned in her book.

1 I also wish to give a few high-lights on Shoghi Effendi, the grandson of Abdul Baha, who is now his alleged successor. He had failed in his college course at the age of twenty-four, and he wished to go to Oxford University, in the autumn of 1919. Despite the objections of Abdul Baha he went. This act demonstrates that Shoghi Effendi had little consideration for the wishes of his grandfather, who was then seventy-four years of age. It also shows that he was lacking in the spiritual attributes which would have enabled him to know that it was of far more value to be with Abdul Baha, both spiritually and mentally, during the last two years of his life, than any amount of academic training could possibly be. 2

Yet Shoghi Effendi chose to be away during the last two years of Abdul Baha's life, and did not return for a full month after he had passed from this world. 3

Another significant fact to which I wish to call attention is this: If Abdul Baha had had any secret intention of appointing Shoghi Effendi as Guardian of the Bahai Cause, it does not seem plausible that he would have excluded him from the entourage that accompanied him on his trip through Europe and America during 1912. Shoghi Effendi at that time was eighteen years of age and spoke and wrote English, Persian and Arabic; yet he was not included in this trip. Even after Abdul Baha returned to Palestine, instead of choosing Shoghi Effendi as his secretary, he chose Ahmad Sohrab, who had accompanied him to Europe and America, and who continued as his secretary for five succeeding years. 4

Why the will and testament of Abdul Baha came to public after two months of his demise. And why Shoghi Effendi took charge of Guardian ship after two years. 5

Who has given authority to Bhaiyyeh Khanum and Lady Munira (grand mother of Shoghi) to manage the affairs of Baha'i community for two years.

It is clear as sunny day that Will and Testament of Abdul Baha was tempered and Madam Munira planted Shoghi Effendi as guardian as she promise her daughter that guardianship will be in her children. And as the will and Testament was fake or tempered the prophecy which is mentioned in forged Will and Testament of Abdul Baha of having guardian ship in Shoghi Efendi's first born son was not fulfilled as Shoghi died Childless and left no Will

Why Universal House of Justice is tide lip for the Lab report of Dr. C. Ainsworth Mitchell and investigation of Loyal Bahai like Ms. Ruth White and Herрман Zimmer and Granddaughter of Baha'u'llah Kamar Beha'i

Physics according to Abdul Baha :In Baha'i Faith the Sun is Fixed!!!

Fixed Sun: (Physics according to Abdu'l-Baha)

“The animal cannot become aware of the fact that the earth is revolving and the sun stationary. Only processes of reasoning can come to this conclusion. The outward eye sees the sun as revolving. It mistakes the stars and the planets as moving about the earth. But reason decides their orbit, knows that the earth is moving and the other worlds fixed, knows that the sun is the solar center and ever occupies the same place, proves that it is the earth which revolves around it. Such conclusions are entirely intellectual, not according to the senses.” (Abdu'l-Baha, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 416)

“The sun stationary”. Sun is not stationary. It is funny that he said “animal cannot become aware of the fact that the earth is revolving and the sun stationary” and he (as a ‘human’) was Wrong and thought that Sun was stationary!

So Abdul-baha believed that Sun is Fixed and Stationary, and other planets orbits this sun. If you show this quote to a Baha'i, because they don't want to say Abdul-Baha was wrong, they would say: “We have to look at the spiritual meaning of that quote and what Abdul-Baha is referring to is NOT the physical sun but the spiritual sun (which usually is God!!!) BUT this notion is Completely wrong!! Because

1. NO where in this quote we see the word “Spiritual”. So we can conclude that he was talking about physical reality and not the “spiritual reality” (If there is such a thing)
2. He talks about earth, planets, and other worlds, so we can be 100% sure that he was referring to the physical sun!
3. If he was talking about the “spiritual worlds”, then why did he not say it directly? That way people could understand him better!!!

Remember! Sun is NEITHER FIXED IN MOTION, NOR IN NUMBERS!

Also, “the sun is the solar center and ever occupies the same place”. Really? The sun is going to be there for ever?! What if a black-hole consumes it?

Abdul Baha was a Racist !!!

As a true seeker of the independent variety, I am sorry to say one of the three Bahai central figures called Abdu'l-Bahá `Abbás did make remarks which would be considered in today's European Union as racist, but are considered divine and sacred by the institutions of the Baha'i Faith.

Tablets of `Abdu'l-Bahá `Abbás Pages 576-580 "O ye beloved of God and maid-servants of the Merciful.
<http://www.ibiblio.org/Bahai/Texts/EN/TAB/TAB-628.html>

"The inhabitants of a country like Africa are all as wandering savages and wild animals; they lack intelligence and knowledge; all are uncivilized; not one civilized and wise man is to be found among them. On the contrary, consider the civilized countries, the inhabitants of which are living in the highest state of culture and ethics, solidarity and inter-dependence; possessing, with few exceptions, acute power of comprehensions and sound mind"

A century ago such remarks would have been the accepted norm amongst white Europeans and less than white Iranians. But calling someone with a dark skin "savage, a wild animal or a Nigger" today, can end you up in jail in the new EU of 26 countries as this report in the Irish Emigrant shows:

"Michael McNulty (40), of Cabra in Dublin, was sentenced to a month in prison for shouting a racist remark at a man from Sierra Leone. McNulty was cycling in the city centre in May when he shouted at Nicholas Jacob, who had been living in Ireland for the past three years, "Hey, you nigger, go home to your own country, you black bastard". Two gardai who were in the vicinity heard the remark and arrested McNulty immediately.
<http://www.emigrant.ie/article.asp?iCategoryID=177&iArticleID=5466>"

There are a number of other cases recently were a Member of Parliament, a sports presenter and a TV show host have all been severely reprimanded for racist remarks to the public, the media, or on TV.

However, in challenging Abdu'l-Bahá's above statement, I have to say Africa is not a country, but a large continent. History also informs us there were civilizations in Egypt, Ethiopia and the Sudan (countries within Africa) long before civilizations appeared in Europe and certain parts of Asia.

In another book titled The Secret of Divine Civilization <http://www.ibiblio.org/Bahai/Texts/EN/SDC/SDC-1.html> author Abdul Baha informs the Persian people of the historical collapse of their own past empire and civilisation. So who is Abdul Baha to judge, that Africa never had previous civilisations who have come and gone long before Dr Livingstone discovered "Dark Africa" for Christ and "The British Empire" in the 1860's <http://homepage.nflworld.com/haywardlad/darkafrika1.html>

Regards Truseeker.

What did Abdul Baha think about Africa and African People ?!

It is interesting that Africa is the only place the Faith is really succeeding in light of ‘Abdu’l-Baha’s extremely disparaging comments about Africa. Even most people who have left the Faith like myself do not seem to really ever comment on the fact ‘Abdu’l-Baha’s comments are really quite shocking.

To his credit he doesn’t attribute the inferiority of Africans he describes to genetics but he really comes across very much of his time, and even those who would spin his comments in the best positive light (viewing them as encouragement to “civilize” the ignorant Africans) seem ignorant as to how advanced much of African civilization was even dating back to prehistory.

Here are some of his comments regarding Africa:

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/TAB/tab-625.html>

One may claim ‘Abdu’l-Baha is merely giving a speculative comment and not his own views when he goes on about not one civilized African existing here, but he attributes these comments to the “republic of wise men” clearly showing he is viewing this comment about Africans acting like wild animals in a positive light. His comments in Some Answered Questions and elsewhere strongly support the view that the view of Africans as wandering savage animals is very much a view he shares and endorses:

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/SAQ/saq-78.html.utf8>

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/SAQ/saq-29.html.utf8>

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PUP/pup-119.html.utf8>

...

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PUP/pup-101.html.utf8>

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PUP/pup-97.html.utf8>

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PUP/pup-105.html.utf8>

<https://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PUP/pup-45.html.utf8>

How do Baha’is reconcile this? Other than the standard religious line of “Beloved Leader knows best, accept his thoughts and shut up or excommunication for you”.

If one respects ‘Abdu’l-Baha as a philosopher then his comments are quite progressive for the time and reflect a big improvement on the view of full eugenicists but by modern standards his comments are very ignorant.

The Baha’i community paints its efforts in Africa as being about empowerment and empowering locals to take charge of their own spiritual development. How is this in any way reconcilable with ‘Abdu’l-Baha’s firm “White Man’s Burden” view that Africans have no morals and must be civilized through education being given to them?

Was Abdul Baha Beloved of God ?

Abdul Baha: Canine teeth are for hard shells such as almonds

Canine Teeth are designed to break Hard Shell

Abdu'l-Baha says :

Abdu'l-Baha claims that the four human canine teeth have been created for the breaking nuts like almonds ! Firstly , breaking nuts using teeth are dentists' (and parents') worst nightmares ! The easiest way to chip one's canines is to try to break open a nut with them.

Secondly ,even if one does want to make the unwise choice of breaking nuts with their teeth, they will go about doing so using their molars , not canines, for the canines are in no way suited for this task.

1. Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Baha'i Reference File, chapter XXIV, no. 1007.

UHJ

- Baha'is are just interested to Convert the People to Baha'i Faith
- Women NOT allowed to serve the UHJ for at least 1,000 years!
- There are two types of UHJ in the Baha'i writings.
- UHJ lied about the meaning of "proselytizing"
- UHJ is interested in having more Martyrs from Iran!
- Baha'is committing adultery would make the UHJ the richest Organization in the World
- A Letter of Protest to UHJ Member by Grand Daughter of Abdul Baha
- The Status of UHJ
- Orthodox Baha'i Faith v/s UHJ
- Why Do Bahais Deny the UHJ Being Clergy?

Sects in Baha'i Faith

- Unpacking Bahá'u'lláh's Mystical Language
- Critics of the Bahá'í Faith: An In-depth Analysis
- Subh-i-Azal Lived Longer than Baha'u'llah
- Different Baha'i Sects fighting amongst themselves over the use of 'name'
- "There is no excommunication from Baha'í" !!?
- Shoghi Effendi contradicts Abdu'l-Baha
- "Other Baha'i Sects" Population and Popularity Increasing day after day !!
- Who Created the sects in Bahai Faith?
- Victory for the different sects of Baha'is
- Download Books on Baha'i sects

Census

- Unpacking the Numbers – Baha’i Census Figures
- Anti Conversion Law and Baha’i Faith in India
- Website of the Baha’is of India – BUPC
- Baha’i Leadership Caught Fraudulently Misstating Facts For Political Purposes
- Rehmatullah Muhajir – Pioneer of Fraud Practices in Baha’i Faith
- Baha’is Exaggeration of their figures Exposed In India Census 2011
- Baha’i Census is a big LIE with wildly exaggerated number of adherents and localities
- UK Census 2011, exposes the false Claims of Bahá’is
- Where are the 7 million Baha’is ??
- How many Bahais are in India?

Guardianship

- Critics of the Bahá'í Faith: An In-depth Analysis
- Lineage of Guardianship in Baha'i Faith
- Guardianship of the Baha'i Faith Continues
- The Guardian Problem in Baha'i Faith
- Baha'i Faith-Divorced from the institution of the Guardianship
- The Guardianship was an innovation of Abdu'l-Baha's and his wife.
- THE ESSENTIALITY OF THE GUARDIANSHIP TO THE WORLD ORDER OF BAHÁ'U'LLÁH
- Baha'i rift : Baha'is upset with Orthodox Baha'i Faith
- A BREAK IN THE LINE OF GUARDIANSHIP
- GUARDIANSHIP...A MAJOR ISSUE IN BAHAI FAITH

Baha'u'llah

- Unpacking Bahá'u'lláh's Mystical Language
- How many People were Killed by Baha'u'llah ?
- Real Picture of Baha'u'llah
- Was Bahauallah really Divine ???!!!!
- Why Bahauallah had three wives ??? \(An open Question to all Baha'is \)
- Bahauallah broke the Babi Rule by marrying 3 wives !!
- Bahauallah said Don't Shave your head, but don't let it grow beyond your ears!
- Who is 'Bahauallah'?? Husayn Ali Nuri OR Yahya Nuri
- Bahauallah: Prophet or God?
- Why Baha'is are not allowed to keep image of Bahauallah??

Real Picture of Baha'u'llah

As a Bahá'í youth, I remember not being impressed with the photographs I had seen of Bahá'u'lláh. Having grown up with charming images of `Abdu'l-Bahá, my expectations were high, and unfair to Bahá'u'lláh.

Portraits of `Abdu'l-Bahá are as common as the Virgin Mary in Bahá'í households, and they have guidelines for posting these portraits in a respectful manner. In spite of this idolatrous practice, Bahá'ís consider themselves special for not displaying portraits of Bahá'u'lláh!

I don't intend to criticize Bahá'u'lláh for his lack of physical charm. There is certainly no absolute need for a Manifestation of God to have a warm, charming appearance, but when I hear Bahá'ís wonder at the attractiveness of `Abdu'l-Bahá, I am moved to ask, why do you place significance on such matters?

I can't help but be skeptical regarding the motives behind the Bahá'í prohibition against portraits of Prophets. Given the Bahá'í affection for graven images, I'm inclined to wonder whether the prohibition would have ever been laid down had Bahá'u'lláh been better looking.

Bahá'ís are told not to keep photos of their Prophets because such photos could too easily become idols; believers would focus on the appearance of their prophet, and be distracted from his message.

Yet, the anticipation of Bahá'ís to view the one Holy Image in the International Archives Building in Israel is only heightened by that prohibition of graven images, and Bahá'ís shudder at the prospect of seeing the image of Bahá where they ought not, as though the image itself has some kind of ominous power!

These are prophecies about Bahauallah?

I was doing some research and came across this site:

<http://bci.org/prophecy-fulfilled/founders.htm> claims that these are prophecies:

Since I was raised Christian I'll deal with the Christian "Prophecies".

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, and the stars will fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven will be shaken; then will appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then all the tribes of the earth will mourn, and they will see the Son of man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory; and he will send out his angels with a loud trumpet call, and they will gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."— Matthew 24.29-31

That was referring to Jesus, the son of man and son of God were just titles for him. I'm not sure if Jesus was God or if Christianity is even true anymore but that's not the point- this was not a prophecies about Bahauallah.

"If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter... he shall teach you all things." — JESUS- John 14

He was talking about the Holy spirit. Whom he gave to his disciples when he allegedly rose from the dead. And if it is a prophecy about someone who came after him what about Muhammad?

"Him that overcometh... I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the... new Jerusalem... and I will write upon him my new name." — JESUS- Revelation 3

Well, Revelation is a book written by a mad man or it was talking about the Roman Empire or maybe Baylon empire using symbols and taken as a prophecy either way, no one sane takes this seriously.

I'm sure Muslims will have the same issues with the so called Islamic prophecies.

Seon

Courtesy: http://groups.google.com/group/talk.religion.bahai/browse_thread/thread/2131e56e744fc700#

Bab and Bahaullah were both false prophets!

So, These former Bahais were either excommunicated, or just left the faith on their own. However, there are still many blind people in the Bahai faith who think that they are right and the majority of the world is wrong. It's just too bad that the Bahais are trying to seek truth with a lie. If the first Jesus was created (which he was) and never walked the earth as a human being, then Bahaullah absolutely can not be the second coming of Christ, but a man suffering from delusions of grandeur. And, because both the Bab and Bahaullah enslaved other human beings, neither is a "perfect reflection of God" but ordinary human beings who have made mistakes in life just like the rest of us. And, God allowed the Bab to be shot up and killed, so that all people would know that the Bab and Bahaullah were both false prophets and were even denied by God Himself. The millenium always changes with the zodiac. The zodiac changes every 2000 years in accordance with their signs in the night sky. So, there can never be any mistake concerning when events will happen. We are about to experience a changing in the Zodiac-better known as "the latter days". I can't stand liars and deceivers, and the exiled Persian Bahais in America and Israel are nothing more than liars and deceivers who can not be trusted!

Bahau'llah's Claims and the Reality

Making a claim is one thing, but backing it up is another matter! Bahau'llah is the founder of the Baha'i Faith. At wikipedia.org site we find that Bahá'u'lláh, the divine founder of the Bahai Faith, has made the following claims:

<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bah%C3%A1%27u%27l%C3%A1h>

Bahau'llah's Claims:

1-Bahá'u'lláh declared that he was the “Promised One” of all religions, fulfilling the messianic prophecies found in world religions.[1]

2-He stated that his claims to being several messiahs converging one person were the symbolic, rather than literal, fulfilment of the messianic and eschatological prophecies found in the literature of the major religions.[1]

3-Bahá'u'lláh's eschatological claims constitute six distinctive messianic identifications: from Judaism, the incarnation of the “Everlasting Father” from the Yuletide prophecy of Isaiah 9:6, the “Lord of Hosts”; from Christianity, the “Spirit of Truth” or Comforter predicted by Jesus in his farewell discourse of John 14-17 and the return of Christ “in the glory of the Father”; from Zoroastrianism, the return of Shah Bahram Varjavand, a Zoroastrian messiah predicted in various late Pahlavi texts; from Shi'a Islam the return of the Third Imam, Imam Husayn; from Sunni Islam, the return of Jesus, Isa; and from Bábism, He whom God shall make manifest.[1]

4-While Bahá'u'lláh did not claim himself to be either the Hindu or Buddhist messiah, he did so in principle through his writings.[1]

5-Later, `Abdu'l-Bahá stated that Bahá'u'lláh was the Kalki avatar, who in the classical Hindu Vaishnavas tradition is the tenth and final avatar (great incarnation) of Vishnu who will come to end The Age of Darkness and Destruction.[1]

6-Bahá'is also believe that Bahá'u'lláh is the fulfilment of the prophecy of appearance of the Maitreya Buddha, who is a future Buddha who will eventually appear on earth, achieve complete enlightenment, and teach the pure Dharma.[45]

7-Bahá'is believe that the prophecy that Maitreya will usher in a new society of tolerance and love has been fulfilled by Bahá'u'lláh's teachings on world peace.[45]

8-Bahá'u'lláh is believed to be a descendant of a long line of kings in Persia through Yazdgerd III, the last monarch of the Sasanian Dynasty;[2] he also asserted to be a descendant of Abraham through his third wife Keturah.[46]

It is easy claiming something, but the test is; can he back it up?

from Judaism, the incarnation of the “Everlasting Father”

Doesn't the “Everlasting Father” means that this divine Father does not die and he is living in Heaven forever? But, Bahau'llah (1817-1892) died at age of 75, like any other human being.

from Christianity, the “Spirit of Truth” or Comforter predicted by Jesus in his farewell discourse of John 14-17 and the return of Christ “in the glory of the Father”

The whole theology of Christianity evolves around the “Original Sin” and “Virgin Mary”. But, Bahau'llah was born to his parents, and he had three wives and a dozen children. This looks Bahau'llah, as the Returning Jesus, entirely has abolished the whole notion of the Christianity! Besides, the First Jesus could not be killed, he resurrected himself and he ascended to Heaven. But Bahau'llah as the Returning Jesus unfortunately had lost this capability and he died and he got buried under six foot earth!

from Shi'a Islam the return of the Third Imam, Imam Husayn.

In Shia Islam, they do not expect the return of the third Imam; Imam Husayn! They expect the return of the twelfth Imam, Imam Mehdi; he is the “Promised One”! Imam Mehdi is supposed to reveal his identity at a designated time, and conquer the whole world and glorify Islam.

It is worth mentioning that Imam Mehdi, the twelfth Imam, was born in 868 AD and according to Shia Islam he was hidden by God at the age of five. He is still alive but his identity is concealed. He is waiting for the time that God has decreed for his return. So, Imam Mehdi has been living over 1100 years, and upon his return he will be victorious over the evildoers. But, Bab (1819 -1850), the initiator of the Bahai Faith, claimed that he was Imam Mehdi, and he got killed by the verdict from the Shia Clergies for heresy. One might ask why the Returning Imam Mehdi (Bab) got killed without fulfilling his mission!?

From the outcome of Bab's life, we can conclude that either Bab was an imposter! Or, the Shiite Faith has a false prophecy! In either case that makes Bab an imposter! Because, when you claim that you are the “Promised One” and you have showed up to complete your mission, then you are obligated to deliver the promised prophecy. Any failure, for any reason, negates the assumed claim.

While Bahá'u'lláh did not claim himself to be either the Hindu or Buddhist messiah, he did so in principle through his writings.

Budda taught people how to live their life without invoking God in his teachings. But Bahau'llah, as the Returning Budda, gave his new instructions to people from his divine state of being! Then, we can conclude that Buddha was wrong ignoring God in his early instructions!

It looks there is no limits for Man's Arrogance! As soon as few people admiring us for our cisma or our talent, we tend to boast our status beyond any known deity! Because this Returning Jesus who is fulfilling the prophecies of all the other religions is far more complete than the Jesus who fulfilled just the Jews prophecies.

Hitler said and I paraphrase it; when you make an unbelievable lie the people tend to believe you! And the reason for that is so simple; they rationalize that this has to be true otherwise nobody dare to make this kind of outrageous lies and get away with it! In this case, Bahauallah claimed to be the embodiment of the Most Revered "Promised One" of all the religions, and Bahais are believing him whole heartily! The amazing part is, that most Bahais are highly educated and very informed people. And I thought no man could be this Gaullible, especially when you can read these kinds of evidences!

What was the scope of Bahaullah's Knowledge?

Bahá'ís put no limits on the knowledge of the Manifestations. Yet Bahá'u'lláh, in one of his holiest books, has admitted to being unable to know a subject without reading it:

Bahá'u'lláh, Kitáb-i-Íqán, pages 184–5

Bab v/s Bahaullah

One of the strange turns in Bahá'í legal history was the reversal of the Báb's progressive consent decree:

Kitáb-i-Aqdas

In making this pronouncement, Bahá'u'lláh returned to parents the final say in the choice of spouses.

Though this seems to be a regressive move to the modern observer, Bahá'ís are compelled to find something progressive in it, and thus take an orthodox stance.

I can say from personal observations that Bahá'u'lláh's consent law is one of the most divisive Bahá'í laws. Because parents are obligated to either approve or disapprove, and not permitted to abstain, they are effectively obligated to meddle.

The Báb made a point of liberating marriage from the power plays of parents. For better or for worse, Bahá'u'lláh reversed a radical move by the Báb, perhaps because he felt the Báb had gone too far.

When Bahá'ís defend such rigid and archaic laws, they sound like Mormons defending polygamy, which is another difficult subject for educated Bahá'ís. The bottom line is that Bahá'u'lláh's laws were traditional Muslim laws, with a few modifications.

Why Baha'is are not allowed to keep image of Bahaullah??

As a Bahá'í youth, I remember not being impressed with the photographs I had seen of Bahá'u'lláh. Having grown up with charming images of `Abdu'l-Bahá, my expectations were high, and unfair to Bahá'u'lláh.

Portraits of `Abdu'l-Bahá are as common as the Virgin Mary in Bahá'í households, and they have guidelines for posting these portraits in a manner. In spite of this idolatrous practice, Bahá'ís consider themselves special for not displaying portraits of Bahá'u'lláh!

I don't intend to criticize Bahá'u'lláh for his lack of physical charm. There is certainly no absolute need for a warm, charming appearance, but when I hear Bahá'ís wonder at the attractiveness of `Abdu'l-Bahá, I am moved to ask,

Bahá'ís are told not to keep photos of their Prophets because such photos could too easily become idols; believers would focus on the appearance of their prophet, and be distracted from his message.

Yet, the anticipation of Bahá'ís to view the one Holy Image in the International Archives Building in Israel is only heightened by that prohibition of and Bahá'ís shudder at the prospect of seeing the image of Bahá where they ought not, as though the image itself has some kind of ominous power!

Written by an Unimpressed Bahai

Bahauallah: Prophet or God?

Extracted from : <http://bahaideceit.blogspot.com/2012/07/lies-of-bahai-cult.html>

The Bahais present the personality of Bahauallah in a uniquely flexible manner. Depending upon the faith of the person who is addressed, Bahauallah could be either a prophet, or the promised messiah, or even God Almighty.

One can understand this logic if it came from the followers of Bahauallah and put it down to their enthusiasm for the Faith or rather their desperation to ensure the growth in their ranks. However, we see that the person in question, Bahauallah, himself appears confused as to his role in this world. At different points in time, Bahauallah made each of these claims. The objective of this article is to primarily highlight this factual element of history. To be honest, the claims of Bahauallah just cannot be put down to something as simple as confusion.

The seemingly logical graduation in the intensity of his claims and his self-induced ascension points to the fact that as he grew in power, and as the number of his followers increased, so did his claims. He was a mentally disturbed individual who simply lusted for power and stopped at nothing to achieve it.

This thirst for power was not limited to Bahauallah only. In fact a large number of Babis, including the brother of Bahauallah also made various claims for themselves.

It is unfortunate that in today's world the common Bahai is unaware of these facts. This article is a sincere attempt to bring out the true personality of Bahauallah. I have brought here irrefutable references to support my article at every stage and I invite reader feedback on the same.

Prior to reading the claims made by Bahauallah, let me remind you that, in his lifetime, the Bab too made numerous claims for himself. I have enumerated these in my article on The Babi Faith: Its Origin and History

1. Initially he claimed to be the 'Bab' (Gate) of Mahdi
2. He claimed to be Mahdi himself
3. He also claimed to be the incarnation of the Prophet Mohammed
- 4.

The followers of the Bab accepted each of these claims as they were issued. Not only this, after witnessing their leader making tall claims for himself without reasonable or sufficient proofs, they began making tall claims for themselves also. Thus a series of claimants rose, among the Babis on a first-come-first-serve basis. Those who made claims earlier than the others could stake their claims to better and lucrative positions whereas the late comers had to be satisfied with what was left. Unfortunately, no two persons staked the same claim.

Here we present some of the claimants and their respective claims.

1. Mulla Husain Bushrui, the first person to accept the Bab called himself 'Bab-ul-Bab' (Gate of the Gate).
2. Haji Mohammed Ali claimed to be the incarnation of Holy Prophet (p.b.u.h).
3. Qurratul Ayn, Tahera Qazvini claimed to be the incarnation of Fatemah, the daughter of the Holy Prophet (p.b.u.h).
4. Bab had predicted the advent of 'Man Yozherohullah' (The One whom God will manifest) in Bayan (Persian), chapter 17. Originally this title was conferred upon Mirza Yahya Nuri 'Subh-e-Azal', the younger brother of Mirza Husain Ali 'Bahauallah. However the first person who staked his claim for this very title was Mirza Asadullah, a staunch Babi. Those who supported Mirza Asadullah in his claims were known as 'Al-Hamdis'. However Mirza could not defend his claim for long. The servants of Bahauallah, and on his very orders ruthlessly murdered him. According to Count Gobisnow, the Babis tied a rope around the neck of Mirza Asadullah's legs, and drowned him in the river Tigris in Iraq. However a more specific version can be found in Episode of the Bab on page 362 which says, "On the orders of Bahauallah, his servant Mirza Mohammed Mazandarani murdered Mirza Asadullah."

It is pertinent to note that later Mirza Yahya staked his claim to this title and ultimately Bahauallah usurped it from him. Today the Bahais address Bahauallah with the title of "Man Yozherohullah", 'The One whom Allah will Manifest'. Our article on this matter will make it clear that Bahauallah was not the one whom Allah will manifest. Similarly many such claims were propounded. The crux of all what we said can be attributed to one simple observation made by Professor E. G. Browne in the foreword to Nuqtatul Qaaf of Mirza Jani. He writes, "Matters had reached to such an extent that any Babi, as soon as he would get up from his sleep, would have a claim for himself to announce to the world."

Bahauallah during the course of his lifetime made several claims for himself. Here is a selection of his claims. I have restricted this selection to those on divinity since this is one facet which the Bahais do not reveal for their followers.

1. It is mentioned in the Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics under the title 'Bab', that the Bahais called Mirza Ali Mohammed Bab as "Rabbi-ul-Ala" (The Most Elevated Lord).
2. Bahauallah mentions in Aqdas, page 43,
3. He again writes in Aqdas, page 144 "Accept whatever is commanded by Baha (himself) the Lord of Eternity."
4. In Aqdas, page 8, Bahauallah says, "We have sent down all the Messengers and we have revealed all the Books."
5. In Istaqaaraat, page 34, Bahauallah writes, "The Master of Eternity lies in prison" (referring to his imprisonment and confinement).
6. In his Tablets, Page 217, Bahauallah writes, "All, save me are created from my command."
7. In his Al-Mubeen, page 34, Bahauallah writes, "All praise is for you O Bahauallah, the Creator of existence."
8. In the same book, page 190, he says,
9. Again in Al-Mubeen, page 297, Bahauallah again refers to himself as, "You Most Beneficent Lord, Bahauallah",
10. In his Tajalliyaat (Tajalli number 4), page 5, Bahauallah decrees, "Most surely I am Allah. There is no God save me. I am the Lord of everything. The O my creatures, you worship me alone."
11. Abdul Baha writes in Badaa'ul-Asaar, page 139, "Bahauallah is unique, incomparable. It is necessary for everyone to turn towards Bahauallah in his prayers."
12. In Maftoon, page 15, Bahauallah writes to his son Abdul Baha, "This is a letter from Allah, the Honored and the Wise (Bahauallah) to Allah the Gracious, the Aware (Abdul Baha)." Thus not only did the father, but even the son claimed divinity for himself

Now here is an important point to note. Bahais do not present the belief of Divinity of Bahauallah before everyone. It is only revealed to those who are firmly entrenched in their traps. Most Bahais till date remain ignorant of these claims. Even the Bahai preachers refuse to openly acknowledge that Bahauallah made claims of divinity. According to them Bahauallah is indeed alterable and they do alter him to suit their whims and fancies. .

.
. .
.

With his claims of divinity, Bahauallah not only attacked the foundations of Islam, but of all religions and beliefs. Surely, when Bahais mean that they seek a universal religion, they mean that we all must accept Bahauallah as God. Or at least that is what Bahauallah wants us to believe. If you are a Bahai, I must ask you one question – Did your superiors disclose these declarations from Bahauallah when you accepted the Faith? More importantly, do you believe that Bahauallah was God? Go ahead, speak to your superiors about these declarations and whether he believes that Bahauallah was a God. As always, I look forward to your honest and objective feedback

Who is “Bahaullah”?? Husayn Ali Nuri OR Yahya Nuri

According to Hajji Mirza Jani Kashani (or whoever was actually responsible for penning the NUQTAT’UL-KAF), Husayn Avaril Ayati, E.G. Browne, Miller and an aside by Fazel Mazandarani in his 3rd volume of the HISTORY OF THE MANIFESTATION OF THE TRUTH, the title “Baha’u’llah” (Splendor or Glory of God) was used not only by the Bab in his works but was also a title of reference to Mirza Yahya Nuri Subh-e Azal in the early Baghdad period.

In the Qayyum al-Asma as well as the Persian Bayan (and elsewhere) the Bab directly refers to Himself on numerous occasions as Baha’u’llah (the Splendour of God) and apart from the honorific Tahirih (the pure), Baha’ was a title he had also bestowed upon Umm Salmih Zarrin Taj Fatimih Baraghani Qurrat’ul-`Ayn prior to the Badasht conference.

According to the NUQTAT’UL-KAF, Jalal Azal, Miller and other non-Baha’i sectarian accounts of the Badasht conference in 1848, it was not the Bab but in fact Tahirih Qurrat’ul-`Ayn who had bestowed the title BAHÁ’ upon Mirza Husayn Ali Nuri, and not one which Mirza Husayn Ali had taken for himself.

Miller, for instance, correctly points out that “...Others may have called him [Mirza Husayn Ali Nuri] by this title [Baha’], but there is no valid evidence that the Bab ever did so [p.119].”

He goes on to point out that “On March 27, 1850, only three months before his death, the Bab, according to the notation of his personal Diary, wrote an epistle to “238”, the brother of the Fruit.”... the Fruit [Thamarih] was Subh-e Azal. The numerical value of the Arabic letters in Husayn Ali is 238. Hence, it seems that when the Bab wrote his epistle to Mirza Husayn Ali, charging him to take the utmost care of Subh-e Azal, he used no title in addressing him, but referred to his younger brother as “The Most Glorious (Abha) Element.” The epistle clearly indicates that it was written by a superior to an inferior [ibid].”

We, now have it from the Bab himself that Mirza Yahya is “Baha’u’llah” and that therefore all references to Baha’ and Baha’u’llah which the Baha’is latter appropriated to refer to Mirza Husayn Ali was in fact understood by the Bab to be first referring to himself than to his successor, Subh-e Azal. I have been told on very reliable authority that in Azal’s first major work as Babi chief, the Kitab-i-Nur (the Book of Light), he in fact does call himself by that title.

In His longer Will and Testament (which Browne did not translate and which I am currently in the process of translating in full) the Bab bestowed all of his rank and authority upon his successor, Subh-e Azal, and states that the rank of Mirza Yahya is co-equal to his own. Therefore, it is not merely the case that Subh-e Azal was being referred also as Waheed Thani (the second unity) because Wahid had been the honorific of Siyyid Yahya Darabi who had just perished in the Babi uprisings, and thus his title “Waheed” had now spiritually ‘transmigrated’ or passed on to Azal. Rather Subh-e Azal was being referred to as Waheed Thani because the First Unity was primarily none other than the Bab himself sitting at the apex of his own religious hierarchy, i.e. himself as the Point (nuqta) with the 18 Letters of the Living which constitute the First collective Unity (waahid) of the First Cycle of All-Things (Kullu Shay’, i.e. 361) of the mystico-religio-political Babi hierarchy. The Bab, as with everything he ever wrote and did, was being consciously deliberate in designations of titles and rank to people. Unfortunately both sectarian Baha’i hagiographies as well as works purporting to be of a scholarly nature have seemingly and very deliberately glossed over these facts and retrospectively elevated the role of Mirza Husayn Ali Nuri even in the early period beginning with the titles “Baha” and “Baha’u’llah.” Perusal of these earliest (non-Baha’i) source texts and the more reliable accounts they provide – accounts which the Baha’is have either systematically tried to suppress or twist the facts in their own favour prove what the actual case was, and that is that the title Baha’u’llah was earlier one belonging to Azal and on which Mirza Husayn Ali later appropriated.

Nima

Bahaullah said Don't Shave your head, but don't let it grow beyond your ears!

“Shave not your heads; God hath adorned them with hair, and in this there are signs from the Lord of creation to those who reflect upon the requirements of nature. He, verily, is the God of strength and wisdom. Notwithstanding, it is not seemly to let the hair pass beyond the limit of the ears. Thus hath it been decreed by Him Who is the Lord of all worlds.”

(Baha'u'llah, The Kitab-i-Aqdas, p. 35)

Prohibitions in Baha'i faith

LOL, This is just funny! I don't have anything to say!

Bahau'llah broke the Babi Rule by marrying 3 wives !!

Baha'ullah had 3 wives and Baha'is still talk about monogamy!

I know you are reading this and telling yourself that Baha'ullah had 3 wives because when he got married he was a Muslim, and Muslims can have 4 wives! But this is wrong!

Baha'ullah married his first wife, Ásíyih Khánum, in 1835. He married his second wife, Fatimih, in 1849. and he married his third wife, Gawhar, in 1862.

When Baha'ullah married his second wife, he was a Babi! He accepted Bab in 1844, so he was not a Muslim anymore!! He was a Babi! And in Babi religion you can only have 2 wives.

When he married his third wife he was not a Muslim but a Babi! so he broke the Babi's rules and married his third wife. Not only that is not monogamy, but he also broke the Babi's rules!

In the Persian Bayan, wahid 8 section 14, the Bab says

"If a man or woman proves incapable of having a child, it is legitimate for the spouse who is not infertile (whichever it may be) to marry again after having obtained the permission of the other party, but not without her permission"

But Bahau'llah had 7 children from his first wife!

Shoghi Effendi wrote:

"Bahá'u'lláh had no concubine, He had three legal wives. As He married them before the "Aqdas" (His book of laws) was revealed, He was only acting according to the laws of Islám, which had not yet been superseded. He made plurality of wives conditional upon justice."

Abdu'l-Bahá interpreted this to mean that

"a man may not have more than one wife at a time, as it is impossible to be just to two or more women in marriage." "...Bahá'u'lláh married the first and second wives while He was still in Tíhrán, and the third wife while He was in Baghdád. At that time, the Laws of the "Aqdas" had not been revealed, and secondly, He was following the Laws of the previous Dispensation and the customs of the people of His own land."

if it is "impossible to be just to two or more women in marriage" as Abdu'l-Baha said, how would this state of affairs be any different before Baha'u'llah wrote the Aqdas?

Baha'u'llah also said

"God hath prescribed matrimony unto you. Beware that ye take not unto yourselves more wives than two." (Baha'u'llah, The Kitab-i-Aqdas, p. 41)

Although in the next sentence he said monogamy is accepted

"Whoso contenteth himself with a single partner from among the maidservants of God, both he and she shall live in tranquillity." (Baha'u'llah, The Kitab-i-Aqdas, p. 41)

Shoghi Effendi said

"He made plurality of wives conditional upon justice."

but first, we must acknowledge that nowhere in the Aqdas is polygamy preconditioned upon justice (or the equal treatment of both wives). This is an addition by Abdu'l-Baha. Perhaps Baha'u'llah told Abdu'l-Baha orally about this, but to my knowledge there is no written document authored by Baha'u'llah laying out this precondition.

Second, according to the Writings of Abdu'l-Baha, he did not say that the precondition of justice can not be met. In fact, He says the opposite:

"Concerning the practice of bigamy, this has been promulgated, and no one must abrogate it. 'Abdu'l-Baha has not abrogated this law. These are false accusations and lies (spread by) the friends. What I have said is that He has made bigamy bound on a precondition. As long as someone does not attain certitude regarding the capability to practice justice and his heart is not at rest that he can practice justice, he should not be intent upon a second marriage. But if he should be sure and attain certitude that he would practice justice on all levels (and conditions), then a second marriage is lawful. Just as has been the case in the Holy Land: the Baha'i friends wished to marry a second wife, accepting this precondition, and this servant [Abdu'l-Baha] never abstained (from giving permission), but insisted that justice should be considered, and justice actually means here self-restraint; but they said, that they will practice justice and wished to marry a second wife. Such false accusations [charges that Abdu'l-Baha prohibited bigamy] are the slanderous whisperings of those who wish to spread doubts and to what degree they already succeed in making matters ambiguous! (Our) purpose was to state that bigamy without justice is not lawful and that justice is very difficult (to achieve)."[Amr wa Khalq, Volume 4, p. 174]

“You asked about polygamy. According to the text of the Divine Book the right of having two wives is lawful and legal. This was never prohibited, but it is legitimate and allowed. You should therefore not be unhappy, but take justice into your consideration so that you may be as just as possible. what has been said was that since justice is very difficult (to achieve), therefore tranquillity (calls for) one wife. But in your case, you should not be unhappy.”[ibid. Volume 4, p. 174]

It is obvious from reading the above that Abdu'l-Baha gives a much more nuanced take on this whole matter. So, according to Abdu'l-Baha if there is justice you can have two wives. According to Abdu'l-Baha, there is a condition and it can be met. He himself gave permission and blessing for polygamous marriages to take place by Baha'is.

Why Bahauallah had three wives ??? (An open Question to all Baha'is)

To justify why Bahā'u'llāh had three wives, Baha'is usually put forth the argument that since Bahā'u'llāh was practicing Islam before he became a Baha'i, he was legally allowed to have three wives. In a letter from the Universal House of Justice dated 23/10/1995 to an individual believer it has been mentioned: “Regarding the wives of Bahā'u'llāh, extracts from letters written on behalf of the beloved Guardian set this subject in context. They indicate that Bahā'u'llāh was “acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded”, and that He was following “the customs of the people of His own land”: “. . . as regards Bahā'u'llāh’s marriage it should be noted that His three marriages were all contracted before He revealed His Book of Laws, and even before His declaration in Baghdād, at a time when Bahā’ī marriage laws had not yet been known, and the Revelation not yet disclosed (25 May 1938 to a National Spiritual Assembly).” “Bahā'u'llāh had no concubine, He had three legal wives. As He married them before the “Aqdas” (His book of laws) was revealed, He was only acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded. He made plurality of wives conditional upon justice; ‘Abdu’l-Bahā interpreted this to mean that a man may not have more than one wife at a time, as it is impossible to be just to two or more women in marriage (11 February 1944 to an individual believer).” . . . Bahā'u'llāh married the first and second wives while He was still in Tihṙān [sic], and the third wife while He was in baghdād. At that time, the Laws of the “Aqdas” had not been revealed, and secondly, He was following the Laws of the previous Dispensation and the customs of the people of His own land (14 January 1953 to an individual believer).” Source: Wives of Bahā'u'llāh

All the above justifications are fundamentally flawed. We already showed the fallacy in ‘Abdu’l-Bahā’s justification. The second justification presented here simply states that since Bahā'u'llāh had married his three wives when he was still a Muslim it was perfectly legal for him to do so. This is a blatant lie: The Bāb announced his new religion in 1844. The exact date that Bahā'u'llāh became a Bābī is unknown but it is definite that it occurred before 1848 when he attended the conference of Badasht—in which Islamic law was officially abrogated and superseded—and he took on the name Bahā. So by 1848 he was definitely a Bābī. Now let us review the years when Bahā'u'llāh married his wives: Bahā'u'llāh married his first wife Āsiyih in 1835 while he was still a Muslim. He married his second wife Fatimih in 1849 when he was no longer a Muslim but a Bābī! What was Shoghi thinking when he had uttered: “He was only acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded.”?

In Shoghi’s translation of Dawn Breakers it has been mentioned that Ṭāhirih, a great advocate of the Bāb had openly preached the Bāb’s ideas, one of which was monogamy:

“She began to correspond with the Bāb and soon espoused all his ideas. She did not content herself with a passive sympathy but confessed openly the faith of her Master. She denounced not only polygamy but the use of the veil and showed her face uncovered in public to the great amazement and scandal of her family and of all the sincere Mussulmans but to the applause of many other fellow citizens who shared her enthusiasm and whose numbers grew as a result of her preaching.” Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl’s Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā’ī Revelation p. 270 (footnote). Other Baha’i authors have also echoed this belief in their writings: “The Bāb’s laws abolished polygamy except in the case of infertility.” Robert H. Stockman, The Baha’i Faith: A Guide For the Perplexed (Bloomsbury Academic, 2012), chap. 6, section on the fortress of Maku.

Bahā'u'llāh was openly practicing bigamy while according to Shoghi it was not legal and Ṭāhirih was actively denouncing it in accordance with the Bāb’s beliefs.

From this point onwards, matters become even more interesting. Bahā'u'llāh married his third wife Gawhar in 1862 when he was still a Bābī and this third marriage too was completely illegal according to what Shoghi claims are Bābī laws.

Source: Twelve Principles: A Comprehensive Investigation on the Baha’i Teachings, pp. 488-489 Download – Twelve Principles: A Comprehensive Investigation on the Baha <https://archive.org/details/TwelvePrinciples>

Was Bahauallah really Divine ???!!!!

Bahā'is claim Bahā'u'llāh's knowledge was divine but he himself admits reading books and acquiring knowledge from them since childhood:

“This oppressed one in his childhood (tufuliyyat) saw the war of the tribe of Qurayza in a book that belonged to (was authored by) Mulla Baqir Majlisi, and has been sad and sorrowful ever-since.” ‘Abd al-Ḥamid Ishraq Khāwari, Ma’idiy-i asimani, vol. 7, p. 136.

He even admits in the Iqan that he needed to read books to refute the claims of his enemies:

“For instance, a certain man, reputed for his learning and attainments, and accounting himself as one of the pre-eminent leaders of his people, hath in his book denounced and vilified all the exponents of true learning. This is made abundantly clear by his explicit statements as well as by his allusions throughout his book. As We had frequently heard about him, We purposed to read some of his works. Although We never felt disposed to peruse other peoples’ writings, yet as some had questioned Us concerning him, We felt it necessary to refer to his books, in order that We might answer Our questioners with knowledge and understanding. His works, in the Arabic tongue, were, however, not available, . . . We sent for the book, and kept it with Us a few days. It was probably referred to twice. The second time, We accidentally came upon the story of the “Mi’rāj” . . . We noticed that he had enumerated some twenty or more sciences, the knowledge of which he considered to be essential for the comprehension of the mystery of the “Mi’rāj”.”

See also Tanbih al-Na’imin where his own sister claims that he was pouring over books of philosophy (hikmat) and mysticism (‘irfan) for years.

<http://bayanic.com/showItem.php?id=tanbih>

Here is a translation from that part (pp. 4-5):

“The Mirzā (meaning Bahā'u'llāh), who was your father, from the beginning of his life to when he came of age—because the means were at hand and because of the gathering of the companions—was engrossed in studying and endeavored in homework (or calligraphy practice). He wouldn’t disengage from learning the rudiments for a moment. After studying the rudiments of Arabic and literature he inclined towards the science of philosophy (hikmat) and mysticism (‘irfān) so that he might benefit from these. It was such that he would spend most of the day and night socializing with high statured philosophers and the gatherings of mystics and Sufis. When it was blown in Seraph’s Trumpet of Appearance (meaning when the Bāb made his claims), he (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) was a man who had seen most of the words and phrases of the mystics and philosophers and had heard and understood most of the signs of the appearance (of the Mahdi) . . . after returning from Badashst and after the Shaykh Ṭabarsī Fort war was over, he was engaged day and night in socializing with great Islamic scholars and followers of mysticism . . .”

(s o u r c e <https://archive.org/download/TwelvePrinciples/Twelve%20Principles%20-%20A%20Comprehensive%20Investigation%20on%20the%20Bahai%20Teachings.pdf> p. 253)

I see no divine knowledge here!

Twelve Principles

A Comprehensive Investigation on the Baha'i Teachings

First Edition

Masoud Basiti, Zahra Moradi, Hossein Akhoondali

Translated by: Hossein Akhoondali, Ali Mansouri

Twelve Principles:

A Comprehensive Investigation on the Baha'i Teachings

Masoud Basiti, Zahra Moradi, Hossein Akhoondali

Translated by: Hossein Akhoondali, Ali Mansouri

Tehran

Bahar Afshan Publications

First Edition

2014

سرشناسه	بسیطی، مسعود، ۱۳۵۴ -
عنوان و نام پدیدآور	Basiti, Masoud Twelve Principles: A Comprehensive Investigation on the Baha'i Teachings/ Masoud Basiti, Zahra Moradi, Hossein Akhoondali; Translated by Hossein Akhoondali, Ali Mansouri.
مشخصات نشر	تهران: بهار افشان، ۱۳۹۳ = ۲۰۱۴ م.
مشخصات ظاهری	۶۰۰ ص.: مصور، جدول، نمونه، عکس؛ ۲۴×۱۷ س.م.
شابک	978-600-6640-15-0
وضعیت فهرست نویسی	فیپا
یادداشت	انگلیسی.
یادداشت	کتابنامه.
آوانویسی عنوان	توالو پرینسیپالز...
موضوع	بهاءالله، حسینعلی بن میرزا بزرگ، ۱۲۳۳ - ۱۳۰۹ ق. -- تعلیم
موضوع	بهایگری
شناسه افزوده	مرادی، زهرا، ۱۳۵۸ -
شناسه افزوده	Moradi, Zahra
شناسه افزوده	آخوند علی، حسین
شناسه افزوده	Akhoondali, Hossein
شناسه افزوده	منصوری، علی، ۱۳۷۰ - مترجم
شناسه افزوده	Mansouri, Ali
رده بندی کنگره	۱۳۹۳ ب۹ب/ب/ BP۳۹۵
رده بندی دیویی	۵۶۴/۲۹۷
شماره کتابشناسی ملی	۳۴۸۳۹۲۰
طراح جلد	عاطفه قنبریان

The following group should not read this book:

Those who do not accept what is right, do not seek the truth, and when they discover a truth, prefer their own prejudices over it.

The following group should read this book:

Those who accept what is right, seek the truth, and when they discover a truth, prefer it over their own assumptions.

To all the open-minded souls that strive for the truth and embrace it wherever it may be

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.....	1
TRANSLATOR’S NOTES.....	2
INTRODUCTION	5
FOREWORD.....	6
PREFACE.....	7
THE PRINCIPLES ATTRIBUTED TO BAHĀ’U’LLĀH	17
THIS BOOK’S APPROACH IN ANALYZING BAHĀ’I PRINCIPLES.....	19
The First Approach: Staying Away From Prejudice	19
The Second Approach: Using Original Baha’i Sources	19
The Third Approach: The Uniformity of the Course of the Research in All Chapters	19
THE THREE PERSPECTIVES USED IN THIS STUDY TO ANALYZE THE BAHĀ’I PRINCIPLES	20
1- Are These Principles Novel?.....	20
2-Did the Baha’i Leaders Act Upon These Principles?.....	20
3-Are These Principles Rational and Logical?	21
CHAPTER 1: THE INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION OF TRUTH, UNFETTERED BY SUPERSTITION OR TRADITION	22
INTRODUCTION	23
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS SEEKING THE TRUTH AND SETTING ASIDE IMITATIONS AN INNOVATION OF BAHA’ISM?.....	26
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: BAHĀ’ISM AND INVESTIGATING THE TRUTH	29
1- How Baha’is View Reason and Knowledge.....	29
2- Investigating the Truth: Only for Non-Baha’is.....	34
3- How the Truth About Baha’ism is Investigated	35
a- Covenant Breakers and Enemies of the Faith.....	36
b- Unofficial Translations, Memoirs, Pilgrims’ Notes, and Unofficial Writings.....	37
c- Baha’i Scripture	38
4- If Investigating the Truth Means You Have to Question the Official Baha’is Stance on a Subject You Will Be Shunned.....	42
5- Distorting Baha’i scripture.....	44
6- Investigating the Truth or Proselytizing to Illiterate Masses That Have No Means of Investigating the Truth	46
7- How Baha’is Investigate the Truth From Childhood	47
8- Investigating the Truth a Crime for Israeli Citizens	48
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?	50

LET US READ AND PONDER.....	54
1. Is the Principle of Investigating the Truth New?	55
2. What Is Bahā'u'llāh's First Principle?	55
3. Are Non-Baha'is Ignorant and without Reason?	56
4. Can the Recognition of God Be Obtained through Intellect?	57
5. Should We Investigate or Accept without Any Questions?	57
6. Investigating the Truth: Only for Non-Baha'is	58
7. Should Baha'is See and Hear or Become Blind and Death?	58

CHAPTER 2: THE ONENESS OF HUMANITY 60

INTRODUCTION.....	61
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE ONENESS OF HUMANITY A NEW PRINCIPLE?	65
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID THE FOUNDERS OF BAHĀ'ISM BELIEVE IN THE ONENESS OF HUMANITY?
.....	69
1- Black Africans are All Like Wild Savages and Land Dwelling Animals:	69
2- `Abdu'l-Bahā's Opinion About Turks	72
3- Bahā'u'llāh's Orders and Sayings About Non-Baha'is and Those Who Denied Him	73
a- Non-Baha'is Are like Dry Trees That Are Only Worthy of Fire	75
b- No Socializing Allowed with Non-Baha'is	76
c- Non-Baha'is Are Not Humans or Lack the Traits of Being Considered as Humans	79
d- Non-Baha'is Are Animals.....	79
e- Bahā'u'llāh Wishes Death on Non-Baha'is	82
g- Non-Baha'is Must Be Tormented	83
h- Non-Baha'is Are Bastards That Will Go to Hell.....	84
i- Non-Baha'is Are the Manifestation of Satan and Hell.....	86
j- Non-Baha'is Have No Knowledge or Reason	87
4- Bahā'u'llāh's Attitude Towards his Brother and His Followers	88
5- Treatment of the Covenant Breakers	91
6- Treatment of Thieves	96
7- Why Have the Baha'is Created a New Calendar?	97
8- Defending All Oppressed People or Only the Baha'is	98
9- Israeli's Deprived of the Great Grace of Becoming Baha'is	99
10- Two Examples of Bahā'u'llāh's Attitude Towards non-Baha'is	100
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?
.....	105
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	107
1. Is the Principle of Oneness of Humanity Novel?	108
2. Are Black Africans Cows or Humans?	108
3. Are Africans All Uncivilized, Wild Savages, and without Common-Sense?..	109
4. Do Turks Deserve Ridiculous Answers?	109

5. Is He a Turk?!	110
7. Good Tree and Bad Tree?	110
8. Socializing with Non-Baha'is!	111
9- Are Non-Baha'is Animals in the Presence of God?	111
10. Non-Baha'is Are Animals	112
11. Non-Baha'is Are Worthless Pebbles and Baha'is Are Precious Jewels	113
12. Does God's Grace Apply to All Humans?	113
13. Accompaniment or Banishment?	114
14. Kindness or Torment?	114
15. Kindness or Beating?	115
16. Should We Utter Rude Words?	115
17. Should Traitors Be given Refuge?	116
18. Should We Be Polite or Rude?	116
19. Should We Be Kind to Wolves?	117
20. Those Who Deny Bahā'u'llāh Are Bastards Who Will Go to Hell	117
21. Must We Be Kind towards Tyrants or Should We Punish Them?	118
22. Kindness towards the Opposition or Enmity?	118
23. How to Deal with the Unaware	118
24. Is Shunning Bad?	119
25. To Wish Death or Not to Wish Death?	120
26. Why Have All of Bahā'u'llāh's Descendants Been Shunned and Excommunicated?	120
27. Oneness of Humanity in the Baha'i Kingdom	121
28. All the Titles given to Non-Baha'is by Baha'i Leaders	121
A SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION OF THE THREE PERSPECTIVES:	123

CHAPTER 3: RELIGION MUST BE THE SOURCE OF UNITY AND FELLOWSHIP IN THE WORLD 124

INTRODUCTION	125
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE PRINCIPLE "RELIGION MUST BE THE SOURCE OF UNITY AND FELLOWSHIP IN THE WORLD" NEW?	127
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID THE FOUNDERS OF BAHĀ'ISM ACT UPON THESE PRINCIPLES?	129
1- Internal Disputes in the Bābī and Baha'i creeds	129
2- Wars During the Bāb's Era	130
3- Conflicts During Bahā'u'llāh's Era	135
4- Clashes After Bahā'u'llāh's Death	137
5- Baha'i Attitude Toward Non-Baha'is	138
6- Bahā'u'llāh and Peace	140
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?	142

LET US READ AND PONDER.....	144
1. Is the Principle "Religion Must Be the Source of Unity and Fellowship in the World" New?	145
2. Is Bābism a Religion?	145
3. Were the Bābī Wars Solely Defensive?	146
4. Is Baha'ism a Religion?	147
5. Is Baha'ism the Cause of Hatred and Having No Religion Is Better than Being a Baha'i?	148
6. Are Other Peoples' Beliefs Any of Our Business?	148
7. Befriending the Enemies or Being like Flame of Fire to Them?	149
8. Kindness or Violence?	149
9. Is Religion a Cause of Fellowship or Fear?	150
A SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION OF THE THREE PERSPECTIVES:	151
CHAPTER 4: RELIGION MUST BE IN CONFORMITY WITH SCIENCE AND REASON.....	152
INTRODUCTION	153
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE PRINCIPLE "RELIGION MUST BE IN CONFORMITY WITH SCIENCE AND REASON" NEW?	157
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID BAHĀ'IS AND THEIR LEADERS ACT UPON THIS PRINCIPLE?	160
1- Baha'ism is the Criterion for the Validity of Reason and Science	160
2- Bāb's Religious Orders That Contradict Reason and Common-Sense	162
a- Destroy Anything and Anyone non-Bābī	163
b- Books, Writings, and Teaching	165
c- Food and Medicine	167
d- Going on Journeys.....	168
e- Some Miscellaneous Laws.....	168
3- Bahā'u'llāh's Statements That Are Against Science and Reason	171
a- The punishment for Arson	171
b- Nuclear Physics or Alchemy?!	173
c- Earth's Age.....	177
d- Aliens.....	178
e- Pythagoras Lived in the days of Solomon!	181
f- Bahā'u'llāh's Opinion About the Book of Bayān	183
g- Baha'u'llah is the Creator of Multiple Gods	186
4- Abdu'l-Bahā's Statements That Are Against Science and Reason	186
a- Spontaneous Generation	188
b- Convex and Concave Mirrors	189
c- Animal Breath.....	189
d- Male and Female.....	190
e- The Reason Humans Have Canine Teeth.....	191
f- Christopher Columbus Discovered America Using His Reason	192
g- The Pupil of the Eye is Black to Attract the Rays of the Sun.....	193

h- Death Occurs After Decomposition.....	195
i- Atoms are Indestructable.....	195
j- All Stars Are Inhabited by Animals That Have Souls and Move	197
k- Blessed Animals Don't Have Patriotic Quarrels	198
l- The Sun is Stationary, Fixed, and Ever Occupies the Same Space	199
m- The Pupil of the Eye is the Source of Light	200
n- Deductive Reasoning.....	200
5-Shoghi's Sayings That Contradict Science or Reason	201
6- The Bāb, Bahā'u'llāh, and 'Abdu'l-Bahā's Religious Knowledge	203
a- The Bāb's Religious Knowledge	203
b- Bahā'u'llāh's Religious Knowledge	211
c- 'Abdu'l-Bahā's Religious Knowledge	235
7- The source of the Bāb, Bahā'u'llāh, and 'Abdu'l-Bahā's Knowledge.....	243
a- The Bāb's Education	244
b- Bahā'u'llāh's Education	248
c- 'Abdu'l-Bahā's Education.....	257
8- Reason Judges That One Must Practice What He Preaches	263
a- Prohibition of Kissing Hands.....	264
b- Where to Bury the Dead	267
c- Noah and the Flood: Symbolical or Reality.....	268
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?
.....	270
The Meaning of Science.....	270
The Meaning of Reason.....	272
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	275
1. Is the Principle "Religion Must Be in Conformity with Science and Reason" New?	276
2. If Religion Contradicts Reason Which One Is Incorrect?	276
3. Is Science Good or Bad?.....	277
4. Is Bābism a True Religion: Books and Teaching.....	277
5. Is Bābism a True Religion: Destroy Anyone and Everything Non-Bābī	278
6. Is Bābism a True Religion: Food and Medicine	279
7. Is Bābism a True Religion: Guidelines for Going on Journeys	279
8. Is Bābism a True Religion: Some Miscellaneous Laws	280
9. Does the Quran Say Everything Is Living?.....	280
10. The Criterion for Being Knowledgeable and Reasonable in the Baha'i Creed?	281
11. Was the Tablet of Wisdom Revealed in Persian?	281
12. Is Shoghi Infallible?.....	282
13. Can Shoghi Fit the Role of Being the Authorized Interpreter of Baha'i Texts?	282
14. Are the Bāb's Words Divine Inspirations?.....	283

15. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Referring to Books.....	283
16. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Historical Facts.....	284
17. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Citing Verses of the Quran	284
18. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Revisions in the Divine Texts	285
19. Bahā'u'llāh and Adhering to the Customs of the Previous People.....	285
20. Bahā'u'llāh and Citing Shia Narrations.....	286
21. `Abdu'l-Bahā and Citing Verses of the Quran	286
22. The Bāb's Education	287
23. Is It in Accordance with Reason to Prohibit Someone from Doing Something in the Past?.....	287
24. Had Bahā'u'llāh Associated with the Learned and the `Ulamā?	287
25. Is Quoting the Words of Others a Sign of Not Having Divine Knowledge? 288
26. Bahā'u'llāh's Childhood: Happiness or Sorrow?	289
27. Kissing the Hand of Ones Murderer.....	289
28. When and Where to Bury the Dead.....	290
29. Does Bahā'u'llāh Intend to Abrogate the Book of Bayān?.....	290
30. Noah's Flood: Symbolic or Reality?.....	291
31. Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā as Scientists	292

CHAPTER 5: THE REMOVAL OF ALL PREJUDICE 300

INTRODUCTION	301
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE NEW?	303
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID THE FOUNDERS OF BAHĀ'ISM REFRAIN FROM PREJUDICE?	305
1- The Bāb.....	305
2- Removal of Prejudice: Only for Non-Bahā'is.....	306
3- Baha'i Attitude Toward Deniers	307
4- Baha'is Have No Prejudice but Non-Baha'is Are Bastards.....	308
5- Baha'is Have No Prejudice but Non-Baha'is Are Animals.....	308
6- Baha'is Are Jewels and Other People Worthless Rocks	309
7- Non-Baha'is Inherit Nothing from Baha'i Parents.....	310
8- Baha'is Have No Prejudice but All Non-Baha'is Are Ignorant and Unreasonable	311
9- Racial prejudice in Baha'i teachings.....	311
10- Sexual Prejudice	312
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?	314
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	318
1. Removing All Prejudice or Prohibition of Meeting with Non-Baha'is	319
2. Having No Prejudice or Considering All Non-Baha'is Ignorant and Unreasonable?	319

3. Removing Prejudice or Claiming Each Baha'i worth More than a Million Non-Baha'is?	320
4. Removing Prejudice or Depriving Non-Baha'is from Their Share of Inheritance?.....	320
5. Removing All Prejudice or Calling Non-Baha'is Animals.....	321
6. Removing All Prejudice or Calling Non-Baha'is Bastards.....	321
7. Removing All Prejudice or Saying Non-Baha'is Are like Dry Wood That Are Only Worthy of Fire?	322
8. Removing Prejudice or Depriving of All Graces, Those Who View Non-Baha'is as Humans?	322
9. Removing Racial Prejudice or Calling All Black Africans Irrational Savages?	323
10. Having No Prejudice or Saying Turks Deserve Ridiculous Answers?	323
11. Having No Prejudice or Praising the Most Prejudice Based Religion to Ever Exist?	324
12. Removing All Prejudice or Discrimination between Men and Women?	324

CHAPTER 6: THE EQUALIZATION OF THE MEANS OF LIVELIHOOD FOR ALL HUMANITY 326

INTRODUCTION	327
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE EQUALIZATION OF THE MEANS OF LIVELIHOOD FOR ALL HUMANITY A NEW PRINCIPLE?	331
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID THE FOUNDERS OF THE BAHÁ'Í CREED FOLLOW THE GOAL OF EQUALIZATION OF THE MEANS OF LIVELIHOOD FOR ALL HUMANITY?	333
1- Confiscating the wealth of all non-Bābīs:.....	333
2- All kinds of outrageous fines for Bābīs	333
3- Loans with Interest and Usury.....	334
4- Outrageous fines for fornication and adultery.....	336
5- Excommunication and Shunning	337
6- Deceased's living residence	338
7- Treatment of Thieves.....	338
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?	340
1- Inheritance	341
2- Tax.....	342
3- Huqūq Allah.....	344
4- Zakāt tax.....	344
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	346
1. Is Equalizing the Means of Livelihood a New Principle?	347

2. Is Usury Good or Bad? Does `Abdu'l-Bahā Hate Bahā'u'llāh's Favors to the People?	347
3. Helping the Needy a Legal Obligation or Voluntary?	347
4. Equalization of Means of Livelihood or Paying Thousands of Tons of Gold to the UHJ?	348
5. Equalization of the Means of Livelihood or Depriving Some of Any Livelihood at All?	348
6. Must There Be Complete Equality between All People?	349
7. Has God Made Distinctions between People?	349
CHAPTER 7: ESTABLISHMENT OF A UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE AND SUPREME TRIBUNAL	351
INTRODUCTION	352
1- Rulers and National Constitutions	354
2- Bahā'u'llāh's Orders and Writings	356
3- Universal House of Justice	357
4- Guardian of the Cause of God	359
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS A UNIVERSAL GOVERNING ORGANIZATION AND TRIBUNAL A NOVEL IDEA?	364
SECOND AND THIRD PERSPECTIVES: HAS THIS PILLAR OF THE BAHĀ'I CREED BEEN IMPLEMENTED? IS IT LOGICAL AND ARE THE METHODS PROPOSED IN IT APPLICABLE?	368
1- What Is Being Addressed: The Problems of the People or the Governments?	368
2- Bahā'i Non-Interference in Political Matters	369
3- Infallibility of the Universal House of Justice	373
4- Legitimacy of the Universal House of Justice Depends on the Existence of the Guardian of the Cause of God	375
LET US READ AND PONDER	381
1. Is the Structure of the UHJ Novel?	382
2. Are the Decisions of the UHJ Free from Error?	382
3. Is It Possible to Separate the Guardian from the Universal House of Justice?	383
4. Are Baha'is Allowed to Participate in Political Matters?	383
5. Who Will Govern the Baha'i Kingdom?	384
6. Obedying the Government	384
7. Baha'i Prophecies Fulfilled?	385
CHAPTER 8: UNIVERSAL COMPULSORY EDUCATION	388
INTRODUCTION	389
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSAL COMPULSORY EDUCATION NOVEL?	392

SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID THE FOUNDERS OF BAHÁ'ISM IMPLEMENT THE PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSAL COMPULSORY EDUCATION?	394
1- Bahá'is and Compulsory Education	394
2- The Bábí Meaning of Education	395
3- Education and Nurturing Will Not Dispel Ignorance	396
4- The Outcome of the Education Bahá'í Leaders Received	397
5- The Manners of Bahá'u'lláh and `Abdu'l-Bahá as Two Examples of Bahá'í Education and Nurturing	397
6- Bahá'is Must be Educated Only in Bahá'í Schools	399
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?	402
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	405
1. Is the Principle of Compulsory Universal Education New?	406
2. Is Education the Same for All or Dependent on Capacity?	406
3- Loving Laws That Promote Ignorance or Claiming That All People Must Be Educated?	407
4- Will Education Dispel Ignorance?	407
5. The Criterion for Being a True Prophet: Good Nurturing and Education of People	408
6. Are Bahá'is Allowed to Attend Non-Bahá'í Schools?	408
7. Must Foreign Languages Be Taught at Schools?	409
CHAPTER 9: A UNIVERSAL AUXILIARY LANGUAGE.....	411
INTRODUCTION	412
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE PRINCIPLE OF A UNIVERSAL AUXILIARY LANGUAGE NEW?	414
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DID THE FOUNDERS OF BAHÁ'ISM IMPLEMENT THIS PRINCIPLE?	416
1- Bahá'í Scripture and Official Documents Have Been Written in Three Languages	416
2- Why Would a Persian Prophet Communicate with Persians in Arabic?	417
3- Bahá'is Have Been Ordered to Learn Multiple Languages!	419
4- The Bahá'í Administration Has Failed in Implementing This Principle	421
5- Why Did the Universal House of Justice, in Contrast to `Abdu'l-Bahá's Orders and Advice, Disregard Esperanto	424
6- How Can Someone Who is Helpless in Learning Another Language but His Mother Tongue, Order Other People to Learn Many Languages?	426
a- Using non-Arabic characters and words in Arabic sentences.....	426
b- Using Meaningless Arabic Words and Phrases.....	429
7- Multiple Fallacies in Translations of Bahá'í Texts That Are Propagated by the Bahá'í Administration	430
8- Errors and Outright Distortions in Provisional Translations of Bahá'í Texts	433

9- Why Didn't `Abdu'l-Bahā Speak English in England and French in Paris? ...	436
10- Wrong Data Given to English Speaking Audience	437
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?
.....	453
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	456
1. How Many Languages Must One Learn Other than His Mother's Tongue?	457
2. The Meaning of "Putting Great Effort to Limit the Languages of the World to One"	458
3. Is Learning Foreign Languages a Waste of Time?	458
4. Why Reveal Arabic Verses for a Persian Audience?.....	459
CHAPTER 10: THE EQUALITY OF MEN AND WOMEN.....	461
INTRODUCTION	462
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: WERE THE BAHÁ'IS THE FIRST GROUP TO PROMOTE WOMEN'S RIGHTS? HAD NO CREED, RELIGION, OR GROUP EXPRESSED SUCH BELIEFS BEFORE THEM?	465
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: DO BAHÁ'IS TRULY BELIEVE THAT MEN AND WOMEN ARE EQUAL? DO THEIR ACTIONS SUPPORT THEIR WORDS?	472
1- Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's Opinion about Women:	472
2-Women and Inheritance.....	477
3-Women's Dowry.....	483
4- Polygamy.....	484
5-Membership in the Universal House of Justice.....	492
6-Station of Guardianship	493
7- Baha'i pilgrimage (hajj).....	493
8- Upbringing of Children	494
10- Boys Are Branches Girls Are Leaves.....	496
11- Dowry and Virginity.....	496
12- Women Must Obey Men	497
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS THIS PRINCIPLE CORRECT FROM A RATIONAL AND LOGICAL PERSPECTIVE?
.....	499
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	504
1. Are Men and Women Equal or Do They Have Distinctions?	505
2. Can the Human World Fly with Unequal Wings?	505
3. Are Male and Female Plants and Animals Equal or Do They Have Distinctions?	506
`Abdu'l-Bahā: Female is important and stronger, look at the palm tree, look at the mare, look at the lioness.	506
4. Must We Tell Women That They Are Weaker and Inferior?.....	507
5. Men and Women Are Equal in All Ranks, but Women Lack Capacity and Competency!	507

6. Is There Distinction between Men and Women in the View of God?	508
7. Men and Women Have Equal Rights but Women Have No Share Their Father's Living Residence	508
8. Men and Women Must Have Equal Rights but Women Have a Smaller Share of Inheritance	509
9. Men and Women Have Equal Rights except Sometimes Where Women Have No Rights at All	509
10. Polygamy, Yes or No?	510
11. 'Abdu'l-Bahā and Justice in Polygamy	510
12. Did 'Abdu'l-Bahā Say Men Can Only Have One Wife?	510
13. Equality of Rights or Having No Right to Be a Member of the Universal House of Justice?	511
14. Equality of Rights or Distinction between Villagers and City-Dwellers?	511
15. Is God's Grace for All?	512
'Abdu'l-Bahā: We are all divine sheep and God has made no distinction between us. God has made no distinction in any grace or mercy.	512
16. Why Did Bahā'u'llāh Have Three Wives?	512
CHAPTER 11: ESTABLISHMENT OF UNIVERSAL PEACE	514
INTRODUCTION	515
FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE HOPE FOR ESTABLISHING UNIVERSAL PEACE NOVEL?	517
SECOND PERSPECTIVE: WERE BAHĀ'Ī LEADERS PEACEFUL AND AGAINST VIOLENCE?	529
1- Āghā Asad-Allah Kāshī	531
2- Murders in Iraq	531
THIRD PERSPECTIVE: IS IT RATIONAL AND LOGICAL TO ALWAYS BE AT PEACE AND NEVER SHOW VIOLENT ACTS?	537
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	543
1. Are Aggression and Abuse Forbidden?	544
2. Universal Peace or Tormenting Bahā'u'llāh's Enemies?	544
3. Should We Defend Ourselves If We Are Attacked?	545
4. Weapons and Wars Are Prohibited or Not?	546
5. Is Aggression Forbidden?	546
6. Did Baha'ism Put an End to All Disputes and Fights?	547
7. Can a Conquering Lands Be Praiseworthy?	547
8. When Will Universal Peace Be Established?	547
8. Words of Wisdom:	548
CHAPTER 12: THE WORLD OF HUMANITY IS IN THE NEED OF THE BREATH OF THE HOLY SPIRIT	550
INTRODUCTION	551

FIRST PERSPECTIVE: IS THE PRINCIPLE “THE WORLD OF HUMANITY IS IN THE NEED OF THE BREATH OF THE HOLY SPIRIT” NEW?	554
SECOND AND THIRD: PERSPECTIVES	557
HOW DID THE FOUNDERS OF BAHÁ’ISM ACT TOWARDS THIS TEACHING, AND IS THIS TEACHING REASONABLE?	557
LET US READ AND PONDER.....	569
1. Are Religions Renewed?	570
2. When Will a New Prophet Appear?	570
3. Start and End of the Baha'i Cycle?	571
4. Are visions of the prophets real?	572
EPILOGUE	574
BIBLIOGRAPHY	576
Non-Baha’i sources	576
Baha’i sources	576
Bābī sources	584

Acknowledgement

We would like to express our gratitude to all the teachers and educators that have guided us throughout the years and struggled to make us truth-seeking and rational. May their beneficial prayers be a blessing, strength, and guide for us all.

We would also like to thank the esteemed individuals that have—knowingly and unknowingly—guided us in preparing this book. These anonymous souls have through their research and insight, brought up many interesting points regarding the Baha'i creed. Although the result of their research is at hand today, their names are mostly unknown or have been lost in history. We acknowledge their endeavor and wish the best for them.

We also thank our parents and family for supporting us during the course of preparing this work. Had it not been for their support, we would not have completed this book in a timely manner.

And finally, a special thanks to Mr. Abdol-Hossein Taleie for his valuable suggestions and Mr. Ali Mansouri for a great proofreading of the final draft.

Translator's Notes

The current book is based on the first version of Avaze dohol (Song of the Drum) which was originally written in Farsi. It was initially to be translated with the cooperation of Mr. Mansouri but unfortunately—due to unforeseen circumstances—we only succeeded in jointly translating the first four chapters.

Subsequently, I took up the task of translating the remaining sections and in due course completely revised the book and added some new sections to it.

Most of the quotes cited in this book do not have an official Baha'i translation into English (from Farsi or Arabic). In the cases that they did, we have sometimes translated them ourselves to present their meanings in clear, easy to understand sentences. This approach was taken because of the unconventional prose of Baha'i texts, which was reflected in their official English translations. Furthermore, some of the official translations were inaccurate and needed to be revised.

When translating the Farsi and Arabic quotes into English, utmost care was taken to preserve the correct meaning while retaining the original words.

The Sufi and mystical background of Baha'i leaders like the Bāb and Bahā'u'llāh meant that Farsi and Arabic sentences from them are sometimes quite vague or incomprehensible. The translation of these sentences presented a challenge that was addressed with explanatory notes in brackets or parenthesis.

The sources we have used to write this book were originally published with different groups of audiences in mind, causing the dates that they were published in being based on different calendars. In citing these works, we have stayed loyal to the original dating system used by each, and not converted them to a unified format. In some references, the date has been written using a number followed by 'B.' This means the date is based on the Baha'i calendar which starts on 21 March 1844 AD and has 365 days in normal years and 366 days in leap years. If a date is followed by 'AH' the Islamic calendar has been used. Dates based on the Gregorian calendar are plainly written with nothing added after them.

Since the Bāb and Bahā'u'llāh were Shia Muslims before they created their respective faiths, we have occasionally quoted Shia Islamic texts to show the true origin of some of their supposedly novel teachings. These quotes have also been used to show that some of the claims made by Baha'i leaders about Islamic beliefs were either completely wrong or distorted.

Table 1: The system of transliteration used in this book.

Symbol	Transliteration	Symbol	Transliteration	Vowels:
ء	'	ط	ṭ	Long:
ب	B	ظ	ẓ	آ، ا	ā
ت	T	ع	`	و	ū
ث	Th	غ	gh	ى	ī
ج	J	ف	f	Short:
ح	ḥ	ق	q	ـَ	a
خ	kh	ك	k	ـُ	u
د	d	ل	l	ـِ	i or -i
ذ	dh	م	m	Diphthongs:
ر	r	ن	n	أو	au, aw
ز	z	ه	h	أى	ay
س	s	و	w
ش	sh	ى	y
ص	ṣ	ة	a, at
ض	ḍ	ال	al-, l-

Any emphasis made in the quotes are mine except in cases where it has been explicitly mentioned otherwise. Most of these are phrases or sentences that have been underlined to highlight the section of interest.

Digital scans of most of the books we have used are available on the internet. We have provided the link to these books in the bibliography section. The links can also be found on the books website: www.avazedohol.com/eng.

I solely accept the responsibility for any possible errors. Any questions, criticism, or suggestions can be directed to me by email¹ or through the book's website.

Hossein Akhoondali
2014

¹ h.akhoondali@yahoo.com

Introduction

God created heaven and decorated it with the best ornaments . . .

Then he created men and from among them, chose the most pure and distinguished, and established them as his representatives among the people to invite them to God's great feast in heaven.

But . . . but the majority of humans turned away from the Divine Messengers' invitations to seek and accept righteousness and descended into the valley of ignorance.

History has repeated itself time after time and in every case, the people repeated their predecessor's mistakes. They let go of the strong divine rope, grasped the fragile thread of worldly pleasures, and preferred imitating their forefathers over seeking and accepting the truth.

Today also, the choice is with you and me.

We can close our eyes and ears from the call of the Divine Guides and follow the footsteps of those who went astray. Or we can choose righteousness, hear the message of the truth, act upon it, and be placed among those who were guided.

The choice is with you and me!

Baha'ism is the continuation of the movement of a young merchant from Shiraz named `Alī Muḥammad Shīrāzī,² known as the Bāb. During the reign of Muḥammad Shah Qājār he, in a series of several stages, first introduced himself as the Bāb³ to the Promised Mahdī⁴, then the Mahdī himself⁵, then the Prophet of a New Age⁶, and finally, as the essence of God and his being⁷.

² 1819–1849

³ Bāb literally means door and implies representative. In essence, Ali Muḥammad Shīrāzī introduced himself as the special representative of the Mahdī (the twelfth Shia Imam) and a door for the public's communication with him. According to Shia teachings such a position was unfounded and heresy.

⁴ The Bāb made his claim to Bābism in the year 1844, and continued this claim until the year 1848: `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Raḥīq makhtūm (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Milliyyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 131 B.), vol. 1, pp. 581–585; The Bāb ordered that the following statement be added to the Adhān (the Muslim call to prayers): “Ashhadu anna `Alī ghabl al-Nabīl bāb Baqīyyat Allah”, meaning, “I testify that Ali before Nabīl (meaning the Bāb), is the door to the Remnant of Allah (meaning the Mahdī),” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Talkhīṣ tārikh Nabīl (New Delhi: Mu'assisiyi Chāp Wa Intishārāt Mir'āt, 1991), p. 122. Ali before Nabīl is a code word which the Bāb used to refer to himself. The Remnant of Allah is one of the Mahdī's titles.

⁵ “I am the true Qā'im (one who will arise i.e. the Mahdī) whose appearance you had been promised (Innanī ana l-Qā'im al-ḥaqq al-ladhī antum bi zuhūrihī tū'adūn),” Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Tārikh zuhūr al-Ḥaqq, (Tehran: n.p., 1944 [Reprinted, H-Bahai: Lansing, Mi., 1998]), vol. 3, p. 173; “Almost immediately after, the Bāb, himself still a prisoner, was vindicating the acts of His disciples by asserting, formally and unreservedly, His claim to be the promised Qā'im, in the presence of the Heir to the Throne, the leading exponents of the Shaykhī community, and the most illustrious ecclesiastical dignitaries assembled in the capital of Ādhirbayjān,” Shoghi Effendi, God Passes by (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1979 [second printing]), p. 33.

⁶ The Bāb brought a new religion called Bābism and a new book called the Bayān. `Abdu'l-Bahā names Bāb as one of the manifestations of Prophethood and lists him among God's great

Figure 1: A picture of `Alī Muḥammad Shirāzī, known as the Bāb, the founder of Bābism `Alī Muḥammad Bāb revealed a book called the Bayān, in two different languages (Arabic and Farsi), both of which remained incomplete at the time of his execution by firing squad.⁸ In this book, he gave his followers tidings about the appearance of “He whom God shall make manifest” (man yuḡhiruhu Allāh).

After some time Ali Muḥammad Bāb sought distance from his statements and expressed regret during a debate session. When it became apparent that he could not answer basic questions from messengers: “The Manifestations of universal Prophethood Who appeared independently are, for example, Abraham, Moses, Christ, Muḥammad, the Bāb and Bahā’u’llāh,” `Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions (US Bahā’ī Publishing Trust, 1990 [reprint of pocket-size edition]), p. 164.

⁷ “Verily, `Alī before Nabīl (i.e. himself, the Bāb) is the Essence of God and His Being (inna `Alī qabl al-Nabīl dhāt Allāh wa kaynūniyyatih),” The Bāb, Lauḡ haykal al-dīn (n.p.: n.p., n.d.), p. 5.

⁸ According to the sayings of the Bab, the book of Bayan should have been revealed in nineteen units (wāḥids) and nineteen chapters (bābs), but only eleven units of the Arabic Bayān and only nine units of the Farsi Bayān were completed before he was executed.

different scholars, he wrote a letter of repentance addressed to Nāṣir al-Dīn Mīrzā, the crown prince of Muḥammad Shah Qājār, with much shame. The text of his letter of repentance is as follows:

May my soul be sacrificed for you . . . I bear witness to God and those that are with Him, that this weak servant possesses absolutely no knowledge that goes against the satisfaction of the God of this World and those who have accepted His guardianship. Even though the essence of my existence is purely [made of] sin (wujūdām dhanbi širf ast) . . . and if any words that were against his satisfaction came out [of my] pen, I intended no disobedience. Anyway, I am regretful and seek repentance from His Highness. This servant possesses absolutely no knowledge that would bring about such a claim. I seek repentance from God from being associated with this affair and the flow of some supplications and words on my tongue are not reason for any claim; and the claim of being the special representative of his Highness, Ḥujjat Allāh (literally the Proof of Allah, meaning the Mahdī), is a completely false claim and this servant neither made this or any other claim. It is requested from the kindness of his Royal Majesty and his Highness that this supplicator be honored with his royal grace, favor, compassion and mercy. Peace.⁹

⁹ Abū l-Faḍl Gulpāyganī and Mahdī Gulpāyganī, Kashf al-ghitā' `an ḥiyāl al-`adā' (Tashkent: n.p., 1919), pp. 204–205.

Figure 2: Facsimile of `Alī Muḥammad Bāb's letter of repentance from claims of Bābism, Qā'imīyya (being the one who will rise at the End of Time), and Prophethood.

After the execution of `Alī Muḥammad Bāb, his followers rebelled against each other in a bid to take his position. These rebellions were accompanied by the massacre of a large group of people.¹⁰

¹⁰ Twenty seven people among the Bābīs brought themselves forth as the Promised One in the Book of Bayān, such as Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal, Mīrzā Ḥusayn `Alī Nūrī (Bahā'u'llāh), Mīrzā Asad-Allāh Dayyān, Mīrzā Muḥammad Nabīl Zarandī, Mīrzā Ghughā Darwīsh, and Sayyid Baṣīr Hindī. See Muḥammad `Alī Fayḏī, Ḥaḍrat Bahā'ullāh, 2nd ed. (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi

In the end, Mīrzā Ḥusayn `Alī Nūrī, known as Bahā'u'llāh, became the most successful figure among the claimants and declared himself to be “He whom God shall make manifest.”

Bahā'u'llāh followed the footsteps of the Bāb and made numerous claims about being God in his words. Although Baha'is try to dismiss these claims and portray Bahā'u'llāh as a mirror of God—which is itself a problematic belief—there are many words from Bahā'u'llāh that show the contrary. For instance, whilst he was imprisoned he claimed:

There is no God but me the lonely, the imprisoned.¹¹

He even went as far as claiming that he was God's Self:

He exists because of the existence of My Dominant Everlasting Self for My Self is His Self, if you have any sense.¹²

It is not clear who is speaking these words, Bahā'u'llāh or God, but either way that it is read, Bahā'u'llāh's self is equaled to that of God's. Bahā'u'llāh didn't stop there and even claimed to be the creator of all Gods:

All Gods became Gods from the flow of my affairs and all Lords became Lords by the overflowing of my decree (kul al-ulūh min rashḥi 'amrī ta'llahat wa kul al-rubūb min ṭafḥ ḥukmī tarabbat).¹³

Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayī Fārsī Wa `Arabī, 1990), pp. 103–104. One of the results of these massacres and killings was the exile of the Azalīs (the supporters of Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal) to Cyprus and the exile of the Baha'is (the supporters of Bahā'u'llāh) to Palestine.

¹¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā (Canada: Mu'assisiyi Ma'ārif Bahā'ī, 1996), vol. 1, no. 39, p. 226.

¹² Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā (Canada: Mu'assisiyi Ma'ārif Bahā'ī, 2002), vol. 2, no. 81, p. 451.

¹³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: Maṭba'atu Kurdistān al-'Ilmiyya (Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī), 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 255.

This sentence single handedly contradicts all known monotheistic religions, for in none of these religions is there any reference to more than one God.

Figure 3: A picture of Mīrzā Ḥusayn `Alī Nūrī, known as Bahā'u'llāh, the leader of the Baha'i creed

During the era of the successors to Bahā'u'llāh—especially in the time of Shoghi Effendi—Baha'ism was transformed into a large and extensive organization administered by the Universal House of Justice (UHJ) that imitated organizational models prevalent in the West for the administration of and structured propagation of the sect in the world.

The most important technique Baha'is use to propagate this sect and establish their beliefs over others' are a series of slogans and statements called the Baha'i Principles that are prorogated with great pride. The source of these principles goes back to the time when Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā¹⁴ resided in the Ottoman empire. It was there that they became familiar with a new wave of foreign thoughts and quickly realized that these ideas could set the grounds for attracting the public masses of the Middle East. Thus, they mixed them with certain Eastern and Islamic concepts, and put them forth as the Baha'i Principles.

¹⁴ The son and successor to Bahā'u'llāh.

This mixing of concepts was so obvious that `Abdu'l-Bahā was forced to bring forth an explanation regarding the similarities between Baha'i beliefs and the ideas of Western intellectuals:

When asked whether Bahā'u'llāh had made a special study of Western writings and founded His teachings in accordance with them `Abdu'l-Bahā said that the books of Bahā'u'llāh, written and printed as long ago as the 1870s, contained the ideals now so familiar to the West, although at that time these ideas had not been printed or thought of in the West.¹⁵

However, many of the arguments that are brought forward in these principles were expressed by others in the years before 1870. Another important point is that while the works of Bahā'u'llāh were recorded around the year 1870, the Baha'i Principles were never brought forward by him in this order, detail, and with such emphasis.

In fact, Bahā'u'llāh's son `Abdu'l-Bahā brought forward the various principles of Baha'ism years after the death of his father. By that time, many of these issues had been raised at great length in the world, particularly in the West, and were already noteworthy. The evidence for this will be presented throughout this book.

`Abdu'l-Bahā claimed that his father had gifted humanity with a series of pure principles, the likeness of which could not be found anywhere else. When explaining each principle, he would refer to the scattered utterances of his father and try to find words from Bahā'u'llāh that would relate them to him.

However, this effort would never satisfy any seeker of the truth who knew that these principles were not written by Bahā'u'llāh, but rather compiled years after his demise, by his son `Abdu'l-Bahā.

¹⁵ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1980), p.48.

Despite `Abdu'l-Bahā's insistence that these principles were purely teachings from his father (Bahā'u'llāh), his large role in compiling and publishing them cannot be hidden nor denied; to the extent that in some cases, the opinion of Bahā'u'llāh contradicts that of his son. Due to the sheer amount of these contradictions, we have avoided mentioning them in this section and will postpone their analysis until future chapters when we look at the respective principles.

Regardless of the means of compilation, these principles are considered to be the most important social teachings of the Baha'i doctrine. Baha'i leaders have spoken at such length describing these principles that one is induced to believe they are the only path to salvation for humanity. For example, `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The principles of his Highness Bahā'u'llāh are comprehensive of all teachings and it is clear and obvious that salvation and success are unfeasible and impossible for humanity without them and every sect in the human race will find their ultimate aspirations present and evident in these heavenly principles.¹⁶

Furthermore, when this creed is preached, the audience are made to believe that these teachings and principles were virtually non-existent before the advent of Bahā'u'llāh and all his teachings and principles are novel and new. For instance, `Abdu'l-Bahā claims that before the birth of Baha'ism, there was no mention of these principles in Iran:

Not even a word of these principles had been heard in Iran before the appearance of Bahā'u'llāh. Go research about this so that it becomes evident and obvious to you.¹⁷

¹⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 127 B.), vol.3, pp. 24–25.

¹⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt: Maṭba'at al-Kurdistān al-'Ilmiyya [Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī], 1340 AH), vol. 3, p. 114.

This statement—is without doubt—completely false and as we will show continuously throughout this book, many of the claimed novel Baha'i principles were based on Shia Islamic beliefs well known in Iran.

In another instance he claims that everyone believes that these teachings have no equal:

The call of Allah (nidā Allāh) was raised to such an extent that . . . the minds were astonished at what call this is that is so high? What is this star that has come up? Some were astonished, others were researching, and others were uttering proofs. They all said, "The principles of his Highness Bahā'u'llāh truly have no equal, they are the soul of this era and the light of this century."¹⁸

This statement is also false and what `Abdu'l-Bahā claims is unfounded. Finally, in another speech, he lists these teachings one by one and claims that they are all new:

I will speak to you concerning the special teachings of Bahā'u'llāh. All the divine principles announced by the tongue of the Prophets of the past are to be found in the words of Bahā'u'llāh; but in addition to these He has revealed certain new teachings which are not found in any of the sacred Books of former times. I shall mention some of them; the others, which are many in number, may be found in the Books, Tablets and Epistles written by Bahā'u'llāh—such as the Hidden Words, the Glad Tidings, the Words of Paradise, Tajalliyāt, Tarazāt and others. Likewise, in the Kitāb-i-Aqdas there are new teachings which cannot be found in any of the past Books or Epistles of the Prophets . . . Bahā'u'llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity, and this principle is specialized in His teachings . . .

¹⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol.3, p. 78.

Another new principle revealed by Bahā'u'llāh is the injunction to investigate truth . . . Bahā'u'llāh has announced that the foundation of all the religions of God is one, that oneness is truth and truth is oneness which does not admit of plurality. This teaching is new and specialized to this Manifestation . . . He sets forth a new principle for this day in the announcement that religion must be the cause of unity, harmony and agreement among mankind . . . The harmony of religious belief with reason is a new vista which Bahā'u'llāh has opened for the soul of man . . . He establishes the equality of man and woman. This is peculiar to the teachings of Bahā'u'llāh, for all other religions have placed man above woman . . . A new religious principle is that prejudice and fanaticism—whether sectarian, denominational, patriotic or political—are destructive to the foundation of human solidarity . . . Universal peace is assured by Bahā'u'llāh as a fundamental accomplishment of the religion of God—that peace shall prevail among nations, governments and peoples, among religions, races and all conditions of mankind. This is one of the special characteristics of the Word of God revealed in this Manifestation . . . Bahā'u'llāh declares that all mankind should attain knowledge and acquire an education. This is a necessary principle of religious belief and observance, characteristically new in this dispensation. He has set forth the solution and provided the remedy for the economic question. No religious Books of the past Prophets speak of this important human problem . . . As to the most great characteristic of the revelation of Bahā'u'llāh, a specific teaching not given by any of the Prophets of the past: It is the ordination and appointment of the Center of the Covenant . . . You have asked me what new principles have been revealed by Him. I have mentioned a few only. There are many others, but time does not permit their mention tonight.¹⁹

Even with such obvious and open statements regarding the novelty and originality of these teachings, `Abdu'l-Bahā himself clearly states elsewhere that what Bahā'u'llāh has brought, is the same as what the previous prophets had brought, and that he only reviewed and restored them:

All Divine Prophets struggled for the Oneness of Humanity . . . His Highness, Bahā'u'llāh, renewed the teachings of the prophets.²⁰

The foundation that all the previous Prophets laid, those are the foundations of Bahā'u'llāh and that foundation is the Oneness of the World of Humanity . . . and that foundation is Universal Peace.²¹

So what exactly has Bahā'u'llāh brought for the people of this age if the foundation of all religions is one and he is merely renewing them? And why does `Abdu'l-Bahā insist these teachings are new while he claims elsewhere that these teachings are what every Divine Prophet had taught?

The Principles Attributed to Bahā'u'llāh

The principles that have been attributed to Bahā'u'llāh and Baha'ism do not have a set number and have been referred to as being between four and eighteen in various Baha'i works. Baha'i books also conflict in their order. However, they are most commonly famous as the twelve principles. The most important of these include:

¹⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, 2nd ed. (US Baha'i Publishing Trust, 1982), p. 453–457.

²⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt: Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī), 1340 AH), vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

²¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 286.

- 1- The Independent Investigation of Truth, Unfettered by Superstition or Tradition
- 2- The Oneness of Humanity
- 3- Religion Must be the Source of Unity and Fellowship
- 4- Religion Must be in Conformity with Science and Reason
- 5- The Removal of All Prejudice
- 6- The Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity
- 7- Establishment of a Universal House of Justice and Supreme Tribunal²²
- 8- Universal Compulsory Education
- 9- A Universal Auxiliary Language
- 10- The Equality of Men and Women
- 11- Establishment of Universal Peace
- 12- The World of Humanity is in the Need of the Breath of the Holy Spirit

²² `Abdu'l-Bahā mentions the principle of “The Equality of Rights” in Khaṭābāt, vol. 2, as the seventh principle. Since this topic is discussed in detail in the principles of “The Oneness of Humanity” and “The Equality of Men and Women,” we have replaced it with the subject of “The Universal House of Justice and the Supreme Tribunal,” for it deserves special attention.

This Book's Approach in Analyzing Baha'i Principles

In order to better benefit from this study, three fundamental approaches have been utilized.

The First Approach: Staying Away From Prejudice

The current document has been compiled while avoiding any sort of sympathy for any particular individual, group, or religion. The method used by the authors of this book when analyzing the statements of the founders of Baha'ism to seek the truth was using the divine blessing of reason. For reason is the sole solid yardstick for determining truth from falsehood.

The Second Approach: Using Original Baha'i Sources

The method used in this study when quoting Baha'i literature is to use primary sources, and specific references to authentic books and texts that are approved of by the Baha'i authorities. These references—from primary authentic sources—are cited as footnotes so that the readers can easily have access to the exact phrases without having to refer to the original sources. Thus, significant time and effort was put adjusting the above mentioned material so that no claim be made without proper references.

In a few minor cases, non-Baha'i sources have been used. These sources have only been used to further prove a point that we have already shown otherwise using Baha'i sources.

The Third Approach: The Uniformity of the Course of the Research in All Chapters

For the ease of the readers, each principle is brought forth in one separate chapter. In each chapter, the corresponding principle is analyzed from three separate perspectives. Then, in a section titled “Read and Ponder,” an overall comparison will be made between the sayings of the leaders of Baha’ism, and in the end, a brief conclusion regarding the mentioned principle will be stated.

The Three Perspectives Used in this Study to Analyze the Baha’i Principles

1- Are These Principles Novel?

Are these principles—as Baha’is claim—novel?

Had no religion, creed, thinker, or authority uttered them before Baha’ism?

Had—as `Abdu’l-Bahā claimed—not one word of them been heard in Iran before the appearance of Bahā’u’llāh?²³

2-Did the Baha’i Leaders Act Upon These Principles?

Were these principles observed in the life and actions of the founders of Baha’ism or did they merely present them as slogans and used their glamour to promote their own way?

`Abdu’l-Bahā says:

All nations are perfect in their sayings. They all mention they are lovers of good, they all say truth is approved and falsehood is disapproved . . . but they all remain in the world of words. There is no action.²⁴

If a person knows that knowledge is glorified, this does not make him a scholar, if a person knows honor is approved of,

²³ “Not even a word of these principles had been heard in Iran before the appearance of Bahā’u’llāh. Go research about this so that it becomes evident and obvious to you,” `Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 114.

²⁴ `Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 127–128.

this does not make him honorable, and according to this analogy, knowing does not result in attainment.²⁵

Thus, if Baha'is—particularly their leaders—do not act upon these principles, then they have no superiority over other beliefs.

3-Are These Principles Rational and Logical?

The fact that a statement appears elegant and logical at first glance does not guarantee its correctness. Although Baha'i principles might initially appear to be logical, we will show that in most cases they are illogical and unreasonable.

²⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 100.

CHAPTER 1:

The Independent Investigation of Truth, Unfettered by Superstition or Tradition

“Bahā’u’llāh’s first principle is the seeking of the truth. Man must seek the truth and set aside imitations.”²⁶

²⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 144.

The independent investigation of truth is defined as searching for the truth and abstaining from imitations

The Investigation of Truth is one of the most important of the twelve Baha'i principles. `Abdu'l-Bahā introduced this as the first of Bahā'u'llāh's teachings.²⁷ Baha'i's preach that every individual must investigate and seek the truth. They must listen with their own ears, see with their own eyes, and contemplate without the influence of any love or hatred.²⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

²⁷ Although in another instance `Abdu'l-Bahā refers to the Oneness of Humanity as the first principle: "His first teaching is the Oneness of the World of Humanity," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 5.

Man must seek the truth and set aside imitations. The nations of the world each have their own imitations and each are different. The imitations have caused war and conflict, and as long as these imitations remain, the unity of the human world is not possible. Thus, one must seek the truth so that with its light, these darknesses disappear. For truth is only one. It does not accept plurality or division . . . These imitations, have made the human world dark. These imitations have caused war and killings. These imitations have caused hatred and enmity. Thus, we must seek the truth so that we can be freed from all of the hardships and [our] insights can be awakened and we can find way to the Divine Kingdom.²⁹

According to `Abdul-Bahā, since every nation has its own set of imitations, and none of them ever heads towards a single truth, they will always be at war with each other. Instead, they should put these imitations aside and independently search for the truth so that all problems are solved. He also says:

Those who are fair will examine, research, and inquire. This examination and inquiry will result in their guidance . . . they say, “We will go and see, and we will investigate the truth.”³⁰

²⁸ “When humans attain the rank of [religious] maturity they must investigate and think about [the things] the servants [of God] grasp—without [the influence] of love or hatred— whilst they have trust in God, and [they] must hear and see with their own ears and eyes.” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt (New Delhi: Mu’assisiyi Maṭbū’āt Amrī Hind, 1986), p.11 (citing Bahā’u’llāh).

²⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 144–145.

³⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol.1, p. 189.

It is certainly true that seeking the truth is critical. However, even more important is accepting the truth, once it is found. Otherwise, the slogan of seeking the truth will not solve anything. With this point in mind, we will analyze this principle from the three aforementioned perspectives.

Is Seeking the Truth and Setting Aside Imitations an Innovation of Baha'ism?

Are the Baha'is really the first people to have brought this principle forward to the ears of the world? `Abdu'l-Bahā claims:

Another new principle revealed by Bahā'u'llāh is the injunction to investigate truth—that is to say, no man should blindly follow his ancestors and forefathers. Nay, each must see with his own eyes, hear with his own ears and investigate the truth himself in order that he may follow the truth instead of blind acquiescence and imitation of ancestral beliefs.³¹

That which is propagated in Baha'i teachings as seeking the truth—which the Baha'is pride themselves in having discovered—is in reality an innate principle that has come in the books of different religions and can clearly be seen in the works of different philosophers.

It is clearly evident that this principle is not a new discovery or novel innovation of Baha'ism. Rather, all schools of thought and all of the Divine Religions call upon people to seek what is right, say what is right, and accept what is right. There are examples in books of previous dispensations that show this concept. For example, in the Avesta, the Holy Book of the Zoroastrians, it has come that:

³¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

Hear with your ears the best things; look upon them with clear-seeing thought, for the decision between the two Beliefs, each man for himself before the Great consummation, bethinking you that it be accomplished to our pleasure.³²

In the Torah, the Holy Book of the Jews, we read:

Thus saith Jehovah, stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way; and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.³³

It is mentioned in the Bible:

Prove all things; Hold fast that which is good; Abstain from every form of evil.³⁴

The Holy Quran says:

Give good tiding to My servants. [Those] Who listen to speech and follow the best of it. Those are the ones God has guided, and those are people of understanding.³⁵

Even though `Abdu'l-Bahā had claimed this principle was new and revealed by his father, elsewhere he confesses that this principle is not new:

His Highness Moses spread the truth as did his Highness Jesus and his Highness Abraham and his Highness the Messenger (meaning the Prophet Muḥammad) and his Highness the Bāb

³² Avesta, Translated by L. H. Mills, vol. 1, Ahunavaiti Gatha, Yasna, chap. 30, verse 2 (Sacred Books of the East [American Edition, 1898], <http://avesta.org/yasna/yasna.htm#y30>)

³³ The Old Testament, The Book of Jeremiah, chap. 6, verse 16 (American Standard Version).

³⁴ The New Testament (American Standard Version), Thess. 5:21–22.

³⁵ Quran (Sahih International), 39:17-18.

and his Highness Bahā'u'llāh. They all established and spread the truth.³⁶

From the teachings (principles) of his Highness Bahā'u'llāh, the first is seeking the truth, and the foundation of all the Prophets . . . is truth, and the truth is one. His Highness Abraham was the harbinger of truth. His Highness Moses was the servant of truth. His Highness Christ was the establisher of truth. His Highness Muḥammad was the propagator of truth. His Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was the herald of truth, and his Highness Bahā'u'llāh, was the light of truth.³⁷

The foundation of the divine religions is one. It is one truth, it is one spirit, it is one light, and it does not have a multitude. Among the foundations of the Divine Religion is seeking the truth [so] that the whole of humanity seeks the truth.³⁸

³⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 5.

³⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 55.

³⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 66.

Baha'ism and Investigating the Truth

Did the leaders of Baha'ism try to spread, seek, and accept the truth, or did they—and do they still—try to hide and deny it?

1- How Baha'is View Reason and Knowledge

To investigate the truth, one must use reason and knowledge to reach logical conclusions on the matters being investigated. Bahā'u'llāh claims that one's reason and knowledge are invalid unless one becomes a Baha'i. He says:

The general criterion is what we mentioned and any soul who has success in it, meaning recognizes and realizes the Sunrise of Manifestation (meaning himself), will be mentioned in the Divine Book as someone who possesses reason or else he will be (mentioned as) ignorant even if he himself thinks that his reason equals that of the whole world.³⁹

He also claims that, in contrast to previous revelations in which people could not understand some of the laws brought forth, in Baha'ism everything is quite clear, and whoever denies its revelations completely lacks reason:

³⁹ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idiy-i āsimānī (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 Badī'), vol. 7, p. 160.

No one has denied or will deny what has been revealed by the Ancient Pen (meaning himself) in this Most Great Manifestation regarding society, unity, manners, rites, and being occupied with what has benefits for the people, except that he completely lacks reason.⁴⁰

Furthermore, Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā claim that reason serves the purpose of recognizing God:

The first grace that has been bestowed on the human body is reason and its purpose is the recognition of the Truth (meaning God) Exalted be His Glory.⁴¹

If you seek the recognition of God . . . refer to the arguments (put forward by) reason and narrations.⁴²

However when Bahā'u'llāh refers to Bābīs that have not accepted his authority he claims that this is not the case:

Know that today, that which has reached your reason or will reach it, or is perceived by the reasons of [those with intellects] superior or inferior to yours, none are the criterion for recognizing the Truth (meaning God) and will never be.⁴³

⁴⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, (n.p.: n.p., n.d.), p. 168.

⁴¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Muntakhabātī az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bī Zabānhayī Fārsī wa `Arabī, 141 Badī'), p. 127. The official Baha'i translation reads: "First and foremost among these favors, which the Almighty hath conferred upon man, is the gift of understanding. His purpose in conferring such a gift is none other except to enable His creature to know and recognize the one true God—exalted be His glory," Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990 [pocket-size edition]), p. 194.

⁴² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 134 B.), vol. 8, pp. 119 - 120.

⁴³ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī' (Tehran: n.p., n.d.), p. 286.

Essentially, reason is a useless tool unless it is used to reach the conclusion that Baha'ism is a great religion that must be followed. Bahā'u'llāh has similar teachings regarding knowledge and claims that those who do not become Baha'is are ignorant even if they possess all the knowledge on earth:

If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word 'yes' (meaning does not become a Baha'i), the Lord will not pay attention to him (ladī l-Ḥaqq madhkūr na) and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people.⁴⁴

From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha'is).⁴⁵

Thus, if a very knowledgeable scholar pauses and hesitates about acknowledging Baha'ism, he is considered among the most ignorant of the people.

Do these statements from the founder of Baha'ism agree with the notion of accepting and seeking the truth? Do Baha'is tell the world that their leader believes that those who do not become Baha'is lack reason and are ignorant?

It appears that reason is a tool that is only useful for reaching Baha'ism. Once someone embraces the faith, he must stop using his reason.

In Baha'ism, it is taught that every person must choose their beliefs after reaching the age of religious maturity (15 years for both girls and boys)⁴⁶. Bahā'u'llāh says:

⁴⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111.

⁴⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', pp. 138–139.

⁴⁶ "A question [was asked] about the age of religious maturity; answer: maturity is in the fifteenth year and both men and women are the same regarding this matter," `Abd a l-Ḥamīd Ishrāq

When humans attain the rank of [religious] maturity they must investigate . . . and [they] must hear and see with their own ears and eyes.⁴⁷

Bahā'u'llāh claims that the ears and eyes are the same as reason.⁴⁸ Based on these words, one would be lead to believe that Baha'is are to investigate the truth using their reason once they become mature. Unfortunately, when Bahā'u'llāh explains how the truth must be investigated it becomes clear that this is not the case. Bahā'u'llāh expects his followers to shut down their reason and imitate him with complete blindness, deafness, and ignorance:

Become blind so that you see my face, become deaf so that you hear my pleasant tone and voice, become ignorant so that you get a share of my knowledge, and become poor so that you can take an everlasting portion from the sea of my eternal riches. 'Become blind' means [see] nothing but my beauty and 'become deaf' means [hear] nothing but my words and 'become ignorant' means [have no knowledge] but my knowledge, so that with a pure eye and clean heart and fine ear you come to my sanctified realm.⁴⁹

Khāwarī, Ganjīni-yi ḥudūd wa aḥkām, 3rd ed. (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 128 B.), p. 14.

⁴⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 11 (citing Bahā'u'llāh).

⁴⁸ "The soul, reason, spirit, ears, and eyes are all one but they are different in their instruments," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā (Canada: Mu'assisiyi Ma'ārif Bahā'ī, 1996), vol. 1, no. 3, p. 112.

⁴⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb (Egypt: Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī, 1339 AH), pp. 427–428. This is the Official Baha'i translation for these words: "Blind thine eyes, that thou mayest behold My beauty; stop thine ears, that thou mayest hearken unto the sweet melody of My voice; empty thyself of all learning, that thou mayest partake of My knowledge; and sanctify thyself from riches, that thou mayest obtain a lasting share from the ocean of My eternal wealth. Blind thine eyes, that is, to all save My beauty; stop thine ears to all save My word; empty thyself of all learning save the knowledge of Me; that with a clear vision, a pure heart and an attentive ear thou mayest enter the court of My holiness," Bahā'u'llāh, The Hidden Words of Bahā'u'llāh (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1985 [reprint]), p. 25.

He further says:

No pleasure has been created in the world greater than listening to the verses [brought by Bahā'u'llāh] and understanding their meanings and not objecting to or questioning any of the words and comparing them with the words of others.⁵⁰

These words are in no way justifiable. By this account, the leaders of Baha'ism want their followers to be like sheep⁵¹ that close their eyes and ears to anything other than the words of their leaders and only listen to their utterances, make no objections, and refrain from comparing them with the words of others. What kind of truth seeking requires one to become blind, deaf, and ignorant, and only entrust their heart to the claimant of truth, so that they enter his sanctified realm?

In the Baha'i faith, one must turn reason into a blindfold—instead of using it as a light to illuminate one's path—and follow Bahā'u'llāh to wherever he wishes to take him. The Quran—the same book that Bahā'u'llāh had adhered to for years—had clearly warned about having such beliefs:

Say: "Are the blind and seeing equal? Do you not contemplate?"⁵²

Those that preach these beliefs to non-Baha'is with great enthusiasm, never tell their audience that if they don't accept this creed they will be considered to be ignorant people who lack reason, and if they do, they must shut down their reason and blindly imitate Bahā'u'llāh.

⁵⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 145.

⁵¹ Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā have in numerous places referred to their followers as Aghnām Allāh (Sheep of God).

⁵² Quran, 6:50.

2- Investigating the Truth: Only for Non-Baha'is

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The followers of Moses (i.e. Jews) have imitations (taqālid), Zoroastrians have imitations, Christians have imitations, Buddhists have imitations, and every nation has imitations [and] thinks that its imitations are correct and the imitations of others are invalid. For example, the followers of Moses believe that their imitations are correct and the imitations of others are invalid. We want to find out which [imitations] are correct. [Obviously] not all imitations are correct. If we stick to an imitation it will prevent us from correctly investigating other [religions] imitations. For example, a Jewish person cannot understand that other [religions] are correct because he believes and sticks to the imitations of Judaism. Therefore, he must put aside the imitations and seek the truth and [think that] perhaps others might be right. Thus, until imitations are not put aside, the truth will not become manifest.⁵³

This is a prescription that has only been prescribed for non-Baha'is. How is it that the Jews, Christians, Muslims, and followers of all other religions must put aside the words of their forefathers and seek the truth with open ears and eyes, but Baha'is should absolutely refrain from doing so? Baha'is have been forbidden by Bahā'u'llāh from hearing any sort of criticism from the opponents of their creed; even if they are criticized using strong evidence and documents:

“Therefore, it is incumbent upon all the friends of God to shun any person in whom they perceive the emanation of hatred for the Glorious Beauty of Abhā, though he may quote

⁵³ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.17 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā').

all the Heavenly Utterances and cling to all the Books.” He continues—Glorious be His Name!—“Protect yourselves with utmost vigilance, lest you be entrapped in the snare of deception and fraud. This is the advice of the Pen of Destiny.”⁵⁴

Is it not possible that the critics are correct and Baha’is are wrong? Is listening to what these people have to say not one of the necessities for seeking and investigating the truth? In fact, Baha’u’llah goes even further than this, making it clear that critics and opponents are not the only people that Baha’is must not listen to. He orders Baha’is not to listen to the words of those who have denied the authority of Bahā’u’llāh:

Say: Oh my people, do not listen to the words of the polytheists about God and His manifestation. Fear a day everyone will be questioned before their High and Exalted Lord about what they have done.⁵⁵

The word polytheist or mushrik in Baha’i scripture, as shown in the next chapter, refers to all those that have denied Bahā’u’llāh’s authority and refrained from becoming Baha’is. Bahā’u’llāh is telling his followers to not listen to these people. Is this how Baha’is are supposed to investigate the truth? By not listening to the words of those who have—for whatever reason—refrained from becoming Baha’is?

3- How the Truth About Baha’ism is Investigated

To investigate the truth about anything, we must first obtain knowledge about it then use our reason to reach a verdict and conclusion. If a ⁵⁴ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Bahā’ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā’u’llāh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahā (‘Abdu’l-Bahā’s Section Only), (US Bahā’ī Publishing Trust, 1976), pp. 430–431.

⁵⁵ Bahā’u’llāh, Majmū’iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih (Cairo: Maṭba’atu Sa’āda [Published by Muḥyi l-Dīn Ṣabrī Kurdī], 1338 AH (1920)), p. 216.

Baha'i wants to research his or her religion, there are three sources from which he or she can seek knowledge: First, former Baha'is who have denounced their faith or been shunned and labeled as covenant breakers, second, memories and statements from people who have witnessed the actions of the Baha'i leaders, and third, official Baha'i documents and sources. Is it possible for truth seeking Baha'is to investigate their faith from any of these three sources?

a- Covenant Breakers and Enemies of the Faith

As we showed in the previous excerpts, listening to the words of those that have refrained from becoming Baha'is or any of Bahā'u'llāh's enemies has been strictly prohibited. Furthermore, as will be detailed in subsequent chapters, no form of socializing is allowed with covenant breakers. Thus any direct form of investigating the truth using this group of people is unfeasible.

Reading the books authored by covenant breakers—as a form of indirect investigation—is not advised. These people have unjustly been labeled by Shoghi as “haters of the light and sufferers of spiritual leprosy.” Books authored by the enemies of the faith are to be read only with the intention of refuting their charges:

It is better not to read books by Covenant-breakers because they are haters of the Light, sufferers from a spiritual leprosy, so to speak. But books by well-meaning yet unenlightened enemies of the Cause can be read so as to refute their charges.⁵⁶

Although Baha'is preach the Investigation of Truth, their laws prevent direct interaction with those who they deem as inappropriate sources. Any form of indirect investigation is also discouraged. These limitations are against the spirit of the principle of Seeking and Investigating the Truth, which the Baha'is preach with pride.

⁵⁶ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File (New Delhi: Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1983), chap. XII, no. 628.

b- Unofficial Translations, Memoirs, Pilgrims' Notes, and Unofficial Writings

Unauthorized materials, such as translations not yet approved by the UHJ, memoirs of people who have socialized with Baha'i figures, books that have not been authorized by the UHJ, pilgrims' notes, and similar works are considered inappropriate for investigating the truth. Although Baha'is are allowed to read these books, any conclusion they reach using these sources is void and unacceptable if it is against the official UHJ stance.

What is more disturbing is that it doesn't matter how reliable a pilgrim making a note is or how many different people have narrated what they have heard or seen from a Baha'i figure; these notes are simply labeled as hearsay that confer no authority:

The instructions of the Master and the Guardian make it very clear that Pilgrims' notes are hearsay and cannot claim the authority and binding power of the Sacred Text . . . [sic] Moreover, the fact that the pilgrim writing of his experience is a reliable or well-known believer, or that the reported statement seems to be repeated in the notes of several pilgrims, does not in itself confer authority upon the pilgrim's note in question.⁵⁷

According to `Abdu'l-Bahā, these notes and memoirs should not be trusted and are a cause of confusion:

Thou has written concerning the pilgrims and pilgrims' notes. Any narrative that is not authenticated by a Text should not be trusted. Narratives, even if true, cause confusion. For the people of Bahā, the Text, and only the Text, is authentic.⁵⁸

⁵⁷ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXVIII, no. 1433.

If these sources are used to prove a point that is not in favor of the Baha'is, they are quickly labeled as unreliable and dismissed. Nevertheless, these writings are extensively used by Baha'is in their preaching's and proselytizing materials. Such double standards make these notes useless for investigating the truth, for any conclusion based on them can simply be refuted on the basis of not being authoritative. Thus, from a Baha'i viewpoint, these sources cannot be used as a source for investigating the truth.

c- Baha'i Scripture

The only authoritative sources for investigating the truth in Baha'ism are books or translations published and distributed by the UHJ or institutions they have authorized. Shoghi says:

Bahā'u'llāh has made it clear enough that only those things that have been revealed in the form of Tablets have a binding power over the friends. Hearsays may be matters of interest but can in no way claim authority (From a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to the United States Publishing Committee, December 29, 1931).⁵⁹

How does one come by these books if they are needed for investigating the truth? There is no option but to use specific hand-picked documents that have been distributed by the Universal House of Justice. The rest of the Baha'i scripture is safeguarded in the Baha'i Archives in Haifa and other than a privileged few, no one has access to them. The following letter from the Universal House of Justice to an unnamed Baha'i shows the sheer amount of unpublished documents that are being safeguarded in these archives:

⁵⁸ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXVIII, no. 1431.

⁵⁹ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXVIII, no. 1435.

The Universal House of Justice Department of the Secretariat Transmitted by email
6 June 2013

Dear Bahā'ī Friend,

Your email letter dated 3 April 2013 requesting statistics concerning the Sacred Texts has been received at the Bahā'ī World Centre and forwarded to the Research Department for study. That Department notes that the collection and collation of the Sacred Writings is an ongoing process, and the numbers are continually being revised. The estimates of the numbers of unique works can be given as follows:

For Bahā'ullāh, nearly 20,000 unique works have been identified. Most of these Writings have been collected; however, 865 are known to have been revealed, but the texts are not available. Close to 15,000 of the collected works have been authenticated by the Archives Office to date.

For the Bāb, over 2,000 unique works have been identified. Most of these Writings have been collected; however, 74 are known to have been revealed, but the texts are not available. Nearly 1,600 of the collected works have been authenticated.

For 'Abdu'l-Bahā, over 30,000 unique works have been identified. All of these Writings have been collected and over 27,000 of them have been authenticated.

For Shoghi Effendi, over 22,000 unique works have been identified. All of these documents have been collected and the majority of them have been authenticated.

It is estimated that approximately ten per cent of the documents described above are in photocopied form. A fraction of the total numbers of unique works have been published in the original languages or translated into Western languages. However, citing exact numbers would be misleading since much of the unpublished and untranslated material consists of day-to-day correspondence and personal guidance and encouragement, which is less likely to be of general interest. The World Centre is actively pursuing a publication programme for the as yet unpublished major works of the Central Figures of the Faith and Shoghi Effendi.

With loving Bahā'ī greetings,
Department of the Secretariat⁶⁰

These documents are the most important source for investigating the truth for Baha'is and non-Baha'is alike. Why have these works not been published and why are researchers not granted access to them? The first excuse is "much of the unpublished and untranslated material consists of day-to-day correspondence and personal guidance and encouragement, which is less likely to be of general interest." This is unacceptable. Would these works not be invaluable in following the first principle of seeking the truth? Surely there are many people out there who would love to read these works and would definitely receive guidance and insight from them. Is this not a disguise to withhold these Tablets from the public?

The second excuse is "The World Centre is actively pursuing a publication programme for the as yet unpublished major works of the Central Figures of the Faith." It goes without saying that the task of publishing such a large amount of articles and tablets is a very time consuming task and would require much money and manpower. Thus, one would expect these articles to be published sometime in the future⁶¹ when these resources are supplied. Sixteen years ago (1998) Professor Juan Cole brought up some interesting points in this regard:

⁶⁰ http://bahai-library.com/uhj_numbers_sacred_writings (retrieved 28/2/2014)

If translating and making available the writings of Bahā'u'llāh were in fact any sort of priority of the Universal House of Justice, they have enormous resources with which to do so. (Anyone who can spend $250 million⁶² on building works has the money for other projects, as well). They have simply decided to expend their resources on other things. I once saw in a library a big set of books, The Collected Works of Sri Aurobindo in Bengali with English translations. Aurobindo was a 20th century Indian holy man. But his followers managed to get his complete collected works not only published but also translated, not long after his death. Aurobindo's following is tiny and poor compared to that of the Bahā'īs. That only about 5% of Bahā'u'llāh's works have been translated is not an unfortunate side effect of lack of resources in the Bahā'īs community. It is a deliberate decision to invest the money in things like monumental architecture instead.⁶³

According to Professor Cole, the resources to distribute these works are available but the UHJ is deliberately diverting them elsewhere. Today, it has become clear that this is not the case. Rather, it is evident that the UHJ simply does not want to publish these works. Since at least 1993, most, if not all of these works had been digitized, typed, and placed in a database:

⁶¹ As shown throughout this book, problematic matters are usually passed to the future in order to silence criticism. In many cases, this unspecified future has not materialized even decades after it was promised.

⁶² He is referring to the cost of building the Baha'i World Center.

⁶³ http://bahai-library.com/uhj_lawh_huriyyih_cole

To assist the House of Justice in referring to the wealth of guidance and teachings contained in the Bahā'ī Writings, a computer database is used which contains descriptions of every Tablet and every letter of Shoghi Effendi, together with a typed copy of the text of each document. In the near future images of the original documents will also be stored in the computer, making it unnecessary to refer to the original items.⁶⁴

If the UHJ had the slightest intention of distributing these writings, they could have easily placed the database on an internet server, or distributed it as a DVD. The UHJ simply does not want the public to have access to these files. What other explanation could there be for someone to hide the illuminating, enlightening, and guiding words of a claimant to Prophethood, but only distributing a few selected Tablets?

So how exactly are truth seekers supposed to investigate the truth and abandon imitations? They are prohibited from direct contact from those who have left Baha'ism or criticize it. They are discouraged from reading their writings because they are haters of light. Unauthorized pilgrim's notes are considered unreliable, even if they are true. And on top of this all, the vast majority of the original Baha'i sources remained locked up in the Baha'i Archives. There are simply no remaining ways to investigate this religion in an unbiased manner. Ironically, the same creed that has prevents and discourages its followers from investigating the truth and deprives them of the means to do so, prides itself in being an advocate of investigating the truth.

4- If Investigating the Truth Means You Have to Question the Official Baha'is Stance on a Subject You Will Be Shunned

Suppose someone uses the limited means at hand to investigate the truth about Baha'ism and, based on his investigation, reaches a conclusion that goes against official doctrine. If this conclusion is publically announced, that person will be shunned. For instance if someone opposes the guardian, they must be shunned and no excuse must be accepted from them. `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

⁶⁴ This is a section of a pamphlet inserted in `Andalib magazine, 12:48 (Fall 1993).

The Hands of the Cause of God must be ever watchful and so soon as they find anyone beginning to oppose and protest against the Guardian of the Cause of God, cast him out from the congregation of the people of Bahā and in no wise accept any excuse from him. How often hath grievous error been disguised in the garb of truth, that it might sow the seeds of doubt in the hearts of men!⁶⁵

Ironically, the same `Abdu'l-Bahā that gives the order to expel his coreligionists says:

Kindness brings about life, separation brings about death.⁶⁶

This law is not limited to those that oppose or protest the Guardian. Shoghi, and subsequently the UHJ, have shunned many people because they deemed their words or actions inappropriate, even when they were based on the truth.

Today, there are a number of prominent Baha'i academics who have either been kicked out of the Baha'i community or have left it themselves after they protested the actions of the UHJ or their investigations showed facts contrary to what the UHJ was propagating. People such as Professor Juan Cole, Dr. Linda Walbridge, Dr. Firouz Anarki, Sen McGlinn, and Frederick Glaysher are only a few of these individuals.

⁶⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990), p. 12.

⁶⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol.1, p. 153.

If people must independently investigate the truth then why are they kicked out of the Baha'i community and shunned when they do so?

5- Distorting Baha'i scripture

The greatest obstacle in the path of investigating the truth is not hiding the material that can be used to do so, rather, it is deceiving the investigator by distorting and creating an inverted image of the truth.

Unfortunately, Baha'is actively engage in this act. The initiator of this act was Bahā'u'llāh himself who changed the original text of the book of Īqān once it was found that he had made multiple grammatical and Quranic mistakes in it. He had also forged and distorted a number of Islamic narrations to falsely prove that the Bāb was the Mahdi of Islam. `Abdu'l-Bahā followed his father's footsteps and even distorted the Quran to prove that minerals are alive and have a spirit! We will analyze these in chapter 4.

Other forms of this act can be seen in deleting or changing problematic subjects in new editions of books. For instance, the Tablet of the Maiden (lauḥ Ḥūrīyyah) which described Bahā'u'llāh sexually fondling the Holy Spirit was removed from the fourth volume of Āthār-i Qalam-i A'ālā in later editions.⁶⁷

After the death of Shoghi, once it became clear that Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's prophecies about the Guardianship were incorrect, a number of Baha'i books and texts which spoke about the responsibilities of the Guardian were distorted. In the new versions of these texts, the Guardians responsibilities were transferred to the Universal House of Justice! For instance, in the fifth edition of Aḥmad Yazdānī's Nazar-i ijmālī dar diyarat-i Bahā'ī that was published by the Baha'i Publishing Trust of Iran in 129 B., distortions can be seen on pages 31 and 105 that speak about the institution responsible for resolving differences amongst Baha'is and also the recipient of Ḥuqūq Allah.

⁶⁷ The undistorted version can be found here: <http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/baha/A-F/A/aqa4/aqa4.htm>

Vance Salisbury, in his article A Critical Examination of 20th-Century Baha'i Literature,⁶⁸ points to many other distortions of this kind. He brings up many interesting subjects. For instance, he refers to another unfulfilled prophecy from `Abdu'l-Bahā that was later removed from Esslemont's book:

Perhaps the most important change in Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era was made on page 212 of the 1923 edition. Recorded as a Bahā'ī prophecy concerning the "Coming of the Kingdom of God," Esslemont cited Abdu'l-Bahā's interpretation of the last two verses of the Book of Daniel from the Bible. He stated that the 1335 days spoken of by Daniel represented 1335 solar years from Muhammad's flight to Medina in 622 A.D., which would equal 1957 A.D.. When asked "'What shall we see at the end of the 1335 days?'," Abdu'l-Bahā's reply was: "'Universal Peace will be firmly established, a Universal language promoted. Misunderstandings will pass away. The Bahā'ī Cause will be promulgated in all parts and the oneness of mankind established. It will be most glorious!'" In editions published after his death, Esslemont's words have been changed to say that Abdu'l-Bahā "reckoned the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy from the date of the beginning of the Muhammadan era" and one of Abdu'l-Bahā's Tablets is quoted on the same subject in which he writes, "'For according to this calculation a century will have elapsed from the dawn of the Sun of Truth . . . Esslemont recorded Abdu'l-Bahā as declaring explicitly that the prophecy was to be computed from the Hijra or 622 A.D. and that specific conditions would exist in the world upon its fulfillment in 1957. When it became apparent that this Bahā'ī prophecy would not be fulfilled, it was replaced with the ambiguous material which has remained in the text to the present."

⁶⁸ http://bahai-library.com/salisbury_critical_examination_literature (retrieved 22/2/2014)

Another form of distortion can be seen in translating Baha'i texts to English. For instance, in one his Tablets, Bahā'u'llāh refers to the Bāb's order of beheading non-Bābīs. This has been translated to shedding blood in the official Baha'i translation.⁶⁹ In another instance, Bahā'u'llāh gives the order to hit a kebob seller in the mouth. His order is executed and one of Bahā'u'llāh's followers grabs hold of the poor man's beard and starts hitting him in the head. In the translated version of this story there is no reference to hitting. These examples and similar ones can be found with more explanations in chapter 9.

6- Investigating the Truth or Proselytizing to Illiterate Masses That Have No Means of Investigating the Truth

Baha'is actively engage in proselytizing missions that are utterly against the investigation of truth. In these campaigns— that continue with great force today—illiterate masses in third world countries that have no means of investigating the truth whatsoever, are converted to Baha'ism under the disguise of education and humanitarian relief. Moojan Momen, the prominent Baha'i author, explains this by writing:

Missionary endeavour on the part of Middle Eastern and Western Bahā'īs had led to the establishment of Bahā'ī communities in several parts of the non-Muslim 'Third World', initially among the Western-oriented urban minority. Conversions of larger numbers began in a few isolated areas in the 1950s and spread during the 1960s to most parts of the 'Third World'. The results were dramatic. As Bahā'ī teachers learned to adapt their message and missionary techniques to the situation of the unschooled masses of Third World peasants and urban workers, they completely transformed their religion's social base. Now, the great majority of Bahā'īs in the world are drawn from the popular classes of the non-⁶⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

Islamic Third World. Even in the well-established Bahā'ī communities of North America, recent infusions of minority group members (Blacks and Amerindians) has led to a significant change in the social base of the membership . . . By the late 1960s, a great increase in the number of Bahā'īs had occurred. Conversions of large numbers of tribal or peasant peoples in various parts of the Third World had begun . . . Most of the flood of new Bahā'īs were poorly educated, and many lived in rural and tribal areas with which effective communication was difficult to sustain.⁷⁰

Baha'i missionaries would convert people from undeveloped countries who lacked the tools and means of investigating the truth to Baha'ism. This resulted in the twenty-fold increase of the Baha'i population in about 30 years.⁷¹ Is there any pride in this attitude, especially from a creed that claims all people must be given the chance to independently investigate the truth?

7- How Baha'is Investigate the Truth From Childhood

What most Baha'is do not know today, is that 'Abdu'l-Bahā had prohibited his followers from sending their children to non-Baha'i schools. It was because of this order that Baha'i schools like Madrisiy-i Tarbiyat were established in Tehran:

It is absolutely prohibited for the children of the friends to go to the schools of others (meaning non-Baha'is) for this is [a cause of] humiliation (dhillat) for the Cause of God and they will be completely deprived of the Blessed Beauty's graces.

⁷⁰ P. Smith, M. Momen, The Baha'i faith 1957–1988: A survey of contemporary developments, Religion 19 (1989), pp. 63–91: http://bahai-library.com/momen_smith_developments_1957-1988 (retrieved 28/2/2014)

⁷¹ See the table in the same article.

Because they will be educated/nurtured elsewhere and they will disgrace the Baha'is.⁷²

`Abdu'l-Bahā prohibits his followers in the strictest sense and using threatening language from sending their children to non-Baha'i schools. Apparently, Baha'i children must be prevented from learning anything non-Baha'i while they are still in an age in which they cannot decide for themselves about what is right and wrong. They must be induced to think that the Baha'i creed is the only source of salvation for mankind and its teachings are unique and better than all other teachings. When these children grow up, they will be biased towards the Baha'i creed and their investigation of the truth will be influenced by the teachings that have been firmly established in their minds since childhood.

8- Investigating the Truth a Crime for Israeli Citizens

For reasons still unknown, Bahā'u'llāh had prohibited his followers from teaching Baha'ism to the people of Israel. In a letter dated 23/6/1995 the Universal House of Justice replies to an individual believer:

The Universal House of Justice has received your email message dated 29 June 1995 and we have been asked to respond.

You have asked how the policy of not teaching Israelis applies in the situation in which you have contact with an Israeli via an "interactive relay chat" (IRC) connection. The House of Justice has not asked the friends to avoid contact with Israelis. When you discover that a person you are in contact with via IRC is an Israeli, you should feel free to maintain friendly contact, but you should not teach the Faith to him. If he has already developed a personal interest in the ⁷² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (probably Tehran: n.p., n.d.), vol. 5, p. 170.

Faith and seeks more information, you should refer him to the Offices of the Bahā'ī World Centre in Haifa.

For your information, the people in Israel have access to factual information about the Faith, its history and general principles. Books concerning the Faith are available in libraries throughout Israel, and Israelis are welcome to visit the Shrines and the surrounding gardens. However, in keeping with a policy that has been strictly followed since the days of Bahā'u'llāh, Bahā'īs do not teach the Faith in Israel. Likewise, the Faith is not taught to Israelis abroad if they intend to return to Israel. When Israelis ask about the Faith, their questions are answered, but this is done in a manner which provides factual information without stimulating further interest.

With loving Bahā'ī greetings,
Department of the Secretariat⁷³

This order is quite puzzling in light of the principle of the independent investigation of truth. Why should a specific group of people be deprived of the right of learning and embracing the truth?

⁷³ http://bahai-library.com/uhj_teaching_in_israel (retrieved 8/3/2014)

Is This Principle Correct from a Rational and Logical Perspective?

Seeking the truth is most definitely logical, and reasonable; blind imitation is also an inappropriate and irrational action. But just as was determined in the second perspective, this principle is not exclusive to Baha'ism.

Seeking the truth and accepting what is right is an innate matter. This concept is a fundamental basis of the Shi'a Islamic belief which Bahā'u'llāh had firm belief in for years before he founded the Baha'i creed. A glance at the teachings of the Quran can reveal the origins of this so-called novel Baha'i principle. The Quran constantly invites humans to find what is right, go after knowledge, use their reason, and forbids them from blind imitation of their fathers and ancestors. The Prophet of Islam strictly recommended pondering and seeking the truth using reason and intellect when making a decision in regards to fundamental issues of belief.

It is stated in the Quran:

And when it is said to them, "Follow what God has revealed," they say, "Rather, we will follow that which we found our fathers doing." Even though their fathers understood nothing, nor were they guided.⁷⁴

⁷⁴ Quran 2:170.

The Quran not only prohibits people from blindly imitating their fathers and ancestors, but also warns about blind imitation of influential groups in society:

And they will say, “Our Lord, indeed we obeyed our masters and our dignitaries, and they led us astray from the [right] way.”⁷⁵

But, what if an imitation is not blind and unreasonable? If a person, finds a wise human whose actions, behavior, and do’s and don’ts are logical and rational, should that person not be followed?

Is imitating the exercise form of a professional athlete wrong or unreasonable? Is referring to a specialist in every field, following their advice, and making use of their guidelines unreasonable?

Reason dictates that every person must research about the fundamentals of their religious beliefs. A person must personally do research and be committed to their religious principles and beliefs based on knowledge and reason. This principle is different from the incorrect belief of certain Sufi cults⁷⁶ that call their followers to blindly obey them and prevent them from thinking and contemplation.

Despite the external appearance of rejecting imitation completely, Baha’is have many decrees and orders that they all must imitate and follow. For example, one can refer to the book of Aqdas—the most important book in the Baha’i creed—and the book Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkāṁ whose do’s and don’ts all Baha’is are obligated to submit to.

⁷⁵ Quran, 33:67.

⁷⁶ Bābism which is the basis of Baha’ism was itself greatly influenced by Sufi beliefs. The influence of Sufi beliefs can still be seen in the Baha’i scripture.

Is acting on the decrees and orders of the Aqdas not considered imitation? Is it not an imitation when `Abdu'l-Bahā orders Baha'is to submit to the decisions made by the Universal House of Justice (UHJ)?⁷⁷

Baha'is typically respond to these questions by claiming that the meaning of putting aside imitations, is imitations in undesired things, not any form of imitation! In response to this, it must be said that:

Firstly, in no part of this principle is there a distinction between desirable and undesirable imitations. In fact, evidence shows that the meaning of this principle is imitations in general.

Secondly, if this is indeed the case, then all this publicity is absurd, for not only do all religions and creeds deem blind imitation as undesirable, but all the wise people in the world believe and agree on this. So this principle cannot be considered as a novel, new discovery that sets Baha'ism apart from all previous religions and philosophies.

Baha'is respond to the abovementioned argument by saying that it is true that all religions condemn blind imitations, but the important thing is to act upon this principle, for "all nations are perfect in their sayings."⁷⁸

Using this criterion, how are we to judge Bahā'u'llāh's orders to become blind and deaf⁷⁹ and to close the ears from hearing the words of the critics of Baha'ism? Is the fact that no Baha'i has the right to openly question the orders of the UHJ, and as soon as they start protesting and do not accept the justifications brought forward by other Baha'is, they should be excommunicated and expelled from the community, a sign of seeking the truth and acting upon it?

⁷⁷ "The affairs of the nation are connected to the men of the divine House of Justice . . . everyone must obey [them]. Everyone's political affairs must be referred to the House of Justice," Bahā'u'llāh, Ishrāqāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar (n.p.: n.p., n.d.), p.79.

⁷⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 127–128.

⁷⁹ "Become blind so that you see my face, become deaf so that you hear my pleasant tone and voice, become ignorant . . ." Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyiyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb, pp. 427–428.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”⁸⁰

⁸⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is the Principle of Investigating the Truth New?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Investigating the truth is a new principle.⁸¹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Seeking the truth is the foundation of all the Prophets.⁸²

2. What Is Bahā’u’llāh’s First Principle?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Bahā’u’llāh’s first principle is investigating the truth.⁸³

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Bahā’u’llāh’s first principle is the oneness of humanity.⁸⁴

⁸¹ “Another new principle revealed by Bahā’u’llāh is the injunction to investigate truth—that is to say, no man should blindly follow his ancestors and forefathers. Nay, each must see with his own eyes, hear with his own ears and investigate the truth himself in order that he may follow the truth instead of blind acquiescence and imitation of ancestral beliefs,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

⁸² “His Highness Moses spread the truth as did his Highness Jesus and his Highness Abraham and his Highness the Messenger (meaning the Prophet Muḥammad) and his Highness the Bāb and his Highness Bahā’u’llāh. They all established and spread the truth,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 5; “The foundation of all the Prophets . . . is truth, and the truth is one. His Highness Abraham was the harbinger of truth. His Highness Moses was the servant of truth. His Highness Christ was the establisher of truth. His Highness Muḥammad was the propagator of truth. His Highness A’lā (meaning the Bāb) was the herald of truth, and his Highness Bahā’u’llāh, was the light of truth,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 55; “The foundation of the divine religions is one. It is one truth, it is one spirit, it is one light, and it does not have a multitude. Among the foundations of the divine religion is seeking the truth [so] that the whole of humanity seeks the truth,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 66.

⁸³ “Bahā’u’llāh’s first principle is the seeking of the truth. Man must seek the truth and set aside imitations,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 144.

⁸⁴ “His first teaching is the Oneness of the World of Humanity,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 5.

3. Are Non-Baha'is Ignorant and without Reason?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: One must not label people as being ignorant.⁸⁵

Bahā’u’llāh: Whoever does not become a Baha’i is among the most ignorant of the people, even if he has mastery over all sciences.⁸⁶

Whoever does not become a Baha’i has no reason even if he thinks he does.⁸⁷ Whoever denies my teachings completely lacks reason.⁸⁸

⁸⁵ “The divine principles in this luminous era are such that one must not insult anyone or attribute them to ignorance [by saying] that you do not know and I know. Rather, one must view everyone from a respectful perspective and must speak and argue from the viewpoint of seeking the truth. [They must say] come, there are several issues at hand, so let us seek the truth, and see how and why [it is so]. The missionary must not consider himself wise and others as ignorant. This thought will result in arrogance, and arrogance causes a lack of effectiveness; instead, one must not see any merit in himself and must speak with the maximum extent of kindness, humility, and humbleness. This kind of expression will be effective,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 1, p. 355.

⁸⁶ “If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word ‘yes’ (meaning does not become a Baha’i), the Lord will not pay attention to him (ladī l-Ḥaqq madhkūr na) and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people,” Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111; “From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha’is),” Bahā’u’llāh, Badī’, pp. 138–139.

⁸⁷ “The general criterion is what we mentioned and any soul who has success in it, meaning recognizes and realizes the Sunrise of Manifestation (meaning himself), will be mentioned in the Divine Book as someone who possesses reason or else he will be (mentioned as) ignorant even if he himself thinks that his reason equals that of the whole world,” ‘Abd a l-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā’idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 160.

⁸⁸ “No one has denied or will deny what has been revealed by the Ancient Pen (meaning himself) in this Most Great Manifestation regarding society, unity, manners, rites, and being occupied with what has benefits for the people, except that he completely lacks reason,” Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 168.

4. Can the Recognition of God Be Obtained through Intellect?

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: Reason was created for the purpose of recognizing God.⁸⁹ Recognize God by using reason and narrations.⁹⁰

Bahā'u'llāh: Recognition cannot be obtained by the use of reason.⁹¹

5. Should We Investigate or Accept without Any Questions?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: A person who is fair, will investigate and do research to seek the truth.⁹²

Bahā'u'llāh: Accept my words without any questions or comparison with someone else's words.⁹³

⁸⁹ "The first grace that has been bestowed on the human body is reason and its purpose is the recognition of the Truth (meaning God) Exalted be His Glory," Bahā'u'llāh, Muntakhabāt az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, p. 127. The official Baha'i translation reads: "First and foremost among these favors, which the Almighty hath conferred upon man, is the gift of understanding. His purpose in conferring such a gift is none other except to enable His creature to know and recognize the one true God—exalted be His glory," Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 194.

⁹⁰ "If you seek the recognition of God (`irfān ilāhī) . . . refer to the arguments (put forward by) reason and narrations," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 8, pp. 119 -120.

⁹¹ "Know that today, that which has reached your reason or will reach it, or is perceived by the reasons of [those with intellects] superior or inferior to yours, none are the criterion for recognizing the Truth (meaning God) and will never be," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 286.

⁹² "Those who are fair will examine, research and inquire. This examination and inquiry will result in their guidance . . . they say: 'We will go and see, and we will investigate the truth,'" `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol.1, p. 189.

⁹³ "No pleasure has been created in the world greater than listening to the verses [brought by Bahā'u'llāh] and understanding their meanings and not objecting to or questioning any of the words and comparing them with the words of others," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 145.

6. Investigating the Truth: Only for Non-Baha'is

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Different religions should listen to the words of other religions. Perhaps, what is right is with them.⁹⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: Even if someone criticizes Baha'ism with proof, do not listen.⁹⁵

7. Should Baha'is See and Hear or Become Blind and Deaf?

Bahā'u'llāh: Research and listen with your own ears and see with your own eyes.⁹⁶

Bahā'u'llāh: When I speak become deaf, blind, and ignorant and blindly accept my words.⁹⁷

⁹⁴ “The followers of Moses (i.e. Jews) have imitations (taqālīd), Zoroastrians have imitations, Christians have imitations, Buddhists have imitations, and every nation has imitations [and] thinks that its imitations are correct and the imitations of others are invalid. For example, the followers of Moses believe that their imitations are correct and the imitations of others are invalid. We want to find out which [imitations] are correct. [Obviously] not all imitations are correct. If we stick to an imitation it will prevent us from correctly investigating other [religions] imitations. For example, a Jewish person cannot understand that other [religions] are correct because he believes and sticks to the imitations of Judaism. Therefore, he must put aside the imitations and seek the truth and [think that] perhaps others might be right. Thus, until imitations are not put aside, the truth will not become manifest,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p.17 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā').

⁹⁵ ““Therefore, it is incumbent upon all the friends of God to shun any person in whom they perceive the emanation of hatred for the Glorious Beauty of Abhā, though he may quote all the Heavenly Utterances and cling to all the Books.” He continues—Glorious be His Name!—‘Protect yourselves with utmost vigilance, lest you be entrapped in the snare of deception and fraud. This is the advice of the Pen of Destiny,’ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), pp. 430–431.

⁹⁶ “When humans attain the rank of [religious] maturity they must investigate . . . and [they] must hear and see with their own ears and eyes,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p.11 (citing Bahā'u'llāh).

⁹⁷ “Become blind so that you see my face, become deaf so that you hear my pleasant tone and voice, become ignorant so that you get a share of my knowledge, and become poor so that you can take an everlasting portion from the sea of my eternal riches. ‘Become blind’ means [see] nothing but my beauty and ‘become deaf’ means [hear] nothing but my words and ‘become ignorant’ means [have no knowledge] but my knowledge, so that with a pure eye and clean heart and fine ear you come to my sanctified realm,” Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb, pp. 427–428.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is “Seeking the truth and setting aside imitations,” a new principle?

In the books of the Zoroastrians, the Jews, the Christians, and Muslims, people are invited to seek and accept the truth and are forbidden from blind imitations. It is evident that this principle is not novel.

2) Did the leaders of Baha’ism act upon this principle?

Bahā’u’llāh ordered his followers to blindly imitate him, the UHJ actively prevents the investigation of the truth by withholding or distorting Baha’i scripture, and Baha’i missionaries proselytize to groups that have no means of investigating the truth. It is obvious that Baha’is do not adhere to this principle.

3) Are these principles, reasonable and logical?

Investigating the truth is reasonable but putting aside imitations is not always a good thing. For instance, referring to experts and specialists in a certain field and imitating them, is not problematic, but rather, it is confirmed by common sense and logic.

CHAPTER 2:

The Oneness of Humanity

“The second principle is the Oneness of Humanity: all humans are divine sheep and God is the kind shepherd who has utter compassion towards all the sheep and has made no distinction [between them].”⁹⁸

⁹⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 67.

The definition of the Oneness of Humanity is that all people are brothers, sisters, daughters, mothers, sons, and fathers of each other, and must have no enmity towards one another.

Bahā'u'llāh says:

Oh friends! Know that the curtain of unity has been raised, do not look at each other as strangers; you are all the fruits of one tree and the leaves of one branch.⁹⁹

⁹⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 265.

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The second principle of Bahā'u'llāh is the Oneness of Humanity. All of humanity are members of the human species. They are all servants of God. They have all been created by God. They are all divine children. God gives sustenance to all of them; nurtures all of them; is compassionate to all of them; why should we be uncompassionate? . . . The human species are all in the shadow of the Lord's Grace. At most some are imperfect and must be perfected, [some] are ignorant and must be taught, [some] are sick and must be treated, [and some] are asleep and must be awakened. We should not be angry at an infant for being an infant. We should nurture him. We should not be angry at a sick person for not being healthy. We should have the greatest amount of mercy and kindness toward him. From these [examples] it is apparent that the enmity between religions should be completely wiped out; oppression and injustice should be removed, and instead, the greatest amount of kindness and affection should flow.¹⁰⁰

According to Shoghi Effendi, the central axis of all Baha'i principles, and the ultimate goal of Baha'ism is the "Oneness of Humanity."¹⁰¹
`Abdu'l-Bahā narrates from Bahā'u'llāh:

The Oneness of Humanity means that the entirety of humanity is subject to the blessings of [God] the Great and Glorious. They are the servants of one God and nurtured by ¹⁰⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 145–146.

¹⁰¹ "The principle of Oneness of Humanity is the axis of all of Bahā'u'llāh's teachings" and "The Oneness of Humanity is the main and ultimate goal of Bahā'u'llāh's creed," Hūshmand Fath A'zam, Naẓm jahānī Bahā'ī muntakhabātī az āthār ṣādiri az qalam ḥaḍrat walī amr Allāh, 2nd ed. (Dundas [Canada]: n.p., 151 B. [1955]), pp. 49 and 57–58.

his Highness, the Lord. Everyone is included in the mercy and the crown of humanity is the jewel of every head.¹⁰²

He emphasizes:

This means that Bahā'u'llāh declared the Oneness of Humanity so all members of humanity become brothers, sisters, daughters, mothers, sons, and fathers of each other.¹⁰³

Bahā'is claim that all people are part of God's creation. Skin color, beauty, and looks are no reason for the superiority of someone over another and must not be a cause of conflict and enmity. Instead, these differences are like the differences among the colors and types of flowers in a large field, which cause the field to flourish.¹⁰⁴ In the presence of God, Turks, Persians, Whites, and Blacks are all the same, and none have any distinction over another.¹⁰⁵ God is kind to all, so why should we not be kind to each other?¹⁰⁶

¹⁰² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 31.

¹⁰³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 154.

¹⁰⁴ "Consider the flowers of a garden," `Abdu'l-Bahā has written, 'though differing in kind, color, form, and shape, yet, inasmuch as they are refreshed by the waters of one spring, revived by the breath of one wind, invigorated by the rays of one sun, this diversity increaseth their charm, and addeth unto their beauty. How unpleasing to the eye if all the flowers and plants, the leaves and blossoms, the fruits, the branches and the trees of that garden were all of the same shape and color! Diversity of hues, form and shape, enricheth and adorneth the garden, and heighteneth the effect thereof,'" Shoghi Effendi, The Advent of Divine Justice (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990 [first pocket-size edition]), p. 54.

¹⁰⁵ "In the presence of God there is no [such thing] as English, French, Turk, or Persian. To God they are all the same," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 45–46 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā'); "God, `Abdu'l-Bahā Himself declares, 'maketh no distinction between the white and the black. If the hearts are pure both are acceptable unto Him. God is no respecter of persons on account of either color or race. All colors are acceptable unto Him, be they white, black, or yellow,'" Shoghi Effendi, The Advent of Divine Justice, p. 37.

¹⁰⁶ "All of humanity are members of the human species. They are all servants of God. They have all been created by God. They are all divine children. God gives sustenance to all of them; nurtures all of them; is compassionate to all of them; why should we be uncompassionate?" `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 145–146.

The following questions should be kept in mind while analyzing this principle:

1. What is the explicit meaning of the 'Oneness of Humanity'? Does the Oneness of Humanity mean that people of all races and religions should become sisters, brothers, and friends or does it mean everyone should convert to Baha'ism?
2. If the former definition applies and everyone—regardless of religion or creed—should live in peace and harmony, then why do Baha'i orders imply the contrary (as we will soon show)?
3. If the meaning of the 'Oneness of Humanity' is that all people must become Baha'is, then who will be responsible for administering the political matters of this unified Baha'i society, given that under Baha'i law, no Baha'i is allowed to interfere in political matters, either in words or in action?¹⁰⁷
4. Do Baha'is have a particular plan for reaching the 'Oneness of Humanity' or is this merely a theoretical slogan?

¹⁰⁷ "Whoever interferes in political affairs is not a Baha'i," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 70, titled "Refraining From Interfering in Political Affairs," p. 336.

Is the Oneness of Humanity a New Principle?

Is this principle something new? Had it not been heard before the Baha'is declared it?

If this principle means that God is the creator of all humans, that Adam and Eve are the father and mother of all people, and that God wishes that all persons be inclined towards goodness, then this is not a new belief nor a novel teaching.

For example these two verses from the Quran invite all people to oneness and show that color, ethnicity, and gender are not means of superiority:

O mankind, indeed We have created you from male and female and made you peoples and tribes that you may know one another. Indeed, the most noble of you in the sight of Allah is the most righteous of you. Indeed, Allah is Knowing and Acquainted.¹⁰⁸

And hold firmly to the rope of Allah all together and do not become divided.¹⁰⁹

When most Iranians hear the phrase 'The Oneness of Humanity,' they are reminded of Sa'di's famous poem:

¹⁰⁸ Quran (Sahih International), 49:13.

¹⁰⁹ Quran, 3:103

Human beings are members of a whole
In creation of one essence and soul

If one member is afflicted with pain
Other members uneasy will remain.

This poem was composed in the 13th century, hundreds of years before Bahā'u'llāh was born. So it seems this Baha'i principle is nothing novel or new. In fact, 'Abdu'l-Bahā' confesses that this teaching existed in all Divine Religions:

The foundation laid by all Prophets, is the foundation of Bahā'u'llāh and that foundation is the Oneness of Humanity. That foundation is general compassion; that foundation is universal peace between governments.¹¹⁰

All Divine Prophets struggled for the Oneness of Humanity and served humanity, for the foundation of the divine teachings is the Oneness of Humanity. Moses served the Oneness of Humanity, Jesus established the Oneness of Humanity, Mohammad declared the Oneness of Humanity. The Bible, Torah, and Quran established the foundation of the Oneness of Humanity. The law of God is one and the religion of God is one and that is affection and kindness. His Highness, Bahā'u'llāh, renewed the teachings of the prophets.¹¹¹

Consider history. What has brought unity to nations, morality to peoples and benefits to mankind? If we reflect upon it, we will find that establishing the divine religions has been the greatest means toward accomplishing the oneness of humanity . . . The divine religions are collective centers in ¹¹⁰ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 286.

¹¹¹ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

which diverse standpoints may meet, agree and unify. They accomplish oneness of native lands, races and policies. For instance, Christ united various nations, brought peace to warring peoples and established the oneness of humankind.¹¹²

`Abdu'l-Bahā clearly announces with great emphasis that Moses, Jesus, and Muhammad all invited people to the Oneness of Humanity. He is clearly confessing that this teaching is not new. Despite this, at other times he uttered the contrary and claimed that the previous Prophets divided humanity and it was only Baha'u'llah that proclaimed the Oneness of Humanity:

In all religious teachings of the past the human world has been represented as divided into two parts: one known as the people of the Book of God, or the pure tree, and the other the people of infidelity and error, or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful, and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel—one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy, and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. Bahā'u'llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity, and this principle is specialized in His teachings, for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity.¹¹³

Unfortunately, as will be demonstrated in the next section, `Abdu'l-Bahā continuously changed his words depending on the audience he was preaching to.

¹¹² `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 158.

¹¹³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

Did the Founders of Baha'ism Believe in the Oneness of Humanity?

Baha'i scripture is replete with violations of this principle. These violations are sometimes so blatant that one reaches the conclusion that this principle should be referred to as the 'noneness' of humanity.

1- Black Africans are All Like Wild Savages and Land Dwelling Animals:

`Abdu'l-Bahā had quite an interesting view about black Africans. He claimed that wise people believe that:

The inhabitants of a land like Africa are all like wild savages and land-dwelling animals that lack common-sense and knowledge and are all wild. There is not a single wise and civilized person among them.¹¹⁴

Perhaps some will point out that this statement was not `Abdu'l-Bahā's personal opinion, but only a recounting of what the wise think. The words that he uttered after this sentence clearly show that he too believed in these words:

¹¹⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 331.

On the other hand, they (meaning the wise) show that in civilized countries all the people have the best manners, fine conduct, assistance, collaboration, and perception; and except for a small minority, possess commonsense. Thus it is shown and clarified that the elevation and degradation of intellect and perception is due to nurturing and education, or its absence.¹¹⁵

`Abdu'l-Bahā recounted the opinion of the so-called 'wise' to prove a concept he was explaining. If he did not believe in these words, then why didn't he refute them? Using them as evidence of his beliefs regarding nurturing and education, without any negation or reprove, shows that he also accepts this opinion of the 'wise'.

Furthermore, what `Abdu'l-Bahā is attributing to the wise is a statement that he has made up himself and has no basis. To date no piece of evidence has been put forward to support these words. No wise person has claimed that all Africans are like wild savages and animals without common-sense.

Furthermore, other examples of his beliefs about Africans, leaves no room for doubt that `Abdu'l-Bahā sees them as animals. He believes that the black Africans that have not been nurtured or educated are cows that God has made look like humans:

The wild tribes have no superiority over animals. For example, what is the difference between African blacks and American blacks? The [black Africans] are cows that God has created with human faces. The [black Americans] are civilized, intelligent, and have culture. In this trip to the black centers, schools, and churches in Washington there were extensive talks with the blacks, and they understood all the points like the intelligent people in Europe. So what difference is there between these two types of blacks other than nurture, with one in utter ignorance and the other in the peak of civilization?¹¹⁶

¹¹⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 331.

This is quite regretful; the same people who made claims about the Oneness of Humanity, brotherhood, and equality think like this about their fellow humans, not in the Dark Ages, but in the 20th century!

Even though this type of thinking and rhetoric is by no means justifiable, defenders of Baha'ism insist that `Abdu'l-Bahā used these words as a reminder for proper upbringing and nurturing; and meant that black Africans are cows because they had not been brought up correctly, otherwise if they had the proper upbringing, they too, like black Americans and intelligent Europeans, would become civilized. This reasoning would have been correct if `Abdu'l-Bahā had used different words to describe black Africans. Unfortunately, `Abdu'l-Bahā specifically points to their essence of creation and says khalq Allah al-baqar `alā šūrat al-bashar which means "cows that God has created with human faces." In any case, the words used to describe black Africans are in no manner appropriate for someone who claims to be the successor to a divine figure.

In light of these claims, `Abdu'l-Bahā statements proclaiming that God has made no distinction between people are a clear contradiction:

The God of the world created all [humans] from clay and created everyone from one element, created all from one progeny, created all in one land, and created [all] under the shadow of one sky, has created them with common emotions, and did not put any differences. He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy.¹¹⁷

¹¹⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 3, p. 48.

¹¹⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42.

How is it that `Abdu'l-Bahā claims that God has “put no differences in any grace or mercy” but insists that wild tribes (such as the black Africans) have no superiority over animals? Is there a difference and distinction more obvious than this?

2- `Abdu'l-Bahā's Opinion About Turks

In one of his memories `Abdu'l-Bahā recalls:

When Djemal Pasha¹¹⁸ . . . reached Acre¹¹⁹ and asked to see me, I mounted a donkey and headed for his home. As soon as he saw me, he greeted me and sat me next to himself and without hesitation said, “You are a corrupter of religion and that is why the government of Iran exiled you here . . .” I thought to myself that he is a Turk and I must give him a ridiculous and silencing answer.¹²⁰

It seems when `Abdu'l-Bahā was describing the divine principles in this era by saying that “the divine principles in this luminous era are such that one must not insult anyone,”<sup>121</sup> he probably meant some divine principles other than the Baha'i principles. Compare the following statements from `Abdu'l-Bahā with the above attitude:

One must never say this [person] is English, that is German, that is French, and this is Italian. Never utter these words for you are all God's servants and maids.¹²²

¹¹⁸ One of the most important leaders of the Ottoman government between 1908–1918.

¹¹⁹ A city in the Western Galilee region of northern Israel at the northern extremity of Haifa Bay.

¹²⁰ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī (n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 124 B.), vol. 3, pp. 42–43.

¹²¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 355.

¹²² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 75.

When there is oneness of humanity how can we have differences by saying that [person] is German, this is British, this is French, this is Turkish, this one is Roman, and that one is Iranian?¹²³

Even though `Abdu'l-Bahā orders his followers not say that one is Turk, this one is French, he himself easily says “I thought to myself he is a Turk and deserves a ridiculous and silencing answer”!

3- Bahā'u'llāh's Orders and Sayings About Non-Baha'is and Those Who Denied Him

Before we start this section we must first define the meaning of a few words that have been used extensively in the quotes:

Monotheist: The Arabic word is muwaḥḥid and is basically used in Baha'i scripture to refer to Baha'is.

Polytheist: The Arabic word is mushrik and according to the prominent Baha'i scholar—Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī—in the Baha'i literature it is used to refer to those who deny Bahā'u'llāh's station¹²⁴ in other words, all the people that have heard about Bahā'u'llāh but have not accepted his religion, whether they be hostile or friendly.

Those who turn to Baha'ism: The Arabic word is Muqbil and means those who have accepted this creed.

Those who turn away from Baha'ism: The Arabic word is Mu`riz and refers to those who have not accepted this creed.

Deniers: The Arabic word is munkirīn and as is clear from the words, is used to refer to those who deny the Baha'i creed.

¹²³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 160.

¹²⁴ “Mushrik . . . in the works/writings of this new cycle is the title [given to] those who deny the station of the Unity and Oneness of the Center of Abhā (munkirīn maqām waḥdāniyyat wa tafarrud markaz abhā),” Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 4, p. 196 (under the word shirk).

There exist a wealth of strange and dramatic stories in Baha'i literature that display a loving and caring Bahā'u'llāh who does not even prevent his enemies from physically abusing him. Here is one example:

As He was approaching the dungeon, and old and decrepit woman was seen to emerge from the midst of the crowd, with a stone in her hand, eager to cast it at the face of Bahā'u'llāh. Her eyes glowed with a determination and fanaticism of which few women of her age were capable. Her whole frame shook with rage as she stepped forward and raised her hand to hurl her missile at Him. "By the Siyyidu'sh-Shuhada,¹²⁵ I adjure you," she pleaded, as she ran to overtake those into whose hands Bahā'u'llāh had been delivered, "give me a chance to fling my stone in his face!" "Suffer not this woman to be disappointed," were Bahā'u'llāh's words to His guards, as He saw her hastening behind Him. "Deny her not what she regards as a meritorious act in the sight of God."¹²⁶

These stories have only been narrated by Baha'i sources and although Baha'is claim most of them occurred publicly and were witnessed by many people, they cannot be independently verified.

According to `Abdu'l-Bahā, in the Baha'i creed, everyone is the same and there is no difference between Baha'is and non-Baha'is:

Bahā'u'llāh expressed the oneness of humankind, whereas in all religious teachings of the past the human world has been represented as divided into two parts: one known as the people of the Book of God, or the pure tree, and the other the people of infidelity and error, or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful, and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel—one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy, and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. Bahā'u'llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity.¹²⁷

¹²⁵ The Imām Ḥusayn.

¹²⁶ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, pp. 607–608.

`Abdu'l-Bahā is clearly announcing that in this creed, people are not divided into two groups: good and bad, Baha'i and non-Baha'i, faithful and infidel, friend and enemy, recipients of divine mercy and recipients of God's Wrath! Bahā'u'llāh says:

You are all the fruits of one tree and the leaves of one branch.¹²⁸

Consort with all religions with amity and concord.¹²⁹

In this section we will show how Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā described non-Baha'is and their enemies. The quotes that follow, clearly contradict the stories Baha'is preach about their leaders and their claims about the Oneness of Humanity.

a- Non-Baha'is Are like Dry Trees That Are Only Worthy of Fire

In the previous quotes it was clearly stated that people are no longer separated into “pure trees” and “evil trees”. The first violation of these words can be seen in Bahā'u'llāh's own words:

Anyone who has a garden will not allow the dry trees to remain in the garden and will definitely cut them and throw them in fire, for dry wood is only worthy of fire. Thus, O inhabitants of my orchard, protect yourselves from the wicked poisonous breath and void breeze which is socializing

¹²⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

¹²⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 265.

¹²⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas (Baha'i World Centre, 1992), p. 72.

with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and the unaware (ghāfil).¹³⁰

Basically, people are once again divided into two distinct groups of trees. Baha'is are referred to as trees that are "inhabitants of his orchard" and those that have not accepted Baha'ism have been referred to as "dry trees" that are worthy of fire who Baha'is must protect themselves from.

Some might argue that he is using this parable to refer to covenant-breakers. This is incorrect for he is clearly using this parable to prevent his followers from socializing with his deniers and the unaware. Furthermore, even if we assume—for the sake of the argument—that he is referring to covenant-breakers, his words are still contradicting the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahā about not separating people into two groups of good and bad and dipping everyone in the sea of divine generosity.

b- No Socializing Allowed with Non-Baha'is

Baha'is claim that they are only prohibited from socializing with covenant-breakers. This is not true. Bahā'u'llāh gives orders to not socialize with those who deny him, those who turn away for him, and even the unaware. We will repeat the previous quote:

Thus, O inhabitants of my orchard, protect yourselves from the wicked poisonous breath and void breeze which is socializing with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and the unaware (ghāfil).¹³¹

Bahā'u'llāh is clearly stating that Baha'is must not socialize with two groups: the polytheists and the unaware. The polytheists are those that have heard about Baha'ism but have not accepted it or have denied it.

¹³⁰ 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 B.), vol. 8, p. 39.

¹³¹ 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

The unaware are basically all the poor souls who are unaware of the existence of the Baha'i faith or its teachings. This is a whole new level altogether. We reiterate that these are Bahā'u'llāh's own words. Now compare this with what `Abdu'l-Bahā states about the unaware:

We must . . . warn the unaware, show compassion to the enemies, and love the foes.¹³²

As usual, `Abdu'l-Bahā is contradicting the orders of his father. Bahā'u'llāh emphasizes elsewhere:

Do not socialize with those who deny God¹³³ and his signs and keep away from their kind.¹³⁴

It is incumbent on ever soul to keep away from the wicked breath of the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism).¹³⁵

Know that God has forbidden his friends from meeting with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and hypocrites.¹³⁶

It is not permitted to interact, speak, or meet with those individuals that have turned away and made their objections apparent. This is an order revealed from the heavens of an Ancient Commander.¹³⁷

If these orders from Bahā'u'llāh are divine decrees that must be obeyed, then why does `Abdu'l-Bahā insists on the opposite during his missionary preaches:

¹³² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 288.

¹³³ This sentence is referring to those who deny Bahā'u'llāh, because he had on many occasions referred to himself as God.

¹³⁴ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

¹³⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

¹³⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 280.

¹³⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 74.

All humanity are the creation of one God and all the sheep (meaning the humans) are under the shadow of one shepherd and one shepherd administers all. Thus, the divine sheep must interact with each other with utter affection. If one wanders away, they should return him and accompany him.¹³⁸

Had `Abdu'l-Bahā forgotten that his father had banned speaking with non-Baha'is, deniers, and those that had turned away from Baha'ism when he was saying these words? The inconsistencies in the beliefs of this father and son are numerous. Here are a few more quotes from Bahā'u'llāh:

Run away from he who you do not find my love in his heart, keep away from him, and keep a great distance between you.¹³⁹

Cleanse your eyes from [seeing] the deniers and the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and turn away from them.¹⁴⁰

Break all ties with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism).¹⁴¹

O SON OF DUST! Beware! Walk not with the ungodly and seek not fellowship with him, for such companionship turneth the radiance of the heart into infernal fire.¹⁴²

In all affairs, we must avoid those that have turned away and must not become fond of them or sit and converse with them—even for a moment—for by God the [effect of] evil

¹³⁸ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 44 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā').

¹³⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, p. 345 (sūrat al-aṣḥāb).

¹⁴⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 81, p. 477.

¹⁴¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 90.

¹⁴² Bahā'u'llāh, The Hidden Words of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 42, no. 57.

individuals on pure individuals is like fire on dry wood and heat on cold snow.¹⁴³

These quotes clearly contradict the essence of the Baha'i creed that is being propagated today by the Universal House of Justice. Most—if not all—Baha'is do not even know that these statements from Bahā'u'llāh exist.

c- Non-Baha'is Are Not Humans or Lack the Traits of Being Considered as Humans

According to Bahā'u'llāh, non-Baha'is are not humans and the consequence of mentioning them as 'human' is exclusion from all of God's Graces:

From this day, any individual that mentions as human a single person from those who deny me—whether that [denier] has a high or low stature—they will be excluded from all of (God's) Merciful Graces, let alone trying to prove [those deniers] have dignity or stature.¹⁴⁴

d- Non-Baha'is Are Animals

After calling non-Baha'is evil non-humans who have no dignity, he goes on to calling them animals that neither deserve the name nor the description of humanness:

Today, according to the decree of the Point of Bayān (meaning the Bāb), those individuals who turn away from this Novel Affair (meaning Baha'ism) are deprived of the garb of ¹⁴³ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

¹⁴⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 140.

being called and described [as humans?] and are assembled and mentioned as animals in the presence of God.¹⁴⁵

Bahā'u'llāh says non-Baha'is are animals in the presence of God. Are they at least humans in this world? Of course not. In yet another contradicting stance he says:

Know that none of the servants who have had any sense, have never held the belief that those who face towards [Baha'ism] (muqbil) and those who turn away from it (mu`riz); or monotheists (meaning Baha'is) and polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism), have the same status and rank. What you have heard [contrary to this] or have seen in the previous books, was meant in the presence of God.¹⁴⁶

Whereas he earlier claimed that those who have turned away from this affair are animals in the presence of God, he later says everyone is equal in the presence of God and if you have heard anything contrary to this it was meant in this world! Here are a few more relevant quotes:

Do not see the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) but as earthworms and their sounds but the buzzing of flies.¹⁴⁷

O group of polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism), if you take pride in your name remaining amongst the animals or being mentioned amongst the livestock, then take pride in that for you are worthy of it.¹⁴⁸

¹⁴⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī`, p. 213.

¹⁴⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū`iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 154.

¹⁴⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A`lā, vol. 1, no. 20, p. 183.

¹⁴⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A`lā, vol. 2, no. 81, p. 452.

Oh you donkeys! Whatever God says is the truth and will not become void by the words of the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism).¹⁴⁹

Encompassed as I am at this time by the dogs of the earth and the beasts of every land, concealed as I remain in the hidden habitation of Mine inner Being.¹⁵⁰

When the one who turned away from God halted (in accepting me) and fell off the path, in that moment his body left the garb of humanness and appeared and became visible in the skin of animals. Sanctified is He who changes the beings how he likes.¹⁵¹

There are many more instances but we will suffice with these. Baha'is sometimes claim that similar instances can be found in the verses of the Holy Books thus Bahā'u'llāh too was justified in calling non-Baha'is animals. Whether this is really the case or not is another discussion and will not be examined here. What is relevant here is that this justification is unacceptable from a Baha'i perspective, because Baha'is claim they are different from other religions. While in all other religions there is a distinction made between the faithful and disbelievers, Baha'is claim the Oneness of Humanity is a new principle that they adhere to. Thus, even if similar remarks exist in the Holy Books, Baha'i leaders cannot repeat them, because they claim their creed has removed this attitude:

In all religious teachings of the past the human world has been represented as divided into two parts: one known as the people of the Book of God, or the pure tree, and the other the people of infidelity and error, or the evil tree. The former ¹⁴⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 174.

¹⁵⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Gems of Divine Mysteries, p. 4.

¹⁵¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 110.

were considered as belonging to the faithful, and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel—one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy, and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. Bahā'u'llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity, and this principle is specialized in His teachings, for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity.¹⁵²

e- Bahā'u'llāh Wishes Death on Non-Baha'is

Bahā'u'llāh wishes death on those who deny him:

Die with anger, Oh he who denies this grace.¹⁵³

Die with anger O you denying polytheist (denier of Baha'ism).¹⁵⁴

Ironically, these words are uttered by the same Bahā'u'llāh who advises his followers to not wish for others what they do not wish for themselves:

He should not wish for others that which he doth not wish for himself.¹⁵⁵

f- Baha'is are Precious Jewels and Non-Baha'is are Worthless Pebbles

Bahā'u'llāh says:

¹⁵² `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

¹⁵³ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 213.

¹⁵⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'ālā, vol. 1, no. 64, p. 276.

¹⁵⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 266.

My friends are the pearls of [this] order and all others are earthly pebbles . . . a single one of these (Baha'is) is more precious than a million others (non-Baha'is).¹⁵⁶

In contrast, `Abdu'l-Bahā still insists that other people's religion is none of our business:

Why should we say this [person] is a follower of Moses and that [person] a follower of Jesus, this [person] is a follower of Mohammad, and that [person] is a follower of Buddha? This is none of our business. God has created everyone and it is our duty to be kind to all. Belief related issues are God's business and he will give rewards and punishments on the Day of Judgment. God has not made us in charge of them.¹⁵⁷

g- Non-Baha'is Must Be Tormented

Without specifying the form and method of torment, whether it be physical or spiritual, Bahā'u'llāh says:

And you, oh friends of God, be clouds of grace for those who believe in God and his signs, and be certain torment for those who do not believe in God and are polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism).¹⁵⁸

Be like a flame of fire to my enemies and a river of eternal life to my friends.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁶ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 353.

¹⁵⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṣṣāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 284–285.

¹⁵⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 216.

¹⁵⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb (Egypt: Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī, 1339 AH), p. 184.

God has made him (Bahā'u'llāh) a light for the monotheists (Baha'is) and a fire for the polytheists (non-Baha'is).¹⁶⁰

This is while `Abdu'l-Bahā believes that one should be kind to all creatures:

God the Exalted has put the crown of grace and beneficence on man's head so that he shows kindness and affection to all things that possess a soul and to make apparent the greatness of the world of humanity.¹⁶¹

How can so many contradictions be justified?

Apparently, there is a much harsher treatment awaiting non-Baha'is when the Baha'i kingdom materializes. This is what Bahā'u'llāh says:

God will soon take out from the sleeves of power the hands of strength and dominance and will make the Servant (Bahā'u'llāh) victorious and will cleanse the earth from the filth of every rejected polytheist (deniers of Baha'ism). And they will stand by the cause and will conquer the lands using my mighty eternal name and will enter the lands and they will be feared by all the servants.¹⁶²

Once the Baha'i kingdom materializes the earth will be cleansed from the filth of all non-Baha'is. The words used (like being feared by the servants) clearly show that cleansing does not mean converting them to Baha'ism. Furthermore, it is obvious that not all people are willing to convert to a new religion. So much for Oneness of Humanity!

h- Non-Baha'is Are Bastards That Will Go to Hell

¹⁶⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'ālā, vol. 2, no. 74, p. 372.

¹⁶¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Tehran), vol. 8, p. 227.

¹⁶² Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'ālā, vol. 2, no. 90, p. 587.

The polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) will have no residence but the hellfire.¹⁶³

Whoever denies this Apparent Exalted Luminous Grace (meaning Baha'ism), it is worthy that he asks his state from his mother and he will soon be returned to the bottom of hell.¹⁶⁴

The phrase “asks his state from his mother” is used in Persian to imply that someone is a bastard. Bahā'u'llāh doesn't stop there. He even goes on to say who fathered some of his deniers:

Whoever has the enmity of this servant (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) in his heart, certainly Satan has entered his mother's bed.¹⁶⁵

This is another clear reference that his enemies are bastards for he is quoted in Amr wa khalq saying that adultery/fornication (by which bastards are created) is the deed of Satan.¹⁶⁶

If according to Bahā'u'llāh those who deny him or are his enemies are bastards then:

- His brother, Mīrzā Yaḥyā Ṣubḥ Azal, who denied him, was a bastard.
- His sister, 'Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), who also denied him, was a bastard.
- The wives of Bahā'u'llāh's father were cheating on him.
- All Jews, Christians, Muslims, and all other people that deny him are bastards.

¹⁶³ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'ālā, vol. 1, no. 97, p. 339.

¹⁶⁴ 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 355 and 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāygān (n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 124 B.), p. 78.

¹⁶⁵ 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāygān, p. 79.

¹⁶⁶ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, 3rd ed. (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa 'Arabī, 142 B.[1986]), vol. 3, p. 513.

i- Non-Baha'is Are the Manifestation of Satan and Hell

`Abdu'l-Bahā quotes these words from his father regarding non-Baha'is and the enemies of the Baha'i creed:

He asked, “Where are Heaven and Hell”? Say, the former is meeting me and the latter is yourself, O you doubting polytheist.¹⁶⁷

In another Tablet, He says: “O Kāzim, close thine eye to the people of the world; drink the water of knowledge from the heavenly cup bearers, and listen not to the nonsensical utterances of the manifestations of Satan, because the manifestations of Satan are occupying today the observation posts of the glorious path of God, and preventing the people by every means of deception and ruse. Before long you will witness the turning away of the people of Bayān from the Manifestation of the Merciful.”¹⁶⁸

In another Tablet, He says: “Endeavor to your utmost to protect yourselves, because Satan appears in different robes and appeals to everyone according to each person's own way, until he becomes like unto him—then he will leave him alone.”¹⁶⁹

In another Tablet, He says: “O Mahdi! Be informed by these utterances and shun the manifestations of the people of hell, ¹⁶⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 1, no. 40, p. 228.

¹⁶⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

¹⁶⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

the rising place of Nimrods, the rising place of Pharees [Pharos?], the fountain of Tagut, and the soothsayers.”¹⁷⁰

Again He says: “Say, O my friend and my pure ones! Listen to the Voice of this Beloved Prisoner in this Great Prison. If you detect in any man the least perceptible breath of violation, shun him and keep away from him.” Then He says: “Verily, they are manifestations of Satan.”¹⁷¹

j- Non-Baha'is Have No Knowledge or Reason

As we mentioned in the previous chapter, those that do not accept Baha'ism are regarded by Bahā'u'llāh as ignorant beings who lack reason.

We will conclude this section with another contradicting and dramatic sermon by `Abdu'l-Bahā:

Self-centeredness and egotism are the cause of all conflicts. There is no corrupter in this world more destructive than egotism, which is when a person does not desire others but desires himself . . . we must not desire ourselves and must regard others as better than ourselves, even those who are not believers . . . we must prefer all people over ourselves and regard them as higher and more honored and more complete [than ourselves]. As soon as we see ourselves superior to others, we will have gotten distant from the path of salvation and prosperity . . . God forbid that egotism grows in one of our minds, God forbid, God forbid, God forbid. When we look at ourselves we must see that there is no one more abject, humble, and lower than us and whenever we look upon someone else we must see that there is no one more complete, dear, and wiser than them . . . We must see them as noble and see ourselves as lowly and see any shortcoming we see in a person as our own shortcoming; for if we were not defective we would not see that shortcoming. A person must always see himself as defective and others as complete.¹⁷²

¹⁷⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

¹⁷¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

By reading these words and comparing them with what we quoted, one should not be blamed if he reaches the conclusion that `Abdu'l-Bahā probably believed in another religion altogether.

4- Bahā'u'llāh's Attitude Towards his Brother and His Followers

When the matter of the leadership of the Bābīs was brought forth, Bahā'u'llāh labeled his brother—Mīrzā Yaḥyā Ṣubḥ Azal, who according to the will of the Bab, was his successor—with all kinds of profanities.¹⁷³ He revealed all the inner secrets between them and tried his best to ruin his reputation. He even went so far as calling him, and all the rest of his deniers, donkeys, cows, and dung beetles:

¹⁷² `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 49, p. 325–327.

¹⁷³ The Bāb's will reads: "God is greater, much greater. This is a letter from the Dominant Eternal God to the Dominant Eternal God [sic]. Say everyone begins from God. Say everyone returns to God. This is a book from `Alī Before Nabīl (a code name the Bāb used to refer to himself) to the person whose name [in ABJAD code] is equal to the name Waḥīd (meaning Mīrzā Yaḥyā Ṣubḥ Azal) who is God's remembrance for the world. Say everyone begins from Nuṣṣat al-Bayān (meaning the Bāb) [and] that O he whose name [is equal to] Waḥīd, protect what has been revealed in the Bayān and command to it for you are a true and great path." An image of the will has been printed in p. 19 of the Persian introduction of the book E.G. Browne, Nuṣṣat al-kāf (Leiden: Brill, 1901).

Oh you donkeys! Whatever God says is the truth and will not become void by the words of the polytheists.¹⁷⁴

Oh followers of Bahā . . . let these bogus dung-beetle like bodies to be occupied with their filthy dirty stinky beliefs. By my true self, the nose of the cow has no share from this purified perfume.¹⁷⁵

Have in mind that that this degree of politeness emanates from the same Bahā'u'llāh that says:

Politeness is one of mankind's traits that distinguishes him from other [creatures]. He who has no success in [being polite] then his demise certainly has—and will have—priority over his existence.¹⁷⁶

According to Bahā'u'llāh, it is better for someone who is impolite and rude to cease to exist than continue living in their current state. Fāḍil Māzandarānī¹⁷⁷ has collected a list of rude titles that Bahā'u'llāh had given to his brother. We will mention a number of these below:

When Mīrzā Yahyā Azal started opposing the works, deeds, and words of his esteemed brother (Bahā'u'llāh) in Edirne¹⁷⁸ . . . he dropped down from his [high] stature and the rank of union and agreement [that he had with Bahā'u'llāh] and was gradually—in the tablets, works, and revelations [from Bahā'u'llāh]—referred to with codes, references, and names such as the polytheist, the calf, the scarab (dung beetle), the ¹⁷⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 174.

¹⁷⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 58.

¹⁷⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 203–204.

¹⁷⁷ The name is usually spelled as Fazel Mazandarani. We have used the alternate spelling in conformance with the transliteration style of this book.

¹⁷⁸ A city in northwestern Turkey.

tyrant, the Satan, the devil, the foul swamp, the buzzing of a fly, and similar names.¹⁷⁹

Regardless of his own impolite style and context, Bahā'u'llāh recommends Baha'is not to be rude:

Oh Party of God! I recommend you to be polite, for the first status of [politeness] is that it is the chief of morality. Blessed is the person that is illuminated by the light of politeness and decorated with the style of honesty. The holder of politeness has a great rank. It is hoped that this oppressed one (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) and all be successful in it, adhere to it, cling to it, and be witness to it. This is the firm decree that has flown from the pen of the Great Name and has been revealed.¹⁸⁰

Oh followers of Bahā! You were—and are—the starting point of affection and the beginning place of divine favors. Do not stain your tongue by swearing and cursing . . . do not be the cause of sadness.¹⁸¹

Apparently double standards and hypocrisy are approved of in this creed.

Bahā'u'llāh—not knowing that in the future, his children would follow the footsteps of their father and uncle—wrote in a proselytizing letter:

Politeness is my shirt that we will use to decorate our favored servants.¹⁸²

`Abdu'l-Bahā and Muḥammad `Alī Effendi (Bahā'u'llāh's other son) inherited their father's manners and similarly showed no respect to ¹⁷⁹ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 345–346.

¹⁸⁰ Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta'ālīm Bahā'ī, p. 25.

¹⁸¹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīnīy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 47, p. 322.

¹⁸² Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta'ālīm Bahā'ī, p. 25.

each other over the succession of their father. Matters reached the point where `Abdu'l-Bahā crowned his brother and his followers with titles such as flies, dung-beetles, earthworms, bats, ravens, and foxes.¹⁸³

We too agree with Bahā'u'llāh that "woe be upon he who is deprived of politeness."¹⁸⁴ We also agree with `Abdu'l-Bahā when he says:

We should be fair. How can we expect a person that has failed in nurturing his children, spouse, and family to succeed in nurturing the people of the world? Is there any doubt or uncertainty about this issue? By God, no!¹⁸⁵

5- Treatment of the Covenant Breakers

In Baha'ism, a very harsh and tormenting punishment exists for those Baha'is that act against the decrees and teachings or orders of the Universal House of Justice. These individuals are labeled as covenant breakers. Their punishment is referred to as ṭard, meaning excommunication, shunning, or banishment. All of Bahā'u'llāh's descendants have been shunned by Shoghi and `Abdu'l-Bahā and not a single Baha'i exists today that is related by blood to Bahā'u'llāh.

`Abdu'l-Bahā gave the following order:

¹⁸³ "They are senile like arrogant fools and not seashells full of gems. They are ecstatic from the smell of garbage like dung beetles and not from the scent of a flower of gardens. They are lowly earthworms buried beneath the great earth not high flying birds. They are bats of darkness not the searchlights of clear horizons. They always make excuses and like ravens, have nested in the landfills of fall (autumn) . . . so you Oh true friend and spiritual helper . . . attack these unjust foxes and like a high soaring eagle drive away these hateful ravens from this field," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 442–443.

¹⁸⁴ "We chose politeness and made it the trait of those [we] favor. It is a cloth which fits the body of all, big or small. Salvation is for he who makes it cover his body. Woe is for him who is deprived of this great virtue," Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta`ālim Bahā'ī, p. 25.

¹⁸⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 182.

The Hands of the Cause of God must be ever watchful and so soon as they find anyone beginning to oppose and protest against the Guardian of the Cause of God, cast him out from the congregation of the people of Bahā and in no wise accept any excuse from him. How often hath grievous error been disguised in the garb of truth, that it might sow the seeds of doubt in the hearts of men!¹⁸⁶

Baha'is are ordered to deal with covenant breakers in the same way one deals with someone afflicted with a plague; such that the closest people to them, even their father, mother, children, and spouse, are strictly prohibited from speaking or having any contact with them.

In Baha'ism there are two kinds of excommunication. One is administrative and the other is spiritual:

- Administrative Excommunication: The punishment of administrative excommunication applies to a Baha'i that acts against the Baha'i rules and teachings and does not pay attention to the warnings of spiritual assemblies, and does not compensate for these actions. For example, they do not have an active presence in feasts and elections, or they do not act according to the Baha'i teachings (such as the rules relating to marriage and divorce). Determining this is up to the local or national spiritual assemblies. An administrative covenant breaker that is excommunicated is excluded from administrative and social Baha'i rights, such as taking part in elections, being a member of spiritual assemblies and administrative committees, attending feasts, and giving donations.
- Spiritual Excommunication: If a Baha'i violates the orders and prohibitions of the Universal House of Justice and dissents from the fundamental and certain tenets of Baha'ism or turns his back to Baha'ism, he will be subject to the punishment of spiritual excommunication. No Baha'i, not even the closest members of their family such as their father, mother, and spouse, have the right to speak or socialize with a Baha'i who has been spiritually excommunicated. Any Baha'i who disobeys this order, will automatically be regarded as a covenant breaker and will be given the same treatment.

¹⁸⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 12.

The order below, has been issued by Shoghi Effendi, and refers to both kinds of covenant breaking:

A question was asked about the friends that, as a result of their ignorance and neglect, had been excluded from administrative affairs about whether they should be invited to public assemblies or not? He (Shoghi) said, "inviting them is not permitted." And it was asked about those that had been excluded from the community, whether greeting and speaking with them was permitted? He replied, "if they have been spiritually excommunicated, speaking with them is not permitted in any way."¹⁸⁷

In some occasions, the order of spiritual covenant breaking was given for very trivial reasons. For example, if a Baha'i wishes to go on a pilgrimage to visit the shrine of Bahā'u'llāh in Palestine, they should go in coordination and with the planning of Baha'i organizations and the Universal House of Justice. They are not allowed to travel there without their consent and permission. If this matter is not heeded, the transgressing individual will become a spiritual covenant breaker. For instance, a Baha'i by the name of Šādiq Āshchī visited Palestine without Shoghi's permission. When Shoghi was informed, he issued a spiritual covenant breaking decree for Āshchī and ordered the swift implementation of this order. A part of this message is cited below:

¹⁸⁷ Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt-i mubārak-i (1945–1952), (n.p. [probably Tehran]: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 125 B.), pp. 94–95.

Regarding the issue of Şādiq, the son of Āqā Muḥammad Javād Āshchī, he ordered to write that “this ill-mannered and innately lowly person recently traveled to Palestine against the orders of this servant and entered the Holy Land. A telegraph regarding his excommunication and his banishment from the [Baha’i] community has been sent to that assembly. Clearly tell and warn his father that communication with him is not permitted by any means and disobeying and opposing [this order] will have severe results.”¹⁸⁸

Such cases are not rare. Here are two more examples:

In regards to Rūḥī Ghanī, who traveled from Mashhad¹⁸⁹ to America without informing the assembly, he ordered me to write, “this individual, because of his dissent and deviation, is also excommunicated from the community and because he contacted the son of Dihqān in England and both traveled to America . . .” He also stated, “write that the spiritual excommunication of Nuṣrat-Allāh Bāhir—after I consulted his mother—is necessary and obligatory.”¹⁹⁰

It is evident from what we quoted that `Abdu’l-Bahā and Shoghi are advocates of shunning and excommunication. As usual their stance contradicts the words of Bahā’u’llāh:

Whatsoever hath led the children of men to shun one another, and hath caused dissensions and divisions amongst ¹⁸⁸ Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī`āt-i mubārak-i (1945–1952), p. 41–42.

¹⁸⁹ A city in northeastern Iran.

¹⁹⁰ Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī`āt-i mubārak-i (1945–1952), p. 78–79.

them, hath, through the revelation of these words, been nullified and abolished.¹⁹¹

Yet, Bahā'u'llāh is contradicting himself too:

Shun any man in whom you perceive enmity for this Servant, though he may appear in the garb of piety of the former and later people, or may arise to the worship of the two worlds.¹⁹²

How can someone who preaches the Oneness of Humanity justify excommunication? `Abdu'l-Bahā's words are even more disturbing:

One thing remains to be said: it is that the communities are day and night occupied in making penal laws, and in preparing and organizing instruments and means of punishment. They build prisons, make chains and fetters, arrange places of exile and banishment, and different kinds of hardships and tortures, and think by these means to discipline criminals, whereas, in reality, they are causing destruction of morals and perversion of characters.¹⁹³

If the communities punish and banish it is bad, but if the Baha'is do it there is no problem in doing so?! He then claims that people must be educated so that crime may not occur:

The community, on the contrary, ought day and night to strive and endeavor with the utmost zeal and effort to accomplish the education of men, to cause them day by day to progress and to increase in science and knowledge, to acquire virtues, to gain good morals and to avoid vices, so that crimes may ¹⁹¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 95.

¹⁹² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

¹⁹³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 271.

not occur. At the present time the contrary prevails; the community is always thinking of enforcing the penal laws, and of preparing means of punishment, instruments of death and chastisement, places for imprisonment and banishment; and they expect crimes to be committed. This has a demoralizing effect.¹⁹⁴

When the best form of education—being Baha’ism—was given to its followers but many of them still got banished, how can `Abdu’l-Bahā insist that education solves the problem and people should not be banished?

Banishing and excommunication reached such an extent that by the time of Shoghi almost every single direct descendant of Bahā’u’llāh had been labeled as being corrupt and been banished by either Shoghi or `Abdu’l-Bahā. Why was it that most of Bahā’u’llāh’s branches and leaves—i.e. family and descendants—became corrupt and suffered this fate? The answer can be found in Bahā’u’llāh’s own words:

You are like a spring of water. When its source becomes corrupt so do the streams that separate from it. Fear God and be pious. Likewise, look at man. When his heart becomes corrupt so do all his limbs and organs. Likewise, if the root of a tree becomes corrupt so do its branches and twigs (aghsan and afnan) and its leaves and its fruit.¹⁹⁵

6- Treatment of Thieves

One would think there is no punishment harsher than being banished or excommunicated. There is even a harsher punishment in Baha’i law.

¹⁹⁴ `Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 272.

¹⁹⁵ Bahā’u’llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A’lā (Canada: Mu’assisiyi Ma’ārif Bahā’ī, 2002), vol. 2, no. 90, p. 603.

One who has been banished or excommunicated can simply leave the Baha'i community and start a new life elsewhere. A thief, is not that lucky:

Exile and imprisonment are decreed for the thief, and, on the third offence, place ye a mark upon his brow so that, thus identified, he may not be accepted in the cities of God and His countries.¹⁹⁶

If a thief is caught for the third time a mark must be put on his brow so that he will not be accepted in any city or country. That wretched person must probably pursue a lonely life living as a hermit until his demise arrives. Is this the meaning of Oneness of Humanity?

7- Why Have the Baha'is Created a New Calendar?

After all the preaching for the Oneness of Humanity, why have the Baha'is created a new calendar and created further divisions in a world they are apparently trying to unite?

The Baha'i calendar is defined like this:

The Bahā'ī year consists of 19 months of 19 days each (i.e. 361 days), with the addition of certain "Intercalary Days" (four in ordinary and five in leap years) between the eighteenth and nineteenth months in order to adjust the calendar to the solar year. The Bāb named the months after the attributes of God. The Bahā'ī New Year, like the ancient Persian New Year, is astronomically fixed, commencing at the March equinox (usually March 21), and the Bahā'ī era commences with the year of the Bāb's declaration (i.e. 1844 A.D., 1260 A.H.) . . . It seems, therefore, fitting that the new age of unity should have a new calendar free from the objections and associations which make each of the older calendar unacceptable to large sections of the world's population, and it is difficult to see how any other arrangement could exceed in simplicity and convenience that proposed by the Bāb.¹⁹⁷

¹⁹⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 35–36.

What advantage does this have over the Persian or Gregorian calendar? Or what problems or miseries did the adherents of the two aforementioned calendars have met that required a new “simple” and “convenient” calendar to be proposed. We will leave it to the readers to judge the justification and rationality behind this calendar, and see for themselves why the same flaws and objections attributed to non-Baha’i calendars are equally applicable to the Baha’i system.

8- Defending All Oppressed People or Only the Baha’is

In one of his Paris sermons, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā expresses anger over the fact that in France the drowning of twenty French people in a river has caused a great deal of controversy, while a blind eye is turned to the thousands of non-French killed elsewhere:

I am filled with wonder and surprise to notice what interest and excitement has been aroused throughout the whole country on account of the death of twenty people, while they remain cold and indifferent to the fact that thousands of Italians, Turks, and Arabs are killed in Tripoli! The horror of this wholesale slaughter has not disturbed the Government at all! Yet these unfortunate people are human beings too.¹⁹⁸

‘Abdu’l-Bahā criticizes the French government for being concerned only about the French whilst being indifferent towards other peoples.

¹⁹⁷ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā’u’llāh and the New Era, pp. 178–179.

¹⁹⁸ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 114–115.

Unfortunately, similar treatments can be seen in the actions of Baha'is towards non-Baha'is.

In Baha'i culture there is usually silence regarding the oppression and death of the thousands and millions of people in wars worldwide and no government is criticized. On the other hand, if a Baha'i is discriminated anywhere in the world, especially in countries hostile towards Baha'ism, all means possible are used to persuade governments of other countries to exert pressure on those who infringe their rights.

Why does this discrimination exist towards different groups? Why do Baha'is remain somewhat "cold and indifferent to the fact that thousands of" people are being killed and oppressed worldwide? After all non-Baha'i "people are human beings too," are they not? Is this the meaning of Oneness of Humanity?

Baha'is usually put forward the excuse that we do not participate in political affairs. If that is really the case, then why isn't this policy exercised when their fellow brethren need their help? Whatever the excuse, the fact remains that in contrary to the claim about the Oneness of Humanity, in equal circumstances, Baha'is do not react the same way toward non-Baha'is that they do toward Baha'is.

9- Israeli's Deprived of the Great Grace of Becoming Baha'is

On one hand it is claimed that

He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy.¹⁹⁹

On the other hand—as we showed in chapter one—Israeli's are deprived of this great grace and are not allowed to become Baha'is.

¹⁹⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42.

10- Two Examples of Bahā'u'llāh's Attitude Towards non-Baha'is

We will only show two samples here that clearly speak for themselves. Pay attention to the words and complements that Bahā'u'llāh uses to describe the poor soul called Ḥusayn in this quote:

Oh Ḥusayn, you came to visit Ḥusayn²⁰⁰ but you are killing Ḥusayn²⁰¹ oh you unaware and doubtful [person]. We wanted to meet you in Baghdad and put it up to you to choose the meeting place so that we could show you clear arguments. You accepted but when the time came the winds started blowing and you ran away, oh you fly. We came to the house that was the meeting place and we did not find you there, oh you who associates others with the God who sends the winds. When you saw your own weakness you found an excuse for yourself, Oh you trickster. We did not want to meet you except to complete God's proof upon you and those who are around you so that the fire of hatred would dwell in your chest and the chest of those who do not believe in the Lord of the Lords. You abstained from meeting me even though the inhabitants of paradise and the Heavens yearned for me. You will soon cry and wail but you will find no place to run to. Wait until God brings you a wrath from Himself and then the winds of torment will catch you and will return you to [hell] fire.²⁰²

Bahā'u'llāh calls this person a fly, a polytheist, and trickster. He claims this person will be tormented by God and returned to fire. He even claims that he had deliberately sought this meeting to fill the person's chest with the "fire of hatred"! Is this how Baha'is are supposed to implement the Oneness of Humanity? By deliberately filling the chest of non-Baha'is with the fire of hatred? Where is all the love they were preaching?

²⁰⁰ Meaning Imam Ḥusayn.

²⁰¹ Meaning Bahā'u'llāh.

²⁰² Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'ālā, vol. 1, no. 97, p. 339.

`Abdu'l-Bahā narrates another incident:

When his holiness returned from Sulaymaniyah, he was strolling in the street one day with the late Āqā Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī. A Kabob seller quietly said, “these Bābīs have appeared again!” The Blessed Beauty said to Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī, “hit him in the mouth!” Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī grabbed his beard and started hitting him in the head. [The man] went to the ambassador and complained. The ambassador imprisoned the man (instead of assisting him) and said, “without doubt, you must have greatly insulted the Bābīs that they hit you.”²⁰³

Even if we assume this poor, innocent individual who Bahā'u'llāh ordered to be beaten, was his enemy, such an action is still unjustified. For Bahā'u'llāh has said himself:

If, God forbid, you have an enemy, do not see him as an enemy but rather a friend. Deal with your friends in the same way you deal with your enemy.²⁰⁴

This story is in itself an indication that most of Bahā'u'llāh's calls for peace and harmony with enemies and followers of other religions were not out of sympathy and love but were for protecting himself and his followers and out of fear of reprisals.

Even though the principles of Baha'ism were supposed to transform the world and cause the Oneness of Humanity, Baha'is themselves were not spared from the disease of division. Many sects separated from Baha'ism and practice their beliefs without any kind of unity or agreement with others. Some examples of such groups include: Orthodox Baha'is, Gay Baha'is, Unitarian Baha'is, and Reformer Baha'is. Some of these sects are actively preaching against one another.

²⁰³ Ḥabīb Mu'ayyad, Khāṭirātī Ḥabīb (n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 118 B.), vol. 1, p.266.

²⁰⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 154.

It is interesting that `Abdu'l-Bahā describes the outcome of his father's creed with attributes that have not been observed to-date:

Bahā'u'llāh appeared like the sunlight from the East, he erected the banner of the Oneness of Humanity, he caused such friendship between different tribes that if one entered their communities, they wouldn't know which is a Christian, which is a Muslim, which is a Jew, which is a Zoroastrian.²⁰⁵

We consider Bahā'u'llāh to be the highest mentor of the human world. At a time that the darkness of division had overwhelmed the East and the nations of the East were in utter enmity and hatred, the religions were in utter avoidance with each other and thought of each other as impure and were always busy with war and quarrels, it was as this time that Bahā'u'llāh rose like the sun from the Eastern horizon. He invited all to kindness and socialization and commenced on advising and nurturing them, and guided [people] from all nations and faiths. He healed the different nations and faiths and made them reach utter unity and harmony, such that when you enter their communities you wouldn't know which is an Israelite and which a Muslim.²⁰⁶

World War I showed the extent of the non-existent "utter unity and harmony" that `Abdu'l-Bahā claimed was the result of his father's teachings.

²⁰⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 4–5.

²⁰⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 54.

Just as we repeatedly pointed out in this section, the founders of Baha'ism insist that on this earth, only Baha'is are worthy and those who don't accept Baha'ism after it has been presented to them, are nothing but bastards and animals that lack reason. The contradictions that this belief has with the slogan of the Oneness of Humanity are so obvious that it leaves no place for explanation or justification. As we previously mentioned, it would have been better if the current teaching was called Noneness of Humanity instead of Oneness of Humanity.

We will conclude this section by repeating again what `Abdu'l-Bahā had uttered about this teaching and after that a few relevant quotes that Baha'is use to lure non-Baha'is into accepting their faith:

Bahā'u'llāh expressed the oneness of humankind, whereas in all religious teachings of the past the human world has been represented as divided into two parts: one known as the people of the Book of God, or the pure tree, and the other the people of infidelity and error, or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful, and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel—one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy, and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. Bahā'u'llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity, and this principle is specialized in His teachings, for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity.²⁰⁷

We must not make distinctions between individual members of the human family. We must not consider any soul as barren or deprived. Our duty lies in educating souls so that the Sun of the bestowals of God shall become resplendent in them, and this is possible through the power of the oneness of humanity. The more love is expressed among mankind and the stronger the power of unity, the greater will be this reflection and revelation, for the greatest bestowal of God is love. Love is the source of all the bestowals of God. Until love takes possession of the heart, no other divine bounty can be revealed in it.²⁰⁸

²⁰⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

Be kind to the human world and be kind to all humans. Treat strangers like friends, and caress outsiders like companions. See enemies as friends and consider demons as angels. Deal with betrayers with utter kindness as you would with the loyal. Make bloodthirsty wolves smell the scent of musk like gazelles. Give traitors shelter and refuge and be the reason for peace of the heart and soul of the anxious.²⁰⁹

²⁰⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 15.

²⁰⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 160.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

The Oneness of Humanity was exaggerated to such an extent by `Abdu'l-Bahā that he even gave orders to be kind to tyrants, oppressors, and traitors:

Be kind to the human world and be kind to all humans. Treat strangers like friends, and caress outsiders like companions. See enemies as friends and consider demons as angels. Deal with betrayers with utter kindness as you would with the loyal. Make bloodthirsty wolves smell the scent of musk like gazelles. Give traitors shelter and refuge and be the reason for peace of the heart and soul of the anxious.²¹⁰

Apply ointment to the wounds of tyrants and heal the pain of oppressors. If they give poison, give them honey. If they give swords, give them sugar and milk. If they insult, reply by assistance.²¹¹

Being kind to humans, dealing with strangers like friends, and caressing outsiders just as one would with their companions may be justifiable, but with what logic and reasoning can one justify seeing enemies as friends, considering demons to be angels, dealing with ²¹⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 160.

²¹¹ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, vol. 3, p. 228.

betrayers like loyal people, approaching bloodthirsty wolves like gazelles, and sheltering traitors?

Thus, all criminals, murderers, thieves, and felons should have no fear, for in the Baha'i creed they are all good people who deserve kindness as a reward for their acts.

These orders were so unreasonable and illogical that when `Abdu'l-Bahā was not preaching the Oneness of Humanity he would often openly contradict them:

If he exercises his anger and wrath against the bloodthirsty tyrants who are like ferocious beasts, it is very praiseworthy.²¹²

Kindness cannot be shown the tyrant, the deceiver, or the thief, because, far from awakening them to the error of their ways, it maketh them to continue in their perversity as before.²¹³

To sum it up, when Baha'i leaders preach Baha'ism they cry out, "Heal the pain of the oppressors. If they give poison, give them honey." But when it is time to practice these beliefs they say, "One cannot be kind to a tyrant, traitor, or thief, for kindness will make them revolt." When they themselves have power, the smallest rights of human beings like freedom of speech are neglected and Bahā'u'llāh gives the order to hit an innocent man in the mouth for uttering a few simple words or those who voice anything against the UHJ are shunned and excommunicated.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

²¹² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 215.

²¹³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Selections From the Writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 158.

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”²¹⁴

²¹⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is the Principle of Oneness of Humanity Novel?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: The Oneness of the World of Humanity is a special teaching of Bahā’u’llāh.²¹⁵

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: The Oneness of Humanity is not novel and was the basis of the teachings of the Divine Prophets.²¹⁶

2. Are Black Africans Cows or Humans?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: All of humanity are members of the human species.²¹⁷

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Black Africans that have not been nurtured are cows that God has created with human faces.²¹⁸

²¹⁵ “In all religious teachings of the past the human world has been represented as divided into two parts: one known as the people of the Book of God, or the pure tree, and the other the people of infidelity and error, or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful, and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel—one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy, and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. Bahā’u’llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity, and this principle is specialized in His teachings, for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

²¹⁶ “The foundation laid by all Prophets, is the foundation of Bahā’u’llāh and that foundation is the Oneness of Humanity,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 286; “All divine prophets struggled for the Oneness of Humanity and served humanity. For the foundation of the divine teachings is the Oneness of Humanity. Moses served the Oneness of Humanity, Jesus established the Oneness of Humanity, Mohammad declared the Oneness of Humanity. The Bible, Torah, and Quran established the foundation of the Oneness of Humanity,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

²¹⁷ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 145–146.

²¹⁸ “The [black Africans] are cows that God has created with human faces,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 3, p. 48.

3. Are Africans All Uncivilized, Wild Savages, and without Common-Sense?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: God created all humans from clay and did not put any differences. He created everyone the same and has put no differences in any grace or mercy.²¹⁹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: The inhabitants of a land like Africa are all like wild savages and land-dwelling animals that lack common-sense and knowledge.²²⁰

4. Do Turks Deserve Ridiculous Answers?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: We are all divine sheep and no one has any superiority over another.²²¹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Turks deserve ridiculous answers.²²²

²¹⁹ “The God of the world created all [humans] from clay and created everyone from one element, created all from one progeny, created all in one land, and created in the shadow of one sky, and made all emotions shared, and did not put any differences. He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures/brings up all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42 (citing ‘Abdu’l-Bahā’).

²²⁰ “The inhabitants of a land like Africa are all like wild savages and land-dwelling animals that lack common-sense and knowledge and are all wild. There is not a single wise and civilized person among them,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 331; “The wild tribes have no superiority over animals. For example what is the difference between African blacks and American blacks? The [black Africans] are cows that God has created with human faces. The [black Americans] are civilized, intelligent, and have culture . . .” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaqābāt (Tehran), vol. 3, p. 48.

²²¹ “The second principle is the Oneness of Humanity: all humans are divine sheep and God is the kind shepherd who has utter compassion towards all the sheep and has made no distinction [between them],” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 67.

²²² “When Djemal Pasha . . . reached Acre and asked to see me, I mounted a donkey and headed for his home. As soon as he saw me, he greeted me and sat me next to him and without hesitation said: ‘You are a corrupter of religion and that is why the government of Iran exiled you here . . .’ I thought to myself that he is a Turk and I must give him a ridiculous and silencing answer,” Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 3, p. 42–43.

5. Is He a Turk?!

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Don’t say he is a Turk! We are all God’s servants.²²³

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: He is a Turk and deserves a ridiculous answer!²²⁴

7. Good Tree and Bad Tree?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: My father said there is no such thing as a good tree and a bad tree. He submerged everyone in the sea of divine generosity.²²⁵

Bahā’u’llāh: Deniers of Baha’ism are like bad trees that deserve to be burned!²²⁶

²²³ “When there is oneness of humanity how can we have differences by saying that [person] is German, this is British, this is French, this is Turkish, this one is Roman, and that one is Iranian?” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 160; “One must never say this [person] is English, that is German, that is French, and this is Italian. Never utter these words for you are all God’s servants and maids,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 75.

²²⁴ Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 3, p. 42–43.

²²⁵ “Bahā’u’llāh expressed the oneness of humankind, whereas in all religious teachings of the past the human world has been represented as divided into two parts: one known as the people of the Book of God, or the pure tree, and the other the people of infidelity and error, or the evil tree. The former were considered as belonging to the faithful, and the others to the hosts of the irreligious and infidel—one part of humanity the recipients of divine mercy, and the other the object of the wrath of their Creator. Bahā’u’llāh removed this by proclaiming the oneness of the world of humanity, and this principle is specialized in His teachings, for He has submerged all mankind in the sea of divine generosity.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454.

²²⁶ “Anyone who has a garden will not allow the dry trees to remain in the garden and will definitely cut them and throw them in fire, for dry wood is only worthy of fire. Thus, O inhabitants of my orchard, protect yourselves from the wicked poisonous breath and void breeze which is socializing with the polytheists (deniers of Baha’ism) and the unaware (ghāfil),” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Mā’idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

8. Socializing with Non-Baha'is!

Bahā'u'llāh: "Consort with all religions with amity and concord."²²⁷

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All humans must interact with each-other with utter affection.²²⁸

Bahā'u'llāh: Don't you dare socialize with deniers of Baha'ism and the unaware (who are basically all non-Baha'is).²²⁹

9- Are Non-Baha'is Animals in the Presence of God?

Bahā'u'llāh: Non-Baha'is are animals in the presence of God.²³⁰

Bahā'u'llāh: Anyone who has any sense knows that everyone is equal in the presence of God.²³¹

²²⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 72.

²²⁸ "All humanity are the creation of one God and all the sheep (meaning the humans) are under the shadow of one shepherd and one shepherd administers all. Thus, the divine sheep must interact with each other with utter affection. If one wanders away, they should return him and accompany him," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 44 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā').

²²⁹ "Do not socialize with those who deny God (meaning non-Baha'is) and his signs and keep away from their kind," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39; "It is incumbent on ever soul to keep away from the wicked breath of the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39; "Know that God has forbidden his friends from meeting with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and hypocrites," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 280; "It is not permitted to interact, speak, or meet with those individuals that have turned away and made their objections apparent. This is an order revealed from the heavens of an Ancient Commander," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 74; "Run away from he who you do not find my love in his heart, keep away from him, and keep a great distance between you.," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, p. 345 (sūrat al-aṣḥāb); "Cleanse your eyes from [seeing] the deniers and the polytheists (meaning non-Baha'is) and turn away from them," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 81, p. 477; "Break all ties with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 90; "O SON OF DUST! Beware! Walk not with the ungodly and seek not fellowship with him, for such companionship turneth the radiance of the heart into infernal fire," Bahā'u'llāh, The Hidden Words of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 42, no. 57.

²³⁰ "Today, according to the decree of the Point of Bayān (meaning the Bāb), those individuals who turn away from this Novel Affair (meaning Baha'ism) are deprived of the garb of being called and described [as humans?] and are assembled and mentioned as animals in the presence of God," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 213.

10. Non-Baha'is Are Animals

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All of humanity are members of the human species.²³²
We should not consider ourselves greater than others, even those who are not believers.²³³

Bahā'u'llāh: Non-Baha'is are animals.²³⁴ Don't even think about calling them humans!²³⁵

²³¹ “Know that none of the servants who have had any sense, have never held the belief that those who face towards [Baha’ism] (muqbil) and those who turn away from it (mu`riz); or monotheists (meaning Baha’is) and polytheists (meaning non-Baha’is), have the same status and rank. What you have heard [contrary to this] or have seen in the previous books, was meant in the presence of God,” Bahā’u’llāh, Majmū`iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 154.

²³² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 145–146.

²³³ “we must not desire ourselves and must regard others as better than ourselves, even those who are not believers,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 49, p. 326.

²³⁴ “Today, according to the decree of the Point of Bayān (meaning the Bāb), those individuals who turn away from this Novel Affair (meaning Baha’ism) are deprived of the garb of being called and described [as humans?] and are assembled and mentioned as animals in the presence of God,” Bahā’u’llāh, Badī`, p. 213; “Do not see the polytheists (deniers of Baha’ism) but as earthworms and their sounds but the buzzing of flies,” Bahā’u’llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A`lā, vol. 1, no. 20, p. 183; “O group of polytheists (deniers of Baha’ism), if you take pride in your name remaining amongst the animals or being mentioned amongst the livestock, then take pride in that for you are worthy of it,” Bahā’u’llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A`lā, vol. 2, no. 81, p. 452; “Oh you donkeys! Whatever God says is the truth and will not become void by the words of the polytheists (deniers of Baha’ism),” Bahā’u’llāh, Badī`, p. 174; “When the one who turned away from God halted (in accepting me) and fell off the path, in that moment his body left the garb of humanness and appeared and became visible in the skin of animals. Sanctified is He who changes the beings how he likes,” Bahā’u’llāh, Badī`, p. 110.

²³⁵ “From this day, any individual that mentions as human a single person from those who deny me—whether that [denier] has a high or low stature—they will be excluded from all of (God’s) Merciful Graces, let alone trying to prove [those deniers] have dignity or stature,” Bahā’u’llāh, Badī`, p. 140.

11. Non-Baha'is Are Worthless Pebbles and Baha'is Are Precious Jewels

Bahā'u'llāh: "You are all the fruits of one tree and the leaves of one branch."²³⁶

Bahā'u'llāh: "My friends are the pearls of [this] order and all others are earthly pebbles . . . a single one of these (Baha'is) is more precious than a million others (non-Baha'is)."²³⁷

12. Does God's Grace Apply to All Humans?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: God's Grace applies to all humans even though some are ignorant and must be taught, some are unaware and should be awakened.²³⁸

Bahā'u'llāh: Whoever calls a single person of those that have not accepted Baha'ism a human will be deprived of God's Grace.²³⁹

²³⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 265.

²³⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, pp. 353.

²³⁸ "The human species are all in the shadow of the Lord's mercy. At most some are imperfect and must be perfected, are ignorant and must be taught, are sick and must be treated, are asleep and must be awakened. We should not be angry at an infant for being an infant. We should nurture him. We should not be angry at a sick person for not being well. We should have the greatest mercy and kindness towards him. From these [examples] it is apparent that the enmity between religions should be completely wiped out; oppression and injustice should be removed and instead, the greatest amount of kindness and affection should flow," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 145–146.

²³⁹ "From this day, any individual that mentions as human a single person from those who deny me—whether that [denier] has a high or low stature—they will be excluded from all of (God's) Merciful Graces, let alone trying to prove [those deniers] have dignity or stature," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 140.

13. Accompaniment or Banishment?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: If someone is separated, he should be returned and accompanied.²⁴⁰

Shoghi Effendi: No one is allowed to speak with those who have been shunned, even their family members.²⁴¹

14. Kindness or Torment?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Be kind to any creature that has a soul.²⁴²

Bahā'u'llāh: Be a certain torment for the disbelievers and non-Baha'is.²⁴³

²⁴⁰ "Thus, the divine sheep must interact with each other with utter affection. If one wanders away they should return him and accompany him," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.44 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā').

²⁴¹ "A question was asked about the friends that, as a result of their ignorance and neglect, had been excluded from administrative affairs about whether they should be invited to public assemblies or not? He (Shoghi) said, 'Inviting them is not permitted.' And it was asked about those that had been excluded from the community whether greeting and speaking with them was permitted? He replied, 'If they have been spiritually excommunicated speaking with them is not permitted in any way,'" Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt Mubāraki (1945–1952), pp. 94–95.

²⁴² "God the Exalted has put the crown of grace and beneficence on man's head so that he shows kindness and affection to all things that possess a soul and to make apparent the greatness of the world of humanity," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Tehran), vol. 8, p. 227.

²⁴³ "And you, O friends of God, be clouds of grace for those who believe in God and his signs, and be certain torment for those who do not believe in God and are polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 216.

15. Kindness or Beating?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All are the creations of God and God is kind to all. So why should we be unkind?²⁴⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā: My father (Bahā'u'llāh) told his companions to hit the kabob seller in the mouth because he merely said the Bābīs have come again.²⁴⁵

16. Should We Utter Rude Words?

Bahā'u'llāh: Do not utter profanities at any one and do not make anyone upset.²⁴⁶

`Abdu'l-Bahā: In the fight over the succession of his father, calls his brother and his followers names such as flies, earthworm, bat, raven, fox . . .²⁴⁷

²⁴⁴ “All of humanity are members of the human species. They are all servants of God. They have all been created by God. They are all divine children. God gives sustenance to all of them; nurtures all of them; is compassionate to all of them; why should we be uncompassionate?” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭībāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 145–146.

²⁴⁵ “When his holiness returned from Sulaymaniyah, he was strolling in the street one day with the late Āqā Mīrẓā Muḥammad Qulī. A Kabob seller quietly said, ‘These Bābīs have appeared again!’ The Blessed Beauty said to Mīrẓā Muḥammad Qulī, ‘Hit him in the mouth!’ Mīrẓā Muḥammad Qulī grabbed his beard and started hitting him in the head,” Ḥabīb Mu’ayyad, Khāṭirātī Ḥabīb, vol. 1, p. 266.

²⁴⁶ “Oh followers of Bahā! You were—and are—the starting point of affection and the beginning place of divine favors. Do not stain your tongue by swearing and cursing . . . do not be the cause of sadness,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīnī-y-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 47, p. 322.

²⁴⁷ “They are senile like arrogant fools and not seashells full of gems. They are ecstatic from the smell of garbage like dung beetles and not from the scent of a flower of gardens. They are lowly earthworms buried beneath the great earth not high flying birds. They are bats of darkness not the searchlights of clear horizons. They always make excuses and like ravens, have nested in the landfills of fall (Autumn) . . . so you Oh true friend and spiritual helper . . . attack these unjust foxes and like a high soaring eagle drive away these hateful ravens from this field,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 442–443.

17. Should Traitors Be given Refuge?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: “Give traitors shelter and refuge.”²⁴⁸

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Do not be kind to traitors, for kindness will cause them to revolt.²⁴⁹

18. Should We Be Polite or Rude?

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: Whoever is without manners, it is better that they be destroyed.²⁵⁰ We must not insult people.²⁵¹

Bahā'u'llāh referring to his brother: Oh donkey²⁵², oh cow, Oh polytheist, dung beetle, Satan, fly . . .²⁵³

²⁴⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 160.

²⁴⁹ “One cannot be kind to a tyrant, traitor, or thief, for kindness will make them revolt instead of awakening them. The more you show affection to a liar, the more lies he will tell,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 211.

²⁵⁰ “Politeness is one of mankind’s traits that distinguishes him from other [creatures]. He who has no success in [being polite] then his demise certainly has—and will have—priority over his existence,” Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', pp. 203–204.

²⁵¹ “The divine principles in this luminous era are such that one must not insult anyone,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 355.

²⁵² “Oh you donkeys! Whatever God says is the truth and will not become void by the words of the polytheists,” Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 174.

²⁵³ “When Mīrzā Yahyā Azal started opposing the works, deeds, and words of his esteemed brother (Bahā'u'llāh) in Edirne . . . he plunged from his [high] stature and the rank of union and agreement [that he had with Bahā'u'llāh] and was gradually—in the tablets, works, and revelations [from Bahā'u'llāh]—referred to with codes, references, and names such as the polytheist, the calf, the scarab (dung beetle), the tyrant, the Satan, the devil, the foul swamp, the buzzing of a fly, and similar names,” Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣṣī, vol. 5, p. 345–346.

19. Should We Be Kind to Wolves?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Act with kindness towards bloodthirsty wolves.²⁵⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Do not be kind with wolves, for it is betrayal of the sheep.²⁵⁵

20. Those Who Deny Bahā'u'llāh Are Bastards Who Will Go to Hell

`Abdu'l-Bahā: “As soon as we see ourselves superior to others, we will have gotten distant from the path of salvation and prosperity.”²⁵⁶

Bahā'u'llāh: Whoever denies Baha'ism or is Baha'u'llah's enemy, is a bastard who will go to hell.²⁵⁷

The result of these words: All Jews, Christians, Muslims, and all other people who do not accept Baha'ism are Bastards.

²⁵⁴ “Make bloodthirsty wolves smell the scent of musk like gazelles,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 160.

²⁵⁵ “If you are kind to a wolf you are betraying the sheep because it will destroy a herd of sheep. If you give a dog that bites the opportunity, it will kill thousands of humans and animals. Thus showing affection to savage animals is equal to being unfair to oppressed animals,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 212.

²⁵⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 49, p. 326.

²⁵⁷ “Whoever denies this apparent exalted luminous grace (meaning Baha'ism), it is worthy that he asks his state from his mother and he will soon be returned to the bottom of hell,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, pp. 355 and `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāyḡān, p. 78; “Whoever has the enmity of this servant (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) in his heart, certainly Satan has entered their mother's bed,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāyḡān, p. 79.

21. Must We Be Kind towards Tyrants or Should We Punish Them?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Be kind to tyrants and oppressors!²⁵⁸

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Punish tyrants so they do not revolt.²⁵⁹

22. Kindness towards the Opposition or Enmity?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: We must be kind to the enemies and love the deniers.²⁶⁰

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Meeting with the deniers of Baha'ism is forbidden.²⁶¹

23. How to Deal with the Unaware

`Abdu'l-Bahā: We must warn the unaware.²⁶²

Bah'ū'llāh: Protect yourself from the wicked poisonous breath of the unaware and do not socialize with them.²⁶³

²⁵⁸ "Apply ointment to the wounds of tyrants and heal the pain of oppressors," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, vol. 3, p. 228.

²⁵⁹ "One cannot be kind to a tyrant, traitor, or thief, for kindness will make them revolt instead of awakening them. The more you show affection to a liar, the more lies he will tell," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 211.

²⁶⁰ "We must . . . warn the unaware, show compassion to the enemies, and love the foes," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 288.

²⁶¹ "Know that God has forbidden his friends from meeting with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and hypocrites," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, pp. 280.

²⁶² "We must . . . warn the unaware, show compassion to the enemies, and love the foes," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 288.

²⁶³ "Thus, O inhabitants of my orchard, protect yourselves from the wicked poisonous breath and void breeze which is socializing with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and the unaware (ghāfil)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

24. Is Shunning Bad?

Bahā'u'llāh: We have nullified anything that as a cause for shunning.²⁶⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: Shun my enemies!²⁶⁵

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Why are the communities engaged in shunning people?! Shunning has a demoralizing effect.²⁶⁶

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Shun those who protest against the Guardian.²⁶⁷

²⁶⁴ "Whatsoever hath led the children of men to shun one another, and hath caused dissensions and divisions amongst them, hath, through the revelation of these words, been nullified and abolished," Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 95.

²⁶⁵ "Shun any man in whom you perceive enmity for this Servant, though he may appear in the garb of piety of the former and later people, or may arise to the worship of the two worlds," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

²⁶⁶ "One thing remains to be said: it is that the communities are day and night occupied in making penal laws, and in preparing and organizing instruments and means of punishment. They build prisons, make chains and fetters, arrange places of exile and banishment, and different kinds of hardships and tortures, and think by these means to discipline criminals, whereas, in reality, they are causing destruction of morals and perversion of characters," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 271; "The community, on the contrary, ought day and night to strive and endeavor with the utmost zeal and effort to accomplish the education of men, to cause them day by day to progress and to increase in science and knowledge, to acquire virtues, to gain good morals and to avoid vices, so that crimes may not occur. At the present time the contrary prevails; the community is always thinking of enforcing the penal laws, and of preparing means of punishment, instruments of death and chastisement, places for imprisonment and banishment; and they expect crimes to be committed. This has a demoralizing effect," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 272.

²⁶⁷ "The Hands of the Cause of God must be ever watchful and so soon as they find anyone beginning to oppose and protest against the Guardian of the Cause of God, cast him out from the congregation of the people of Bahā and in no wise accept any excuse from him. How often hath grievous error been disguised in the garb of truth, that it might sow the seeds of doubt in the hearts of men!" `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 12.

25. To Wish Death or Not to Wish Death?

Bahā'u'llāh: Don't wish unto others what you do not wish for yourself.²⁶⁸

Bahā'u'llāh: "Die with anger, Oh he who denies this grace."²⁶⁹ "Die with anger O you denying polytheist."²⁷⁰

26. Why Have All of Bahā'u'llāh's Descendants Been Shunned and Excommunicated?

Bahā'u'llāh: If the root of a tree becomes corrupt so do all its branches (aghsān) and twigs and fruits and leaves.²⁷¹

By the time Shoghi died all of Bahā'u'llāh's blood descendants who are referred to as branches (Aghsān) had become corrupt and were shunned from the Baha'i community!

²⁶⁸ "He should not wish for others that which he doth not wish for himself, nor promise that which he doth not fulfil [sic]," Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 266.

²⁶⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 213.

²⁷⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 1, no. 64, p. 276.

²⁷¹ "“You are like a spring of water. When its source becomes corrupt so do the streams that separate from it. Fear God and be pious. Likewise, look at man. When his heart becomes corrupt so do all his limbs and organs. Likewise, if the root of a tree becomes corrupt so do its branches and twigs (aghsan and afnan) and its leaves and its fruit.” Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 90, p. 603.

27. Oneness of Humanity in the Baha'i Kingdom

The earth will be cleansed from the filth of the deniers of Baha'ism and Bahā'u'llāh's followers will be feared by the people.²⁷² Thieves will be kicked out of the cities and deprived of all rights.²⁷³ Arsonists will be burned alive, executed, or given life imprisonment.²⁷⁴

28. All the Titles given to Non-Baha'is by Baha'i Leaders

Haters of light, sufferers from spiritual leprosy,²⁷⁵ unreasonable, unknowledgeable, polytheists, dry wood worthy of fire, possessors of wicked poisonous breath, deniers of God and his signs, hypocrites, ungodly, evil, unhuman, animals, earthworms, livestock, lowly flies, donkeys, dogs, beasts, those who should die with anger, earthly pebbles, people that must be tormented, people who will be cleansed from earth, bastards, children of Satan, manifestations of hell, manifestations of Satan, rising place of Pharaohs, calves, dung beetles, tyrants, devil, foul swamp, senile, bats, ravens, foxes . . .²⁷⁶

²⁷² "God will soon take out from the sleeves of power the hands of strength and dominance and will make the Servant (Bahā'u'llāh) victorious and will cleanse the earth from the filth of every rejected polytheist (denier of Baha'ism). And they will stand by the cause and will conquer the lands using my mighty eternal name and will enter the lands and they will be feared by all the servants." Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 90, p. 587.

²⁷³ "Exile and imprisonment are decreed for the thief, and, on the third offence, place ye a mark upon his brow so that, thus identified, he may not be accepted in the cities of God and His countries." Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 35–36.

²⁷⁴ "Should anyone intentionally destroy a house by fire, him also shall ye burn; should anyone deliberately take another's life, him also shall ye put to death. Take ye hold of the precepts of God with all your strength and power, and abandon the ways of the ignorant. Should ye condemn the arsonist and the murderer to life imprisonment, it would be permissible according to the provisions of the Book. He, verily, hath power to ordain whatsoever He pleaseth," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 203.

²⁷⁵ "It is better not to read books by Covenant-breakers because they are haters of the Light, sufferers from a spiritual leprosy, so to speak. But books by well-meaning yet unenlightened enemies of the Cause can be read so as to refute their charges," Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XII, no. 628.

²⁷⁶ The references of these titles can be found throughout this chapter.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is the Oneness of Humanity a new principle?

If the meaning of the Oneness of Humanity is that we are all creations of God and should not consider ourselves greater than others for racial or national reasons, then this Baha'i principle is definitely not novel for, over a than a thousand years ago, it was clearly stated in the Holy Book of the Muslims—the Quran—that we have all been created from one father and mother and the only criterion for superiority is being more God-fearing. Furthermore, `Abdu'l-Bahā had admitted himself that this principle is the basis of the teachings of all prophets.

If the purpose of this principle is the empathy and collaboration of humanity, once again people like the Persian poet Sa'dī stated hundreds of years ago that humanity are all part of one body. Thus the claim that this principle is novel is baseless.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's beliefs about Turks, black Africans, indigenous people, enemies of Bahā'u'llāh, deniers of Baha'ism, the unaware, non-Baha'is and etc. show that those who claimed to be the promoters of this principle were themselves utterly against it.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

The extreme version of this principle that `Abdu'l-Bahā preached and included giving refuge and being kind to bloodthirsty wolves, traitors, and demons, is definitely irrational.

CHAPTER 3:

Religion Must be the Source of Unity and Fellowship in the World

“The third principle of his highness Bahā’u’llāh is that religion must be the source of fellowship. It must cause links among humanity. It must be a blessing of the Lord and if religion is a cause of enmity and a cause of war, its absence is better, and a lack of religion is better than religion. Rather, it must be the opposite. Religion must be a cause of fellowship and a cause of relations between the masses of humanity.”²⁷⁷

²⁷⁷ `Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 146.

The meaning of “Religion Must Be the Source of Unity and Fellowship” is that religion must be the cause of kindness between people and if, as a result of religion, a group comes in conflict with another and enmity arises, that religion has no value.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā reiterates many times that if religion causes divisions instead of unity, its non-existence is better than its existence:

Religion must be the cause of unity and fellowship. If religion causes enmity it will have no result and having no religion is better. For it becomes the cause of enmity and hatred between humanity and whatever causes enmity is hated by God and whatever causes unity and fellowship is accepted and praised. If religion causes killing and savagery it is not religion and having no religion is better than that. For religion is meant to be a cure. If a cure causes sickness then of course, no cure is better than it. Thus, if religion causes war and slaughter, then of course, it is better to have no religion.²⁷⁸

Religion should create unity and create links between the hearts. Jesus and the other divine prophets came to create unity and fellowship. If religion causes divisions, its non-existence is preferred.²⁷⁹

Baha'is claim that Bahā'u'llāh has brought a new religion whose main purpose is to bring about world peace and unity to the world of humanity; this peace and unity must occur under the shadow of kindness and fellowship. If a religion does not bring about kindness, peace, and unity, then it is not a religion.

²⁷⁸ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 44–45.

²⁷⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 59.

Is the Principle “Religion Must be the Source of Unity and Fellowship in the World” New?

Did the previous Divine Prophets causes enmity and disunity? Did they urge people to be evil, oppress, use foul language, and to start wars? Is this principle as `Abdu'l-Bahā claims new:

He sets forth a new principle for this day in the announcement that religion must be the cause of unity, harmony and agreement among mankind. If it is the cause of discord and hostility, if it leads to separation and creates conflict, the absence of religion would be preferable in the world.²⁸⁰

All divine prophets had appeared to overcome the divisions among humanity and to bring about fellowship among the people. `Abdu'l-Bahā confesses to this reality and says:

All the Prophets came to nurture the people so that the immature individuals could reach maturity and to bring about kindness and love among the people, not hatred and enmity.²⁸¹

We read in the Bible:

²⁸⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, pp. 454–455.

²⁸¹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 65.

If you had known what these words mean, “I desire mercy, not sacrifice,” you would not have condemned the innocent.²⁸²

Then Peter came to Jesus and asked, “Lord, how many times shall I forgive my brother or sister who sins against me? Up to seven times?” Jesus answered, “I tell you, not seven times, but seventy-seven times.”²⁸³

In the Zoroastrian traditions it has come that:

I pledge myself to the Mazdayasnian religion, which causes the attack to be put off and weapons put down.²⁸⁴

Islam²⁸⁵ too has a special concern for unity, fellowship, and not hassling other humans. The Prophet of Islam has stated:

God will not have mercy on whoever does not have mercy on the people.²⁸⁶

It is obvious that in contrast to what Baha’is claim this principle is in no way novel and even amongst atheists and those that do not believe in any religion, there are countless individuals that have made kindness and servitude to others the goal of their lives. So, what is the innovation of Bahā’u’llāh and his religion?

²⁸² Book of Matthew, 12:7 (New International Version).

²⁸³ Book of Matthew, 18:21–22 (New International Version).

²⁸⁴ Avesta, Yasna 12, section 9, translated by L. H. Mills, Sacred Books of the East (American Edition, 1898).

²⁸⁵ The terrorists acts performed by those who claim to be Muslims must not be confused with the orders of true Islam.

²⁸⁶ Al-Nūrī, Mustadrak al-wasā’il (Qum: Mu’assissat Āl al-Bayt, 1408 AH), vol. 9, p. 55, no. 10183.

Did the Founders of Baha'ism Act Upon These Principles?

According to this principle and the aforementioned statements from 'Abdu'l-Bahā, if a religion causes enmity and hatred, its non-existence is better than its existence. Thus, it logically follows that if Bābism and Baha'ism caused enmity and hatred, they are subject to 'Abdu'l-Bahā's decree and their non-existence is preferred over their existence.

We will now proceed to show the many instances in which the Bābī and Baha'ī creeds became a cause of enmity, hatred, and divisions.

1- Internal Disputes in the Bābī and Baha'ī creeds

The history of Bābism and Baha'ism is filled with various enmities and conflicts between their leaders and followers. Much can be said about each conflict, but we will only refer to a small number of them below:

- The conflicts among the Bābīs over the title of *Him Whom God Shall Make Manifest*²⁸⁷.
- The conflicts, feuds, and bloodshed between Bahā'u'llāh and his brother Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal and their followers that resulted in the exile of the Azalīs (the supporters of Mīrzā Yaḥyā Ṣubḥ Azal) to Cyprus and the Baha'is to Palestine.

²⁸⁷ Twenty seven people among the Bābīs brought themselves forth as the Promised One in the Book of Bayān, such as Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal, Mīrzā Ḥusayn 'Alī Nūrī (Bahā'u'llāh), Mīrzā Asad-Allāh Dayyān, Mīrzā Muḥammad Nabīl Zarandī, Mīrzā Ghughā Darwīsh, and Sayyid Baṣīr Hindī. See Muḥammad 'Alī Fayḍī, Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, pp. 103–104.

- The conflicts and clashes between `Abdu'l-Bahā and his brother Muḥammad `Alī Effendi.²⁸⁸
- The disputes and arguments between Shoghi and those who opposed his successorship.²⁸⁹
- The dispute between Rūḥiyyih Maxwell (Shoghi's widow) and the Hands of the Cause with Mason Remey, the then president of the International Baha'i Council.²⁹⁰

2- Wars During the Bāb's Era

When the Bāb was imprisoned in Chihrīq,²⁹¹ Muḥammad Shah of Qājār passed away and the princes and nobles of the court became preoccupied with the issues of succession. This put the country in a state of chaos and turmoil. The Bābīs took advantage of this situation ²⁸⁸ Bahā'u'llāh had willed that his successor would be Ghuṣn A`zam (`Abdu'l-Bahā') and after him Ghuṣn Akbar (`Abdu'l-Bahā's brother Muḥammad `Alī): "God has destined the station [for] Ghuṣn Akbar after his position (meaning `Abdu'l-Bahā'), for He is the Commanding Wise. We chose the Akbar after the A`zam, an order from the All Knowing and Aware (God). All must show kindness towards the two Ghuṣns . . . All must respect and admire the two Ghuṣns," Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, pp. 302–303. After Bahā'u'llāh's death the two brothers differed on the amount of authority they had and fights ensued between them and their followers.

²⁸⁹ According to Bahā'u'llāh's orders the successor after `Abdu'l-Bahā was supposed to be his brother Ghuṣn Akbar. `Abdu'l-Bahā disobeyed this decree and instead appointed his own grandson Shoghi Effendi as his successor. This resulted in many differences and conflicts between Shoghi and many Baha'is who didn't accept his authority.

²⁹⁰ In contrast to what `Abdu'l-Bahā had prophesized, Shoghi was sterile and had no children to succeed him. In a bid to become his successor, an internal conflict erupted between Bahā'u'llāh's followers. Amongst these conflicts, the most intense was the one between Shoghi's widow (Rūḥiyyih Maxwell) and Mason Remey (President of the International Baha'i Council). Mason Remey claimed that the UHJ established by Rūḥiyyih Maxwell was illegitimate and in a countermove the UHJ excommunicated Mason Remey from the Baha'i community.

²⁹¹ A village near the city of Salmās located in the Western Ādharbayjān province of Iran near the Turkish border.

and began to riot under the orders of the Bāb. These riots eventually lead to three bloody wars in three different regions of Persia.

The first war began in the first days of the reign of Nāṣir al-Dīn Shāh in the Fort of Sheikh Ṭabarsī in Māzandarān and was led by Mullā Ḥusayn-i-Bushrū'ī and after his death by Mīrzā `Alī Bārfurūshī. These clashes have been described in detail in The Dawn Breakers:

The day had not yet broken when at the signal, "Mount your steeds, O heroes²⁹² of God!" . . . Mullā Ḥusayn and two hundred and two of his companions ran to their horses and followed Quddūs . . . He forced his way through the gate and rushed into the private apartments of the prince.²⁹³

Mullā Ḥusayn . . . mounting his charger, gave the signal that the gate of the fort be opened. As he rode out at the head of three hundred and thirteen of his companions to meet the enemy, the cry of "Yā Sāhibu'z-Zamān!" again broke forth. Mullā Ḥusayn first charged the barricade which was defended by Zakariyyay-i-Qādī-Kalā'ī, one of the enemy's most valiant officers. Within a short space of time, he had broken through that barrier, disposed of its commander, and scattered his men. Dashing forward with the same swiftness and intrepidity, he overcame the resistance of both the second and third barricades, diffusing, as he advanced, despair and consternation among his foes. Undeterred by the bullets which rained continually upon him and his companions, they pressed forward until the remaining barricades had all been captured and overthrown.²⁹⁴

²⁹² The original Farsi word used is jangjoo which means 'combatant' not 'hero'.

²⁹³ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1932), p. 365.

²⁹⁴ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, p. 379–380.

The second clash occurred in the city of Nayrīz²⁹⁵ with the uprising of Sayyid Yaḥyā Dārābī and this clash also left behind a large number of casualties.²⁹⁶

The third clash occurred in Zanjān between the Bābīs and the government forces. The casualties in this conflict were at least 1800 from the Bābī side:

I have heard it stated that one of the companions of Hujjat who undertook to record the names of those who had suffered martyrdom, had left a written statement in which he had computed the number of those who had fallen prior to the death of Hujjat to be a thousand, five hundred and ninety-eight, whilst those who had suffered martyrdom afterwards were thought to have been in all two hundred and two persons.²⁹⁷

Was the cause of these wars and massacres, anything other than the religion of the Bāb and the beliefs of a group of Bābīs? Did these individuals not cause their own destruction, as well as that of many others, because they rioted and fought for their faith and the love they had for the Bāb?

Bābism, which is the root of Baha'ism, openly ordered its followers to start wars and cause bloodshed. In contrary to what Baha'is claim in their history books and want non-Baha'is to believe, the Bābīs were not a group of oppressed and peace-loving people who were merely protecting their women and children from the Persian government:

That humiliating episode was soon followed by a number of similar attempts on the part of the supporters of the ²⁹⁵ Nayrīz is located in the Fārs Province of Iran.

²⁹⁶ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, pp. 465–500.

²⁹⁷ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, p. 580.

governor, all of which utterly failed to achieve their purpose. Every time they rushed to attack the fort, Hujjat would order a few of his companions, who were three thousand in number, to emerge from their retreat and scatter their forces. He never failed, every time he gave them such orders, to caution his fellow-disciples against shedding unnecessarily the blood of their assailants. He constantly reminded them that their action was of a purely defensive character, and that their sole purpose was to preserve inviolate the security of their women and children. "We are commanded," he was frequently heard to observe, "not to wage holy war under any circumstances against the unbelievers, whatever be their attitude towards us."²⁹⁸

The peaceful and oppressed face of the Bābis and Baha'is, as well as the historical narratives presented in the books authored by Nabīl Zarandī (many of which were later used by Shoghi Effendi) should be taken with a grain of salt. Nabīl Zarandī was one of the many people who had falsely claimed to be "the One Whom God Shall Make Manifest."²⁹⁹ The words of someone who tries to falsely attribute such a supposedly high station to himself should be met with healthy skepticism.

Furthermore, contrary to Nabīl Zarandī's historical accounts, the orders of the Bāb clearly advocated all forms of violence and blood shedding. The wars that the Bābīs were fighting were the direct result of the Bāb's orders to burn non-Bābī books, behead and massacre those who did not believe in him, and to destroy all monuments. Most of these wars were not the result of government oppression against the Bābīs, and what has been narrated about them in Baha'i books carry with them a high amount of distortions and exaggerations.

²⁹⁸ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, p. 546.

²⁹⁹ See Muḥammad 'Alī Fayḍī, Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, pp. 103–104.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā clearly announces:

The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A`lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb’s religion] and verified it.³⁰⁰

The savagery in the Bāb’s laws can clearly be seen in Bahā’u’llāh’s words too:

The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]³⁰¹; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups. Now however, through the strengthening grace and potency of the Word of God these four barriers have been demolished, these clear injunctions have been obliterated from the Tablet and brutal dispositions have been transmuted into spiritual attributes.³⁰²

Since the Bābīs denied Bahā’u’llāh’s station, he refers to them as: “unbelievers and the faithless.” Regarding killing and savagery, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

If religion causes killing and savagery it is not religion and having no religion is better than that. For religion is meant to be a cure. If a cure causes sickness then of course, no cure is better than it. Thus, if religion causes war and slaughter, then of course, it is better to have no religion.³⁰³

³⁰⁰ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 266.

³⁰¹ The Farsi word used in the original tablet translates to beheading not shedding blood.

³⁰² Bahā’u’llāh, Tablets of Bahā’u’llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

According to these words, since the Bab gave orders for war, massacres, and plunder, then Bābism is not a religion. But then the question arises, if Bābism is not a religion, then what is Baha'ism? Did Baha'ism not arise as a continuation of Bābism and as a result of the tidings of the Bab to Him Whom God Shall Make Manifest? Does Baha'ism not proudly present itself as the spritiual successor to Babism? If Bābism is not a valid religion—which according to the current principle is not—then neither is Baha'ism.

3- Conflicts During Bahā'u'llāh's Era

After Bahā'u'llāh put forth his claim of being the Bab's successor, he claimed the title of Him Whom God Shall Make Manifest and attracted a number of followers, disagreements arose between him and his brother Ṣubḥ Azal, and their respective followers clashed and shed blood.

Bahā'u'llāh was forced to flee Baghdad and take refuge in the mountains of Sulaymaniyah near Mosul to escape his brother's followers. Under the alias Dervish Mohammad, he lived with the lifestyle of a dervish there for two years. Bahā'u'llāh uttered the following statements about this journey:

By the Righteousness of God! Our withdrawal contemplated no return, and Our separation hoped for no reunion. The one object of Our retirement was to avoid becoming a subject of discord among the faithful, a source of disturbance unto Our companions, the means of injury to any soul, or the cause of sorrow to any heart. Beyond these, We cherished no other intention, and apart from them, We had no end in view.³⁰⁴

³⁰³ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 44–45.

Bahā'u'llāh confesses that the proclamation of his authority had caused conflict among his friends and followers of his creed. Thus, he had no choice but to go into hiding to prevent this and for two years there was no news of him or his claims. Some might claim that these actions were justified and in accordance with the principle that is under consideration, for Bahā'u'llāh, in order to prevent hatred and enmity, refrained from preaching his religion altogether.

This argument is unacceptable, for, even though Bahā'u'llāh himself knew that proclaiming his authority would cause conflicts among his followers, he still returned after two years, even though he had said "Our withdrawal contemplated no return, and Our separation hoped for no reunion." Why did he once again put forth his claims of being the successor to the Bab and claimant to the title of Him Whom God Shall Make Manifest? Why did he engage in conflicts and quarrels with his brother, until the situation reached the point that they exchanged all sorts of profanities? Didn't Bahā'u'llāh himself not admit that

In these days, however, such odours of jealousy are diffused, that—I swear by the Educator of all beings, visible and invisible—from the beginning of the foundation of the world—though it hath no beginning—until the present day, such malice, envy, and hate have in no wise appeared, nor will they ever be witnessed in the future. For a number of people who have never inhaled the fragrance of justice, have raised the standard of sedition, and have leagued themselves against Us. On every side We witness the menace of their spears, and in all directions We recognize the shafts of their arrows.³⁰⁵

³⁰⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1989 [pocket-size edition]), p. 251.

According to Bahā'u'llāh's own statements, his claims—instead of bringing about unity and fellowship—brought about such a degree of hatred and jealousy that was unprecedented and will never occur again. Thus according to Bahā'u'llāh and Abdu'l-Bahā that, "if religion is a cause of enmity and a cause of war, its absence is better, and a lack of religion is better than religion,"³⁰⁶ it is obvious that having no religion is better than being a Baha'i.

4- Clashes After Bahā'u'llāh's Death

If we analyze the issues of fellowship and hatred among Baha'i's, we will see that even among the followers of Bahā'u'llāh there were many instances where there was no peace or love.

After Bahā'u'llāh's death, disputes arose among his children over the succession of their father. Even though he had ordered them to refrain from conflicts and disagreements, to respect each other and the other family members, and to refrain from saying obscenities to one another, his sons became engrossed in conflicts and accusations.

It is natural for normal people to have differences amongst each other after someone's death. What is difficult to understand is why should differences arise amongst individuals that preach the slogan of the Oneness of Humanity and those that claim they possess divine stations.

If religion must be a cause of fellowship and unity, then why did 'Abdu'l-Bahā refer to his brother with rude and impolite words like calf, dung beetle, the Devil, and Satan?³⁰⁷

³⁰⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 249.

³⁰⁶ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 146.

³⁰⁷ "When Mīrzā Yahyā Azal started opposing the works, deeds, and words of his esteemed brother (Bahā'u'llāh) in Edirne . . . he plunged from his [high] stature and the rank of union and agreement [that he had with Bahā'u'llāh] and was gradually— in the tablets, works, and revelations [from Bahā'u'llāh]— referred to with codes, references, and names such as the

5- Baha'i Attitude Toward Non-Baha'is

We showed Baha'i orders regarding non-Baha'is and covenant-breakers in the previous chapter. Was there even a speck of unity and fellowship in those words? Why is it that `Abdu'l-Bahā insists that his father caused unity and fellowship while all facts show the contrary:

We consider Bahā'u'llāh to be the highest mentor of the human world. At a time that the darkness of division had overwhelmed the East and the nations of the East were in utter enmity and hatred, the religions were in utter avoidance with each other and thought of each other as impure and were always busy with war and quarrels, it was as this time that Bahā'u'llāh rose like the sun from the Eastern horizon. He invited all to kindness and socialization and commenced on advising and nurturing them, and guided [people] from all nations and faiths. He healed the different nations and faiths and made them reach utter unity and harmony, such that when you enter their communities you wouldn't know which is an Israelite and which a Muslim.³⁰⁸

What do Baha'is really believe in: interacting with followers of other faiths with kindness and affection³⁰⁹ or refraining from having any relations with non-Baha'is?³¹⁰ polytheist, the calf, the scarab (dung beetle), the tyrant, the Satan, the devil, the foul swamp, the buzzing of a fly, and similar names," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 345–346.

³⁰⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 54

³⁰⁹ "Consort with all religions with amity and concord," Bahā'u'llāh, Aqdas (n.p.: Baha'i World Centre, 1992), p. 72.

³¹⁰ "We must avoid deniers in all affairs and must not become fond of them or sit and converse with them even for a moment, for by God the [effect of] evil individuals on pure individuals is like fire on dry wood and heat on cold snow," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwārī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, pp. 39.

How is it that the same Baha'is that declare in their proselytization materials that the religion of every person is a personal matter, and our duty is to be kind to everyone, regardless of their religion or creed³¹¹ have their Prophet declare that:

Know that God has forbidden his friends from meeting with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and hypocrites.³¹²

How is it that Bahā'u'llāh orders his followers to be kind to all in one place, but in another orders them to seek distance from non-Baha'is and to be certain torment for them:

And you, oh friends of God, be clouds of grace for those who believe in God and his signs, and be certain torment for those who do not believe in God and are polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism).³¹³

Why does Bahā'u'llāh—who claims religion must be a source of unity and fellowship—openly incite hatred in non-Baha'is' hearts:

We did not want to meet you except to complete God's proof upon you and those who are around you so that the fire of hatred would dwell in your chest and the chest of those who do not believe in the Lord of the Lords.³¹⁴

And finally, why do Baha'is treat covenant breakers in such a harsh manner?

³¹¹ "Why should we say this [person] is a follower of Moses and that [person] a follower of Jesus, this [person] is a follower of Mohammad, and that [person] is a follower of Buddha? This is none of our business. God has created everyone and it is our duty to be kind to all. Belief related issues are God's business and he will give rewards and punishments on the Day of Judgment. God has not made us in charge of them," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 284–285.

³¹² `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 280.

³¹³ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 216.

³¹⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 1, no. 97, p. 339.

6- Bahā'u'llāh and Peace

In contrast to what Baha'is claim, Bahā'u'llāh had a violent history. Bahā'u'llāh had claimed to be a manifestation of Ḥusayn the grandson of the Prophet Muḥammad. Ḥusayn was ruthlessly murdered by Yazīd in cold blood. Bahā'u'llāh's actions were so violent while he was in Baghdad that according to his aunt, the people would recite the following verse of poetry when referring to him:

If Ḥusayn Ali (Bahā'u'llāh) is the manifestation of Ḥusayn the son of Ali (Prophet Muhammad's grandson), then a thousand blessings be upon the pure soul of Yazīd [for killing him].³¹⁵

This attitude can clearly be seen in a letter that `Abdu'l-Bahā wrote to his aunt. He unintentionally reveals his father's violent actions in the midst of praising him:

He threw an earthquake upon the pillars of Iraq and always left the people of discord (the Shia) in fear and apprehension. His grandeur had infiltrated the arteries and nerves to such an extent that not a single person dared to disapprove of him nor had the audacity to speak bad of him in the middle of the night in Karbala and Najaf (two cities in Iraq).³¹⁶

As his aunt explains, the reaction shown by the people was not due to Bahā'u'llāh's grandeur, but because of him and his followers' violent acts:

³¹⁵ `Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn (Tehran: n.p., n.d.), p. 12. This is the only non-Baha'i source that we have used in this book that contains quotes relevant to the Baha'i creed. What we have quoted from this book can be found with less detail in other quotes we have mentioned from Baha'i books.

³¹⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 177.

They gathered a group of hooligans from different provinces of Iran and from the same places fugitives who had never believed in any religion and had no faith in any prophet and had no work but manslaughter and had no occupation but stealing peoples' property. Even though they claimed they were following [the customs] of Ḥusayn (the grandson of the Prophet Muḥammad who was ruthlessly murdered by Shimr on the orders of Yazīd) they summoned a group of Shimr-like people around themselves. The breath of any soul who uttered anything but what they were satisfied with was suffocated. They beat any head which made the slightest sound other than accepting their guardianship. They cut every throat which showed other than humbleness towards them. They pierced every heart which had love toward other than them . . . ³¹⁷

³¹⁷ 'Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn, pp. 11–12.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

If religion is a cause of enmity and a cause of war, its absence is better, and a lack of religion is better than religion. Rather, it must be the opposite. Religion must be a cause of fellowship and a cause of relations between the masses of humanity.³¹⁸

If religion causes divisions, its non-existence is preferred.³¹⁹

If God sends a prophet and group of people reject Him and resort to conflicts and enmity, can it be said that God has sent a religion in vain, and the non-existence of that religion is better than its existence? Or can the conflicts caused by the opponents be a cause to doubt the divinity of the message?

Were many Prophets not forced to resort to war in the process of bringing about divine goals? Were many not tortured or killed in the process of spreading their message? Should we doubt all these religions and question their validity because of these conflicts? Are the reactions of people toward a religion a criterion for determining its validity?

³¹⁸ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 146.

³¹⁹ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 59.

For all we know, every single religion that was announced by God, became a cause for war and conflict because people automatically took sides and opposed each other. Most religions even had laws and orders about the methods and means of going to war with their opponents. According to the current Baha'i teaching, all these religions are void and rejected. This is totally illogical, irrational, unjustified, and unacceptable.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”³²⁰

³²⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is the Principle "Religion Must Be the Source of Unity and Fellowship in the World" New?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: This is a new principle brought forth by my father.³²¹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: All prophets came to create love and kindness among the people.³²²

2. Is Bābism a Religion?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: If religion causes enmity and war, it is not a religion.³²³

Ponder on: The conflicts among the Bābīs over the title of Him Whom God Shall Make Manifest.³²⁴ The massacres and bloody wars that were started on the Bab’s orders in three different parts of Iran.³²⁵ The Bab’s orders to behead and massacre those who did not believe in him.³²⁶

³²¹ “He sets forth a new principle for this day in the announcement that religion must be the cause of unity, harmony and agreement among mankind. If it is the cause of discord and hostility, if it leads to separation and creates conflict, the absence of religion would be preferable in the world,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 454–455.

³²² “All the Prophets came to nurture the people so that the immature individuals could reach maturity and to bring about kindness and love among the people, not hatred and enmity,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 65.

³²³ “Religion must be the cause of unity and fellowship. If religion causes enmity it will have no result and having no religion is better. For it becomes the cause of enmity and hatred between humanity and whatever causes enmity is hated by God and whatever causes unity and fellowship is accepted and praised. If religion causes killing and savagery it is not religion and having no religion is better than that. For religion is meant to be a cure. If a cure causes sickness then of course, no cure is better than it. Thus, if religion causes war and slaughter, then of course, it is better to have no religion,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 44–45.

³²⁴ Twenty seven people among the Bābīs brought themselves forth as the Promised One in the Book of Bayān, such as Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal, Mīrzā Husayn ‘Alī Nūrī (Bahā’u’llāh), Mīrzā Asad-Allāh Dayyān, Mīrzā Muḥammad Nabīl Zarandī, Mīrzā Ghughā Darwīsh, and Sayyid Baṣīr Hindī. See Muḥammad ‘Alī Fayḍī, Ḥadrat Bahā’u’llāh, pp. 103–104.

³²⁵ See Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl’s Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā’ī Revelation, chapters XIX, XXII, XIV.

³²⁶ “The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A’lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb’s religion] and verified it,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266; “The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning

3. Were the Bābī Wars Solely Defensive?

Bahā'i History books: The Bāb's followers were a peaceful oppressed people who only defended their women and children against the evil Persians.³²⁷

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdul'-Bahā: The Bāb gave the order to massacre and behead all non-Bābīs.³²⁸ of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups. Now however, through the strengthening grace and potency of the Word of God these four barriers have been demolished, these clear injunctions have been obliterated from the Tablet and brutal dispositions have been transmuted into spiritual attributes." Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

³²⁷ "That humiliating episode was soon followed by a number of similar attempts on the part of the supporters of the governor, all of which utterly failed to achieve their purpose. Every time they rushed to attack the fort, Hujjat would order a few of his companions, who were three thousand in number, to emerge from their retreat and scatter their forces. He never failed, every time he gave them such orders, to caution his fellow-disciples against shedding unnecessarily the blood of their assailants. He constantly reminded them that their action was of a purely defensive character, and that their sole purpose was to preserve inviolate the security of their women and children. "We are commanded," he was frequently heard to observe, "not to wage holy war under any circumstances against the unbelievers, whatever be their attitude towards us." Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, p. 546.

³²⁸ "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266; "The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups. Now however, through the strengthening grace and potency of the Word of God these four barriers have been demolished, these clear injunctions have been obliterated from the Tablet and brutal dispositions have been transmuted into spiritual attributes." Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

4. Is Baha'ism a Religion?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: If a religion causes divisions it is not a religion.³²⁹

Ponder On: The conflicts between Bahā'u'llāh and his brother Mīrzā Yahyā.³³⁰ The conflicts between `Abdu'l-Bahā and his brother Muḥammad `Alī.³³¹ The disputes between Shoghi and those who opposed his successorship.³³² The dispute between Rūḥiyyih Maxwell and Mason Remey.³³³

³²⁹ "Religion should create unity and create links between the hearts. Jesus and the other divine prophets came to create unity and fellowship. If religion causes divisions, its non-existence is preferred," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 59.

³³⁰ The conflicts, feuds, and bloodshed between Bahā'u'llāh and his brother Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal and their followers resulted in the exile of the Azalīs (the supporters of Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal) to Cyprus and the Baha'is to Palestine.

³³¹ Bahā'u'llāh had willed that his successor would be Ghuṣn A`zam (`Abdu'l-Bahā') and after him Ghuṣn Akbar (`Abdu'l-Bahā's brother Muḥammad `Alī): "God has destined the station [for] Ghuṣn Akbar after his position (meaning `Abdu'l-Bahā'), for He is the Commanding Wise. We chose the Akbar after the A`zam, an order from the All Knowing and Aware (God). All must show kindness towards the two Ghuṣns . . . All must respect and admire the two Ghuṣns," Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, pp. 302–303. After Bahā'u'llāh's death the two brothers differed on the amount of authority they had and fights ensued between them and their followers.

³³² According to Bahā'u'llāh's orders the successor after `Abdu'l-Bahā was supposed to be his brother Ghuṣn Akbar. `Abdu'l-Bahā disobeyed this decree and instead appointed his own grandson Shoghi Effendi as his successor. This resulted in many differences and conflicts between Shoghi and many Baha'is who didn't accept his authority.

³³³ In contrast to what `Abdu'l-Bahā had prophesized, Shoghi was sterile and had no children to succeed him. In a bid to become his successor, an internal conflict erupted between Bahā'u'llāh's followers. Amongst these conflicts, the most intense was the one between Shoghi's widow (Rūḥiyyih Maxwell) and Mason Remey (President of the International Baha'i Council). Mason Remey claimed that the UHJ established by Rūḥiyyih Maxwell was illegitimate and in a countermove the UHJ excommunicated Mason Remey from the Baha'i community.

5. Is Baha'ism the Cause of Hatred and Having No Religion Is Better than Being a Baha'i?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: If religion causes enmity and hatred it is not a religion.³³⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: When I claimed to be He Whom God Shall make Manifest, such hatred and envy occurred that had never existed to such a degree from the beginning of creation and never will occur again.³³⁵ I want to incite the fire of hatred in the chest of non-Baha'is.³³⁶

6. Are Other Peoples' Beliefs Any of Our Business?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Other people's beliefs are none of our business. Issues of faith are relevant to God and he will handle them on the Day of Judgment. God has not made us the police of the peoples' actions.³³⁷

Bahā'u'llāh: Torment the deniers of Baha'ism.³³⁸

³³⁴ "Religion must be the cause of unity and fellowship. If religion causes enmity it will have no result and having no religion is better. For it becomes the cause of enmity and hatred between humanity and whatever causes enmity is hated by God and whatever causes unity and fellowship is accepted and praised. If religion causes killing and savagery it is not religion and having no religion is better than that. For religion is meant to be a cure. If a cure causes sickness then of course, no cure is better than it. Thus, if religion causes war and slaughter, then of course, it is better to have no religion," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 44–45.

³³⁵ "In these days, however, such odours of jealousy are diffused, that—I swear by the Educator of all beings, visible and invisible—from the beginning of the foundation of the world—though it hath no beginning—until the present day, such malice, envy, and hate have in no wise appeared, nor will they ever be witnessed in the future," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 249.

³³⁶ "We did not want to meet you except to complete God's proof upon you and those who are around you so that the fire of hatred would dwell in your chest and the chest of those who do not believe in the Lord of the Lords," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'īlā, vol. 1, no. 97, p. 339.

³³⁷ "Why should we say this [person] is a follower of Moses and that [person] a follower of Jesus, this [person] is a follower of Mohammad, and that [person] is a follower of Buddha? This is none of our business. God has created everyone and it is our duty to be kind to all. Belief related issues are God's business and he will give rewards and punishments on the Day of Judgment. God has not made us in charge of them," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 284–285.

³³⁸ "And you, oh friends of God, be clouds of grace for those who believe in God and his signs, and be certain torment for those who do not believe in God and are polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 216.

7. Befriending the Enemies or Being like Flame of Fire to Them?

Bahā'u'llāh: "If, God forbid, you have an enemy, do not see him as an enemy but rather a friend. Deal with your friends in the same way you deal with your enemy."³³⁹

Bahā'u'llāh: "Be like a flame of fire to my enemies and a river of eternal life to my friends."³⁴⁰ "We did not want to meet you except to complete God's proof upon you and those who are around you so that the fire of hatred would dwell in your chest and the chest of those who do not believe in the Lord of the Lords."³⁴¹

8. Kindness or Violence?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: When everyone was in utmost hatred and spite, Bahā'u'llāh invited the word to kindness and fellowship and brought about unity and agreement.³⁴²

Bahā'u'llāh's Sister: Bahā'u'llāh and his followers murdered many people in Baghdad.³⁴³

³³⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 154.

³⁴⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb (Egypt: Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī, 1339 AH), p. 184.

³⁴¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 1, no. 97, p. 339.

³⁴² "We consider Bahā'u'llāh to be the highest mentor of the human world. At a time that the darkness of division had overwhelmed the East and the nations of the East were in utter enmity and hatred, the religions were in utter avoidance with each other and thought of each other as impure and were always busy with war and quarrels, it was as this time that Bahā'u'llāh rose like the sun from the Eastern horizon. He invited all to kindness and socialization and commenced on advising and nurturing them, and guided [people] from all nations and faiths. He healed the different nations and faiths and made them reach utter unity and harmony, such that when you enter their communities you wouldn't know which is an Israelite and which a Muslim," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 54.

³⁴³ "They gathered a group of hooligans from different provinces of Iran and from the same places fugitives who had never believed in any religion and had no faith in any prophet and had no work but manslaughter and had no occupation but stealing peoples' property. Even though they claimed they were following [the customs] of Ḥusayn (the grandson of the Prophet Muḥammad who was ruthlessly murdered by Shimr on the orders of Yazīd) they summoned a group of Shimr-like people around themselves. The breath of any soul who uttered anything but what they were satisfied with was suffocated. They beat any head which made the slightest sound

9. Is Religion a Cause of Fellowship or Fear?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Religion must be a cause of fellowship. It must cause kindness. It must cause links among humanity.³⁴⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā: In Iraq, Bahā'u'llāh had caused such fear in the heart of the Muslims, that not a single person dared to protest against him.³⁴⁵

Bahā'u'llāh: Once my followers conquer the lands they will cleanse them from non-Baha'is and everyone will fear them!³⁴⁶ other than accepting their guardianship. They cut every throat which showed other than humbleness towards them. They pierced every heart which had love towards other than them," 'Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn, pp. 11–12.

³⁴⁴ "The third principle of his highness Bahā'u'llāh is that religion must be the source of fellowship. It must cause links among humanity," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 146.

³⁴⁵ "He threw an earthquake upon the pillars of Iraq and always left the people of discord (the Shia) in fear and apprehension. His grandeur had infiltrated the arteries and nerves to such an extent that not a single person dared to disapprove of him nor had the audacity to speak bad of him in the middle of the night in Karbala and Najaf," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 177.

³⁴⁶ "God will soon take out from the sleeves of power the hands of strength and dominance and will make the Servant (Bahā'u'llāh) victorious and will cleanse the earth from the filth of every rejected polytheist (deniers of Baha'ism). And they will stand by the cause and will conquer the lands using my mighty eternal name and will enter the lands and they will be feared by all the servants," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 90, p. 587.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is “Religion Must be the Source of Unity and Fellowship” a new principle?

All of God’s Prophets made effort to mend conflicts among humanity and cause unity and fellowship among them. Examples from Zoroastrianism, Christianity, and Islam were brought forth. `Abdu’l-Bahā also confessed that this principle has existed in all religions. It is obvious that this principle is not a new discovery made by the Baha’is.

2) Did the leaders of Baha’ism act upon this principle?

According to the sayings of `Abdu’l-Bahā, if a religion causes war and enmity, its inexistence is better than its existence. The history of Bābism and Baha’ism displays a great deal of bloodshed and conflicts between the followers of these groups and those that opposed them. These conflicts even existed between Baha’i leaders in a bid to become successors to their predecessors.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

Throughout history, many ignorant people have stood up against God’s prophets and have opposed them. These oppositions resulted in wars and conflicts. Can we say that because these religions brought about war, it would have been fundamentally better for these Prophets not to have come altogether?

CHAPTER 4:

Religion Must Be in Conformity with Science and Reason

“The fourth principle of his highness Bahā’u’llāh is that religion must be in conformation to science. For God has given humans reason to investigate about the truth of things. If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions. For that which is against science is ignorance. And if we say religion is against reason, then the meaning is that religion is ignorance. Presumably religion must be in conformation to reason in order to bring assurance to a person. If something is against reason, it is not possible for it to bring about assurance in a person.”³⁴⁷

³⁴⁷ `Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

‘Religion Must Be in Conformity with Science and Reason’ means a religion that is not in harmony with reason and science is an illusion, not a religion.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

Put all your beliefs into harmony with science; there can be no opposition, for truth is one. When religion, shorn of its superstitions, traditions, and unintelligent dogmas, shows its conformity with science, then will there be a great unifying, cleansing force in the world which will sweep before it all wars, disagreements, discords and struggles—and then will mankind be united in the power of the Love of God.³⁴⁸

One of the twelve principles that Baha’i’s put great effort in propagating and consider the intellectual masterpiece of their faith is the accordance of religion with science and reason.

Baha’i’s claim that their beliefs are firmly based on the foundation of science and reason and that there is no contradiction between Baha’ism and scientific knowledge.

This principle is one of the most attractive principles for Baha’i youth because they claim with utmost pride that they have chosen a religion that in contrast to other faiths, is both in harmony with science and human progress and with whatever reason and intellect arrive at.

If someone accepts this principle, then, they too must accept the following results:

1. Nothing that is against reason exists within the Baha’i scripture, particularly the works of the leaders of this faith.
2. Nothing that contradicts science can be found in Baha’ism.
3. If something is found in Baha’i works that is against science or reason, Baha’i’s should put aside their religion, for according to their own beliefs, their religion is no longer a valid religion.

When Baha’i’s use this principle to preach their faith, they start by criticizing other faiths for being incompatible with modern sciences³⁴⁹

³⁴⁸ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Paris Talks, p. 146.

³⁴⁹ For example: “Islam which has to date taken itself forward with power and pride, is now afflicted by the strike of new scientific knowledge. The same scientific knowledge that rang the death-bells of all the world’s great religions. Intellectual and educated Muslims are rapidly furthering themselves from their religion . . . Those that still abide by and believe in their religion are trying to change it to make it in conformity with modern sciences,” Stanwood Cobb, Ārāmish barāy-i jahān-i pur āshūb, 5th ed. trans. Jamshīd Fanāyīān (New Delhi: Mu’assisiyi Chāp Wa Intishārāt Mir’āt, 1994), pp. 76–77. The aforementioned book was originally written in English with the title Security For a Failing World. Unfortunately, we failed to obtain the original English manuscript and have retranslated the official Farsi translation back to English. The Farsi translation can be found at <http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/o/AJPS/ajps-1.html> (retrieved 13/1/2014).

and claim that it is only Baha'ism that can answer the needs of the modern world.³⁵⁰ However whenever these same criticisms are made of Baha'ism, the answer given is that the problem is not our religion, but rather your understanding.³⁵¹

In essence, Baha'i's try to attract the attention of the youth to their faith with the slogan of the necessity of the conformity of science and reason with Baha'ism. They claim:

Since the Baha'i movement is in accordance to reason and defends science, and is completely free from the [superstitions] inherited from the past . . . the Baha'i movement has had an extraordinary influence on university students around the world.³⁵²

Strangely when it is asked from them that, given that mankind's knowledge is always changing and altering and that scientific theories are constantly being revised, which scientific theories is Baha'ism supposed to be in accordance with, they reply: What we mean by science is 'true science' not human knowledge. What we mean by ³⁵⁰ "All things are renewed thus the essence of divine religion must be renewed too. Imitations must be completely put aside and the light of reality must shine. Teachings that are the soul of this era must be propagated and those are the teachings of Bahā'u'llāh which are famous in the horizons and are the breath of the Holy Spirit," `Abd al-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 332.

³⁵¹ "Everything must be measured using the yardstick of knowledge and reason, for religion and reason are the same thing and will never be separated. Sometimes, a weak intellect cannot perceive [a concept]. In such a case, intellect has a shortcoming by being imperfect, not religion," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 93 (citing `Abd al-Bahā); "One of the fundamental teachings of Bahā'u'llāh is that true science and true religion must always be in harmony. Truth is one, and whenever conflict appears it is due, not to truth, but to error. Between so-called science and so-called religion there have been fierce conflicts all down the ages, but looking back on these conflicts in the light of the fuller truth we can trace them every time to ignorance, prejudice, vanity, greed, narrow-mindedness, intolerance, obstinacy or something of the kind," J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 197.

³⁵² Stanwood Cobb, Ārāmish barāy-i jahān-i pur āshūb, p. 160.

reason is the perfect Divine Reason, not human reason.³⁵³ They claim that if a principle or wisdom in Baha'ism is not in accordance to today's science and reason, the shortcoming is from man's errors and reasoning.³⁵⁴ This is how `Abdu'l-Bahā explains it:

Everything must be measured using the yardstick of knowledge and reason, for religion and reason are the same thing and will never be separated. Sometimes, a weak intellect cannot perceive [a concept]. In such a case, intellect has a shortcoming by being imperfect, not religion.³⁵⁵

Apparently, `Abdu'l-Bahā had completely forgotten that in their proselytization efforts, Baha'is had defined science as modern science and technology³⁵⁶ and that they had considered other religions old and outdated because, they were not in harmony with modern science and knowledge.³⁵⁷ One wonders, given the above mentioned explanation regarding weak intellects, what is the Baha'i creed's superiority over other religions? What religion would openly claim that its commands and contents are against reason and unscientific?

In Third Perspective we will cover this issue with more detail. But for now, based on the normal procedure, we will start off by analyzing whether this principle is new or not.

³⁵³ "What is meant by knowledge, is Divine Knowledge, and what is meant by reason is the perfect Divine Reason that religion must be in accord to," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 91 (citing `Abd al-Bahā).

³⁵⁴ "Truth is one, and whenever conflict appears it is due, not to truth, but to error," J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p.197.

³⁵⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p.93.

³⁵⁶ Some instances have been mentioned in Third Perspective.

³⁵⁷ "Islam which has to date taken itself forward with power and pride, is now afflicted by the strike of new scientific knowledge. The same scientific knowledge that rang the death-bells of all the world's great religions. Intellectual and educated Muslims are rapidly furthering themselves from their religion . . . Those that still abide by and believe in their religion are trying to change it to make it in conformity with modern sciences," Stanwood Cobb, Ārāmish barāy-i jahān-i pur āshūb, pp. 76–77.

Is the principle “Religion Must Be in Conformity with Science and Reason” New?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā claims that this principle is new:

Furthermore, He proclaims that religion must be in harmony with science and reason. If it does not conform to science and reconcile with reason, it is superstition. Down to the present day it has been customary for man to accept a religious teaching, even though it was not in accord with human reason and judgment. The harmony of religious belief with reason is a new vista which Bahā’u’llāh has opened for the soul of man.³⁵⁸

As usual he contradicts himself elsewhere:

‘Alī, the son-in-law of Muḥammad, said: “That which is in conformity with science is also in conformity with religion.” Whatever the intelligence of man cannot understand, religion ought not to accept. Religion and science walk hand in hand, and any religion contrary to science is not the truth.³⁵⁹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā confesses that this principle had previously come in Islam—nearly 1400 years ago—in the words of the first Shia Imam, Ali

³⁵⁸ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

³⁵⁹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Paris Talks, p. 131.

the son-in-law of Muḥammad. Thus, the claim that this principle is new and novel is unwarranted and baseless.

Regardless of `Abdu'l-Bahā's confession about this principle not being new, we will refer to a few Shia narrations about the relation between religion, science, and reason. Imam Ali states:

The Prophets have come to reveal what has been concealed [by God] in the intellects/reasons of the people.³⁶⁰

There are three things that if present in a person, will make their faith complete: reason, patience, and knowledge.³⁶¹

According to Imam `Alī, the prophets were given the duty to plow the people's reasons and awaken their intellects. Is the meaning of these narrations, anything other than the close relationship between religion, science, and reason? The seventh Shia Imam, Mūsā ibn Ja'far, states:

God has two proofs upon the people: the outer proof and the inner proof. The outer and apparent are his Messengers, Prophets, and the Imams, and the inner (intrinsic) proof is reason.³⁶²

This narration also refers to the relationship between religion and reason. Additionally, the accordance of religion and reason was so important in Shia Islam that from the early years of Islam until now, this famous phrase has—and is still—preached by Shia Muslim scholars:

Whatever reason decrees, is also decreed by religion, and whatever religion decrees, is also decreed by reason.

³⁶⁰ Sayyid Raḍī, Nahj al-balāgha, sermon 1.

³⁶¹ `Abd al-Wāḥid `Āmidī, Ghurur al-ḥikam wa durar al-kalim (Qum: Intishārāt Daftar Tablīghāt, 1366 AH [solar]), p. 88, no. 1470.

³⁶² Al-Kulaynī, al-Kāfī (Tehran: Dār al-Kutub al-Islāmiyya, 1365 AH [solar]), vol. 1, p. 16.

Did Baha'is and Their Leaders Act Upon This Principle?

The Bab, Bahā'u'llāh, and `Abdu'l-Bahā have given orders and have uttered words, that are unacceptable to any sound mind. Some of these words clearly contradict proven scientific facts and established laws of nature. Since these words contradict both science and reason, then, according to `Abdu'l-Bahā, both the Bab and Bahā'u'llāh's creeds are illusions and void. We will gradually show these examples in the next sections.

1- Baha'ism is the Criterion for the Validity of Reason and Science

The first and utmost problem is that Bahā'u'llāh, neither regards reason nor science, as a usable tool for recognizing the truth about a religion. Rather, he believes that Baha'ism is the yardstick of truth and anything uttered in it however unscientific and unreasonable that it may be is the absolute truth. He believes that the correctness of peoples' knowledge and reason must be measured using the words of Bahā'u'llāh, not the other way around:

Say: O leaders of religion!³⁶³ Weigh not the Book of God with such standards and sciences as are current amongst you, for the Book itself is the unerring Balance established amongst men. In this most perfect Balance whatsoever the peoples and kindreds of the earth possess must be weighed, while the measure of its weight should be tested according to its own standard, did ye but know it.³⁶⁴

According to Bahā'u'llāh, science is not a means of weighing the book of Aqdas, rather science and everything the people possess must be weighed and compared with the book of Aqdas!

The following quotes—that we already mentioned in chapter one—clearly show that Baha'ism is a yardstick for measuring ones reason and science:

The general criterion is what we mentioned and any soul who has success in it, meaning recognizes and realizes the Sunrise of Manifestation (meaning himself), will be mentioned in the Divine Book as someone who possesses reason or else he will be (mentioned as) ignorant even if he himself thinks that his reason equals that of the whole world.³⁶⁵

No one has denied or will deny what has been revealed by the Ancient Pen (meaning himself) in this Most Great Manifestation regarding society, unity, manners, rites, and being occupied with what has benefits for the people, except that he completely lacks reason.³⁶⁶

³⁶³ In the Arabic version of the Aqdas, the words used are yā ma`shar al-`ulamā which translates to “O group of scholars.” This has been translated to “O leaders of religion,” in the official Baha’i version.

³⁶⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 56.

³⁶⁵ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā`idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 160.

³⁶⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 168.

If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word ‘yes’ (meaning does not become a Baha’i), the Lord will not pay attention to him (ladī l-Ḥaqq madhkūr na) and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people.³⁶⁷

From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha’is).³⁶⁸

If reason and science are not a criterion for recognizing the truth about a religion, then what is?

It would have been better if this principle was called “Science and Reason Must be in Conformity With Baha’ism” instead of “Religion Must be in Conformity With Science and Reason.”

2-Bāb’s Religious Orders That Contradict Reason and Common-Sense

As was also mentioned in the first principle, the Bāb and his book, Bayān hold a special importance for Baha’i’s. This is what Bahā’u’llāh says, about the book of Bayan:

Refer to it, for a letter from it will suffice the entirety of the people of the earth. And surely God has stated all things in the evident book.³⁶⁹

He also says:

³⁶⁷ Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111.

³⁶⁸ Bahā’u’llāh, Badī’, pp. 138–139.

³⁶⁹ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 2, p. 102.

I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth.³⁷⁰

Even though Bahā'u'llāh abrogated the book of the Bayān, he had stresses many times that he had no intention to do so. Rather, he had stated that he intended to reinforce its decrees:

Say: The polytheists thought that we might want to abrogate what was revealed unto the Point of Bayan (Nuqṭat al-Bayān which means the Bab). Say: By my Merciful Lord, even if we had intended [to do] what they had thought, no one was allowed to object to God who has created everything . . . but God has desired by this manifestation [meaning Bahā'u'llāh himself] to reinforce what has been revealed by the Point of Bayan . . . thus we will reinforce his decrees and will prove his writings [or signs] on earth with power and authority.³⁷¹

This is while many of the laws that have been put forth by the Bab in the book of Bayan are unacceptable to any sound mind. We have already mentioned a few of these in the previous chapters. We will repeat them here accompanied by a few more samples:

a- Destroy Anything and Anyone non-Bābī

You must destroy everything [non-Bābī?] that you have written and you must argue using the Bayān.³⁷²

³⁷⁰ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

³⁷¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 390.

³⁷² The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chap. 6.

Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this Order (meaning the Bab's creed).³⁷³

The fifth chapter of the fifth unit which is about the decree of taking the property of those who do not believe in [the religion] of Bayan and giving it back if they become believers in this religion, except in the lands where taking [property] is not possible.³⁷⁴

The sixteenth chapter of the seventh unit which is about [the decree] that all rulers who rise who are [followers] of the religion of the Bayan, leave no-one in their land who is not a follower of this religion. This is compulsory upon all the people too.³⁷⁵

He who acquires a position of ruling is a manifestation of God's wrath and if possible for him, must not leave [alive] on earth anyone but the Bābīs!³⁷⁶

Make everyone accept the [religion of] Bayān and do not accept from them jewels that would amount to the whole earth as payment so that they are excused from becoming Bābīs.³⁷⁷

As we previously noted both Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā had announced what the essence of the Bab's religion was:

³⁷³ The Bāb, Farsi bayān, unit 6, chap. 6.

³⁷⁴ The Bāb, Farsi Bayan, unit 5, chap. 5.

³⁷⁵ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 16, chap. 7.

³⁷⁶ The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 4, chap. al-Bahā.

³⁷⁷ The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 5, chap. al-Lād.

The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]³⁷⁸; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups. Now however, through the strengthening grace and potency of the Word of God these four barriers have been demolished, these clear injunctions have been obliterated from the Tablet and brutal dispositions have been transmuted into spiritual attributes.³⁷⁹

The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A`lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it.³⁸⁰

These are the orders of the herald to Bahā'u'llāh: behead, burn, destroy, massacre, and exterminate!

b- Books, Writings, and Teaching

Teaching a book other than the book of Bayān is not allowed unless it has in it what is related to speculative theology (kalām). [Teaching] those [sciences] which have been invented such as logic (manṭiq), principles of jurisprudence (uṣūl), and other [sciences], are not permitted for those who have faith.³⁸¹

³⁷⁸ The Farsi word used in the original tablet translates to beheading not shedding blood.

³⁷⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

³⁸⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 2, p. 266.

³⁸¹ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 4, chap. 10.

You have been prohibited in the Bayān from having more than nineteen books. If you do so, you will be fined 19 mithqāls³⁸² of gold.³⁸³

Do not argue but by the verses [of the Bayān] for whoever does not argue using them has no knowledge, and do not mention any miracle [but this book]!³⁸⁴

The best trade is to acquire all of the Bāb's books. Once this is fulfilled sustenance will flow down like rain:

If possible acquire all the writings of the Point (meaning the Bāb) even if they are in printed form (not hand-written) for sustenance will descend upon those who possess these like rain. Say O my servants, this is the best trade!³⁸⁵

And finally some very disturbing words:

Say O Muḥammad, my teacher. Do not hit me before my age finishes five even for a moment for my heart is very very soft. After that discipline me but not more than I can bear. If you want to hit me do not [hit me] more than five times. And do not hit me on my flesh (lahm) unless there is a covering over it. If you exceed [these guidelines] your wife will be illegal for you for nineteen days. If you forget and if you don't have a companion, then you must give in charity for every beating nineteen mithqāls³⁸⁶ of gold if you want to be faithful.³⁸⁷

³⁸² Every mithqāl is equal to about 3.6 grams.

³⁸³ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 11, chap. 7.

³⁸⁴ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chapter 8.

³⁸⁵ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 10.

³⁸⁶ 3.6 grams.

³⁸⁷ Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chapter 11.

These words are very disturbing because he is giving orders to his teacher to do something not in the future, but in the past! He is telling his teacher to not hit him until his age passes five. These words were uttered when the Bāb was about 29 years old! He then threatens the teacher that if he surpasses these orders he will make his wife illegal for him for nineteen days (!) or if he doesn't have a companion (wife) he would have to pay nineteen mithqāls of Gold. Are these words in conformity with reason and science?

c- Food and Medicine

Using medicine is forbidden:

You must not possess, buy, sell, or use medicine, intoxicants, and higher than those!³⁸⁸

Drinking donkey milk is also forbidden and by not drinking it people will become pious:

Do not drink donkey milk! And do not load it and other animals with what they cannot bear. This is what God has made incumbent upon you so that you may become pious!³⁸⁹

Do not spoil eggs for they are the Bāb's food on the Day of Resurrection:

Do not hit eggs on something that will spoil their insides before they are cooked, for this is the food of the Primal Point (the Bāb) and his followers in the Day of Resurrection (Qiyāma) so that you may be grateful.³⁹⁰

³⁸⁸ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 8.

³⁸⁹ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 10, chap. 15.

³⁹⁰ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 10, chap. 15.

This order is itself very unique for according to the Baha'is, the Day of Resurrection, is the proclamation of Bahā'u'llāh. The Bāb had been dead for many years when this occurred so how could his food be eggs on that day?

d- Going on Journeys

Unreasonable punishments:

Whoever forces anyone in a journey—even one step—or enters someone's house before permission is given, or forces him out of his house without his permission, or unlawfully summons him from his home, then his wife will be illegal for him for 19 months!³⁹¹

Permission is given for going on journeys for one of three reasons:

Do not go on journeys but [1] for the sake of God and [2] if you are going to (visit) He Whom God Shall Make Manifest or [3] (visiting) those who have faith in him. And He orders you to take the leaves of trees and eat them [!] and walk above [!] the earth with your legs!³⁹²

The order has been given to eat the leaves of trees and to walk above the ground with the legs! Pay attention, he says above (fauq) the ground not on the ground!

e- Some Miscellaneous Laws

³⁹¹ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chap. 16.

³⁹² The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 6, chap. al-Badī.

I have given permission to every soul to carry one thousand lines [from my books] with them so that they may have great pleasure!³⁹³

Do not make more than 95 doors for the Point's (the Bāb's) house!³⁹⁴

Do not wear clothes that will frighten children!³⁹⁵

At the age of eleven all children must marry. The consequence for ignoring this order is the annihilation of their good deeds:

It is incumbent upon all souls to leave from himself a soul (meaning to have children) and you must bring them close to each other (i.e. make them marry) after they have turned eleven and whoever can marry but doesn't, then his [good] deeds will be annihilated!³⁹⁶

Buying and selling air, fire, water, and earth is prohibited:

Do not buy or sell the four elements (earth, air, fire, and water)!³⁹⁷

Do not ride cows and do not put loads on them if you (truly) believe in God and His signs!³⁹⁸

In every dispensation, God loves that everything becomes renewed. It is because of this that he has ordered that once in every 202 years every person renew what books he possesses ³⁹³ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chap. 1.

³⁹⁴ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chap. 13.

³⁹⁵ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 7, chap. 6.

³⁹⁶ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 8, chap. 15.

³⁹⁷ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 11.

³⁹⁸ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 10, chap. 15.

by either putting them in fresh water or bestowing them to someone else!³⁹⁹

It is incumbent for every person to leave for his inheritors 19 pieces of soft paper and 19 rings inscribed on them a Name from the Names of God!⁴⁰⁰

If anyone can, they must recite 700 verses from the Bayān every day and night and if they can't they must repeat 'Allahu Aẓhar' 700 times!⁴⁰¹

You must accept as guests 19 people in 19 days!⁴⁰²

These are only a handful of the Bāb's orders. We have sufficed with these as to not elongate this section. This is how the Bāb praises these laws:

What has been descended (i.e. revealed) in the Bayān from the verses, a single one of them is a proof over everyone that is in the skies and the earth and what is in between them. And if all those who are in the skies and the earth and what is in between them come together so as to put forth anything like it, they will be incapable.⁴⁰³

Bahā'u'llāh had also praised these laws by these words:

³⁹⁹ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 7, chap. 1.

⁴⁰⁰ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 8, chap. 2.

⁴⁰¹ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 8, chap. 14.

⁴⁰² The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 17.

⁴⁰³ The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 1, chap. 3.

I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth.⁴⁰⁴

When Bahā'u'llāh was praising these irrational statements, had he forgotten what he had uttered about religion being in conformance with science:

[That which causes] distinction between humans and animals is reason and science. If religious beliefs contradict reason and science, then of course [they are] ignorance.⁴⁰⁵

Irrespective of the Bayan being abrogated or not, most if not all of the aforementioned decrees clearly contradict reason. Thus, according to Baha'i principles, Bābism is not a religion and consequently Baha'ism too is not a religion.

3-Bahā'u'llāh's Statements That Are Against Science and Reason

a- The punishment for Arson

Is this law about arson logical?

Should anyone intentionally destroy a house by fire, him also shall ye burn; should anyone deliberately take another's life, him also shall ye put to death. Take ye hold of the precepts of God with all your strength and power, and abandon the ways of the ignorant. Should ye condemn the arsonist and the murderer to life imprisonment, it would be permissible according to the provisions of the Book. He, verily, hath power to ordain whatsoever He pleaseth.⁴⁰⁶

⁴⁰⁴ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

⁴⁰⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 92.

⁴⁰⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 203.

Bahā'u'llāh announces that arsons who destroy a house are to be burned alive or alternatively they can be imprisoned for life. No conditions have been specified whatsoever about the severity and extremity of the offence that will lead to this punishment. This law must be implemented irrespective of anyone dying as a result of this fire. This law is so harsh and illogical that in the complementary notes of the Book of Aqdas, the following explanation has been added:

The details of the Baha'i law of punishment for murder and arson, a law designed for a future state of society, were not specified by Bahā'u'llāh. The various details of the law, such as degrees of offence, whether extenuating circumstances are to be taken into account, and which of the two prescribed punishments is to be the norm are left to the Universal House of Justice to decide in light of prevailing conditions when the law is to be in operation. The manner in which the punishment is to be carried out is also left to the Universal House of Justice to decide. In relation to arson, this depends on what "house" is burned. There is obviously a tremendous difference in the degree of offence between the person who burns down an empty warehouse and one who sets fire to a school full of children.

The interesting point is the fact that the above statement was neither uttered by Bahā'u'llāh, nor `Abdu'l-Bahā, nor Shoghi, and none of these characters had stated anything about these conditions and matters whatsoever. They had all accepted the law as it had been announced without the need for further interpretation. As can be seen elsewhere, the Universal House of Justice has put forward an interpretation for one of Bahā'u'llāh's laws that none of the authorized interpreters of Bahā'u'llāh's teachings—meaning `Abdu'l-Bahā and Shoghi⁴⁰⁷—had mentioned. The unauthorized interpreter of this law (the UHJ) has designated it as one being “designed for a future state of society,” to prevent it from being implemented and to silence any criticism that might occur. This attitude can be seen in many problematic Baha’i laws in which they are simply ignored and disregarded, by claiming this law is for the future.

⁴⁰⁷ "Bahā'u'llāh designated 'Abdu'l-Bahā, His eldest Son, as His Successor and the Interpreter of His Teachings. 'Abdu'l-Bahā in His turn appointed His eldest grandson, Shoghi Effendi, to

b- Nuclear Physics or Alchemy?!

The following quote is propagated by Baha’is in a bid to prove Bahā’u’llāh had spoken about nuclear physics:

Consider the doubts which they who have joined partners with God have instilled into the hearts of the people of this land. “Is it ever possible,” they ask, “for copper to be transmuted into gold?” Say, Yes, by my Lord, it is possible. Its secret, however, lieth hidden in Our Knowledge. We will reveal it unto whom We will. Whoso doubteth Our power, let him ask the Lord his God, that He may disclose unto him the secret, and assure him of its truth. That copper can be turned into gold is in itself sufficient proof that gold can, in like manner, be transmuted into copper, if they be of them that can apprehend this truth. Every mineral can be made to acquire the density, form, and substance of each and every other mineral. The knowledge thereof is with Us in the Hidden Book.⁴⁰⁸

This text is completely misleading for it has a number of errors in the translation and has been taken out of context. We have translated the complete text from the original Farsi words below:

succeed Him as interpreter of the holy Writ and Guardian of the Cause. The interpretations of ‘Abdu’l-Bahā and Shoghi Effendi are considered divinely guided and are binding on the Baha’is,” Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 221.

⁴⁰⁸ Bahā’u’llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā’u’llāh, pp. 197–198.

From amongst the doubts that the polytheists have induced in this land is [the question] that how is it possible for gold to transmute into copper? Say, “Yes [it is possible], by my Lord, but we have the knowledge and teach it to whoever we want through a knowledge from our side. Whoever has doubts should ask his Lord to show him so that he becomes one of those who has certitude.” The [fact] that copper can attain the state of gold is a clear reason that gold can retain its original state (meaning copper), [they would understand] this if they had any sense. All metals can attain the weight (wazn), face (ṣūrat), and substance (māddih) of each other, but we have this knowledge in a hidden book. We say that the knowledge of the deniers has not reached a state for them to understand that gold transmutes into gold and they have not understood yet that it can turn into earth. This state is visible for all those who have any sense, that they all originated from earth and to earth they will return. Earths importance and price is cheaper than copper for [earth] is from the masses (ajṣām) and copper is from the bodies (ajṣād). This is very obvious and evident and if the people had been mature and worthy we would have definitely uttered some of the secret Divine Sciences.⁴⁰⁹

In this quote Bahā’u’llāh has used a number of terms that are peculiar to alchemy. Such as weight, face (ṣūrat), masses (ajṣad), bodies (ajṣam), copper and gold transmuting to each other, earth being less important and cheaper than copper, etc. The esoteric language that he has used, which is customary of alchemists is further proof that he is explaining his own alchemical beliefs in a strictly alchemical language.

He claims that all metals can transmute into each other but mechanisms involved are Divine secrets that he will not speak about because people are not worthy and mature enough to know these sciences. The first thing that would come to the mind is that he was probably speaking about nuclear physics and the mechanisms that can be performed in particle accelerators—by consuming large amounts of energy—to transmute very minute amounts of elements to others. Baha’is would want you to think that since the laws governing nuclear physics were not known in those times, the phrase that the people are not mature means they currently lack the means to understand these sciences. Fortunately, Bahā’u’llāh has revealed elsewhere the exact mechanism by which he believes copper transmutes into gold.

⁴⁰⁹ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā’idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, pp. 18-19.

When Bahā’u’llāh wants to speak about the “Divine Elixir” that can transform people⁴¹⁰ in an instant, he gives the example of the transformation of copper to gold. He explains that just as copper transforms into gold, the Divine Elixir can transform the people. Then he explains how this transformation happens in detail:

For instance, consider the substance of copper. Were it to be protected in its own mine from becoming solidified, it would, within the space of seventy years, attain to the state of gold. There are some, however, who maintain that copper itself is gold, which by becoming solidified is in a diseased condition, and hath not therefore reached its own state. Be that as it may, the real elixir will, in one instant, cause the substance of copper to attain the state of gold, and will traverse the seventy-year stages in a single moment.⁴¹¹

Bahā’u’llāh states that if copper is prevented from becoming dry in a mine, it will turn to gold after 70 years! The fallacies in this statement are unjustifiable. Shoghi has used the word “solidified” to translate ⁴¹⁰ These metaphors are in exact accordance with alchemist beliefs, for in the spiritual aspect of alchemy, it was believed that the philosophers stone (elixir) would transmute the bad souls into pure souls.

⁴¹¹ Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 157.

“yubūsat.” This must not be confused with solid as opposed to liquid or gas, for “yubūsat” was used by alchemists to refer to dryness as opposed to wetness. Either way, the statement is completely wrong and contradicts established physical laws about the conversion of elements, for copper does not turn into gold if left in a wet (or liquified) state for 70 years.

Some Baha’is try to justify these words by claiming that Bahā’u’llāh was merely narrating the beliefs of others. The context of the words prove otherwise and the only sentence that might be the belief of others is the one that comes after his statement: “There are some, however, who maintain that copper itself is gold . . .” This shows that the first statement was his own and the second the belief of others. Furthermore, there are other alchemical statements in Baha’i scripture that clearly show he was uttering his own beliefs:

The King of the Names (God) has made the possibility in some things to change and in others He hasn’t. For instance, copper can transmute into Gold but earth/soil (turab) does not have this possibility in actualness (bil-fi’l). Since the scientists [meaning alchemists] have already mentioned these subjects this servant did not like to mention it comprehensively.⁴¹²

The last sentence clearly shows that his beliefs about alchemy were based on the science of those days and he had nothing new to utter. Most—if not all—of those beliefs about alchemy have been proven wrong today. If, Religion Must Be in Conformity with Science and Reason, Bahā’u’llāh’s words in no means fulfill this criterion.

⁴¹² `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā’idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 44.

c- Earth's Age

Bahā'u'llāh claims:

The learned men, that have fixed at several thousand years the life of this earth [the age of this world], have failed, throughout the long period of their observation, to consider either the number or the age of the other planets. Consider, moreover, the manifold divergencies that have resulted from the theories propounded by these men.⁴¹³

What we have placed in square-brackets is the correct translation of the original Farsi text that has been distorted by the Baha'i translation committee. There are more errors in the translation of this quote that we will ignore for now.

The fallacy in these words is that the learned men had not fixed the age of the earth at several thousand years during Bahā'u'llāh's life. The estimates ranged from tens of thousands to the millions. In the mid-eighteenth century, Russian scientist Mikhail Lomonosov—widely viewed as the founder of modern Russian science—concluded that earth had been created several hundred thousand years ago. The French naturalist, Comte du Buffon, gave an estimate of 75000 years in 1779. The physicist, William Thomson of Glasgow, gave the estimate of between 20–400 million years in 1862.

These are estimates about the “age of the earth.” The original Farsi words used by Baha'u'llah translate to “the age of this world.” Many scientists contemporary to Baha'u'llah believed that this world is eternal (not a few thousand years claimed by Baha'u'llah).

⁴¹³ Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 163. The original Fārsī quote can be found in Bahā'u'llāh, Muntakhabāt az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, p. 109.

d- Aliens

Bahā'u'llāh says:

Know thou that every fixed star hath its own planets, and every planet its own creatures, whose number no man can compute.⁴¹⁴

Science has already proven the falsity of this claim. We will leave it to the readers to judge for themselves how the founder of a religion that claims divine knowledge can come up with such words.

To justify this fallacy Baha'is have uttered a few arguments that are all invalid. In the first argument they claim he is referring to "fixed stars" and most stars are not fixed but are in motion thus, these words are referring to specific fixed stars which do indeed have life on their planets but we do not have the means to view these life forms from deep within space. This argument is wrong because the Farsi word used is thawābit which is used to refer to celestial bodies that appear to have fixed positions with respect to each other from the viewpoint of an observer on earth. Planets do not fit this criterion but all stars do.⁴¹⁵ The correct translation thus would be all stars not fixed stars.

The second justification is that 'creatures' refers to minerals and non-living matter! Should we thank Bahā'u'llāh for telling us that there are innumerable numbers of minerals and dead matter on other planets? Gary L. Mathews, a prominent Baha'i author explains this in depth:

Furthermore, Bahā'u'llāh's teachings explicitly state that even "minerals are endowed with a spirit and life according to the requirements of that stage . . . [sic] even as He saith in the Qur'ān, 'All things are living.'" Thus rocks, ponds, clouds, and ⁴¹⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 163. The original Fārsī quote can be found in Bahā'u'llāh, Muntakhabāt az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, p. 109.

⁴¹⁵ See Dihkhudā and Mu'īn dictionaries under the word thawābit.

other inanimate objects may, in some rudimentary sense, fall within Bahā'u'llāh's definition of "creatures."⁴¹⁶

Mathews believes that rocks, ponds, and clouds are creatures endowed with a spirit and life! He has reached this conclusion through a verse of the Quran that `Abdu'l-Bahā has quoted: 'All things are living.' This verse does not exist in the Quran and has been forged by `Abdu'l-Bahā to back-up his false claims about everything possessing spirit and life. Here is the real verse:

We made from water everything living.⁴¹⁷

Compare again with the distorted version put forward by Bahā'u'llāh: 'All things are living.' These two sentences have two completely different meanings.

Pay attention to the quote we mentioned from G. Mathews: "minerals are endowed with a spirit and life according to the requirements of that stage . . . [sic] even as He saith in the Qur'ān." Why has he removed a section of the quote by using three periods? To hide a bitter truth; here is the quote as it had been uttered by `Abdu'l-Bahā:

As to the existence of spirit in the mineral: it is indubitable that minerals are endowed with a spirit and life according to the requirements of that stage. This unknown secret, too, hath become known unto the materialists⁴¹⁸ who now

⁴¹⁶ Gary L. Mathews, The Challenge of Bahā'u'llāh: Does God Still Speak to Humanity Today (George Ronald Pub Ltd, 2001), p. 86.

⁴¹⁷ Quran, 21:30

⁴¹⁸ This is how `Abdu'l-Bahā defines materialists: "By materialists, whose belief with regard to Divinity hath been explained, is not meant philosophers in general, but rather that group of materialists of narrow vision who worship that which is sensed, who depend upon the five senses only, and whose criterion of knowledge is limited to that which can be perceived by the senses. All that can be sensed is to them real, whilst whatever falleth not under the power of the senses is either unreal or doubtful. The existence of the Deity they regard as wholly doubtful," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel (George Ronald Publishers, 1978), p. 7.

maintain that all beings are endowed with life, even as He saith in the Qur'ān, 'All things are living.'⁴¹⁹

As if distorting the Quran wasn't enough `Abdu'l-Bahā puts the burden of his lies upon the materialists: "materialists who now maintain that all beings are endowed with life." The Farsi words translated to 'beings' are jamī` kā'ināt which means all things existing. `Abdu'l-Bahā is basically telling us that materialistics believe all things in existence are endowed with life. Materialists have never maintained such a belief!

Whatever the justification, Shoghi too has made it clear that he believes there are creatures on all other planets and science must find them some day:

Regarding the passage on p. 163 of the 'Gleanings': The creatures which Bahā'u'llāh states to be found on every planet cannot be considered to be necessarily similar or different from human beings on this earth. Bahā'u'llāh does not specifically state whether such creatures are like or unlike us. He simply refers to the fact that there are creatures on every planet. It remains for science to discover one day the exact nature of these creatures. (From a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an individual believer, February 9, 1937)⁴²⁰

These words from Shoghi are further proof that in the Baha'i creed it is not religion that must be in conformity with science, rather it is science that must try to prove the unscientific words uttered by the leaders of Baha'ism.

`Abdu'l-Bahā too has extensively spoken about Aliens. His words are even more unscientific and unreasonable than his father's. We will analyze them in the next sections.

⁴¹⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel, p. 9.

⁴²⁰ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XLI, no. 1581.

e- Pythagoras Lived in the days of Solomon!

In the Tablet of Wisdom Bahā'u'llāh claims that all philosophers have acquired their knowledge from Divine Prophets and then he brings forward two examples:

Empedocles, who distinguished himself in philosophy, was a contemporary of David, while Pythagoras lived in the days of Solomon, son of David, and acquired Wisdom from the treasury of prophethood. It is he who claimed to have heard the whispering sound of the heavens and to have attained the station of the angels. In truth thy Lord will clearly set forth all things, if He pleaseth. Verily, He is the Wise, the All-Pervading.⁴²¹

He claims that Empedocles was a contemporary of David and Pythagoras lived in the days of Solomon. These two examples are both wrong, very wrong. Empedocles lived between 490–440 BC, while David is believed to have lived sometime around 1040–970 BC. Pythagoras lived between 570–495 BC, while Solomon is believed to have lived sometime around 970–931 BC.

Seeing this great fallacy, the Baha'i administration has tried to justify these words by inserting the following footnote in the published version of this tablet:

In many of the passages that follow concerning the Greek philosophers, Bahā'u'llāh quotes verbatim from the works of such Muslim historians as Abu'l-Fath-i-Shāhristānā (1076–1153 A.D.) and Imādu'd-Dān Abu'l-Fidā (1273–1331 A.D.).⁴²²

⁴²¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1988 [pocket-size edition]), p. 145.

⁴²² Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 144 (footnote).

So the infallible Bahā'u'llāh with all his divine knowledge quotes wrong historical facts from two Muslim historians, and verbatim?! What happened to all his divine knowledge and infallibility?!

The absurdity of this justification can be seen more clearly by referring to the First words of this tablet:

This is an Epistle which the All-Merciful hath sent down from the Kingdom of Utterance.⁴²³

Bahā'u'llāh is clearly stating that this tablet is the word of God, the All-Merciful. The justification put forward by the Baha'i administration basically boils down to this: God revealed a tablet in which He quoted verbatim two wrong historical facts from the history books of two of his erring servants!

The fallacies don't end here. In an article titled *Socrates*⁴²⁴, compiled by the Research Department of the Universal House of Justice, Shoghi has been quoted as saying regarding the previous quote:

We must not take this statement too literally; "contemporary" may have been meant in Persian as something far more elastic than the English word. Likewise, the whole translation probably needs revising (15 February 1947).

This is a clear admittance by Shoghi—the authorized interpreter and translator of Baha'i scripture—that he does not have enough knowledge about the Persian language to produce an appropriate translation. This is not the disturbing point in this quote. What is disturbing, is the fact that the original tablet was revealed by Bahā'u'llāh in Arabic, NOT Persian as Shoghi claims! Shoghi's words clearly contradict the claim ⁴²³ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 137.

⁴²⁴ Available online: http://bahai-library.com/compilation_socrates_bwc (retrieved 17/2/2014). This article points out to a few more historical errors in `Abdu'l-Bahā's words regarding the prophets and philosophers.

(written on his behalf) that he was infallible regarding matters related to the cause:

The infallibility of the Guardian is confined to matters which are related strictly to the Cause and interpretations of the Teachings; he is not an infallible authority on other subjects, such as economics, science, etc.⁴²⁵

f- Bahā'u'llāh's Opinion About the Book of Bayān

We showed in the previous sections the illogical and unreasonable orders uttered by the Bāb in the book of Bayān. Orders like beheading non-Babis, burning their books, destroying their monuments, massacring them, eating the leaves of trees, walking above the earth with legs, not consuming medicine, etc.

These instructions and orders are so inhumane, illogical, and unreasonable that they are never mentioned by Baha'is. When approached by questions regarding these matters, they respond by saying Bābism has been abrogated and what orders the Bāb gave, have nothing to do with Baha'ism. Bahā'u'llāh considers his own book the Aqdas as the abrogator of the Bayān:

The book of Aqdas abrogates all the decrees of the book of Bayān . . . everyone's [religious] source is [now] the book of Aqdas not the book of Bayān. The decrees of the Bayān are [now] abrogated.⁴²⁶

Nevertheless, the author of this violent, irrational, and unreasonable book is considered as the Starting Point (nuqṭiyi aulā) and herald to Bahā'u'llāh. Baha'is celebrate his birth, rush to visit his shrine, and consider visiting his home (in Shiraz, Iran) to be like performing the ⁴²⁵ Shoghi Effendi, Directives from the Guardian, pp. 33–34.

⁴²⁶ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣṣī, vol. 2, p. 106.

Islamic Hajj.⁴²⁷ So how is it that they deny having any relation to the Bāb, and declare Bābism to be abrogated? Furthermore, Bahā'u'llāh had affirmed the status and position of the book of Bayān by telling his followers to refer to this book:

Refer to it, for a letter from it will suffice the entirety of the people of the earth. And surely God has stated all things in the evident book.⁴²⁸

Claiming that the book of Bayān has been abrogated does not resolve the problem, for Bahā'u'llāh had stated multiple times that he did not intend to abrogate this book:

Say, the polytheists thought that we might want to abrogate what was revealed unto the Point of Bayan (Nuqṭat al-Bayān which means the Bab) . . . but God has desired by this manifestation [meaning Bahā'u'llāh himself] to reinforce what has been revealed by the Point of Bayan . . . thus we will reinforce his decrees and will prove his writings [or signs] on earth with an evident power and authority.⁴²⁹

Although everyone knows that by this great manifestation what has been revealed in the Bayān has been proved/made firm, made obvious, and has been fulfilled; the name of God has been elevated; the remnants of God have been distributed to the West and East; and the Farsi Bayān has been endorsed particularly for this manifestation, but they have been constantly writing “that they (meaning the Baha’is)

⁴²⁷ Hajj is a special Islamic pilgrimage that every Muslims is required to perform in the city of Mecca at least once in their lifetime if the conditions are met.

⁴²⁸ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 2, p. 102.

⁴²⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 390.

have abrogated the Bayān” so that they may induce doubts in the hearts and the calf⁴³⁰ may be worshipped.⁴³¹

They have attributed to this Station (meaning Bahā’u’llāh)—by whose authority all [divine] Books speak— that he has abrogated the decrees of the Bayān. May the curse of God fall upon the unjust.⁴³²

I swear to God that if an individual from the followers of the Bayān mentions the abrogation of that book, God will break the mouth of the speaker and defamer.⁴³³

Bahā’u’llāh had even stated that

I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth.⁴³⁴

According to what Bahā’u’llāh states—irrespective of the Bayān being abrogated or not—the savage acts of murder⁴³⁵, looting⁴³⁶, and the ⁴³⁰ Calf or ʿIjl, was used by Bahā’u’llāh to refer to his brother Mīrzā Yahyā who opposed him and was widely believed by the Bābīs to be the successor of the Bāb.

⁴³¹ Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, pp. 45-46.

⁴³² Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 103.

⁴³³ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

⁴³⁴ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

⁴³⁵ Chapter 7 of the 16th unit of the Farsi Bayan: “The sixteenth chapter of the seventh unit which is about [the decree] that all rulers who rise who are [followers] of the religion of the Bayan, leave no-one in their land who is not a follower of this religion. This is compulsory upon all the people too”; “The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A’lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb’s religion] and verified it,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266.

⁴³⁶ Chapter 5 of the 5th unit of the Farsi Bayan: “The fifth chapter of the fifth unit which is about the decree of taking the property of those who do not believe in [the religion] of Bayan and giving it back if they become believers in this religion, except in the lands where taking [property] is not possible.”

crimes against humanity⁴³⁷ that Ali Muḥammad Bāb ordered his followers to commit in the Bayān, were more dear to Bahā'u'llāh than everything that is in the heavens and earth. This is the true face of Bahā'u'llāh that Baha'is are trying to hide today. One is truly lost in amazement at how Bahā'u'llāh glorifies the acts of savagery ordered by the Bāb while at the same time whines about other people taking glory in savage acts:

Gracious God! The great and the noble in Persia glory in acts of such savagery that one is lost in amazement at the tales thereof.⁴³⁸

g- Baha'u'llah is the Creator of Multiple Gods

Baha'u'llah claims:

All Gods became Gods from the flow of my affairs and all Lords became Lords by the overflowing of my decree.⁴³⁹

These words make no sense and are against reason and the teachings of all monotheistic religions.

4-`Abdu'l-Bahā's Statements That Are Against Science and Reason

Before we start this section we must point out that when `Abdu'l-Bahā was asked if he knew everything, he had answered:

⁴³⁷ "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266; Farsi Bayān: "Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this order (meaning the Bab's creed)."

⁴³⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 90.

⁴³⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 2, p. 255.

No, I do not know everything. But when I need to know something, it is pictured before me.⁴⁴⁰

These words are sometimes labeled by Baha'is as being pilgrims notes that cannot be verified. Shoghi has done us a favor and has verified these words at least in the sense that `Abdu'l-Bahā is unerring, has superhuman knowledge, and his words are valid like his father:

Little wonder that from the same unerring pen there should have flowed, after 'Abdu'l-Bahā's memorable visit to the West . . .⁴⁴¹

He is, and should for all time be regarded, first and foremost, as the Center and Pivot of Bahā'u'llāh's peerless and all-enfolding Covenant, His most exalted handiwork, the stainless Mirror of His light, the perfect Exemplar of His teachings, the unerring Interpreter of His Word . . . He is, above and beyond these appellations, the "Mystery of God"—an expression by which Bahā'u'llāh Himself has chosen to designate Him, and which, while it does not by any means justify us to assign to Him the station of Prophethood, indicates how in the person of 'Abdu'l-Bahā the incompatible characteristics of a human nature and superhuman knowledge and perfection have been blended and are completely harmonized.⁴⁴²

Magnified be He, therefore, for this sublime, this blessed, this mighty, this exalted Handiwork . . . A Word hath, as a token of Our grace, gone forth from the Most Great Tablet—a Word which God hath adorned with the ornament of His own Self, ⁴⁴⁰ Stanwood Cobb, Memories of 'Abdu'l-Bahā in In his Presence: Visits to 'Abdu'l-Bahā (Kalimāt Press, 1989), p. 60.

⁴⁴¹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 75.

⁴⁴² Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

and made it sovereign over the earth and all that is therein, and a sign of His greatness and power among its people . . . Render thanks unto God, O people, for His appearance; for verily He is the most great Favor unto you, the most perfect bounty upon you . . . We have sent Him down in the form of a human temple . . . He is the Trust of God amongst you, His charge within you, They who deprive themselves of the shadow of the Branch, are lost in the wilderness of error, are consumed by the heat of worldly desires, and are of those who will assuredly perish.⁴⁴³

That ‘Abdu’l-Bahā is not a Manifestation of God, that He gets His light, His inspiration and sustenance direct from the Fountain-head of the Bahā’ī Revelation; that He reflects even as a clear and perfect Mirror the rays of Bahā’u’llāh’s glory, and does not inherently possess that indefinable yet all-pervading reality the exclusive possession of which is the hallmark of Prophethood; that His words are not equal in rank, though they possess an equal validity with the utterances of Bahā’u’llāh . . .⁴⁴⁴

Shoghi clearly states that ‘Abdu’l-Bahā is unerring, has Superhuman Knowledge, and his words are equal in validity with those of Bahā’u’llāh. Now let us test this unerring, super human, and valid knowledge:

a- Spontaneous Generation

Spontaneous generation is the incorrect belief that non-living things can give rise to living organisms. For instance, the belief had been held for years that maggots (fly larvae) were created due to the decay of meat. These beliefs were effectively disproved by Louis Pasteur’s experiments in the nineteenth century. Apparently, the same `Abdu'l-Bahā that preached about the accordance of religion with science and reason at every opportunity, had not heard about these scientific discoveries:

⁴⁴³ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā’u’llāh, p. 136.

⁴⁴⁴ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā’u’llāh, p. 139.

Know that the creatures are of many kinds . . . some are created in wombs others [are created] by spontaneous regeneration (khalq al-sā`a) and come into existence by themselves, such as the animals that are created in fruits, and a group are created in eggs. These are the types of creation of [living] things.⁴⁴⁵

b- Convex and Concave Mirrors

`Abdu'l-Bahā believes that a convex mirror, like a concave mirror, focuses light rays in a single real point. When explaining the necessity of focusing thought in one point he uses the following parable:

Like sunlight that does not have a complete effect on a flat mirror, but when it shines on a concave or convex mirror, all its heat is focused in a single point and the heat of that point will become stronger than fire.⁴⁴⁶

This is while it has been proven centuries ago that a convex mirror, as opposed to a concave mirror, spreads light rays apart and does not create heat by focusing them. Some have defended Abdu'l-Bahā's words by claiming that he meant a virtual focus; this is unacceptable because he clearly states that the heat in the focus point will be hotter than fire and this phenomena only occurs in a real focus point.

c- Animal Breath

⁴⁴⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 24.

⁴⁴⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ayyām tis`a, p. 324.

From the breath of animals a watery element (`unṣur) spreads that is nowadays called hydrogen and carbon and this gives life to plants and from plants and trees a fiery element spreads that is nowadays phrased as oxygen and is the cause of animal survival.⁴⁴⁷

What `Abdu'l-Bahā apparently means by the element that “gives life to plants” is carbon dioxide. Carbon dioxide is not an element, is not called “hydrogen and carbon,” does not have hydrogen in it, and is not watery. It is a gaseous compound.

d- Male and Female

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The tenth principle of his Highness Bahā'u'llāh is the unity of men and women; for in the view of God men and women are equal. They are all from the human race and the descendants of Adam. Because being male or female is not specific to the human race. Plants have male and female and animals too have male and female and there is no distinction. Look at the plant kingdom. Is there any distinction between male plants and female plants? Rather there is complete equality; and in the Animal kingdom too, there is no distinction at all. They are all under the shadow of God's mercy.⁴⁴⁸

Are we supposed to believe male and female plants and animals are completely equal and have no distinction at all because `Abdu'l-Bahā says so? Are males and females completely equal from the perspectives of genetics, anatomy, physiology, body size and form, power, ability, ranking, and sexual domination? Had Abdu'l-Bahā not seen the male date-palm trees in Palestine that do not give any fruit whilst the female ⁴⁴⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 459.

⁴⁴⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 149–150.

produce ripe dates? Had he not seen bulls, rams, and roosters dominating a group of females? Were these male animals completely equal in behavior, shape, and domination with cows, ewes, and hens?! Do male animals have the ability to bear offspring and to lay eggs? And why does he contradict his own words elsewhere and clearly states there are distinctions and differences between male and female:

Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible.⁴⁴⁹

e- The Reason Humans Have Canine Teeth

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

Thou hast written regarding the four canine teeth in man, saying that these teeth, two in the upper jaw and two in the lower, are for the purpose of eating meat. Know thou that these four teeth are not created for meat-eating, although one can eat meat with them. All the teeth of man are made for eating fruit, cereals and vegetables. These four teeth, however, are designed for breaking hard shells, such as those of almonds.⁴⁵⁰

‘Abdu’l-Bahā claims that the four human canine teeth have been created for breaking nuts like almonds! Firstly, breaking nuts using teeth are dentists’ (and parents’) worst nightmares! The easiest way to chip one’s canines is to try to break open a nut with them.

Secondly, even if one does want to make the unwise choice of breaking nuts with their teeth, they will go about doing so using their molars, not canines, for the canines are in no way suited for this task.

⁴⁴⁹ Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār (Bombay: Karīmī Press, 1921), vol. 1, p. 153.

⁴⁵⁰ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā’ī Reference File, chap. XXIV, no. 1007.

f- Christopher Columbus Discovered America Using His Reason

This spirit has the power of discovery; it encompasses all things. All these wonderful signs, these scientific discoveries, great enterprises and important historical events which you know are due to it. From the realm of the invisible and hidden, through spiritual power, it brought them to the plane of the visible. So man is upon the earth, yet he makes discoveries in the heavens. From known realities—that is to say, from the things which are known and visible—he discovers unknown things. For example, man is in this hemisphere; but, like Columbus, through the power of his reason he discovers another hemisphere—that is, America—which was until then unknown.⁴⁵¹

ʿAbdu’l-Bahā claims that Christopher Columbus discovered America by spiritual power and reason while he was in his place in one hemisphere and America was in another hemisphere. All kinds of thorny problems arise from this statement. Firstly, Columbus did not discover America, as there were humans living there for thousands of years before he was born. Abdu’l-Bahā clearly must have known this, which raises the question of whether he, like so many of his contemporaries, considers only the Europeans to be human, and other, ‘backward’ people to be subhuman.

Secondly, even if one adopts the racist Eurocentric mindset of ignoring the Native Americans and only considering the Western Hemisphere as ‘discovered’ when Europeans land there, Abdu’l-Bahā’s statement is still incorrect. Historians today undisputedly accept that the Norse explorer Leif Erikson was the first European to land in North America, nearly 500 years before Columbus. This fact was not known during `Abdu'l-Bahā's lifetime, but is clear to us today.

⁴⁵¹ ʿAbdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 144.

Finally, even if one accepts the erroneous idea that Christopher Columbus did indeed 'discover' America, it is well known that this was by chance—not reason or spirituality—when he was looking for an alternate route from Europe to India. When he reached America he had thought he had reached India and incorrectly called the natives Indians. `Abdu'l-Bahā has repeated the aforementioned claim elsewhere:

Thus it is in Europe and discovers America; it is on the earth, and it makes discoveries in the heavens.⁴⁵²

An animal in Europe could not foresee and plan the discovery of America as Columbus did. It could not take the globe map of the earth and scan the various continents, saying, “This is the eastern hemisphere; there must be another, the western hemisphere.”⁴⁵³

The last sentence is very problematic. The eastern and western hemispheres are the hemispheres that lie on the west and east of an imaginary line called the Prime Meridian. `Abdu'l-Bahā's belief that at a time people believed there was only an eastern hemisphere and then Columbus came about and thought to himself that there must be a western one too is totally baseless.

g- The Pupil of the Eye is Black to Attract the Rays of the Sun

`Abdu'l-Bahā claims:

How many things exist of which we do not yet know the reason! So the science of physiology—that is to say, the knowledge of the composition of the members—records that ⁴⁵² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 252.

⁴⁵³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 417.

the reason and cause of the difference in the colors of animals, and of the hair of men, of the redness of the lips, and of the variety of the colors of birds, is still unknown; it is secret and hidden. But it is known that the pupil of the eye is black so as to attract the rays of the sun, for if it were another color—that is, uniformly white—it would not attract the rays of the sun. Therefore, as the reason of the things we have mentioned is unknown, it is possible that the reason and the wisdom of these traces of members, whether they be in the animal or man, are equally unknown. Certainly there is a reason, even though it is not known.⁴⁵⁴

The first sentence is in itself interesting. `Abdu'l-Bahā claims many things exist that we do not know the reason about, yet Baha'is insist he has superhuman knowledge.⁴⁵⁵ Some might argue that he wasn't referring to himself but to other people. The context and examples he puts forward show the contrary.

A great fallacy that he utters is where he says the pupil of the eye is black to attract the rays of the sun. The fact is, the pupil is merely a transparent hole in the center of the eye which light passes through to reach the retina. The only reason it appears black is that most of the light that passes through it either gets absorbed inside the eye or is diffused therein. This fact had been known for decades and optometrists had been using ophthalmoscopes to see inside the eye through this hole ever since the mid nineteenth century!

Another error is the fact that black colored things do not attract the rays of the sun. They absorb them. Whether absorption or attraction was intended, they are both wrong because the reason for the blackness of the pupil has nothing to do with it absorbing or attracting light, for the pupil is transparent and colorless.

⁴⁵⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, pp. 192–193.

⁴⁵⁵ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

Baha'is try to justify these words by claiming that the phrase has been incorrectly translated and `Abdu'l-Bahā was not referring to the pupil but was referring to another part of the eye. Firstly, the pupil is the only black part of the eye that fits `Abdu'l-Bahā's words. Secondly, The Farsi word used is tukhm chishm which is used to refer to the pupil.

Sometimes Baha'is go as far as claiming the space within the eye that is filled with a special gel was intended. This too is wrong because this space is transparent and has no color neither black nor white. Whatever part of the eye is intended, none have been created black for the purpose of attracting or absorbing sunlight and the aforementioned statements are grievous mistakes committed by the Unerring Pen.

h- Death Occurs After Decomposition

When `Abdu'l-Bahā wants to explain that the soul is immortal, he utters these words:

The whole physical creation is perishable. These material bodies are composed of atoms; when these atoms begin to separate decomposition sets in, then comes what we call death. This composition of atoms, which constitutes the body or mortal element of any created being, is temporary.⁴⁵⁶

In most if not all cases, death occurs before decomposition. `Abdu'l-Bahā claims the opposite, and says first material bodies start decomposing then death occurs!

i- Atoms are Indestructable

Scientific philosophy has demonstrated that a simple element ('simple' meaning 'not composed') [sic] is indestructible, eternal. The soul, not being a composition of elements, is, in character, as a simple element, and therefore cannot cease to exist.⁴⁵⁷

⁴⁵⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 90–91.

By simple element, he is clearly referring to atoms. He claims atoms are indestructible. This had already been proved wrong in theory by Einstein in 1905 (seven years before `Abdu'l-Bahā uttered these words). And if he had any superhuman knowledge⁴⁵⁸ he would have known how wrong his words—that were based on wrong scientific facts of those times—were.

What is strange is the fact that based on a few very vague quotes, Baha'is claim that Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā have spoken about and prophesized nuclear power. This is totally unreasonable, because nuclear power is based on the destruction of atoms whilst `Abdu'l-Bahā is uttering in a very clear manner that he believes atoms are indestructible. The first quote is from `Abdu'l-Bahā:

Scientific discoveries have greatly increased material civilization. There is in existence a stupendous force, as yet, happily, undiscovered by man. Let us supplicate God, the Beloved, that this force be not discovered by science until Spiritual Civilization, i.e. the Kingdom, shall dominate the human mind. In the hands of men of lower material nature, this power would be able to destroy the whole earth.⁴⁵⁹

Nuclear energy is based on the destruction of atoms. How can one accept that this vague statement is referring to nuclear energy whilst the same person who uttered it had stated that atoms are indestructible?

⁴⁵⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 90–91.

⁴⁵⁸ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

⁴⁵⁹ Adib Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahā'u'llāh, vol. 4, p. 225.

j- All Stars Are Inhabited by Animals That Have Souls and Move

As we previously showed Bahā'u'llāh believes that all planets are inhabited by Aliens. `Abdu'l-Bahā has similar beliefs that are even more radical. He claims all stars are inhabited by aliens:

All celestial stars have special creatures. When this planet earth that is comparably infinitely small is not empty and in vain, then these great bright shining [heavenly] bodies are a different matter altogether (meaning they definitely possess life). It has been explicitly [mentioned] in the Quran, “And from His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and the animals/beasts (dābbah) He scattered in both of them.” He says in both of them not in it (meaning only earth). It is very clear that in both of them there are creatures that have souls. For dābbah (animal/beast) is used [to refer to] a creature that has a soul and moves.⁴⁶⁰

`Abdu'l-Bahā explicitly states these creatures have souls and move. It is also evident from the context that he believes these creatures live on the stars! He iterates elsewhere to make this point perfectly clear:

He explicitly says in the Quran, “And from His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and the animals/beasts (dābbah) He scattered in both of them.” This means that there are [creatures] that have souls in both the sky and Earth. Thus it is clear that all these bright [heavenly] bodies are inhabited and the light of truth shines and beams in all of them. God has not created these infinite bright [heavenly] bodies in vain.⁴⁶¹

⁴⁶⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabātī az makātib Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā (Germany: Mu'assisiyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī Ālmān), vol. 6, no. 480.

⁴⁶¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabātī az makātib Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 481.

This belief has also been echoed in an Arabic tablet where he even goes as far as giving a rough description of these creatures:

Regarding (the question about) the species of these creatures and if they are like the creatures on earth, (the answer is) yes. But their difference is like the difference between sea dwelling, land dwelling, air dwelling, and fire dwelling animals and the difference in their nature and the variance in the balance of elements (that create them). These creatures differ in the composite parts that they are created from.⁴⁶²

We already showed that these claims are baseless and scientifically wrong. One wonders what `Abdu'l-Bahā means by fire dwelling (al-maujūdāt al-nāriyya) creatures?!

k- Blessed Animals Don't Have Patriotic Quarrels

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The blessed animals engage in no patriotic quarrels. They are in the utmost fellowship with one another and live together in harmony. For example, if a dove from the east and a dove from the west, a dove from the north and a dove from the south chance to arrive, at the same time, in one spot, they immediately associate in harmony. So is it with all the blessed animals and birds. But the ferocious animals, as soon as they meet, attack and fight with each other, tear each other to pieces and it is impossible for them to live peaceably together in one spot. They are all unsociable and fierce, savage and combative fighters.⁴⁶³

⁴⁶² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 1, p. 120.

⁴⁶³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), pp. 287–288.

We don't know what a blessed animal is, but if `Abdu'l-Bahā had paid close attention to pigeons and doves he would have seen that they too engage in quarrels and feather-plucking for a variety of reasons. Furthermore there are many ferocious animals that live peacefully with each other in large groups and packs. Lions, wolves, and dogs are obvious examples. `Abdu'l-Bahā believes that even wolves and dogs hunt alone and cannot live in groups:

Among the beasts of prey each kind liveth apart from other species of its genus, observing complete antagonism and hostility; and whenever they meet they immediately fight and draw blood, gnashing their teeth and baring their claws. This is the way in which ferocious beasts and bloodthirsty wolves behave, carnivorous animals that live by themselves and fight for their lives . . . dogs, wolves, tigers, hyenas and those other beasts of prey, are alienated from each other as they hunt and roam about alone.⁴⁶⁴

I- The Sun is Stationary, Fixed, and Ever Occupies the Same Space

The animal cannot become aware of the fact that the earth is revolving and the sun stationary. Only processes of reasoning can come to this conclusion. The outward eye sees the sun as revolving. It mistakes the stars and the planets as moving about the earth. But reason decides their orbit, knows that the earth is moving and the other worlds fixed, knows that the sun is the solar center and ever occupies the same place, proves that it is the earth which revolves around it.⁴⁶⁵

⁴⁶⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Selections From the Writings of `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 287.

⁴⁶⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 417.

It is a known fact that the sun—like other stars in the Milky Way galaxy—is in constant motion and it does not occupy the same place.

m- The Pupil of the Eye is the Source of Light

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

Although the pupil of the eye is black in color, but it is the mine of light. You must become like this. The essence must be luminous not the face. Thus say with utmost certitude and sureness, “O Lord, make a dazzling light, a glowing lamp, and a rising star, so that I may illuminate the hearts by the shining beam of the Abhā kingdom.”⁴⁶⁶

These words are a clear reference to the emission theory that is the incorrect belief that a beam of light is generated in the eye which bounces off objects and returns to the eye and creates vision.

Some might claim that what he meant by mine is the place where light is entrapped in the eye. This is incorrect because firstly, a mine is a source for something, and secondly, words like essence must be luminous, dazzling light, and glowing lamp that come after this sentence, clearly show that he meant the pupil is the source of light.

n- Deductive Reasoning

Usually, when `Abdu'l-Bahā wants to prove a concept, he puts forward an example then based on that example tries to prove a concept. This method, if used correctly, can be of some use. Unfortunately, `Abdu'l-Bahā's examples are usually logically flawed. For instance he uses three creatures to prove males are superior to females in one instance, then uses three other creatures to prove that females are superior to males in another:

⁴⁶⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 134 B.), vol. 7, pp. 60–61.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā smiled and asked: “What will you say if I prove to you that the woman is the stronger wing?” The answer came in the same bright vein: “You will earn my eternal gratitude!” at which all the company made merry. ‘Abdu’l-Bahā then continued more seriously: “The woman is indeed of the greater importance to the race. She has the greater burden and the greater work. Look at the vegetable and the animal worlds. The palm which carries the fruit is the tree most prized by the date grower. The Arab knows that for a long journey the mare has the longest wind. For her greater strength and fierceness, the lioness is more feared by the hunter than the lion.”⁴⁶⁷

A woman’s question was referred to him who had asked why hasn’t God made any woman Prophets and why have all Divine Manifestations been men. He answered: “Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible.”⁴⁶⁸

5-Shoghi’s Sayings That Contradict Science or Reason

Although Baha’is sometimes try to portray Shoghi as being infallible, he himself begs to differ. Here is a letter written on his behalf by his secretary in 1944:

The infallibility of the Guardian is confined to matters which are related strictly to the Cause and interpretations of the ⁴⁶⁷ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā in London, pp. 102–103.

⁴⁶⁸ Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

Teachings; he is not an infallible authority on other subjects, such as economics, science, etc.⁴⁶⁹

He clearly says that he is not infallible in science. With this quote at hand there is no need to put forward any of his errors and unscientific words that exist in his translations, history books, letters, and elsewhere.

Furthermore, if one errs in one subject there is no guarantee that he won't err in another, and thus there is no guarantee that Shoghi won't err in matters related to the Baha'i cause and its interpretations. We previously showed how helpless he was in interpreting Bahá'u'lláh's words in the following quote from the article called *Socrates*⁴⁷⁰ compiled by the Research Department of the UHJ:

We must not take this statement too literally; "contemporary" may have been meant in Persian as something far more elastic than the English word. Likewise, the whole translation probably needs revising (15 February 1947).⁴⁷¹

Pay attention to the words probably and may. Would one expect these words from someone assigned by a divine figure to be the sole interpreter of Baha'i works? Is this how he interprets Baha'i works: by saying maybe and probably?! He also makes a mistake regarding the work he is referring to and believes the original words were uttered in Persian whilst they were uttered in Arabic.

There are other instances:

⁴⁶⁹ Shoghi Effendi, Directives from the Guardian, p. 33–34.

⁴⁷⁰ Available online: http://bahai-library.com/compilation_socrates_bwc (retrieved 17/2/2014). This article points out to a few more historical errors in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's words regarding the prophets and philosophers.

⁴⁷¹ http://bahai-library.com/compilation_socrates_bwc (retrieved 18/2/2014)

Concerning the different translations of the Words. It is surely the original text that should never be changed. The translations will continue to vary as more and better translations are made. Shoghi Effendi does not consider even his own translations as final, how much more translations made in the early days of the Cause in the West when no competent translators existed (From a letter on behalf of the Guardian to John Hyde Dunn, 14 August 1930)⁴⁷²

Shoghi Effendi does not consider his own translations as final. Apparently, in this creed, everything is subject to change and error prone. We ask again, how can someone fulfill the station of being the authoritative interpreter of Baha'i works when he constantly expresses doubts and is unsure of his own translations and interpretations?

6- The Bāb, Bahā'u'llāh, and `Abdu'l-Bahā's Religious Knowledge

a- The Bab's Religious Knowledge

The Bāb copied verses of the Quran, changed a few words then presented them as his own divine revelations. To show this obvious act of prophetic and religious plagiarism we will analyze the first and last page of his book Qayyūm al-asmā' (commentary on the Sura of Joseph) to provide evidence.⁴⁷³

Unfortunately, the manner by which he has joined these verses together has made many of his sentences meaningless or vague and translating some of these words into something that makes any sense at all, is very difficult. Those who have tried to translate these verses have ⁴⁷² http://bahai-library.com/compilation_provisional_translations (retrieved 18/2/2014).

⁴⁷³ The Bāb. Qayyūm al-Asmā' (commentary on the Surah of Joseph). n.p.: n.p., n.d. <http://www.bayanic.com/showPict.php?id=ahsan&ref=0&err=0&curr=0> usually altered some parts to make something meaningful out of them.⁴⁷⁴

In the following table, we have shown which parts of the Quran he has used to create the first statements of the first page of the Qayyūm al-Asmā'. The copied sections have been underlined.

Table 2: Quranic source of the Bāb's words in the first page of the Qayyūm al-Asmā'

The Bab's Words	The Origins in the Quran
الحمد لله الذى نزل الكتاب على عبده بالحق ليكون للعالمين سراجا وهاجا. "All praise is to God who descended the Book unto His servant with truth so that he may be for the worlds a blazing lamp."	Sections from 3 different verses have been joined together: "الْحَمْدُ لِلَّهِ الَّذِي أَنْزَلَ عَلَى عَبْدِهِ الْكِتَابَ" "All praise is to God who descended the Book unto His servant (Quran 18:1)" "لِيَكُونَ لِلْعَالَمِينَ" "so that he may be for the worlds (25:1)" "سِرَاجاً وَهَّاجاً" "a blazing lamp (78:13)"
ان هذا صراط على عند ربك بالحق قد كان فى ام الكتاب على الحق القيم مستقيما "This is truly an exalted path with your Lord that has been straight above the Upright Truth in the Mother Book."	The main verse copied is: "و هَذَا صِرَاطٌ رَبِّكَ مُسْتَقِيمًا" "And this is your Lord's straight path (6:126)" After copying the verse, he has thrown in a scramble of different quranic words in between the main words that we have underlined. The final result is a vague and to some extent meaningless phrase.
وانه فى ام الكتاب لدينا لعلى و على الحق الاكبر قد كان عند الرحمان حكيمًا.	An exact replica of the following verse in which he has placed some fairly meaningless words before the end.

⁴⁷⁴ For instance see Selections from the writings of the Bab, pp. 38–41 and Stephen Lambden's translation at <http://www.hurqalya.pwp.blueyonder.co.uk/03-THE%20BAB/QAYYUM%20AL-ASMA%27/Q-ASMA.001.htm>

"He is exalted in the Mother Book that is with us and He is above the most great truth and he possessed wisdom in the presence of the Merciful."	"وَإِنَّهُ فِي أُمِّ الْكِتَابِ لَدَيْنَا لَعَلِيَّ حَكِيمٌ" "He is exalted and wise in the Mother Book that is with Us (43:4)"
و انه الحق من عند الله و على الدين الخالص قد كان في ام الكتاب حول الطور مسطورا. "And it is a truth from God and in accordance with the pure religion. It was in the Mother Book inscribed near mount Sinai."	The first section is made up of these two verses: "إِنَّهُ الْحَقُّ مِنْ رَبِّكَ" "It is a truth from your Lord (11:17)" "الدينُ الخالصُ" "the pure religion (39:3)" The last section is based on the following verse and as usual he has thrown in some extra words and has created another vague meaningless sentenc: "فِي الْكِتَابِ مَسْطُورًا" "inscribed in the book (33:6)"
ان هذا هو الحق صراط الله في السموات و الارض. "This is verily the truth, the path of God in the skies and earth."	Sections from two verses have been joined together. This time he has deleted a few words instead of adding some: "إِنَّ هَذَا هُوَ حَقُّ الْيَقِينِ" "This is verily the certain truth (56:95)" "صِرَاطَ اللَّهِ الَّذِي لَهُ مَا فِي السَّمَاوَاتِ وَ مَا فِي الْأَرْضِ" "The path of God who possess what is in the skies and what is in the earth (42:53)"
فمن شاء اتخذ الى الله بالحق سبيلا "Whoso wishes may take a path to God by the truth."	Replica of the following verse with a slight distortion: "فَمَنْ شَاءَ اتَّخَذْ إِلَىٰ رَبِّهِ سَبِيلًا" "Whoso wishes may take a path to God (76:29)"
ان هذا هو الدين القيم و كفى بالله و من عنده علم الكتاب شهيدا "This is verily the upright religion and	The following three verses have been used: "إِنَّ هَذَا هُوَ"

God and he who possesses the knowledge of the Book suffice as witnesses."

"This is verily (56:95)"

"ذَلِكَ الدِّينُ الْقَيِّمُ"

"that is the upright religion (30:30)"

"كَفَى بِاللَّهِ شَهِيدًا بَيْنِي وَبَيْنَكُمْ وَ مَنْ عِنْدَهُ عِلْمُ الْكِتَابِ"

"God suffices as a witness between me and you and he who possesses the knowledge of the Book (13:43)"

Figure 4: Facsimile of the beginning sentences of the first page of the book Qayyūm al-asmā'

We have underlined the word haqq (meaning truth) in the facsimile. This word has been added to the verses of the Quran nine times in eight lines. As if adding the word truth between his distortions will make them any more true! The same trend is used in all the book. The word truth has also been added five times between the distorted Quranic verses in the six ending lines of the book. We have shown these in bold-face. In the next table the ending sentences of the book have been examined:

The Bab's Words	The Origins in the Quran
قل ما اسئلكم من اجر فهو عند الله ربي في ام الكتاب هذا قد كان بالحق على الحق موجودا. "Say I do not ask you for a reward, for it is present with my Lord in the Mother Book. This is truly and above truth existant."	The first section is copied from these two verses: "قُلْ مَا أَسْأَلُكُمْ عَلَيْهِ مِنْ أَجْرٍ" "Say I do not ask you for a reward for this (25:57)" "إِنْ أَجْرِيَ إِلَّا عَلَى رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ" "My reward (will be given) by the Lord of the worlds (26:109)"
و ان اجرى على الله بالحق على الحق قد كان في يوم البدء مقضيا "My reward (will be given to me) by God, with the truth and above the truth. This has been ordained in the Day of Beginning."	The two verses copied are: "إِنْ أَجْرِيَ إِلَّا عَلَى اللَّهِ" "My reward (will only be given to me) by God (34:47)" "كَانَ أَمْرًا مَقْضِيًّا" "This matter has been ordained (19:21)"
و ان الله و ملائكته يصلون على النبي و اله يا ايها الذين امنوا صلوا عليهم كما صلى الله عليهم و على شيعتهم "God and His angels send blessings on the Prophet and his family. Oh you who believe, send blessings on them like how God sent blessings on them and their followers."	A copy of this verse with a few distortions added: "إِنَّ اللَّهَ وَ مَلَائِكَتَهُ يُصَلُّونَ عَلَى النَّبِيِّ يَا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا صَلُّوا عَلَيْهِ وَ سَلِّمُوا تَسْلِيمًا" "God and His angels send blessings on the Prophet. Oh you who believe, send blessings on him and be very submissive (33:56)"
و هو الله كان بالحق على كل شيء شهيدا و هو الله كان بكل شيء محيطا	Copy of these two verses: "إِنَّ اللَّهَ كَانَ عَلَى كُلِّ شَيْءٍ شَهِيدًا"

"He is God who is truly witness to all things and He is God who encompasses all things."	"verily God is witness to all things (4:33)" "وَ كَانَ اللَّهُ بِكُلِّ شَيْءٍ مُّحِيطًا" "and God encompasses all things (4:126)"
---	--

The same trend is followed more or less through the book with exact or very similar replicas of whole verses being used in every page. There are multiple ways to convey a message using many different words and their combinations. Why insist on using exact replicas of the Quran and insist they are new revelations?

Now let us read all these phrases side-by-side to see if they make any sense:

All praise is to God who descended the Book unto His servant with truth so that he may be for the worlds a blazing lamp. This is truly an exalted path with your Lord that has been straight above the Upright Truth in the Mother Book. He is exalted in the Mother Book that is with us and He is above the most great truth and he possessed wisdom in the presence of the Merciful. And it is a truth from God and in accordance with the pure religion. It was in the Mother Book inscribed near mount Sinai. This is verily the truth, the path of God in the skies and earth. Whoso wishes may take a path to God by the truth. This is verily the upright religion and God and he who possesses the knowledge of the Book suffice as witnesses.

Say I do not ask you for a reward, for it is present with my Lord in the Mother Book. This is truly and above truth existant. My reward (will be given to me) by God, with the truth and above the truth. This has been ordained in the Day of Beginning. God and His angels send blessings on the Prophet and his family. Oh you who believe, send blessings on them like how God sent blessings on them and their followers. He is God who is truly witness to all things and He is God who encompasses all things.

These words don't make much sense and are very similar to Sufi and mystic cult language designed to baffle the reader and create artificial esoteric sensations in them. The sentences usually do not convey a clear message and when they do, they are out of context and mostly unrelated to each other. The remaining sections of this book are also of this form and contain many grammatical errors that we will not point out to for they are inappropriate for a non-Arabic audience.

Another point that must be mentioned here is the fact that this book (commenatry on the Sura of Joseph) was meant to be a commentary. A commentary is a series of explanatory notes which make clear the meanings of a sentence and remove any ambiguity therein. What the Bab has done is the exact opposite, not only has he not made the verses of the Sura of Joseph clear, for every verse he has written 2–3 pages of very conflicting and ambiguous words that are more baffling than any ambiguous verse that one might encounter in the Quran.

Furthermore, anyone who reads this book will frequently encounter the catchphrase “bi l-haqq `ala l-haqq (with the truth above the truth)” which is meaningless even in its original Arabic form.

This is how Baha'is describe the revealing of the aforementioned verses by the Bāb:

He [meaning the Bāb] then proceeded to say: “Now is the time to reveal the commentary on the Sūrih of Joseph.” He took up His pen and with incredible rapidity revealed the entire Sūrih of Mulk, the first chapter of His commentary on the Sūrih of Joseph. The overpowering effect of the manner in which He wrote was heightened by the gentle intonation of His voice which accompanied His writing. Not for one moment did He interrupt the flow of the verses which streamed from His pen. Not once did He pause till the Sūrih of Mulk was finished. I sat enraptured by the magic of His voice and the sweeping force of His revelation.⁴⁷⁵

Pay attention to the description: incredible rapidity, overpowering effect, gentle intonation, not once did he pause, magic, and force of revelation. This is how Baha'is portray the revelation of these ambiguous words to make their audience believe they are divine inspirations and guidance brought from God. Not once do they tell their followers that most of these words are sections copied from the Quran, are a clear act of plagiarism, and most other sentences in this book are meaningless. Here is another sample:

within the space of forty-eight hours, verses had streamed that equalled in number those of the Qur'ān, which it took its Author twenty-three years to reveal⁴⁷⁶

Since when did the sheer amount of sentences written down in a short time become a criterion for the truth? And when did Muḥammad become the author of the Quran? It is only in the Bābī and Baha'ī creeds that a prophet writes down his own revelations and is the author of the Book of God.

Furthermore, according to Shia Islamic beliefs that Baha'u'llah believed in, the Quran was revealed upon the Prophet of Islam's heart all at once at the beginning of his proclamation but it was announced to the people in a form known as progressive revelation so that they would gradually become acquainted with its laws. Claiming that it took twenty years to reveal the Quran whilst the same was revealed by the Bab in 48 hours is a baseless claim made by Shoghi which shows the amount of knowledge he possessed. This statement serves no purpose but to degrade Islam and try to show a superior Bāb.

⁴⁷⁵ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, p. 61.

⁴⁷⁶ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 10.

b- Bahā'u'llāh's Religious Knowledge

To show how much religious knowledge Bahā'u'llāh had, we will use the first book he authored, the book of Īqān (Certitude). This book has been designated by Bahā'u'llāh as "the Lord of all Books." Contrary to what Baha'is claim, the book of Īqān was widely dismissed by Persian Scholars and researchers as a book full of fallacies and errors and a number of works were authored in Farsi that clearly showed these errors.

Currently, the original manuscript of the book of Īqān is stored at the International Baha'i Archives in Israel.⁴⁷⁷ This manuscript which is in 'Abdu'l-Bahā's handwriting, retains the many errors that have now been fixed in versions of the Īqān being distributed by the Baha'i administration. For reasons that are fairly obvious, copies of this manuscript have not been made available to the public.

The errors in the Īqān fall under four categories:

1. Interpretations of Islamic narrations and verses of the Quran that do not conform to established Shia/Islamic teachings.
2. Obvious linguistic and grammatical errors.
3. Errors in citing the Quran.
4. Distorting and forging Shia narrations.

We will not speak about the first category here because it requires a fair amount of knowledge about the Shia belief that most readers might find confusing. We will now proceed to analyze the other three categories.

⁴⁷⁷ Some researchers believe that this manuscript is not the original Īqān and is a second generation. They claim the audience of the original Īqān were the followers of Bayān (i.e. the Bābīs) but references to these people have been removed in the second generation versions. This theory is plausible because Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī mentions in Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī (Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 124 Badī'), vol. 1, pp. 279–280, that in some manuscripts the following sentence on the first page "Sanctify your souls, O ye peoples of the world," has been written as "Sanctify your souls, O ye peoples of the Bayān."

1- Obvious Linguistic and Grammatical Errors

The only publicly available section of the original Īqān that we were able to find, is a facsimile of the first and last page that Buck has reproduced at the beginning of his book *Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitāb-i-Iqān*⁴⁷⁸. To show the extent of grammatical errors in the original Īqān, we will compare this facsimile with first page of the book of Īqān that is being propagated by the Baha'i administration today.

In the image that follows, we have underlined ten words that have been changed or deleted in only the first page of this book.

⁴⁷⁸ The electronic version of his book holds another image, whilst the printed edition has the original image.

باسم ربنا العلي
 الباب المذكور في بيان ان العباد ان يصلحوا الى شاطئ بحر عرفان
 الا بالانقطاع الصروف عن كل من في السموات والارض فالتقدم
 انفسكم يا اهل الارض لعل تصلحوا الى مقام الذي قد ردد الله لكم
 وقد خلق في سرادق الذي جعله الله في سما الديان مرفوعا
 جوهرا في سلكين سبل بيان وفي اربع كايوس يقان يا من كنو شجند
 از بهر شجند شجند عرصه پاك بهر شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 وندش از رقصه شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 وندش از رقصه شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 تا كنون فاشليت شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 فيوض شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 رقصه و رقصه شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 العزبه و العزبه شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 بهر شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند
 كه بهر شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند شجند

Figure 5: Facsimile of the first page of the original Iqān being held at the UHJ archives.
 We have underlined ten grammatical errors uttered by Bahā'u'llāh that have been fixed in the current versions.

These errors were penned down by 'Abdu'l-Bahā who Shoghi describes as the Unerring Pen.⁴⁷⁹ Both the Farsi and Arabic sections of this work contain these mistakes. Apparently, Bahā'u'llāh had linguistic problems not only in Arabic, but in his mother tongue too.

If today, a book is published with so many obvious stylistic, grammatical, and editing errors, the author, editor, and publisher (who are all prone to error) would be criticized in the harshest manner possible. But if a claimant to prophethood commits these mistakes, his followers act like it is no big deal.

⁴⁷⁹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 75.

In the following table we have put side by side the text of the current and original Īqān to show the errors that have been fixed.

Table 3: Comparison between original Īqān and current Īqān in which errors uttered by Bahā'u'llāh have been corrected

Original Īqān Manuscript	Current official Īqān
بِسْمِ رَبِّنا الْعَلِيِّ الْأَعْلَى الباب المذكورُ في بيان أنَّ العبادَ لَنْ يَصِلُوا إلى شاطئِ بحرِ العرفانِ إِلَّا بِالانْقِطاعِ الصَّرْفِ عَنْ كُلِّ مَنْ فِي السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ. فَلتَقْدَسَنَّ أَنْفُسُكُمْ يا أَهْلَ الْأَرْضِ لَعَلَّ تَصِلُنَّ إلى المقامِ الَّذِي قَدَّرَ اللَّهُ لَكُمْ وَ تَدْخُلُنَّ فِي سُرادِقِ الَّذِي جَعَلَهُ اللَّهُ فِي سَمااءِ الْبَيانِ مَرْفُوعاً. جوهر این باب آنکه سالکین سبیل ایمان و طالبین کُؤوس ایقان باید نفوس خود را از جمیع شئونات عرضیه پاک و مقدّس نمایند، یعنی گوش را از استماع اقوال و قلب را از ظنونات متعلّقه به سُبُحات جلال و روح را از تعلّق به اسباب ظاهره و چشم را از ملاحظه کلمات فانیه و متوکّلان علی الله و متوسّلان الیه سالک شوند تا آنکه قابل تجلّیات اشراقات شمس علم و عرفان الهی شوند و محلّ ظهورات فیوضات غیب نامتناهی گردند . زیرا که اگر عبد بخواهد که اقوال و اعمال و افعال عباد را از عالم و جاهل میزان معرفت حقّ و اولیای او قرار دهد هرگز به رضوان معرفت ربّ العزّه داخل نشود و بعیون علم و حکمت سلطان احدیت فائز نگردد و هرگز و به سر منزل بقا نرسد و از جام قُرب و رضا مرزوق نگردد. ناظر به ایّام قبل شوید که چقدر مردم از اعالی	بِسْمِ رَبِّنا الْعَلِيِّ الْأَعْلَى الباب المذكورُ في بيان أنَّ العبادَ لَنْ يَصِلُوا إلى شاطئِ بحرِ العرفانِ إِلَّا بِالانْقِطاعِ الصَّرْفِ عَنْ كُلِّ مَنْ فِي السَّمَوَاتِ وَالْأَرْضِ. قَدَسُوا أَنْفُسُكُمْ يا أَهْلَ الْأَرْضِ لَعَلَّ تَصِلُنَّ إلى المقامِ الَّذِي قَدَّرَ اللَّهُ لَكُمْ وَ تَدْخُلُنَّ فِي سُرادِقِ (؟) جَعَلَهُ اللَّهُ فِي سَمااءِ الْبَيانِ مَرْفُوعاً. جوهر این باب آنکه سالکین سبیل ایمان و طالبین کُؤوس ایقان باید نفوس خود را از جمیع شئونات عرضیه پاک و مقدّس نمایند، یعنی گوش را از استماع اقوال و قلب را از ظنونات متعلّقه به سُبُحات جلال و روح را از تعلّق به اسباب ظاهره و چشم را از ملاحظه کلمات فانیه و متوکّلین علی الله و متوسّلین الیه سالک شوند تا آنکه قابل تجلّیات اشراقات شمس علم و عرفان الهی (؟) و محلّ ظهورات فیوضات غیب نامتناهی گردند . زیرا (؟) اگر عبد بخواهد (؟) اقوال و اعمال و افعال عباد را از عالم و جاهل میزان معرفت حقّ و اولیای او قرار دهد هرگز به رضوان معرفت ربّ العزّه داخل نشود و بعیون علم و حکمت سلطان احدیت فائز نگردد و هرگز و به سر منزل بقا نرسد و از جام قُرب و رضا مرزوق نگردد. ناظر به ایّام قبل شوید که چقدر مردم از اعالی

و ادانی که همیشه منتظر ظهورات احدیه در هیاکل قدسیه بوده‌اند	و ادانی (?) همیشه منتظر ظهورات احدیه در هیاکل قدسیه بوده‌اند
---	---

This is how the UHJ justifies Bahā'u'llāh's act of correcting these errors:

In his Questions and Answers, supplemental to the Kitāb-i Aqdas, Bahā'u'llāh himself discloses the editing process and reasons for it: "Many Tablets were revealed and dispatched in their original form without being checked and reviewed. Consequently, as bidden, they were again read out in the Holy Presence, and brought into conformity with the grammatical conventions of the people in order to forestall the cavils of the opponents of the Cause."⁴⁸⁰

What a careless Prophet! Utter words using inappropriate grammar and style, let them be inscribed under your nose, allow them to be distributed far and wide, and once the errors have been exposed bring them in conformity with the grammatical conventions of the people and use the excuse of forestalling the cavils of the opponents!

What the UHJ doesn't tell us is that this reasoning fundamentally contradicts what Bahā'u'llāh had uttered when he was confronted with the grammatical errors in his writings and the writings of the Bāb:

Say, oh you ignorant man; look at the words of God using His Eyes so that you may realize they are free of the allusions and the grammatical conventions of the people for He possesses the knowledge of the worlds. Say, if the words of God were revealed based on your grammatical conventions and (the laws) that are with you, then they would be like your words, oh group of people who are veiled (from the truth).⁴⁸¹

⁴⁸⁰ Christopher buck, edited by Juan R. Cole and Moojan Momen, Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitāb-i-Iqān, p. 27.

You and your kind have said that the words of the Great Bāb and the Most Complete Remembrance are wrong and not in conformance with the grammatical conventions of the people. You still haven't understood that the divine revealed words are the yardstick for all and what is lower than them cannot be a yardstick. Every grammatical convention that is not in accordance with the divine verses has no credibility.⁴⁸²

Bahā'u'llāh had stated in the clearest words that his writings are not and must not be⁴⁸³ in accordance with the grammatical conventions of the people. He had stated that all grammatical conventions that are not in conformance with his writings are wrong and have no credibility. Suddenly he changes his mind and distorts all his writings and brings them in conformity with the grammatical conventions of the people, the same conventions that he had openly stated had no credibility and the words of God must not follow!

Bahā'u'llāh is probably the only Prophet ever who has revised and changed the errors in his own writings, and the only erring infallible. Unfortunately, some people fail to see why these errors must not be committed by a divine figure who carries God's messages. Some people fail to realize that God's words don't need to be edited, proofread, and changed, especially if they have been penned by the "Unerring Pen."

To make matters worse, the UHJ explicitly mentions that many of the changes were suggested to Bahā'u'llāh by an ordinary person:

⁴⁸¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 71.

⁴⁸² Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 78.

⁴⁸³ This can be deduced from his statement "then they would be like your words," which was uttered by Bahā'u'llāh to state that there must be a difference between the words of God and the words of the people and this difference exists in the grammatical conventions.

It is important to note that the stylistic and grammatical changes mentioned above took place over time—often it was Zayn himself that suggested them—and therefore the various manuscripts differ somewhat, one from the other.⁴⁸⁴

These words show how helpless Bahā'u'llāh was in correcting his errors. Every time he fixed the errors some more were found and he was again forced to make changes in the book and give out a new revised version. He even needed a fallible person to point out these errors and give him suggestions. Thus, the book was not revised once but numerous times. If these changes were made to “to forestall the cavils of the opponents of the Cause” then why not change it accordingly once and shut the mouth of the opponents once and for all. Are the words of God some sort of joke that must be changed every time someone objects to them? The words of God are perfect they need not be changed for style and grammar.

These acts by Bahā'u'llāh are in direct contradiction with the claimed infallibility and divine knowledge attributed to him. What is the difference between this Baha'i prophet and all other ordinary men who make mistakes and correct them later on? What kind of an Omniscient God do Baha'is believe in that cannot foresee the troubling consequences of his revelations and changes them multiple times and gives out newer versions and editions?!

2- Errors in Citing the Quran

Bahā'u'llāh had made many errors in citing the verses of the Quran and was forced to correct these too in revisions of the Īqān. The closest version to the original undistorted book of lqān that we found is a manuscript held at the National Library of Iran (Kitābkhaniyi Millī) with the book code 1613405.

⁴⁸⁴ Christopher buck, edited by Juan R. Cole and Moojan Momen, Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitab-i-Iqan, p. 27.

Although missing some pages, this book retains the distorted verses of the Quran that were uttered by Bahā'u'llāh and the grammatical errors; including the ones we pointed to from the first page held at the Baha'i Archives. The manuscript can be accessed online from the digital section of the library.⁴⁸⁵ For convenience, we have downloaded the images and uploaded them as a pdf file to archive.org.⁴⁸⁶

Refuting this manuscript is not an option for the Universal House of Justice. Any objections they make can only be validated if they show us the original Īqān which they claim they possess. It isn't that hard to make available the original manuscript and relieve all researchers once and for all. If Bahā'u'llāh was justified in correcting that manuscript, then what harm will it do if it is shown to the world? What are the Baha'is afraid of? What are they trying to hide?

When a request was made for a copy of this Īqān the UHJ had answered:

It is not possible to provide photocopies of the entire volume of the lithographed editions for the purpose of research at this time.⁴⁸⁷

As usual, problematic matters have been postponed to a future time. We believe it is completely possible to provide copies but the UHJ simply does not want to make this manuscript available for research, for as we mentioned in chapter 1, all manuscripts at the Baha'i Archives

⁴⁸⁵ <http://dl.nlai.ir/UI/0703ce2c-183d-4267-bb7a-35498b51ecc6/LRRView.aspx?tocterm=&History=True&First=true>

⁴⁸⁶ https://archive.org/details/original_Iqan

⁴⁸⁷ Christopher buck, edited by Juan R. Cole and Moojan Momen, Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitāb-i-Iqān, p. 27.

have been digitized at least since 1993,⁴⁸⁸ and all the effort needed to make them available to the public is simply a “copy and paste”.

Anyway, we have compared the verses of the Quran from the original and corrected versions and have created a table below which shows the distortions. The page numbers are in accordance with the pdf document at archive.org. The underlined words mark the distortions.

p.	Original version	distorted	Corrected Version	Notes
5	و لقد همت كل امة برسولهم لياخذوه و يجادلوا به بالباطل ليدحضوا به الحق		وَ هَمَّتْ كُلُّ أُمَّةٍ بِرَسُولِهِمْ لِيَأْخُذُوهُ وَ جَادَلُوا بِالْبَاطِلِ لِيُدْحِضُوا بِهِ الْحَقَّ (40:5)	Three distortions
8	و ما يزيد الكافرين الا خسارا		وَ لَا يَزِيدُ الْكَافِرِينَ كُفْرُهُمْ إِلَّا خَسَارًا (35:39)	Two distortions
17	انما نطعمكم لوجه الله و ما نريد منكم جزاء و لا شكورا		إِنَّمَا نُطْعِمُكُمْ لِوَجْهِ اللَّهِ لَا نُرِيدُ مِنْكُمْ جَزَاءً وَ لَا شُكْرًا (76:9)	One distortion
17	مثل كلمة طيبة كشجرة طيبة اصلها ثابت في الارض و فرعها في السماء و يوتى اكلها في كل حين		مَثَلًا كَلِمَةً طَيِّبَةً كَشَجَرَةٍ طَيِّبَةٍ أَصْلُهَا ثَابِتٌ وَ فَرْعُهَا فِي السَّمَاءِ، تُؤْتِي أُكْلَهَا كُلَّ حِينٍ (14:24-25)	Four distortions. The distorted verse has grammatical errors too.
38	كحمر مستنفره فرت من القسورة		كَأَنَّهُمْ حُمُرٌ مُسْتَنْفِرَةٌ، فَرَّتْ مِنْ قَسْوَرَةٍ (51-74:50)	Two distortions. This verse has also been distorted in Bahā'u'llāh's Ishrāqāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar , p.

⁴⁸⁸ “To assist the House of Justice in referring to the wealth of guidance and teachings contained in the Bahā'ī Writings, a computer database is used which contains descriptions of every Tablet and every letter of Shoghi Effendi, together with a typed copy of the text of each document. In the near future images of the original documents will also be stored in the computer, making it unnecessary to refer to the original items.” This is a section of a pamphlet inserted in ʿAndalīb magazine, 12:48 (Fall 1993).

			16.
41	یا لیتنی مت قبل هذا ام كنت نسیا منسیا	یا لیتنی مت قبل هذا و كنت نسیا منسیا (19:23)	One distortion
57	"یوم یاتی الله فی ظلل من الغمام" و علمای ظاهر این آیه را بعضی از علائم قیامت موهوم که خود تعقل نموده اند گرفته اند که مضمون آن اینست: که روزی که میاید خدا در سایه از ابر و حال اینکه این مضمون در اکثر کتب سماوی مذکور است و در همه اماکن در ذکر علامات ظهور فرموده اند.	"هل یَنْظُرُونَ إِلَّا أَنْ يَأْتِيَهُمُ اللَّهُ فِي ظُلُلٍ مِنَ الْعَمَامِ." و علمای ظاهر بعضی این آیه را از علائم قیامت موهوم که خود تعقل نموده اند گرفته اند و مضمون آن این است: آیا انتظار می کشند مگر اینکه بیاید آنها را خدا در سایه ای از ابر؟ و حال آنکه این مضمون در اکثر کتب سماوی مذکور است و در همه اماکن در ذکر علامات ظهور بعد ذکر فرموده اند.	Numerous distortions in both the verse and the explanations after it. The distortions in the explanations have been made to make it in conformance with the corrected verse.
57	يَوْمَ يَأْتِي السَّمَاءُ بِدُخَانٍ مُبِينٍ يَغْشَى النَّاسَ هَذَا عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ	يَوْمَ تَأْتِي السَّمَاءُ بِدُخَانٍ مُبِينٍ يَغْشَى النَّاسَ هَذَا عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ (44:10-11)	One distortion.
58	وَ إِذَا لَقُوا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا قَالُوا آمَنَّا وَ إِذَا خَلَوْا عَضُّوا عَلَيْكُمُ الْأَنَامِلَ مِنَ الْعِظِ قُلْ مُؤْتُوا بِعِظِكُمْ إِنَّ اللَّهَ عَلِيمٌ بِمَا فِي الصُّدُورِ	وَ إِذَا لَقَوْكُمْ قَالُوا آمَنَّا وَ إِذَا خَلَوْا عَضُّوا عَلَيْكُمُ الْأَنَامِلَ مِنَ الْعِظِ قُلْ مُؤْتُوا بِعِظِكُمْ إِنَّ اللَّهَ عَلِيمٌ بِذَاتِ الصُّدُورِ	Two distortions
66	وَ قَدْ كَانَ فَرِيقٌ مِنْكُمْ يَسْمَعُونَ كَلَامَ اللَّهِ ثُمَّ يُحَرِّفُونَهُ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا عَقَلُوا وَ هُمْ يَعْلَمُونَ	وَ قَدْ كَانَ فَرِيقٌ مِنْهُمْ يَسْمَعُونَ كَلَامَ اللَّهِ ثُمَّ يُحَرِّفُونَهُ مِنْ بَعْدِ مَا عَقَلُوا وَ هُمْ يَعْلَمُونَ	One distortion. Ironically this verse says: "A group of them would hear the words of God and would distort them after they had understood them." The distortion here is grammatically wrong too.

71	لَيْسَ الْبِرُّ أَنْ تُولُوا وُجُوهَكُمْ قَبْلَ المَشْرِقِ وَ الْمَغْرِبِ وَ لَكِنَّ الْبِرَّ أَنْ تُؤْمِنُوا بِاللَّهِ وَ الْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ	لَيْسَ الْبِرُّ أَنْ تُولُوا وُجُوهَكُمْ قَبْلَ المَشْرِقِ وَ الْمَغْرِبِ وَ لَكِنَّ الْبِرَّ مَنْ آمَنَ بِاللَّهِ وَ الْيَوْمِ الْآخِرِ	One distortion.
74	و فِي أَنْفُسِهِمْ أَفَلَا تَبْصِرُونَ	و فِي أَنْفُسِكُمْ أَفَلَا تَبْصِرُونَ	One distortion.
81	وَ إِنْ كَبُرَ عَلَيْكَ إِعْرَاضُهُمْ فَإِنْ اسْتَطَعْتَ أَنْ تَبْتَغِيَ نَفَقًا فِي الْأَرْضِ أَوْ سُلَّمًا فِي السَّمَاءِ	وَ إِنْ كَانَ كَبُرَ عَلَيْكَ إِعْرَاضُهُمْ فَإِنْ اسْتَطَعْتَ أَنْ تَبْتَغِيَ نَفَقًا فِي الْأَرْضِ أَوْ سُلَّمًا فِي السَّمَاءِ	One distortion.
84	وَ لَا قُلُوبٌ لَا يَفْقَهُونَ بِهَا وَ هُمْ أَعْيُنٌ لَا يُبْصِرُونَ بِهَا	هُمْ قُلُوبٌ لَا يَفْقَهُونَ بِهَا وَ هُمْ أَعْيُنٌ لَا يُبْصِرُونَ بِهَا	One distortion.
85	"إِنْ نَعَجِبَ فَعَجِبْتَ قَوْلُهُمْ أَ إِذَا كُنَّا تُرَابًا أَئِنَّا لَمَبْعُوثُونَ" که ترجمه آن این است که می فرماید اگر عجب می داری پس عجب است قول کافران و معرضان که می گویند آیا ما تراب و استخوان بودیم و از روی استهزاء می گفتند که آیا مائیم مبعوث شده گان.	"وَ إِنْ نَعَجِبَ فَعَجِبْتَ قَوْلُهُمْ أَ إِذَا كُنَّا تُرَابًا أَئِنَّا لَفِي خَلْقٍ جَدِيدٍ" که ترجمه آن این است که می فرماید اگر عجب می داری پس عجب است قول کافران و معرضان که می گویند آیا ما تراب بودیم و از روی استهزاء می گفتند که آیا مائیم مبعوث شدگان	Multiple distortions. What is strange is that Bahā'u'llāh has written the Farsi translation of this verse after it and one part of the translation has been corrected in the distorted version while the end part has not.
86	"فَنُفِّخَ فِي الصُّورِ ذَلِكِ يَوْمُ الْوَعْدِ وَ جَاءَتْ كُلُّ نَفْسٍ مَعَهَا سَائِقٌ وَ شَهِيدٌ" که معنی ظاهر این است که دمیده شد در صور و آن است یوم وعید که به نظرها بسیار بعید بود و آمد هر نفسی برای حساب و با اوست راننده و	"و نُفِّخَ فِي الصُّورِ ذَلِكِ يَوْمُ الْوَعْدِ وَ جَاءَتْ كُلُّ نَفْسٍ مَعَهَا سَائِقٌ وَ شَهِيدٌ" که معنی ظاهر آن این است دمیده شد در صور و آن است یوم وعید که به نظرها بسیار بعید بود و آمد هر نفسی برای حساب و با اوست راننده و	Multiple distortions in the verse and explanations provided.

	اوست كشنده و گواهان.	گواه.
94	جند الله هم الغالبون	و ان جندنا لهم الغالبون	Multiple distortions.
105	وَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بِآيَاتِ اللَّهِ وَ لِقَائِهِ أُولَئِكَ يُسْأَلُونَ مِنْ رَحْمَتِي وَ أُولَئِكَ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ اللَّهُ وَ أُولَئِكَ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ	وَ الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا بِآيَاتِ اللَّهِ وَ لِقَائِهِ أُولَئِكَ يُسْأَلُونَ مِنْ رَحْمَتِي وَ أُولَئِكَ لَهُمْ عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ	Two distortions.
105	الَّذِينَ يَظُنُّونَ رَحْمَتِي وَ أَنَّهُمْ إِلَيْهِ رَاجِعُونَ	الَّذِينَ يَظُنُّونَ أَنَّهُمْ مُلَاقُوا رَبِّهِمْ وَ أَنَّهُمْ إِلَيْهِ رَاجِعُونَ	Two words deleted.
109	يوم ياتي الله فى ظلل من الغمام	هَلْ يَنْظُرُونَ إِلَّا أَنْ يَأْتِيَهُمُ اللَّهُ فِي ظُلُلٍ مِنَ الْغَمَامِ	The same distortion has been made in p. 57.
156	وَ إِذَا تُتْلَى عَلَيْهِمْ آيَاتُنَا بَيِّنَاتٍ قَالُوا مَا هَذَا إِلَّا رَجُلٌ يُرِيدُ أَنْ يَصُدَّكُمْ عَمَّا كَانُوا يَعْبُدُونَ أَبَاؤُكُمْ وَ قَالُوا مَا هَذَا إِلَّا إِفْكٌ مُفْتَرًى	وَ إِذَا تُتْلَى عَلَيْهِمْ آيَاتُنَا بَيِّنَاتٍ قَالُوا مَا هَذَا إِلَّا رَجُلٌ يُرِيدُ أَنْ يَصُدَّكُمْ عَمَّا كَانُوا يَعْبُدُونَ أَبَاؤُكُمْ وَ قَالُوا مَا هَذَا إِلَّا إِفْكٌ مُفْتَرًى	Single word deleted.
160	وَ لَوْ أَنزَلْنَا عَلَيْكَ كِتَابًا فِى قِرْطَاسٍ فَلَمَسُوهُ بِأَيْدِيهِمْ لَقَالُوا الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا إِنَّ هَذَا إِلَّا سِحْرٌ مُبِينٌ	وَ لَوْ أَنزَلْنَا عَلَيْكَ كِتَابًا فِى قِرْطَاسٍ فَلَمَسُوهُ بِأَيْدِيهِمْ لَقَالُوا الَّذِينَ كَفَرُوا إِنَّ هَذَا إِلَّا سِحْرٌ مُبِينٌ	Two words distorted.

The fact that Bahā'u'llāh has distorted some of the verses in the exact same manner in multiple places (for instance on p. 109 and 57 or on p. 16) shows that these verses were memorized by him incorrectly and his claimed Tablet of Wisdom⁴⁸⁹ was malfunctioning. His malfunctioning Tablet of wisdom had also made grammatical mistakes in citing some of the verses.

⁴⁸⁹ “Whenever We desire to quote the sayings of the learned and of the wise, presently there will appear before the face of thy Lord in the form of a tablet all that which hath appeared in the world and is revealed in the Holy Books and Scriptures,” Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 149.

Let us see what the Research Department of the Universal House of Justice say about these verses:

During His lifetime, Bahā'u'llāh Himself reviewed the book and indicated necessary changes so that, subsequently, a new, revised version of the book became available. In several Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh, indications are found that during 1305-1306 A.H. (1887-1889 A.D.), Bahā'u'llāh undertook the task of revising the book particularly in order to bring the Qur'anic quotations in line with the common standard.⁴⁹⁰

Since the invalid excuse of bringing the verses “into conformity with the grammatical conventions of the people” cannot be used here, a new excuse is put forward and it is claimed that Bahā'u'llāh revised the book and reached the conclusion that it was necessary to “to bring the Qur'anic quotations in line with the common standard.” Is the research department serious? Is this the attitude of an infallible Prophet from God? Just Imagine Moses and Jesus telling their followers that the Torah and Bible they had revealed had problems and need to be changed. The Research Department continues by Quoting Bahā'u'llāh saying:

A copy of a correct Īqān was given to Jināb-i-'Alī Akbar, My Glory be upon him. Existing copies should be brought into conformity with this copy, or new transcriptions made from it. The latter is better and more appropriate.⁴⁹¹

So the original Īqān was not correct and a correct copy was reproduced by Bahā'u'llāh that was better and more appropriate?! The Research Department then claims:

⁴⁹⁰ Christopher buck, edited by Juan R. Cole and Moojan Momen, Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitāb-i-Iqān (United States of America: Kalimat Press, 1995), p.26.

⁴⁹¹ Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitāb-i-Iqān, p. 26.

A careful study of the changes that were made clearly shows that the verses of the Qur'an that were not quoted exactly in the first edition of the Īqān were brought into exact conformity in the new edition. As Mr. Buck is undoubtedly aware, when Bahā'u'llāh quotes His own Writings in a Tablet, He not infrequently quotes them in a form that, while conveying the essential meaning of the original, is not in exactly the same words. It would seem that in revealing the Kitāb-i Īqān, He followed the same practice in relation to passages He quoted from the Qur'an. The fact that He Himself had them later changed to be in accordance with the accepted text of the Qur'an makes it clear that He was fully aware of the matter and, moreover, that the change in wording had no effect on the purport of His argument.

What the Baha'i Research Department apparently fails to recognize is that they are speaking about a Prophet of God, not some ordinary fallible erring person. The words of the Books of God are perfect and need not be changed. These changes have been made by the same Bahā'u'llāh that had constantly claimed the words of God are different from the words and conventions of the people. Someone who utters such words cannot change them later on to "bring them in accordance with the accepted text".

Furthermore, the justification that Bahā'u'llāh had a habit of quoting verses of the Quran in their unoriginal forms is totally unacceptable because whenever Bahā'u'llāh wants to quote a verse or narration he stops writing in Farsi and clearly quotes the verse or hadith in Arabic to show that he is quoting an exact text. This attitude was—and still—is customary in Persian religious Islamic writings and when a verse of the Quran or an Arabic narration is quoted in the midst of a Farsi text it is written in its exact Arabic form without any changes. The same manner is followed in Arabic works and verses of the Quran are cited in the exact form because they are held with utmost respect.

Regarding this matter, the UHJ is portraying a very annoying act of double-standards. When the UHJ is asked as to why Bahā'u'llāh had three wives when he himself forbade it, it is claimed:

He was following the Laws of the previous Dispensation and the customs of the people of His own land⁴⁹²

Why is it that Bahā'u'llāh adheres to the customs of the previous dispensations and people of his own land when it is related to worldly controversial matters like polygamy, but in spiritual matters like citing sacred texts he fails to recognize these customs? Apparently, the only place that the conformity with the beliefs must be disregarded is in an unimportant subject like citing the Quran, but in very important matters like sex, Bahā'u'llāh must strictly follow the customs of a fairly small group⁴⁹³ of people who engaged in polygamy.

Before making unreasonable justifications and to realize how important it is to clearly and correctly cite verses of the Quran, the UHJ should take a look at `Abdu'l-Bahā's attitude when he received a text from Mīrzā Yaḥyā Ṣubḥ Azal in which he had—probably unintentionally—misplaced two adjacent letters in a word when citing a verse of the Quran. `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

He had written the blessed verse of the Quran “what are these statues/images that you are worshipping” (mā hādhihī l-tamāthīl al-latī antum `alayhā `āḳifūn) [and had written the last word] as `āḳifūn and the [text] is in the possession of Mīrzā Yaḥyā Qazwīnī. Pay attention that the leader of this group cannot make a distinction between `āḳif and `āfik and he distorts the evident verse of the Book of God in his own handwriting!⁴⁹⁴

⁴⁹² Letter from Universal House of Justice to an individual believer dated 23/10/1995: http://bahai-library.com/uwj_wives_bahauallah (retrieved 1/6/2104)

⁴⁹³ Even in a community where polygamy is accepted as a standard norm, only a percentage of the people can engage in polygamy before the community runs out of women; because the number of men and women are nearly equal. Furthermore, in Iran, polygamy was mostly practiced by the elite who had the financial or other means needed to support a polygamous lifestyle and it was not something compulsory or customary.

When only two adjacent letters are misplaced by Mīrzā Yaḥyā, he is labeled by `Abdu'l-Bahā as a distorter of the Book of God, but when Bahā'u'llāh completely distorts multiple verses from of the Quran, we are supposed to believe some unreasonable justification put forward by the UHJ. `Abdu'l-Bahā's words show without doubt that his father was a distorter of the Book of God.

3-Distorting and Forging Shia narrations

Unlike the grammatical and Quranic errors that were revised and corrected in later versions, Bahā'u'llāh failed to fix the Shia narrations that he had mentioned in the Īqān. Some of these narrations have been made up and do not exist in the Shia corpus. Why didn't Bahā'u'llāh fix these distortions and forgeries in the second version of the Īqān? Because the Quran was so widespread and known to the people and the linguistic errors so obvious that even the average Joe could point out the errors committed by Bahā'u'llāh. Thus, finding the specific verses and fixing the erroneous versions that Bahā'u'llāh had mentioned was fairly easy, just as it was fairly easy for non-Bahā'is to point out these mistakes.

The same cannot be said about the narrations that he has mentioned in this book because of two reasons:

The first, is that he claims that some of the narrations he is citing are from the book Biḥār (al-anwār) without mentioning the volume or chapter he is referring to. The current printed version of this book consists of about 107 volumes and about 35000 pages. Since this book was not widely available, most of Bahā'u'llāh's distortions from this book had remained unnoticed. With recent advances in digitizing these works, all this book and many other Shia sources have been typed and placed in searchable databases. Using these databases we have found and pinpointed the exact narrations that Bahā'u'llāh had distorted and had used in the Īqān.

⁴⁹⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabāt az makātib Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā (Germany: Mu'assisiyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī Almān), vol. 6, no. 430.

Second, he had forged a number of concepts in these narrations to prove the Bāb's creed. Correcting these forged concepts would have invalidated his arguments.

Just like the verses of the Quran, Bahā'u'llāh mentions these narrations in Arabic in the midst of writing in Farsi to show that he is making exact quotations. We will only refer to the narrations that have been mentioned in the last three pages of the Īqān for they are enough to show the purpose. We will go along with Shoghi's translation although he has made some mistakes in translating them. The first narration:

Consider, that even the year in which that Quintessence of Light is to be made manifest hath been specifically recorded in the traditions, yet they still remain unmindful, nor do they for one moment cease to pursue their selfish desires. According to the tradition, Mufaddal asked Sādiq saying: "What of the sign of His manifestation, O my master?" He made reply: "In the year sixty, His Cause shall be made manifest, and His Name shall be proclaimed." How strange! Notwithstanding these explicit and manifest references these people have shunned the Truth.⁴⁹⁵

Pay attention to how Bahā'u'llāh labels the Shias as unmindful selfish shunners of truth because they do not believe in his forged and distorted narrations. He claims that in Shia narrations, even the year of the Bāb's appearance has been mentioned and he quotes the year 60 referring to the year 1260 AH. The only hadith that is similar to this in the Shia scripture is the hadith in volume 53 of Biḥār al-anwār under the chapter titled: “What Occurs When he Appears According to What Mufaḍḍal ibn Umar Has Narrated.” The hadith starts by Mufaḍḍal asking Imam al-Ṣādiq that “Is there an apparent time (for the appearance) of the assigned awaiting Mahdi?” The Imam then gives a negative answer and in contrary to what Bahā’u’llāh claims, does not mention any date.

⁴⁹⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, pp. 253–254.

In the following table we have compared the original and forged narration with each other. Since the original narration is fairly long, only the relevant section has been mentioned. We have underlined the two sections that are very similar to the original narration.

Īqān version	Shoghi’s Translation	Original narration	Translation of original narration
حديث في المفضل "سئل عن الصادق فكيف يا مولاي في ظهوره؟ فقال عليه السلام: في سنة الستين يظهر أمره و يعلمو ذكره".	According to the tradition, Mufaḍḍal asked Ṣādiq saying: “What of the sign of His manifestation, O my master?” He made reply: “In the year sixty, His Cause shall be made manifest, and His Name shall be proclaimed”.	عَنِ الْمُفَضَّلِ بْنِ عُمَرَ قَالَ سَأَلْتُ سَيِّدِي الصَّادِقَ ع هَلْ لِلْمَأْمُورِ الْمُتَنَظَّرِ الْمَهْدِيِّ ع مِنْ وَقْتٍ مُوقَّتٍ يَعْلَمُهُ النَّاسُ فَقَالَ حَاشَ لِلَّهِ أَنْ يُوقَّتَ ظُهُورُهُ يَوْقَتَ . . . قَالَ الْمُفَضَّلُ: "يَا مُوَلَايَ فَكَيْفَ بَدْءَ ظُهُورِ الْمَهْدِيِّ ع وَ إِلَيْهِ التَّسْلِيمُ" قَالَ ع "يَا مُفَضَّلُ يَظْهَرُ فِي شُبْهَةِ لَيْسَتَيْنِ فَيَعْلَمُو ذِكْرَهُ وَ يَظْهَرُ أَمْرُهُ"	From Mufaḍḍal ibn Umar who said, “I asked my Master (Imam) Ṣādiq is there an appointed time (for the appearance) of the assigned waiting Mahdi that the people know about?” He replied, “God forbid, that He appoint a time for his appearance . . .” Mufaḍḍal said, “How will the beginning of his appearance be and how will (they) submit to him?” He replied, “O Mufaḍḍal, he will appear during (a great) doubt to dispel it. Then his name will be proclaimed and his cause shall be made manifest.”⁴⁹⁶

⁴⁹⁶ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār (Beirut: Mu’assissat al-Wafā, 1404 AH), vol. 53, p.1–3.

Do Baha'is expect non-Baha'is to have faith in someone who forges scripture? The next narration:

For instance, mention of the sorrows, the imprisonment and afflictions inflicted upon that Essence of divine virtue hath been made in the former traditions. In the “Bihār” it is recorded: “In our Qā’im there shall be four signs from four Prophets, Moses, Jesus, Joseph, and Muḥammad. The sign from Moses, is fear and expectation; from Jesus, that which was spoken of Him; from Joseph, imprisonment and dissimulation; from Muḥammad, the revelation of a Book similar to the Qur’ān.” Notwithstanding such a conclusive tradition, which in such unmistakable language hath foreshadowed the happenings of the present day, none hath been found to heed its prophecy, and methinks none will do so in the future.⁴⁹⁷

In this section Bahā’u’llāh explicitly mentions that he is narrating from the book Biḥār (al-anwār). In the book of Biḥār, there are a number of narrations that show a meaning similar to the above tradition. We have mentioned and compared them all in the table below:

	Arabic text	Translation
Īqān	إِنَّ فِي قَائِمِنَا أَرْبَعَ عِلَامَاتٍ مِنْ أَرْبَعَةِ نَبِيِّ مُوسَى وَ عِيسَى وَ يُوسُفَ وَ مُحَمَّدٍ. أَمَّا الْعِلَامَةُ مِنْ مُوسَى الْخَوْفُ وَ الْإِنْتِظَارُ. وَ أَمَّا الْعِلَامَةُ مِنْ عِيسَى مَا قَالُوا فِي حَقِّهِ. وَ الْعِلَامَةُ مِنْ يُوسُفَ السَّجْنُ وَ التَّقِيَّةُ. وَ الْعِلَامَةُ مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ يَظْهَرُ بِأَثَارٍ مِثْلِ الْقُرْآنِ.	In our Qā’im there shall be four signs from four Prophets, Moses, Jesus, Joseph, and Muḥammad. The sign from Moses, is fear and expectation; from Jesus, that which was spoken of Him; from Joseph, imprisonment and dissimulation; from Muḥammad, the revelation of a Book similar to the Qur’ān.

⁴⁹⁷ Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 254.

Bihār al- anwār (51:216)	فِي صَاحِبِ هَذَا الْأَمْرِ أَرْبَعُ سُنَنٍ مِنْ أَرْبَعَةِ أَنْبِيَاءَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ مُوسَى وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ عِيسَى وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ يُوسُفَ وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ صَلَوَاتُ اللَّهِ عَلَيْهِمْ فَأَمَّا مِنْ مُوسَى فَخَائِفٌ يَتَرَقَّبُ وَ أَمَّا مِنْ يُوسُفَ فَالسَّجْنُ وَ أَمَّا مِنْ عِيسَى فَيُقَالُ إِنَّهُ مَاتَ وَ لَمْ يَمُتْ وَ أَمَّا مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ ص فَالسَّيْفُ	The owner of this affair (meaning the Mahdi) will have four customs from four Prophets: a custom from Moses, a custom from Jesus, a custom from Joseph, and a custom from Muḥammad, Allah's Blessings be upon them. The custom (from Moses) is that he will be in a state of insecurity/fright and he will be awaiting, the custom from Joseph is prison, the custom from Jesus is that it will be said he has died but he hasn't, and the custom from Muḥammad is the sword.
Bihār al- anwār (51:218)	فِي صَاحِبِ الْأَمْرِ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ مُوسَى وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ عِيسَى وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ يُوسُفَ وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ ص فَأَمَّا مِنْ مُوسَى فَخَائِفٌ يَتَرَقَّبُ وَ أَمَّا مِنْ عِيسَى فَيُقَالُ فِيهِ مَا قِيلَ فِي عِيسَى وَ أَمَّا مِنْ يُوسُفَ فَالسَّجْنُ وَ التَّقْيُّهُ وَ أَمَّا مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ ص فَالْقِيَامُ بِسِرِّهِ وَ تَبْيِينُ أَنْارِهِ ثُمَّ يَضَعُ سَيْفَهُ عَلَى عَاتِقِهِ ثَمَانِيَةَ أَشْهُرٍ وَ لَا يَزَالُ يَقْتُلُ أَعْدَاءَ اللَّهِ حَتَّى يَرْضَى اللَّهُ	In the Owner of the Affair (meaning the Mahdi) there will be a custom from Moses, a custom from Jesus, a custom from Joseph, and a custom from Muḥammad. (The custom) from Moses is that he will be in a state of insecurity/fright and he will be awaiting, from Jesus is that it will be said about him what was said about Jesus, from Joseph is prison and dissimulation, and from Muḥammad is that he will rise with his manners and will demonstrate his works (teachings) and he will carry his sword (meaning Muḥammad's sword) on his shoulder and will kill the enemies of God for eight months until God becomes satisfied.
Bihār al- anwār (51:224)	إِنَّ فِي صَاحِبِ هَذَا الْأَمْرِ سُنَنًا مِنْ الْأَنْبِيَاءِ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ مُوسَى بْنِ عِمْرَانَ وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ عِيسَى وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ يُوسُفَ وَ سُنَّةٌ مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ ص فَأَمَّا سُنَّتُهُ مِنْ مُوسَى فَخَائِفٌ يَتَرَقَّبُ وَ أَمَّا سُنَّتُهُ مِنْ عِيسَى فَيُقَالُ فِيهِ مَا قِيلَ فِي عِيسَى وَ أَمَّا سُنَّتُهُ مِنْ يُوسُفَ فَالسَّجْنُ جَعَلَ اللَّهُ بَيْنَهُ وَ بَيْنَ الْخَلْقِ حِجَابًا يَرُونَهُ وَ لَا يَعْرِفُونَهُ وَ أَمَّا	In the owner of this Affair are customs from the Prophets. A custom from Moses son of `Imrān, a custom from Jesus, a custom from Joseph, and a custom from Muḥammad. The custom from Moses is that he will be in a state of insecurity/fright, the custom from Jesus is that it will be said about him what was said about Jesus, from Joseph is a veil that سُنَّتُهُ مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ ص فَيَهْتَدِي بِهُدَاؤِهِ وَ يَسِيرُ بِسِيرَتِهِ	God will put between him and the people so that they will see him but they will not recognize him, and the custom from Muḥammad is that he will guide using his guidance and will act by his manners.

Bihār al-anwār (52:347)	فِي صَاحِبِ هَذَا الْأَمْرِ شَبَهُ مِنْ أَرْبَعَةِ أَنْبِيَاءَ شَبَهُ مِنْ مُوسَى وَ شَبَهُ مِنْ عِيسَى وَ شَبَهُ مِنْ يُوسُفَ وَ شَبَهُ مِنْ مُحَمَّدٍ ص فَقُلْتُ وَ مَا شَبَهُ مُوسَى قَالَ خَائِفٌ يَتَرَقَّبُ قُلْتُ وَ مَا شَبَهُ عِيسَى فَقَالَ قِيلَ فِيهِ مَا قِيلَ فِي عِيسَى قُلْتُ فَمَا شَبَهُ يُوسُفَ قَالَ السَّجْنُ وَ الْعَيْبَةُ قُلْتُ وَ مَا شَبَهُ مُحَمَّدٍ ص قَالَ إِذَا قَامَ سَارَ بِسِيرَةِ رَسُولِ اللَّهِ ص إِلَّا أَنَّهُ يُبَيِّنُ آثَارَ مُحَمَّدٍ وَ يَضَعُ السَّيْفَ ثَمَانِيَةَ أَشْهُرٍ هَرْجًا هَرْجًا حَتَّى يَرْضَى اللَّهُ	“In the owner of this Affair will be similarities from four Prophets. A similarity with Moses, a similarity with Jesus, a similarity with Joseph, and a similarity with Muḥammad.” (The narrator says) I asked, “What is the similarity with Moses?” He replied, “He will be in a state of insecurity/fright.” I asked, “What is the similarity with Jesus?” He replied, “It will be said about him what was said about Jesus.” I asked, “What is the similarity with Joseph?” He replied, “Prison and occultation.” I asked, “What is the similarity with Muḥammad?” He replied, “When he rises he will act by the manners of the Messenger of God except that he will demonstrate Muḥammad’s teachings and he will slaughter with the sword for eight months until God becomes satisfied.

What Bahā’u’llāh claims is a mixture of the aforementioned hadiths with many distortions. The most important false statement that Bahā’u’llāh puts forward is this: “from Muḥammad, the revelation of a Book similar to the Qur’ān.” In none of the aforementioned hadiths was there anything slightly similar to this claim and what the hadiths had mentioned was that he would demonstrate Muhammad’s teachings and would guide using his guidance. Why would Bahā’u’llāh make up such words and claim the Mahdi would reveal a book similar to the Quran? Because as we previously showed, the Bāb had used verses of the Quran to make up the Qayyūm al-Asmā' and it would have been a very positive point if a narration existed that had said the Mahdī would reveal “a Book similar to the Qur’ān”! The next narration:

Thus hath Ṣādiq, son of Muḥammad, spoken: “God verily will test them and sift them.”⁴⁹⁸

Īqān version	Original narration
این است که صادق بن محمد می فرماید: و الله لیمحصن و الله لیغربلن	عَنْ أَبِي بَصِيرٍ قَالَ سَمِعْتُ أَبَا جَعْفَرٍ مُحَمَّدَ بْنَ عَلِيٍّ ع يَقُولُ وَاللَّهِ لَتُمَيِّزَنَّ وَاللَّهِ لَتُمَحِّصَنَّ وَاللَّهِ لَتُغَرِّبَنَّ
Thus hath Ṣādiq, son of Muḥammad , spoken: “God verily will test them and sift them.”	From Abū Baṣīr who said I heard Abū Jafar Muḥammad the son of `Alī say, “By God you will be separated, by God you will be screened out, by God you will be sifted.” ⁴⁹⁹

The next narration:

Īqān version	Original narration
لِكُلِّ عِلْمٍ سَبْعُونَ وَجْهًا وَ لَيْسَ بَيْنَ النَّاسِ إِلَّا وَاحِدٌ وَ إِذَا قَامَ الْقَائِمُ يَبَيِّتُ بَاقِيَ الْوُجُوهِ بَيْنَ النَّاسِ	الْعِلْمُ سَبْعَةٌ وَ عِشْرُونَ حَرْفًا فَجَمِيعُ مَا جَاءَتْ بِهِ الرُّسُلُ حَرْفَانِ فَلَمْ يَعْرِفِ النَّاسُ حَتَّى الْيَوْمِ غَيْرَ الْحَرْفَيْنِ فَإِذَا قَامَ قَائِمُنَا أَخْرَجَ الْخَمْسَةَ وَ الْعِشْرِينَ حَرْفًا فَبَيَّنَّهَا فِي النَّاسِ وَ صَمَّ إِلَيْهَا الْحَرْفَيْنِ حَتَّى يَبَيَّنَّهَا سَبْعَةٌ وَ عِشْرِينَ حَرْفًا
Every knowledge hath seventy meanings, of which one only is known amongst the people. And when the Qā'im shall arise, He shall reveal unto men all that which remaineth.	Knowledge is twenty-seven words and all that the Prophets have brought are two (of these words) and until now, the people know not but two of these words. When our Qa'im (the Mahdi) rises he will reveal (the remaining) twenty five words and he will distribute them amongst the people and will supplement to them the two other words, until he distributes the twenty seven words. ⁵⁰⁰

⁴⁹⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 255.

⁴⁹⁹ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 52, p. 114.

⁵⁰⁰ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 52, p. 336.

What is amazing is that even though it is explicitly mentioned in this narration that when the Qa'im rises he will reveal all the remaining meanings, the Bāb died without this prophecy being fulfilled. What was Bahā'u'llāh thinking when he was citing this narration to prove the Bāb's claims? In no way does he fit the criterion presented in this narration, even the distorted version. Next narration:

Īqān version	Original narration
نَحْنُ نَتَكَلَّمُ بِكَلِمَةٍ وَ نُرِيدُ مِنْهَا إِحْدَى وَسَبْعِينَ وَجْهًا وَلَنَا لِكُلِّ مِنْهَا الْمَخْرُجُ.	إِنَّا لَنَتَكَلَّمُ بِالْكَلِمَةِ لَهَا سَبْعُونَ وَجْهًا لَنَا مِنْ كُلِّهَا الْمَخْرُجُ
We speak one word, and by it we intend one and seventy meanings ; each one of these meanings we can explain .	We speak one word that has seventy meanings and we intend all those (meanings). ⁵⁰¹

The distortions and Bahā'u'llāh's forgeries are evident in these narrations. These were only narrations from the last three pages of the book.

Another important hadith that Bahā'u'llāh has distorted and deserves special attention is:

Have they not heard the well-known tradition: “When the Qa'im riseth, that day is the Day of Resurrection?”⁵⁰²

This narration has been forged to justify the claims made by the Bāb about the day of resurrection being the day of the appearance of the Bāb. Bahā'u'llāh claims this is a “well-known tradition” but it is completely made up and does not exist in the Shia hadith corpus.

These hadiths show that the UHJ's justifications about why the numerous errors of the Īqān were corrected by Bahā'u'llāh are baseless and the only purpose they have is to hide the truth. Why did he correct verses of the Quran and the grammatical errors but left intact the forged narrations that no one knew exactly where he had cited from? Why did he only correct the obvious errors that anyone could point out? And we ask again, why did this supposedly infalible manifestation make these mistakes, errors, and deliberate forgeries in the first place? The answers are obvious.

⁵⁰¹ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 2, p. 198.

⁵⁰² Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 144.

As a side-note, this is what Shoghi says about the book of Īqān:

Foremost among the priceless treasures cast forth from the billowing ocean of Bahā'u'llāh's Revelation ranks the Kitāb-i-Īqān (Book of Certitude), revealed within the space of two days and two nights, in the closing years of that period (1278 A.H.—1862 A.D.)⁵⁰³

Shoghi fixes the date the Īqān was written to the year 1278 AH. Here is the interesting part, Bahā'u'llāh refers to the year 1280 AH in the book of Īqān, p. 172:

Twelve hundred and eighty years have passed since the dawn of the Muḥammadan Dispensation.

How can Shoghi claim that the book of Īqān was written in 1278 whilst Bahā'u'llāh refers to 1280 in the book. Maybe—in contrary to what Baha'is preach—the book wasn't finished in two days and two nights, and it was finished in two years (1278–1280)?

The answer to this question is not important because there is a greater fallacy on behalf of Bahā'u'llāh within these words. The Islamic calendar started 13 years⁵⁰⁴ after the “the dawn of the Muḥammadan Dispensation” when Prophet Muḥammad migrated from the city of ⁵⁰³ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes by, p. 138.

⁵⁰⁴ This number is some time erroneously said to be 10 instead of 13.

Mecca to Medina. Thus, when Bahā'u'llāh says 1280 years have passed since the dawn of the “Muḥammadan Dispensation” he is saying: the year I am writing these words in is: 1280 - 13 = 1267.

Shoghi says the book was written in 1278 AH, whilst Bahā'u'llāh mentions the year 1267. So, either Shoghi made a mistake in dating the Īqān, or Bahā'u'llāh didn't know that the Islamic calendar didn't start from the dawn of the Muḥammadan Dispensation. We'll leave it up to the readers to figure out whose infallibility and knowledge we must question: Shoghi, Bahā'u'llāh, or both?

c- `Abdu'l-Bahā's Religious Knowledge

To show how much religious knowledge `Abdu'l-Bahā had, we will analyze a single book from his writings: Muntakhabātī az makātīb ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, volume 6.⁵⁰⁵ From this book we will cite the verses of the Quran that he has quoted to evaluate his knowledge on this matter. The following table shows the errors that he has made in this respect. The left column refers to the tablet number.

no.	`Abdu'l-Bahā version	Correct Version	Notes
5	و من الناس من يقول آمنا بالله و باليوم الآخر و ما هم بمؤمنين يخادعون الله و رسوله و ما يخدعون إلا انفسهم	و من الناس من يقول آمنا بالله و باليوم الآخر و ما هم بمؤمنين يخادعون الله و الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا و ما يخدعون إلا أنفُسَهُمْ و ما يَشْعُرُونَ (2:8–9)	'Those who believe' has been replaced with “the messenger.” `Abdu'l-Bahā then proceeds to speak about the “messengers” based on this distortion!

⁵⁰⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabātī az makātīb Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā (Germany: Mu'assisiyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī Almān), vol. 6: <http://reference.bahai.org/download/swa6-fa-doc.zip> (retrieved 16/2/2014).

25	در قرآن می فرماید و لنبلونکم بشيء من الخوف و الجوع و نقص من الأموال و الأنفس و الثمار فيبشّر الصّابرين(2:155) . . . چنانکه می فرماید اذا وجدوا آثروا على انفسهم و اذا فقدوا اشكروا الله شكراً جزياً هذه صفة الأبرار و سمة الأخيار. با وجود این انّ مع العسر يسرا (94:6) یا اِنَّهَا الَّذِيْنَ آمَنُوا لَا تَقْنَطُوا مِنْ رَحْمَةِ اللَّهِ (39:53) یا بَنِي لَا تَيْأَسُوا مِنْ رُوحِ اللَّهِ (12:87). پس باید توکل نمود و به تقوای الهی تمسک جست و من يَتَّقِ اللَّهَ يَجْعَلْ لَهُ مَخْرَجاً و يَرْزُقْهُ مِنْ حَيْثُ لَا يَحْتَسِبُ (2-3:65). نهایت تضرّع به ربّ جلیل می نلزم تا گشایشی حاصل گردد.	قُلْ يَا عِبَادِيَ الَّذِينَ أَسْرَفُوا عَلَى أَنْفُسِهِمْ لَا تَقْنَطُوا مِنْ رَحْمَةِ اللَّهِ (39:53) يَا بَنِي أَذْهَبُوا فَتَحَسَّسُوا مِنْ يُوسُفَ وَ أَخِيهِ وَ لَا تَيْأَسُوا مِنْ رُوحِ اللَّهِ (12:87)	He starts listing verses of the Quran. I have underlined these verses and placed their address in parentheses. One of the verses he cites is virtually non-existent (shown in boldface). The first section of verse 53:39 is wrong. Sections of 12:87 have been left out.
37	احسبتم ان تدخلوا الجنة و لما يأتكم مثل الذين كانوا من قبلکم اصابتهم البأساء و الضرّاء	أَمْ حَسِبْتُمْ أَنْ تَدْخُلُوا الْجَنَّةَ وَلَمَّا يَأْتِكُمْ مَثَلُ الَّذِينَ خَلَوْا مِنْ قَبْلِكُمْ مَسْتَهْزِئِينَ الْبِأْسَاءُ وَ الضَّرَّاءُ (2:214)	Three words have been distorted.
47	آية ملكه ان تأتیکم التّابوت فيه سکینه	آيَةُ مُلْكِهِ أَنْ يَأْتِيَكُمُ التَّابُوتُ فِيهِ سَكِينَةٌ (2:248)	The first letter of the underlined word has been distorted. This letter changes the meaning from “he” to “you”

59	كَحَبَّةٍ انْبَتَتْ سَبْعَ سَنَابِلٍ فِي كُلِّ سُنْبُلَةٍ مِائَةُ حَبَّةٍ وَاللَّهُ يُضَاعِفُ لِمَنْ يَشَاءُ	كَمَلَّ حَبَّةٌ أَنْبَتَتْ سَبْعَ سَنَابِلٍ فِي كُلِّ سُنْبُلَةٍ مِائَةُ حَبَّةٍ وَاللَّهُ يُضَاعِفُ لِمَنْ يَشَاءُ (2:261)	The first word has been dropped and the second has been distorted. This verse has also been mentioned in tablets 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 545 and the same mistake has been repeated in all these verses, except that in 61, 62, and 64 only the first mistake has been repeated.
119	لَا تَأْخُذْهُمْ فِي اللَّهِ لُومَةٌ لَائِمٌ	لَا يَخَافُونَ لُومَةً لَائِمٌ (5:54)	`Abdu'l-Bahā explicitly states this is from the Quran: “ dar Qurān mīfarmāyad. ” He has repeated this mistake in tablets 40, 120, 122,123,124, 125, 126, 127, and 128.
166	وَأَتَمَّنَاهُ بِعَشْرٍ	وَأَتَمَّنَاهَا بِعَشْرٍ (7:142)	This change is deliberate because `Abdu'l-Bahā speaks about the second word and its non-existent ‘و’ that he has added to the end and its meaning in Abjad code.
172	لَوْ كُنْتُ أَعْلَمُ الْغَيْبِ لَاسْتَكْثَرْتُ مِنَ الْخَيْرِ وَمَا أَدْرِي مَاذَا يَفْعَلُ بِي وَبِكُمْ غَدًا	لَوْ كُنْتُ أَعْلَمُ الْغَيْبِ لَاسْتَكْثَرْتُ مِنَ الْخَيْرِ (7:188) وَمَا أَدْرِي مَا يُفْعَلُ بِي وَبِكُمْ (46:9)	This time `Abdu'l-Bahā has attributed a verse to the Quran using the Bab's method. He has cut two sections of two different verses and has joined them together to form a new verse. The second verse has been quoted incorrectly and a word has also been added at the end of the newly created verse! Same non-existent verse repeated in tablets 173 and 271.

191	رضوان الله أكبر	وَ رِضْوَانٌ مِنَ اللَّهِ أَكْبَرُ (9:72)	He has dropped out two words.
193	ا لم يروا يفتنون في كل عام مرة او مرتين	أَوْ لَا يَرَوْنَ أَنَّهُمْ يُفْتَنُونَ فِي كُلِّ عَامٍ مَرَّةً أَوْ مَرَّتَيْنِ (9:126)	Total distortion at beginning of verse. The distorted verse is grammatically wrong. A similarly distorted version can also be found in tablet 380.
194	و جعلنا الشمس ضياءً و جعلنا القمر نوراً	هُوَ الَّذِي جَعَلَ الشَّمْسُ ضِيَاءً وَ الْقَمَرَ نُورًا (10:5)	Distortions and additions.
371	و انزلنا من السماء ماءً فسالنا اودية بقدرها فاحتمل السيل زبداً رابياً و مما يوقدون عليه في النار زياد مثله فاما الزبد فيذهب جفاءً و اما ما ينفع الناس فيمكث في الارض	أَنْزَلْنَا مِنَ السَّمَاءِ مَاءً فَسَالَتْ أَوْدِيَةٌ بِقَدَرِهَا فَاحْتَمَلَ السَّيْلُ زَبَدًا رَابِيًا وَ مِمَّا يُوقَدُونَ عَلَيْهِ فِي النَّارِ ابْتِغَاءَ حُلْيَةٍ أَوْ مَتَاعٍ زَبَدٌ مِثْلُهُ كَذَلِكَ يَضْرِبُ اللَّهُ الْحَقَّ وَ الْبَاطِلَ فَأَمَّا الزَّبَدُ فَيَذْهَبُ جُفَاءً وَ أَمَّا مَا يَنْفَعُ النَّاسَ فَيَمْكُثُ فِي الْأَرْضِ (13:17)	First part of verse distorted and two sections completely removed.
229	مثل كلمة طيبة كشجرة طيبة اصلها ثابت و فرعها في السماء و تؤتي اكلها في كل حين	مِثْلًا كَلِمَةً طَيِّبَةً كَشَجَرَةٍ طَيِّبَةٍ أَصْلُهَا ثَابِتٌ وَ فَرْعُهَا فِي السَّمَاءِ تُؤْتِي أَكْلَهَا كُلَّ حِينٍ بِإِذْنِ رَبِّهَا (14:24-25)	Three distortions. The same distortions have been repeated in tablets 227, 228, and 230. In the two latter tablets a fourth distortion exists.

249	و اخفض لهما جناح الذل و قل رب ارحمهما كما ربياني صغيراً	وَ اخْفِضْ لهُمَا جَنَاحَ الذُّلِّ مِنَ الرُّحْمَةِ وَ قُلْ رَبِّ ارْحَمْهُمَا كَمَا رَبَّيَانِي صَغِيرًا (17:24)	Two words have been deleted.
260	و نبعتك مقاماً محموداً	عَسَى أَنْ يَبْعَثَكَ رَبُّكَ مَقَاماً مُحْمُوداً (17:79)	Distortion of first section.
348	1-ان هذا الّا بشر مثلكم 2-افترى على الله أم به جنه 3-اذا راوك ان يتخذوك الّا هزوا ا هذا الذي بعنه الله رسولا	إِنْ نَحْنُ إِلَّا بَشَرٌ مِثْلُكُمْ (14:11) أَفْتَرَى عَلَى اللَّهِ كَذِبًا أَمْ بِهِ جِنَّةٌ (34:8) إِذَا رَأَوْكَ إِِنْ يَتَّخِذُونَكَ إِلَّا هُزُوًا أ هَذَا الَّذِي بَعَثَ اللَّهُ رَسُولًا (25:41)	Three distorted verses in a single tablet. The third verse has also been repeated in 309 and 347.
354	و اجعل لي لسان صدق عليا	وَ اجْعَلْ لِي لِسَانَ صِدْقٍ فِي الْآخِرِينَ (26:84) وَ جَعَلْنَا لَهُمْ لِسَانَ صِدْقٍ عَلِيًّا (19:50)	Sections of two verses joined and presented as a new verse.
390	و لقد اخذناهم بالعذاب الأدنى دون العذاب الأكبر لعلهم يرجعون	وَ لَقَدْ أَخَذْنَاهُمْ بِالْعَذَابِ فَمَا اسْتَكَانُوا لِرَجْمٍ وَ مَا يَنْصَرِعُونَ (23:76) وَ لَنَذِيقَنَّهُمْ مِنَ الْعَذَابِ الْأَدْنَى دُونَ الْعَذَابِ الْأَكْبَرِ لَعَلَّهُمْ يَرْجِعُونَ (32:21)	Again sections of two verses have been cut and joined as presented as another verse. This distortion has also been repeated in tablets 391, 392, 393, and 394.
410	ثم اورثنا الكتاب الذين اصطفينا منهم ظالم لنفسه و منهم مقتصد و منهم سارع الى الخيرات	ثُمَّ أَوْثَرْنَا الْكِتَابَ الَّذِينَ اصْطَفَيْنَا مِنْ عِبَادِنَا فَمِنْهُمْ ظَالِمٌ لِنَفْسِهِ وَ مِنْهُمْ مُّقْتَصِدٌ وَ مِنْهُمْ سَابِقٌ بِالْخَيْرَاتِ يُأَذِّنُ اللَّهُ ذَلِكَ هُوَ	A deletion and two distortions.

		الْفَضْلُ الْكَبِيرُ (35:32)
414	اَنَا تَطَيَّرْنَا بِكُمْ لَئِنْ لَمْ تَنْتَهُوا لَنَرْجُمَنَّكُمْ وَ لَنَمَسَّنَّكُمْ مِنَّا عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ (36:18)	اَنَا تَطَيَّرْنَا بِكُمْ لَئِنْ لَمْ تَنْتَهُوا لَنَرْجُمَنَّكُمْ وَ لَنَمَسَّنَّكُمْ مِنَّا عَذَابٌ أَلِيمٌ	Repeated twice in 414 and once in 415.
134	جند هنالك مهزوم من الأحزاب	جُنُودٌ مِمَّا هُنَالِكَ مَهْزُومٌ مِنَ الْأَحْزَابِ (38:11)	Word deleted. This has been repeated in 434, 435, and 437.
434	هذا هو الحق و ما بعد الحق الا الضلال	فَذَلِكُمُ اللَّهُ رَبُّكُمُ الْحَقُّ فَمَاذَا بَعَدَ الْحَقِّ إِلَّا الضَّلَالُ (10:32)	Multiple distortions.
452	لا يستوى الذين يعلمون و الذين لا يعلمون	هَلْ يَسْتَوِي الَّذِينَ يَعْلَمُونَ وَ الَّذِينَ لَا يَعْلَمُونَ (39:9)	One distortion.
455	انك ميت و هم ميئون	إِنَّكَ مَيِّتٌ وَ إِنَّهُمْ مَيِّتُونَ (39:30)	One distortion.
467	قابل التوب غافر الذنب و ان الله يغفر الذنوب جميعاً	غَافِرِ الذَّنْبِ وَ قَابِلِ التَّوْبِ (40:3) إِنَّ اللَّهَ يَغْفِرُ الذُّنُوبَ جَمِيعاً (39:53)	Sections from two verses have been joined then presented as a new verse. Parts from the first verse have also been misplaced.
485	ما كان محمد ابا احد من رجالكم و لكنه رسول الله و خاتم النبيين	مَا كَانَ مُحَمَّدٌ أَبَا أَحَدٍ مِنْ رِجَالِكُمْ وَ لَكِنْ رَسُولَ اللَّهِ وَ خَاتَمَ النَّبِيِّينَ (33:40)	One distortion.
524	كل شيء خلقناه زوجين اثنين	كُلِّ شَيْءٍ خَلَقْنَاهُ زَوْجَيْنِ (51:49) أَحْمَلٌ فِيهَا مِنْ كُلِّ زَوْجَيْنِ اُنْتُنِ (11:40)	Mixture of two different verses presented as a new verse.
545	و يؤثرون على انفسهم ولو كانت بهم خصاصة	وَ يُؤْثِرُونَ عَلَى أَنْفُسِهِمْ وَ لَوْ كَانَ بِهِمْ خَصَاصَةٌ (59:9)	This error has also been repeated in tablet 45.

548	يا أَيُّهَا الَّذِينَ آمَنُوا إِذَا نُودِيَ لِلصَّلَاةِ مِنْ يَوْمِ الْجُمُعَةِ فَاسْعَوْا إِلَى ذِكْرِ اللَّهِ وَذَرُوا الْبَيْعَ (62:9)	One word changed.
551	يَوْمَ يَغْنَى اللَّهُ كَلًّا مِنْ سَعَتِهِ وَ إِنْ يَتَفَرَّقَا يُغْنِ اللَّهُ كُلًّا مِنْ سَعَتِهِ (4:130)	The exact same distortion has been repeated in tablets 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, and 110.
203	قُلْ لَا أَسْأَلُكُمْ عَلَيْهِ أَجْرًا إِنْ أَجَرْتُمْ إِلَّا عَلَى رَبِّ الْعَالَمِينَ (26:109)	Multiple distortions. This has been repeated in 355 and 356.
363	تِلْكَ بَيُوتُهُمْ خَاوِيَةٌ عَلَى عُرُوشِهَا بِمَا ظَلَمُوا وَ مَا ظَلَمْنَاهُمْ وَلَكِنْ كَانُوا أَنْفُسَهُمْ يَظْلِمُونَ.	This one is a masterpiece. He has created a new verse using the beginning, middle, and ending of three different verses. This is what he says before this verse: "He has become an example of the blessed verse . . ."
394	إِنْ تُصِيبُهُمْ حَسَنَةٌ يَقُولُوا هَذِهِ مِنْ عِنْدِ اللَّهِ وَ إِنْ تُصِيبُهُمْ سَيِّئَةٌ سَقِيتُمْ هَذِهِ مِنْ عِنْدِكُمْ قُلْ كُلٌّ مِنْ عِنْدِ اللَّهِ فَمَا لَهُؤُلَاءِ الْقَوْمِ لَا يَكَادُونَ يَفْقَهُونَ حَدِيثًا (4:78)	Two words added.

557	لن ترى في خلق الرحمن من فتور و لن ترى في خلق الرحمن من تفاوت	ما ترى في خلق الرحمن من تفاوتٍ فارجع البصر هل ترى من فُطور (67:3)	A complete shuffling of the words in the verse. Also, the word underlined has been written with the wrong spelling.
557	كَلَّا مَدَّ هَوْلًا و هَوْلًا و ما كان عطاء ربك محظورا	كَلَّا تُمَدُّ هَوْلًا و هَوْلًا مِنْ عَطَاءِ رَبِّكَ و ما كان عطاء ربك مُحْظُورًا (17:20)	Three words deleted from middle of verse.

We have not mentioned many of the distorted verses because the distortions were minor. The same distortions can be found in the many other writings of `Abdu'l-Bahā. The fact that he has repeated the exact distortions multiple times clearly shows that he had memorized the verses incorrectly. This can be further verified by the verses that he has forged by mixing up multiple verses and presenting them as new verses.

It is appropriate here to remind the UHJ what `Abdu'l-Bahā had said about Mīrzā Yaḥyā Ṣubḥi Azal:

He had written the blessed verse of the Quran “what are these statues/images that you are worshipping” (mā hādhihī al-tamāthīl al-latī antum `alayhā `āḳifūn) [and had written the last word] as `āḳifūn and the [text] is in the possession of Mīrzā Yaḥyā Qazwīnī. Pay attention that the leader of this group cannot make a distinction between `āḳif and `āḳik and he distorts the evident verse of the Book of God in his own handwriting!⁵⁰⁶

If a single change in a word warrants such a harsh response, then what should ones response be to the many verses we cited, which were only a handful of `Abdu'l-Bahā's distortion of the verses of the Quran.

⁵⁰⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabāt az makātib Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 430.

The story gets even more interesting. No one probably noticed but `Abdu'l-Bahā has even distorted the current verse and has written it incorrectly: mā hādhihī al-tamāthīl al-latī antum `alayhā `ākifūn. The underlined word should be lahā! The Mystery of God bashes a person for misplacing two adjacent letters whilst he distorts the same verse when trying to criticizing him. The story doesn't end here. We have only mentioned the first part of the quote. `Abdu'l-Bahā continues:

This writing has been unwillingly inscribed by his pen so that it becomes evident that he is the chief of the distorters and the leader of those who are in Hell. Some of the followers of that unknown person⁵⁰⁷—even though they saw this [distortion] with their own eyes—didn't wake up and proved that they were lowly flies that followed any caller and bended with any breeze.⁵⁰⁸

How would Baha'is react if we used the exact same reasoning and words to refer to Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā the distorters, and the Baha'is who don't wake up and blindly follow them?

7- The source of the Bāb, Bahā'u'llāh, and `Abdu'l-Bahā's Knowledge

Baha'is believe that the Bab, Bahā'u'llāh, and `Abdu'l-Bahā were divinely inspired and received knowledge directly from God. For instance this is how Bahā'u'llāh claims he received divine knowledge:

Whenever We desire to quote the sayings of the learned and of the wise, presently there will appear before the face of thy ⁵⁰⁷ This is again a reference to Mīrzā Yahyā. The Arabic word used is majhūl which literally means unknown and was probably used by `Abdu'l-Bahā to degrade him, or it could be that `Abdu'l-Bahā had intended to say jāhil which means ignorant.

⁵⁰⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabāt az makātīb Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 430.

Lord in the form of a tablet all that which hath appeared in the world and is revealed in the Holy Books and Scriptures.⁵⁰⁹

Likewise, as we already mentioned, `Abdu'l-Bahā claims:

I do not know everything. But when I need to know something, it is pictured before me.⁵¹⁰

Bahā'is claim that these figures never attended school and didn't receive education like other people. As we will show these claims are baseless.

a- The Bāb's Education

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

It was universally admitted by the Shi'is that He had never studied in any school and had not acquired knowledge from any teacher; all the people of Shīrāz bear witness to this.⁵¹¹

`Abdu'l-Bahā's claims that "it was universally admitted by the Shi'is that He had never studied in any school," this universal admittance has not been verified to date and there exists no document that we know of that can even partially show this admission. On the contrary, it is nearly universally admitted by Bahā'is and non-Bahā'is alike that the Bāb had studied in school. We will present here only a few samples from the many recorded documents on this matter.

Fāḍil Māzandarānī mentions that he was taught both reading and writing at the school of Shaykh Abid.⁵¹² He also mentions that he had attended Sayyid Kāẓim Rashtī's classes in Karbalā and had taught from ⁵⁰⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 149.

⁵¹⁰ Stanwood Cobb, Memories of `Abdu'l-Bahā in In his Presence: Visits to `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 60.

⁵¹¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 25.

⁵¹² Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Tārīkh zuhūr al-Ḥaqq, vol. 3, p. 263.

him the works of Suyūṭī and Ḥāshiyyi Mullā `Abdullāh.⁵¹³ This is further verified by two documents in which the Bāb refers to Sayyid Kāẓim as his teacher.⁵¹⁴

In another document it is narrated from Ḥājī Sayyid Jawād that:

One day I was in the Khāl's (the Bāb's uncle) house when I saw that his highness (the Bāb) returned from school while he was holding some papers. I asked him, "What are these?" He replied with a weak whisper, "These are my homework (or calligraphy practices)."⁵¹⁵

Esslemont too admits that the Bāb had received education at school:

In childhood He learned to read, and received the elementary education customary for children.⁵¹⁶

He then continues in the footnote:

On this point a historian remarks: "The belief of many people in the East, especially the believers in the Bāb (now Baha'is) was this: that the Bāb received no education, but that the Mullās, in order to lower him in the eyes of the people, declared that such knowledge and wisdom as he possessed were accounted for by the education he had received. After deep search into the truth of this matter we have found evidence to show that in childhood for a short time he used to go to the house of Shaykh Muḥammad (also known as Abid) where he was taught to read and write in Persian. It was this ⁵¹³ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Tārīkh ṣuhūr al-Haqq, vol. 3, pp. 200 & 437.

⁵¹⁴ See Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 1, p. 35 & vol. 2, pp. 61–62.

⁵¹⁵ Mīrzā Abu l-Faḍl Gulpāyḡānī and Mīrza Mīhdī Gulpāyḡānī, Kashf al-ghitā' (Tashkent, 1919), pp. 56–57.

⁵¹⁶ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 13.

to which the Bāb referred when he wrote in the book of Bayān: ‘O Muḥammad, O my teacher! . . .’”

The last sentence which Esslemont has replaced with three periods refers to what the Bāb had written in the Arabic Bayān. We have previously cited a section of this quote:

Say O Muḥammad, my teacher. Do not hit me before my age finishes five even for a moment for my heart is very very soft. After that discipline me but not more than I can bear. If you want to hit me do not [hit me] more than five times. And do not hit me on my flesh (lahm) unless there is a covering over it. If you exceed [these guidelines] your wife will be illegal for you for nineteen days. If you forget and if you don’t have a companion, then you must give in charity for every beating nineteen mithqāls⁵¹⁷ of gold if you want to be faithful. And do not hit but very very softly. And you must place the children on a throne, seat, or stool because [the time they are sitting there] will not be calculated as their age and you must allow them to do what makes them happy. And you must teach me the *Shikastih*⁵¹⁸ handwriting for that is what God loves and has made the gateway to His soul . . .⁵¹⁹

Pay attention to the first sentence in which the Bāb refers to that person as his teacher, and to the sentence in which the Bāb is clearly asking the teacher to teach him: “And you must teach me the Shikastih handwriting.” Do these words show anything but the fact that the Bāb was schooled?

Nabīl Zarandī claims that the Bāb studied at school for five years:

⁵¹⁷ 3.6 grams.

⁵¹⁸ A form of calligraphy.

⁵¹⁹ Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chapter 11.

The Bāb was six or seven years of age when He entered the school of Shaykh Abid. The school was known by the name of “Qahviyah-Awliya.” The Bāb remained five years at that school where He was taught the rudiments of Persian.⁵²⁰

To cover-up this fact, it is claimed in this book that the Bab was forced to go to school and didn’t need to be educated, although the previous examples we mentioned clearly show the contrary. It is even claimed that he had shown super-human wisdom at the school:

“ . . . Day after day He continued to manifest such remarkable evidences of superhuman wisdom as I am powerless to recount.” At last His uncle was induced to take Him away from the school of Shaykh Abid, and to associate Him with himself in his own profession. There, too, He revealed signs of a power and greatness that few could approach and none could rival.⁵²¹

The validity of the claims about the Bāb’s super human knowledge and inspirations can be verified by studying his beliefs and writings mentioned earlier in this book. As usual, Nabil Zarandī’s historical accounts go against established facts. As we previously mentioned, Nabil himself should be looked at with skepticism, because he had falsely claimed that he was the One Who God Would Make Manifest.

Anyway, what is important here is that in contrast to what `Abdu’l-Bahā claimed, the Bab had attended school.

`Abdu’l-Bahā’s challenge is even more interesting: “all the people of Shīrāz bear witness to this.” These words were uttered by `Abdu’l-Bahā between the years 1904–1906 (let us use the average 1905). The Bab was born in the year 1819 and had reached the age of schooling by 1825. What `Abdu'l-Bahā is saying is this: all the people in Shiraz bear witness to what happened 80 (1905-1825 = 80) years ago! Most—if not all—the people who might have witnessed the Bab's schooling were definitely dead when `Abdu'l-Bahā had put forward this challenge. Now let us read `Abdu'l-Bahā's sentence again:

⁵²⁰ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl’s Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā’ī Revelation, p. 75 (footnote).

⁵²¹ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl’s Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā’ī Revelation, p. 76.

(1) It was universally admitted by the Shī'is that (2) He had never studied in any school and (3) had not acquired knowledge from any teacher; (4) all the people of Shīrāz bear witness to this.⁵²²

Is it an exaggeration to say that `Abdu'l-Bahā has uttered four lies in a single sentence?

b- Bahā'u'llāh's Education

`Abdu'l-Bahā says about his father:

As all the people of Persia know, He had never studied in any school, nor had He associated with the `ulamā or the men of learning. The early part of His life was passed in the greatest happiness. His companions and associates were Persians of the highest rank, but not learned men.⁵²³

In the Bāb's case, the witness to `Abdu'l-Bahā's claims were all the people of Shiraz, in Bahā'u'llāh's case the matter is taken to a whole new level: all the people of Iran! The falsity of this claim is obvious.

`Abdu'l-Bahā claims his father had not associated with the `Ulamā. Apparently he has forgotten that when he was exaggerating his father's knowledge elsewhere, he had mentioned that his father had in fact associated with the `Ulamā:

⁵²² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 25.

⁵²³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 27.

When He was only thirteen or fourteen years old He became renowned for His learning. He would converse on any subject and solve any problem presented to Him. In large gatherings He would discuss matters with the `Ulamā (leading mullās) and would explain intricate religious questions. All of them used to listen to Him with the greatest interest.⁵²⁴

In whatever meeting, scientific assembly or theological discussion He was found, He became the authority of explanation upon intricate and abstruse questions presented.⁵²⁵

The claims about Bahā'u'llāh's superior knowledge in these gatherings, are merely `Abdu'l-Bahā's claims and have not been verified to date by any external source. In these talks, the `Ulamā are basically displayed as a group of unlearned foolish men who were begging Bahā'u'llāh to answer their questions. Once again, what is important here is that in contrary to what `Abdu'l-Bahā had claimed, these quotes clearly show that Bahā'u'llāh would socialize and associate with the `Ulamā and scholars.

Yet `Abdu'l-Bahā repeatedly insists that his father had not attended school. Here is another instance:

During the period of youth the Blessed Perfection did not enter school. He was not willing to be taught. This fact is well established among the Persians of Ṭihrān.⁵²⁶

⁵²⁴ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 48. The author claims on page 23 that he directly heard these words from `Abdu'l-Bahā: "On one occasion `Abdu'l-Bahā, the eldest son of Bahā'u'llāh, related to the writer the following particulars about His Father's early day."

⁵²⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1976), p. 220.

⁵²⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 220.

This time the people of Tehran are used as witnesses. These hundreds and thousands of witnesses (!) too like the people of Shiraz were all probably dead when `Abdu'l-Bahā made this claim.

In a similar quote `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

He never attended school or college, and what little teaching
He received was given at home.⁵²⁷

In this quote, `Abdu'l-Bahā admits that his father received education at home. We will allow Adib Taherzadeh, a member of the Universal House of Justice from 1988–2000, to tell us how Bahā'u'llāh was educated:

In Persia in the nineteenth century . . . There were two educated classes, divines and government officials, plus a small number of others . . . The second class included government officials, clerks and some merchants, who received a certain elementary education in their childhood. This consisted of reading, writing, calligraphy, the study of the Qur'ān and the works of some famous Persian poets. All this was usually accomplished within the span of a few years, after which many of them would marry, as was customary, in their late teens.

It was to this class that Bahā'u'llāh belonged. His father was a senior dignitary at the court of the Shāh and famous as a calligrapher—an art which carried with it great prestige in royal circles. Bahā'u'llāh as a child received a simple education for a brief period of time. Like His father, He excelled in calligraphy. Some specimens of His exquisite handwriting are kept in the International Bahā'ī Archives on Mount Carmel.⁵²⁸

⁵²⁷ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 23.

⁵²⁸ Adib Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahā'u'llāh, vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

Adib Taherzadeh gives us further information elsewhere:

Bahā'u'llāh received an elementary education during His childhood in Tihran [sic]. The nobility of those days usually employed the services of a teacher at home to tutor their children. The main subjects were calligraphy, the study of the Qur'an and the works of the Persian poets. This type of schooling ended after only a few years when the child was in his early teens. Bahā'u'llāh's education did not go further than this.⁵²⁹

According to these words, the reason Bahā'u'llāh didn't go to school was because he was born in a noble family and it was customary in these families to not send their children to school. Rather they would employ a private teacher to teach their children. It is well known that the quality of teaching received from a private tutor usually far exceeds the education that one might attain in a public school.

The final witness to how Bahā'u'llāh was educated is someone who knew him from childhood and as `Abdu'l-Bahā claims, apparently reared him. This person is no one but his sister, Khānum Buzurg (also known as Shāh Sultan Khānum and `Izziye Khānum). Although she became a follower of Mīrzā Yahyā, nonetheless, she was held with high esteem and was greatly respected by `Abdu'l-Bahā. The bond between `Abdu'l-Bahā and his aunt was so strong that `Abdu'l-Bahā used these words to address her:

Do you not remember that during my childhood and infancy what devotion I had to you, and now, for the sake of the Blessed Dust (Turbat Mubārakī) and the Encircling Place of ⁵²⁹ Adib Taherzadeh, The child of the covenant: A Study Guide to the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha (Oxford: George Ronald, 2000), p. 19.

the Most High Ones (Maṭāf Mala' A`lā), I still have the utmost love (for you).⁵³⁰

O intelligent aunt! I swear by the Encircling Place of the Most High Ones (Maṭāf Mala' A`lā) that in intelligence, cognition, reason, and understanding you have distinction and superiority over those who claim they are the pole/axis of the Merciful (Lord's) world. The child that you had nurtured in your lap of love and affection had no similarity with his other brothers in any aspect and he wouldn't accept any position.⁵³¹

These words show that Khānum Buzurg had very close ties to Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā until they split up over the Bab's successorship. The words also clearly show that Khānum Buzurg possessed a very high degree of intelligence. Furthermore, the child that `Abdu'l-Bahā is referring to who she had nurtured, is most probably Bahā'u'llāh himself because he is the one that “wouldn't accept any positions.”⁵³² These statement show that the Aunt knew a fair amount about the internal affairs of Bahā'u'llāh and how he had been schooled.

There are at least five tablets from `Abdu'l-Bahā that have been addressed to her in a bid to persuade her to become a follower of ⁵³⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 180.

⁵³¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 183.

⁵³² “This occasioned surprise and comment. It was frequently said: ‘How is it that a young man of such keen intelligence and subtle perception does not seek lucrative appointments? As a matter of fact every position is open to him.’ This is a historical statement fully attested by the people of Īrān. He was most generous, giving abundantly to the poor. None who came to Him were turned away. The doors of His house were open to all. He always had many guests. This unbounded generosity was conducive to greater astonishment from the fact that He sought neither position nor prominence.” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā ('Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), pp. 220–221; “When Bahā'u'llāh was twenty-two years old, His father died, and the Government wished Him to succeed to His father's position in the Ministry, as was customary in Persia, but Bahā'u'llāh did not accept the offer.” J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 24.

Bahā'u'llāh.⁵³³ In the longest tablet,⁵³⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā refers to her as kind (mihrabān), pure (ṭayyiba), honored (mukrama). It is in this tablet that he asks her to “awaken those who are asleep.”⁵³⁵ In a response to this request, she sends him a letter with the title *Ṭanbīh al-na'imīn*⁵³⁶ (Awakening the asleep) to refute his claims. It is in this letter that she explains how Bahā'u'llāh—her brother—was tutored:

The Mirzā (meaning Bahā'u'llāh), who was your father, from the beginning of his life to when he came of age—because the means were at hand and because of the gathering of the companions—was engrossed in studying and endeavored in homework⁵³⁷. He wouldn't disengage from learning the rudiments for a moment. After studying the rudiments of Arabic and literature he inclined towards the science of philosophy (ḥikmat) and mysticism ('irfān) so that he might benefit from these. It was such that he would spend most of the day and night socializing with high statured philosophers and the gatherings of mystics and Sufis. When it was blown in Seraph's Trumpet of Appearance (meaning when the Bāb made his claims), he (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) was a man who had seen most of the words and phrases of the mystics and philosophers and had heard and understood most of the signs of the appearance (of the Mahdi) . . . after returning from Badasht and after the Shaykh Ṭabarsī Fort war was over, he was engaged day and night in socializing with great Islamic scholars and followers of mysticism . . .⁵³⁸

⁵³³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, pp. 162–186.

⁵³⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, pp. 170–186.

⁵³⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 172.

⁵³⁶ This document is the only non-Baha'i source used in this book. The sections that we are citing from this document bear very close resemblance to what we mentioned from Baha'i sources.

⁵³⁷ The Farsi word used is mashgh which can also mean practicing calligraphy.

⁵³⁸ `Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn, pp. 4–5.

Both friend and foe, admit that Bahā'u'llāh received education and was engaged in studying and socializing with the scholars in his youth. The story doesn't end here, even Bahā'u'llāh himself admits that he used to read Islamic books when he was a child:

This oppressed one in his childhood (ṭufūliyyat) saw the war of the tribe of Qurayza in a book that belonged to (was authored by) Mullā Bāqir Majlisī, and has been sad and sorrowful ever-since.⁵³⁹

Bahā'u'llāh also says that he “has been sad and sorrowful ever-since” whilst `Abdul'-Bahā had claimed the exact opposite:

As all the people of Persia know, He had never studied in any school, nor had He associated with the `ulamā or the men of learning. The early part of His life was passed in the greatest happiness. His companions and associates were Persians of the highest rank, but not learned men.⁵⁴⁰

Bahā'u'llāh also unwittingly admits in the Ṭiqān that he would read the books of other people:

For instance, a certain man,⁵⁴¹ reputed for his learning and attainments, and accounting himself as one of the pre-eminent leaders of his people, hath in his book denounced and vilified all the exponents of true learning. This is made abundantly clear by his explicit statements as well as by his allusions throughout his book. As We had frequently heard about him, We purposed to read some of his works. Although We never felt disposed to peruse other peoples' writings, yet as some had questioned Us concerning him, We felt it necessary to refer to his books, in order that We might answer Our questioners with knowledge and understanding. His works, in the Arabic tongue, were, however, not available, . . . We sent for the book, and kept it with Us a few days. It was probably referred to twice. The second time, We accidentally came upon the story of the “Mi’rāj”⁵⁴² . . . We noticed that he had enumerated some twenty or more sciences, the knowledge of which he considered to be essential for the comprehension of the mystery of the “Mi’rāj”.

⁵³⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 136.

⁵⁴⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 27.

⁵⁴¹ Hājī Mīrzā Karīm Khān.

These words clearly show that Bahā’u’llāh would read books to attain knowledge and would even refer to them to answer questions. This is while ‘Abdu’l-Bahā says the knowledge of divine figures is divine not acquired:

Since the Sanctified Realities, the supreme Manifestations of God, surround the essence and qualities of the creatures, transcend and contain existing realities and understand all things, therefore, Their knowledge is divine knowledge, and not acquired—that is to say, it is a holy bounty; it is a divine revelation.⁵⁴³

Furthermore, why would Bahā’u’llāh lie elsewhere and claim he had not read any books:

You know that we did not read the books of the people and were unaware of the sciences that they possessed.⁵⁴⁴

⁵⁴² Ascent.

⁵⁴³ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, pp. 157–158.

⁵⁴⁴ Bahā’u’llāh, Majmū’ihī az alwāḥ jamāl aqdas abhā ki ba’d az kitāb Aqdas nāzil shude. (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Lisān Fārsī wa ‘Arabī), p. 89.

And why would the Baha'i administration distort these words when translating them to English:

Thou knowest full well that We perused not the books which men possess and We acquired not the learning current amongst them.⁵⁴⁵

Why would the word qara'a which simply means read be translated to peruse which means read or examine thoroughly or carefully?⁵⁴⁶ Why would we "were unaware of the sciences that they possessed" be translated to "We acquired not the learning current amongst them"? Why does the Baha'i administration insist on presenting to the World a Bahā'u'llāh that isn't the real Bahā'u'llāh?

When friend and foe and even Bahā'u'llāh himself admit that he had received education, had read the books, and had socialized with learned people, then why is there insistence by Baha'is that he was not schooled and his knowledge was Divine? The answer can be found in the Quran:

And before this you had not read any book and you do not write it by your right hand, for if it was so, the slanderers would have defamed you.⁵⁴⁷

Prophet Muḥammad, prior to becoming a Prophet, had received no schooling or education. It was for this fact that when he became Divinely Inspired by knowledge and wisdom he was not refuted as a liar who had learned the knowledge that he was uttering in school or had read it in books. It is because of this verse, that Baha'is try to display an illiterate Bāb and Bahā'u'llāh who had only attained knowledge through divine inspirations, whilst all evidence shows the contrary.

⁵⁴⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 149.

⁵⁴⁶ Concise Oxford English Dictionary

⁵⁴⁷ Quran 29:48.

c- `Abdu'l-Bahā's Education

`Abdu'l-Bahā himself had received schooling in Tehran and had then been educated at home by his father and family members. We will not delve into this matter. We will only present two sources that clearly show an alternative source for many of his political views and superhuman knowledge:

Today I was reading the events in Italy and Turkey. Another war has started and the blood of wretched people is spilled for the lowliest causes.⁵⁴⁸

I read in the newspaper that even in Italy people are protesting and shouting.⁵⁴⁹

As it has been made obvious, the source of the knowledge of these figures is rooted in many places:

- 1- Education they received from school and their teachers (publicly and privately).
- 2- What they were taught by family members.
- 3- Socializing with scholars, philosophers, and mystics and Sufis⁵⁵⁰.
- 4- Reading the Quran, Islamic books, philosophical works, history⁵⁵¹ books, newspapers etc.
- 5- Reading books of literature and poetry.

Out of these five sources, we have already provided documents for four of them. The Baha'is have kindly provided us with enough ⁵⁴⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 87.

⁵⁴⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 205.

⁵⁵⁰ This can also be seen in what is narrated from his days in Kurdistan.

⁵⁵¹ The latter can be found from incorrect verbatim quotes which we previously showed that he had claimed were divine revelations. See Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 144 (footnote).

documents regarding the fifth source. In a Farsi book titled *Source of Poems in Baha'i Works*⁵⁵² Dr Vahid Rafati—former director of the Research Department of the Baha'i World Center—has provided many documents in three volumes and about a thousand pages on this topic. This is what he says in the introduction of the third volume:

In the holy Baha'i works there are numerous quotes from the verses of the previous Holy Books, hadiths, sayings of the Prophets and Imams, poems from Turk, Arab, and Persian poets, and Persian and Arabic proverbs. The reality is that for the first time in the history of Divine Religions, not only the sayings of the Prophets, but the desirable thoughts and exalted emotions and expressive opinions and beliefs of prominent Arab and Persian litterateurs and mystics and even slangy mottos peculiar to the common folk have been given the honor of becoming a part of the Words of God in this Godly cycle and become widely manifest in the works of the Interpreter ('Abdu'l-Bahā) of this great manifestation.⁵⁵³

With all the errors and contradictions that we mentioned, which conclusion must we reach: that the poems and sayings of all the different groups of people that exist in the Baha'i corpus have been given the honor of becoming a part of the words of God; or the founders of this religion copied these words and presented them as words from God? Should we believe that this act is something performed for the first time in the history of Divine Religions or maybe divine religions are mostly devoid of quotations of this form? Dr. Rafati continues:

Whatever has been narrated from the works of the former people—whether concepts or exact quotes—in the Baha'i ⁵⁵² Vahid Rafati, Ma'ākhiz ash'ār dar āthār Bahā'ī (Canada: Persian Institute for Baha'i Studies, 1990, 1995, and 2000).

⁵⁵³ Vahid Rafati, Ma'ākhiz ash'ār dar āthār Bahā'ī, p. 3.

scripture, has made the [scripture] impressive and elegant and has phenomenally extended the meanings and concepts inscribed in the Baha'i scripture.⁵⁵⁴

If this is not a confession to the fact that the claimed elegance and the concepts found in Baha'i works have virtually been taken from other non-divine and divine sources, then what is it?

Dr Rafati continues:

Poetry can literarily decorate the words, make them more attractive and cause rapture, make the tone more appealing, creates a charming rhythm, and creates a sweeter echo in the perception of the soul.⁵⁵⁵

This is another confession that the claimed elegance and rhythm in Baha'i scripture is due to the borrowed poetry and literature therein. Rafati further admits that the poetry quoted in Baha'i literature—just like the verses of the Quran and hadith that we showed—have in many instances been quoted incorrectly. In some instances, the quoted verses have been reported in not one, but multiple incorrect forms!⁵⁵⁶

Not only these, but apparently these figures were engrossed in obtaining knowledge from all worldly means possible. This is how one Baha'i author puts it:

There are many stories in the Bahá'í community about the supernatural access to information that Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and Shoghi Effendi had. My point here is not to dispute these stories; merely to say these superhuman mechanisms do not seem to have been working at every instant. If they ⁵⁵⁴ Vahid Rafati, Ma 'ākhiz ash`ār dar āthār Bahā'ī, p. 3.

⁵⁵⁵ Vahid Rafati, Ma 'ākhiz ash`ār dar āthār Bahā'ī, p. 4.

⁵⁵⁶ Vahid Rafati, Ma 'ākhiz ash`ār dar āthār Bahā'ī, pp. 5–6.

had, Bahā'u'llāh would not have read newspapers, as He suggests He may have done; 'Abdu'l-Bahā and Shoghi Effendi would not have constantly written the friends asking for news; they would not have pumped visiting pilgrims for their knowledge and evaluation of places, peoples, cultures, and individuals; and Shoghi Effendi would not have had to do massive, monumental research in order to edit The Dawn-breakers or write God Passes By.⁵⁵⁷

He makes another point which further confirms that the knowledge possessed by these figures was not divine:

Further, when one examines the historical and cultural information contained in Bahā'u'llāh's writings one notes that the knowledge to which He customarily refers is information that would have been available to Him via ordinary nineteenth-century means. Bahā'u'llāh never reveals a commentary on Confucian ethics or Buddhist cosmology, neither of which would have been readily available in nineteenth-century Persian or Arabic. He does not discuss Olmec hymns or Indo-European myths, none of which are available to even twentieth-century scholars, but which must have existed and which must have contained profound statements worthy of discussion, commentary, and praise by a Manifestation of God. Bahā'u'llāh revealed in pure Persian — much to the astonishment of the Zoroastrians — but never revealed in ancient Avestan, Iran's ancestral tongue.⁵⁵⁸

⁵⁵⁷ Robert Stockman, Revelation, Interpretation, and Elucidation in the Baha'i Writings in Scripture and Revelation, ed. Moojan Momen (Oxford: George Ronald, 1997): http://bahai-library.com/stockman_revelation_interpretation_elucidation (retrieved 2/12/2014).

⁵⁵⁸ Robert Stockman, Revelation, Interpretation, and Elucidation in the Baha'i Writings in Scripture and Revelation, ed. Moojan Momen (Oxford: George Ronald, 1997): http://bahai-library.com/stockman_revelation_interpretation_elucidation (retrieved 2/12/2014).

If these figures had divine knowledge then why were all their talks and speeches based on sciences known in those days and information available to them? Amazingly, they didn't even bother to double check these sciences with the divine tablets that they claimed they had and as we showed, they committed multiple mistakes in their scientific claims and citations of Holy scripture.

Pay attention to another quote from Adib Taherzadeh:

In Persia in the nineteenth century most people were illiterate, under the domination of the clergy whom they blindly obeyed. There were two educated classes, divines and government officials, plus a small number of others. Only the religious leaders and divines, however, could be called learned. They used to spend decades of their lives applying themselves to theology, Islamic law, jurisprudence, philosophy, medicine, astronomy and, above all, the Arabic language and its literature.⁵⁵⁹

Do these sciences ring a bell: theology, Islamic law, jurisprudence, philosophy, medicine, astronomy, and Arabic literature? These are mostly the same sciences that we showed Bahā'u'llāh and 'Abdu'l-Bahā had made errors in. Why did they only speak about these sciences? Was it because the Holy Spirit had taught them these sciences and these sciences were revealed to them; or in contrary to their claim of not being schooled and not learning the sciences of those times, they had been schooled and tutored on the exact same customary sciences of Iran in the nineteenth century?

It will not be far-fetched if we claim that Bahā'u'llāh was referring to his own self and his own methods when he uttered these words:

⁵⁵⁹ Adib Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahā'u'llāh, vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

Never trust narrations and news from anybody for it has been observed that a soul⁵⁶⁰ that associated others with God and drank the blood of His loved ones—in the few years that we saw him—listened to all sciences and methods and then wrote all those down and presented them to the people and claimed to have virtues.⁵⁶¹

And a final confession from Bahā'u'llāh as to where he obtained his divine knowledge from:

There is many an utterance of the mystic seers and doctors of former times which I have not mentioned here, since I dislike the copious citation from sayings of the past; for quotation from the words of others proveth acquired learning, not the divine bestowal. Even so much as We have quoted here is out of deference to the wont of men and after the manner of the friends. Further, such matters are beyond the scope of this epistle. Our unwillingness to recount their sayings is not from pride, rather is it a manifestation of wisdom and a demonstration of grace.⁵⁶²

Bahā'u'llāh confesses that quotation from the words of others proves acquired learning not divine bestowal. Ponder on the following:

- Why would Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā cite hundreds of lines of poetry in their writings without acknowledging the original composers?⁵⁶³
- Why would Bahā'u'llāh quote verbatim⁵⁶⁴ many passages about philosophers from Muslim historians in the Tablet of ⁵⁶⁰ He is probably referring to Mīrzā Yaḥyā.

⁵⁶¹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 128 B.), vol. 1, p. 42.

⁵⁶² Bahā'u'llāh, The Seven Valleys And the Four Valleys, p. 26.

⁵⁶³ See Vahid Rafati's Ma'ākhiz ash'ār dar āthār Bahā'ī.

Wisdom whilst claiming the tablet is a divine revelation from God?⁵⁶⁵

- Why would Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā refer countless times to the sayings of the learned men,⁵⁶⁶ scientists,⁵⁶⁷ and what has been written in the books?⁵⁶⁸
- Why would Bahā'u'llāh refer to books to gain knowledge.⁵⁶⁹

8- Reason Judges That One Must Practice What He Preaches

If religion must be in conformance with reason, then one would expect that the leaders of a religion too act in accordance to reason and its judgements. One of the most obvious judgments of reason is that one must practice what he preaches. This act has also been emphasized on in the Holy Books sent by God. For instance:

⁵⁶⁴ “In many of the passages that follow concerning the Greek philosophers, Bahā'u'llāh quotes verbatim from the works of such Muslim historians as Abu'l-Faḥ-i-Shāhristānā (1076–1153 A.D.) and Imādu'd-Dān Abu'l-Fidā (1273–1331 A.D.),” Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 144 (footnote).

⁵⁶⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 137.

⁵⁶⁶ For instance, “The learned men, that have fixed at several thousand years the life of this earth . . .” Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 163.

⁵⁶⁷ For instance, “For instance copper can transmute into Gold but earth/soil (turab) does not have this possibility in actualness (bil-fi'l). Since the scientists have already mentioned these subjects this servant did not like to mention it comprehensively,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwārī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 44.

⁵⁶⁸ For instance, “Mention hath been made in certain books of a deluge which caused all that existed on earth,” Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 174.

⁵⁶⁹ For instance, “This oppressed one in his childhood (tufūliyyat) saw the war of the tribe of Qurayza in a book that belonged to (was authored by) Mullā Bāqir Majlisī, and has been sad and sorrowful ever-since,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwārī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 136; “We purposed to read some of his works. Although We never felt disposed to peruse other peoples' writings, yet as some had questioned Us concerning him, We felt it necessary to refer to his books, in order that We might answer Our questioners with knowledge and understanding. His works, in the Arabic tongue, were, however, not available . . . We sent for the book, and kept it with Us a few days. It was probably referred to twice,” Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, pp. 184–186.

O You who believe! Why do you utter what you do not do? It is greatly detested by God to utter what you do not do.⁵⁷⁰

Do you order the people to do good but forget about yourselves whilst you read the Book! Do you not use your reason!⁵⁷¹

You, then, who teach others, do you not teach yourself? You who preach against stealing, do you steal? You who say that people should not commit adultery, do you commit adultery?⁵⁷²

There are many instances in the Baha'i scripture that show that Baha'i leaders have preached what they have not practiced. Apart from the instances that we have mentioned throughout the book and are related to the twelve principles, we will mention a few other samples here:

a- Prohibition of Kissing Hands

Bahā'u'llāh writes in the Aqdas:

The kissing of hands hath been forbidden in the Book. This practice is prohibited by God, the Lord of glory and command.

This law has been completely ignored by Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā and they freely allowed anyone who wanted to kiss their hands. Here are a few examples:

"The inhabitants of the quarter in which Bahā'u'llāh had been living, and the neighbors who had gathered to bid Him farewell, came one after the other," writes an eye-witness,

⁵⁷⁰ Quran 61:2-3

⁵⁷¹ Quran 2:44.

⁵⁷² Romans 2:21-22 (New International Version).

“with the utmost sadness and regret to kiss His hands and the hem of His robe, expressing meanwhile their sorrow at His departure . . .”⁵⁷³

Until it was time to leave and he kissed (‘Abdu’l-Bahā’s) blessed hand.⁵⁷⁴

With great sincerity one would kiss (‘Abdu’l-Bahā’s) blessed hand and another would hold his skirt.⁵⁷⁵

There is a video from ‘Abdu’l-Bahā’s journey in America that clearly shows women kissing his hand:

Figure 6: Portions of a movie in which women kiss ‘Abdu’l-Bahā’s hands in America.

⁵⁷³ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 181.

⁵⁷⁴ Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār, vol. 2, p. 31.

⁵⁷⁵ Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār, vol. 2, p. 340.

The hand kissing in America attracted so much attention that the title of an article in the newspaper, The Baltimore Sun, November 12 1912 was "Women kiss his hand". This is how it was described:

With condescension, he greeted his followers as they were presented by the interpreter, Dr. Ameer U. Farewed, a Persian and a graduate in medicine of Johns Hopkins University. "Oh, I am so glad to see you," was uttered in tones of reverence by the women as they bowed before him and kissed his wrinkled hand.⁵⁷⁶

Figure 7: Portion of a newspaper that shows women used to kiss 'Abdu'l-Bahā's hands in America.

Bahā'is try to justify these acts by claiming a specific kind of kissing was meant, or the kissing that is equal to submission has been prohibited. This whilst Bahā'u'llāh's words elsewhere show that any kind of kissing the hand is prohibited. For instance he says:

God is my witness! Had it not been in conflict with that which the Tablets of God have decreed, I would have gladly kissed

⁵⁷⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/women-kiss-his-hand> (retrieved 20/1/2014)

the hands of whosoever attempted to shed my blood in the path of the Well-Beloved.⁵⁷⁷

b- Where to Bury the Dead

The Baha'i law for Burial states:

It is forbidden you to transport the body of the deceased a greater distance than one hour's journey from the city . . . The spirit of Bahā'u'llāh's law is for the deceased to be buried near where he or she dies.⁵⁷⁸

This is how the Burial was performed for the Bāb on the orders of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā:

As observed in a previous chapter the mangled bodies of the Bāb and His fellow-martyr, Mīrzā Muḥammad-`Alī, were removed, in the middle of the second night following their execution, through the pious intervention of Ḥājī Sulaymān Khān, from the edge of the moat where they had been cast to a silk factory owned by one of the believers of Milān, and were laid the next day in a wooden casket, and thence carried to a place of safety. Subsequently, according to Bahā'u'llāh's instructions, they were transported to Ṭīhrān and placed in the shrine of Imām-Zādiḥ Ḥasan. They were later removed to the residence of Ḥājī Sulaymān Khān himself in the Sar-Chashmih quarter of the city, and from his house were taken to the shrine of Imām-Zādiḥ Ma`ṣūm, where they remained concealed until the year 274 1284 A.H. (1867–1868), when a Tablet, revealed by Bahā'u'llāh in Adrianople, directed Mullā `Alī-Akbar-i-Shāhmīrzādī and Jamāl-i-Burūjirdī to transfer ⁵⁷⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 102.

⁵⁷⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 230.

them without delay to some other spot . . . Ḥājī Shāh Muḥammad buried the casket beneath the floor of the inner sanctuary of the shrine of Imām-Zādiḥ Zayd, where it lay undetected until Mīrzā Asadu'llāh-i-Iṣfahānī was informed of its exact location through a chart forwarded to him by Bahā'u'llāh. Instructed by Bahā'u'llāh to conceal it elsewhere, he first removed the remains to his own house in Ṭihrān, after which they were deposited in several other localities such as the house of Ḥusayn-'Alīy-i-Iṣfahānī and that of Muḥammad-Karīm-i-'Aṭṭār, where they remained hidden until the year 1316 (1899) A.H., when, in pursuance of directions issued by 'Abdu'l-Bahā, this same Mīrzā Asadu'llāh, together with a number of other believers, transported them by way of Iṣfahān, Kirmanshāh, Baghdād and Damascus, to Beirut and thence by sea to 'Akkā, arriving at their destination on the 19th of the month of Ramadān 1316 A.H. (January 31, 1899), fifty lunar years after the Bāb's execution in Tabriz.⁵⁷⁹

This one hour limit, changes to about 50 years and thousands of kilometers when applied to the Bāb.

c- Noah and the Flood: Symbolical or Reality

Shoghi tells his followers to believe in a symbolical flood and Ark in the time of Noah:

The statement in 'Seven Days of Creation' certainly cannot be considered authoritative or correct. The Ark and the Flood we believe are symbolical.⁵⁸⁰

This is while Bahā'u'llāh clearly refers to the flood as a cause for the destruction of many historical records:

⁵⁷⁹ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, pp. 273–274

⁵⁸⁰ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XLI, no. 1716.

Manifestations . . . were dispatched in the first centuries and invited the people to the truth. But because of the disturbances and changes in the world some of their names and sayings have been lost. In the books, the flood has been mentioned and in that event everything that was on earth was drowned including history records and other things. Furthermore, there have been many revolutions which have annihilated (the records) of some events . . . ⁵⁸¹

Here is the official distorted Baha'i translation that when one reads does not think he is referring to the flood:

Manifestations . . . have been sent down from time immemorial, and been commissioned to summon mankind to the one true God. That the names of some of them are forgotten and the records of their lives lost is to be attributed to the disturbances and changes that have overtaken the world. Mention hath been made in certain books of a deluge which caused all that existed on earth, historical records as well as other things, to be destroyed. Moreover, many cataclysms have occurred which have effaced the traces of many events. ⁵⁸²

⁵⁸¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Muntakhabātī az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, pp. 115–116.

⁵⁸² Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 174.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

In order to analyze this principle logically and rationally, we first must determine what Baha'is mean by reason, and science?

The Meaning of Science

Abdu'l-Bahā says:

If religious beliefs contradict reason and science, then of course [they are] ignorance.⁵⁸³

Depending on the situation, Baha'i's change the meaning of science. In some places it means modern empirical science, while in others, it is used to refer to the true, divine sciences. If the Baha'i creed is being preached in a university environment, science is presented as that which has been empirically determined by modern research, observations, and experiments and it is claimed that the Baha'i creed holds a special value and importance for the sciences that universities are acquiring, and if a religion is at odds with these sciences, it is not a valid religion. Let us take a look at two examples:

Science, is the greatest virtue of the human world. Science, is eternal dignity. Science, is everlasting life . . . all of the people are dead and scholars are alive . . . thus I have utmost delight that I am present in this university . . . for science is light and ignorance is darkness.⁵⁸⁴

⁵⁸³ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 92.

The highest virtue of the human world is science for it is the discovery of the truth of things. I have utmost delight today that we see ourselves in this center of knowledge, in this college whose fame has reached the horizons. For the best of the groups that gather in the world are the group of the scholars and the best of the centers in the human world are the centers of science and technology.⁵⁸⁵

When critics criticize the necessity of the conformity of religion with human science by pointing out the fact that science is always in a state of change, it is claimed that what is meant by science is the true, divine science.⁵⁸⁶

This problem is much bigger in the sphere of the social sciences and humanities. The scientists of these sciences have rarely reached a consensus on any matter. In this domain, different movements and schools exists that are completely opposed to one another. Now the question is which one of these movements is the Baha'i faith in accordance with?

Is the Baha'i creed in accordance with whatever mankind contemplates in this era? Is whatever that occurs to the mind of 21st century man in accordance to the Baha'i creed?

When these criticisms are made, Baha'i's turn back from their claims that their religion is up to date. They say that if at a time there is ⁵⁸⁴ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 83–84.

⁵⁸⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 81.

⁵⁸⁶ “What is meant by knowledge, is Divine Knowledge, and what is meant by reason is the perfect Divine Reason that religion must be in accord to,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 91 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā).

disagreement between science and religion, in that matter religion is definitely correct and the inconsistency is due to our error.⁵⁸⁷

Furthermore, in universities and colleges, Baha'is never refer to the fact that they believe all people are ignorant but Baha'is and no non-Baha'i is to be regarded as knowledgeable.⁵⁸⁸

The Meaning of Reason

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

Unquestionably there must be agreement between true religion and science. If a question be found contrary to reason faith and belief in it are impossible, and there is no outcome but wavering and vacillation.⁵⁸⁹

He also iterates that what is meant by reason is the complete Divine Reason:

What is meant by knowledge, is Divine Knowledge, and what is meant by reason is the perfect Divine Reason that religion must be in accord to.⁵⁹⁰

One would wonder, what is the use of the perfect Divine Reason when humankind does not possess it and what humans possess—according to `Abdu'l-Bahā—are apparently some kind of inferior reasons that are susceptible to error? `Abdu'l-Bahā too asks this question:

⁵⁸⁷ “One of the fundamental teachings of Bahā'u'llāh is that true science and true religion must always be in harmony. Truth is one, and whenever conflict appears it is due, not to truth, but to error,” J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 197.

⁵⁸⁸ We mentioned some relevant quotes at the beginning of the Second Perspective in chapters 1 and 4.

⁵⁸⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 181.

⁵⁹⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 91(citing `Abdu'l-Bahā).

Every religion which is not in accordance with established science is superstition. Religion must be reasonable. If it does not square with reason, it is superstition and without foundation. It is like a mirage, which deceives man by leading him to think it is a body of water. God has endowed man with reason that he may perceive what is true. If we insist that such and such a subject is not to be reasoned out and tested according to the established logical modes of the intellect, what is the use of the reason which God has given man?⁵⁹¹

The contradiction in these sentences is clear: In one place it is claimed God has endowed man with reason so he may perceive what is true, but when that same reason that is the tool for perceiving the truth, finds a contradiction in Baha'i beliefs, then reason is no longer a tool in the hands of men but a Divine apparatus that men lack:

If religious belief and doctrine is at variance with reason, it proceeds from the limited mind of man and not from God.⁵⁹²

It can be summarized that:

Baha'is claim that Baha'ism is a unique faith and is consistent with the modern age, and in accordance with science and reason. When it is asked how the Baha'i creed can be in conformity to human sciences while these sciences are constantly changing and different scientific theories invalidate each other as time passes by, they respond that what they mean by this principle is the conformity of religion with Divine Sciences. When scientific contradictions in their religion are pointed to, the same answer is given and it is claimed that science will soon catch up with our teachings. When unreasonable texts and orders are pointed to in the Baha'i scripture, the response given is that these orders are in conformity with Divine Reason not the limited human reason. So then what is all this proselytizing and evangelization for? What religion is there that does not claim to be in accordance to Divine Science and Reason? If science and reason are the criterion for finding the truth, then what use is this criterion when man lacks it and its true form is only in the hands of God?

⁵⁹¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 65.

⁵⁹² `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 231.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”⁵⁹³

⁵⁹³Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is the Principle "Religion Must Be in Conformity with Science and Reason" New?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: This principle is a new vista proclaimed by Bahā'u'llāh.⁵⁹⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā: The first Shia Muslim Imam, Imam `Alī, has said that religion must be in accord with science.⁵⁹⁵

2. If Religion Contradicts Reason Which One Is Incorrect?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: If religion contradicts science and reason, that religion is an illusion.⁵⁹⁶

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: If religion contradicts science and reason, the human mind is to be blamed.⁵⁹⁷

⁵⁹⁴ "Furthermore, He proclaims that religion must be in harmony with science and reason. If it does not conform to science and reconcile with reason, it is superstition. Down to the present day it has been customary for man to accept a religious teaching, even though it was not in accord with human reason and judgment. The harmony of religious belief with reason is a new vista which Bahā'u'llāh has opened for the soul of man," `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

⁵⁹⁵ "`Alī, the son-in-law of Muḥammad, said: 'That which is in conformity with science is also in conformity with religion.' Whatever the intelligence of man cannot understand, religion ought not to accept. Religion and science walk hand in hand, and any religion contrary to science is not the truth," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, p. 131.

⁵⁹⁶ "If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁵⁹⁷ "Sometimes, a weak intellect cannot perceive [a concept]. In such a case, intellect has a shortcoming by being imperfect, not religion," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.93 (citing `Abd al-Bahā); "One of the fundamental teachings of Bahā'u'llāh is that true science and true religion must always be in harmony. Truth is one, and whenever conflict appears it is due, not to truth, but to error," J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p.197.

3. Is Science Good or Bad?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: The difference between man and animal is science and reason.⁵⁹⁸ “The highest virtue of the human world is science for it is the discovery of the truth of things.”⁵⁹⁹

The Bāb: Teaching anything but my books is forbidden.⁶⁰⁰ All non-Bābī books must be burned.⁶⁰¹

4. Is Bābism a True Religion: Books and Teaching

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions.”⁶⁰²

The Bāb: Do not teach but my books,⁶⁰³ do not argue but by my words,⁶⁰⁴ do not own but my writings.⁶⁰⁵

⁵⁹⁸ “[That which causes] distinction between humans and animals is reason and science. If religious beliefs contradict reason and science, then of course [they are] ignorance,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 92.

⁵⁹⁹ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 81.

⁶⁰⁰ ‘Alī Muḥammad Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 4, chap. 10.

⁶⁰¹ “The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A’lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb’s religion] and verified it,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266; “The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups. Now however, through the strengthening grace and potency of the Word of God these four barriers have been demolished, these clear injunctions have been obliterated from the Tablet and brutal dispositions have been transmuted into spiritual attributes.” Bahā’u’llāh, Tablets of Bahā’u’llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

⁶⁰² ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁶⁰³ “Teaching a book other than the book of Bayān is not allowed unless it has in it what is related to speculative theology (kalām). [Teaching] those [sciences] which have been invented such as logic (manṭiq), principles of jurisprudence (uṣūl), and other [sciences], are not permitted for those who have faith,” The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 4, chap. 10.

⁶⁰⁴ “Do not argue but by the verses [of the Bayān] for whoever does not argue using them has no knowledge, and do not mention any miracle [but this book]!” The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chapter 8.

5. Is Bābism a True Religion: Destroy Anyone and Everything Non-Bābī

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions.”⁶⁰⁶

The Bāb: Destroy anyone and anything non-Bābī.⁶⁰⁷

⁶⁰⁵ “Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this Order (meaning the Bab’s creed),” The Bāb, Farsi bayān, unit 6, chap. 6.

⁶⁰⁶ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁶⁰⁷ “The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A’lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb’s religion] and verified it,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266; “The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups. Now however, through the strengthening grace and potency of the Word of God these four barriers have been demolished, these clear injunctions have been obliterated from the Tablet and brutal dispositions have been transmuted into spiritual attributes.” Bahā’u’llāh, Tablets of Bahā’u’llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91; “You must destroy everything [non-Bābī?] that you have written and you must argue using the Bayān,” The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chap. 6. “Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this Order (meaning the Bab’s creed),” The Bāb, Farsi bayān, unit 6, chap. 6; “The fifth chapter of the fifth unit which is about the decree of taking the property of those who do not believe in [the religion] of Bayan and giving it back if they become believers in this religion, except in the lands where taking [property] is not possible,” The Bāb, Farsi Bayan, unit 5, chap. 5; “Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this Order (meaning the Bab’s creed),” The Bāb, Farsi bayān, unit 6, chap. 6; “The sixteenth chapter of the seventh unit which is about [the decree] that all rulers who rise who are [followers] of the religion of the Bayan, leave no-one in their land who is not a follower of this religion. This is compulsory upon all the people too,” The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 7, chap. 16; “He who acquires a position of ruling is a manifestation of God’s wrath and if possible for him, must not leave [alive] on earth anyone but the Bābīs!” The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 4, chap. al-Bahā; “Make everyone accept the [religion of] Bayān and do not accept from them jewels that would amount to the whole earth as payment so that they are excused from becoming Bābīs,” The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 5, chap. al-Lād.

6. Is Bābism a True Religion: Food and Medicine

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions.”⁶⁰⁸

The Bāb: Do not buy, sell, or use medicine. Not drinking donkey milk will make you pious.⁶⁰⁹

7. Is Bābism a True Religion: Guidelines for Going on Journeys

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions.”⁶¹⁰

The Bāb: “Do not go on journeys but [1] for the sake of God and [2] if you are going to (visit) He Whom God Shall Make manifest or [3] (visiting) those who have faith in him. And He orders you to take the leaves of trees and eat them [!] and walk above [!] the earth with your legs!”⁶¹¹ ⁶⁰⁸ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁶⁰⁹ “You must not possess, buy, sell, or use medicine, intoxicants, and higher than those!” The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 8; “Do not drink donkey milk! And do not load it and other animals with what they cannot bear. This is what God has made incumbent upon you so that you may become pious!” The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 10, chap. 15.

⁶¹⁰ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁶¹¹ The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, unit 6, chap. al-Badī.

8. Is Bābism a True Religion: Some Miscellaneous Laws

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “If religious matters are against science and reason, they are illusions.”⁶¹²

The Bāb: Renew your books every 202 years by throwing them in water or giving them to someone else.⁶¹³ If you truly believe in God you must not ride cows or make them carry loads.⁶¹⁴ “Do not wear clothes that will frighten children!”⁶¹⁵ “Do not buy or sell the four elements (earth, air, fire, and water)!”⁶¹⁶

9. Does the Quran Say Everything Is Living?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: It says in the Qur’an that all things are living.⁶¹⁷

Qur’an: “We made from water everything living.”⁶¹⁸

⁶¹² ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁶¹³ “In every dispensation, God loves that everything becomes renewed. It is because of this that he has ordered that once in every 202 years every person renew what books he possesses by either putting them in fresh water or bestowing them to someone else!” The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 7, chap. 1;

⁶¹⁴ “Do not ride cows and do not put loads on them if you (truly) believe in God and His signs,” The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 10, chap. 15.

⁶¹⁵ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 7, chap. 6.

⁶¹⁶ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 11.

⁶¹⁷ “As to the existence of spirit in the mineral: it is indubitable that minerals are endowed with a spirit and life according to the requirements of that stage. This unknown secret, too, hath become known unto the materialists⁶¹⁷ who now maintain that all beings are endowed with life, even as He saith in the Qur’ān, ‘All things are living,’” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel, p. 9.

⁶¹⁸ Quran, 21:30

10. The Criterion for Being Knowledgeable and Reasonable in the Baha'i Creed?

Esslemont (Baha'i author): "The religious world owes a debt of gratitude to the men of science who helped to tear such worn-out creeds and dogmas to tatters and allowed the truth to step forth free."⁶¹⁹

Bahā'u'llāh: If you don't become a Baha'i you are ignorant even if you possess all the science in the world.⁶²⁰ If you do not become a Baha'i you have no reason.⁶²¹

11. Was the Tablet of Wisdom Revealed in Persian?

Shoghi: The tablet of wisdom was revealed in Persian.⁶²²

The tablet was revealed by Bahā'u'llāh in Arabic!

⁶¹⁹ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 200.

⁶²⁰ "If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word 'yes' (meaning does not become a Baha'i), the Lord will not pay attention to him and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111; "From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha'is)," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', pp. 138–139.

⁶²¹ "The general criterion is what we mentioned and any soul who has success in it, meaning recognizes and realizes the Sunrise of Manifestation (meaning himself), will be mentioned in the Divine Book as someone who possesses reason or else he will be (mentioned as) ignorant even if he himself thinks that his reason equals that of the whole world," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 160; "No one has denied or will deny what has been revealed by the Ancient Pen (meaning himself) in this Most Great Manifestation regarding society, unity, manners, rites, and being occupied with what has benefits for the people, except that he completely lacks reason," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 168.

⁶²² When referring to a problematic matter in the English translation of this tablet he says: "We must not take this statement too literally; "contemporary" may have been meant in Persian as something far more elastic than the English word. Likewise, the whole translation probably needs revising (15 February 1947)." Article titled Socrates compiled by the Research Department of the Universal House of Justice: http://bahai-library.com/compilation_socrates_bwc (retrieved 17/2/2014).

12. Is Shoghi Infallible?

Shoghi: I am only infallible in matters regarding the faith and interpreting it.⁶²³

Shoghi makes errors when speaking about Bahā'u'llāh's Tablet of Wisdom and claims it was revealed in Persian while it was revealed in Arabic.⁶²⁴

13. Can Shoghi Fit the Role of Being the Authorized Interpreter of Baha'i Texts?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Shoghi is the authoritative interpreter of the words of God.⁶²⁵

Shoghi is unsure in interpreting the words of Bahā'u'llāh and uses the words may and probably.⁶²⁶ He doesn't even consider his own translations as final.⁶²⁷

⁶²³ "The infallibility of the Guardian is confined to matters which are related strictly to the Cause and interpretations of the Teachings; he is not an infallible authority on other subjects, such as economics, science, etc," Shoghi Effendi, Directives from the Guardian, p. 33–34.

⁶²⁴ See previous footnotes.

⁶²⁵ "O my loving friends! After the passing away of this wronged one, it is incumbent upon the Aghsān (Branches), the Afnān (Twigs) of the Sacred Lote-Tree, the Hands (pillars) of the Cause of God and the loved ones of the Abhā Beauty to turn unto Shoghi Effendi—the youthful branch branched from the two hallowed and sacred Lote-Trees and the fruit grown from the union of the two offshoots of the Tree of Holiness,—as he is the sign of God, the chosen branch, the Guardian of the Cause of God, he unto whom all the Aghsān, the Afnān, the Hands of the Cause of God and His loved ones must turn. He is the Interpreter of the Word of God and after him will succeed the first-born of his lineal descendents," `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

⁶²⁶ "We must not take this statement too literally; "contemporary" may have been meant in Persian as something far more elastic than the English word. Likewise, the whole translation probably needs revising (15 February 1947)," Article titled Socrates compiled by the Research Department of the Universal House of Justice: http://bahai-library.com/compilation_socrates_bwc (retrieved 17/2/2014).

⁶²⁷ "Concerning the different translations of the Words. It is surely the original text that should never be changed. The translations will continue to vary as more and better translations are made. Shoghi Effendi does not consider even his own translations as final, how much more translations made in the early days of the Cause in the West when no competent translators existed (From a

14. Are the Bāb's Words Divine Inspirations?

Writes the Qayyūm al-Asmā' by copying verses of the Quran, the end result being mostly vague incomprehensible sentences, then claims they are divine revelations.⁶²⁸

15. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Referring to Books

Bahā'u'llāh: Whenever I want to quote a book it is revealed in a tablet before my face.⁶²⁹ "You know that we did not read the books of the people and were unaware of the sciences that they possessed."⁶³⁰

Bahā'u'llāh: I searched in vain for a book to see what the author had written in it until I finally found it!⁶³¹ I used to read books when I was a child.⁶³² letter on behalf of the Guardian to John Hyde Dunn, 14 August 1930)," http://bahai-library.com/compilation_provisional_translations (retrieved 18/2/2014).

⁶²⁸ See the section on The Bab's Religious Knowledge in this chapter.

⁶²⁹ "Whenever We desire to quote the sayings of the learned and of the wise, presently there will appear before the face of thy Lord in the form of a tablet all that which hath appeared in the world and is revealed in the Holy Books and Scriptures," Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 149.

⁶³⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'ihī az alwāḥ jamāl aqdas abhā ki ba'd az kitāb Aqdas nāzil shude. (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Lisān Fārsī wa `Arabī), p. 89.

⁶³¹ "As We had frequently heard about him, We purposed to read some of his works. Although We never felt disposed to peruse other peoples' writings, yet as some had questioned Us concerning him, We felt it necessary to refer to his books, in order that We might answer Our questioners with knowledge and understanding. His works, in the Arabic tongue, were, however, not available, . . . We sent for the book, and kept it with Us a few days. It was probably referred to twice," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, pp. 184–186.

⁶³² "This oppressed one in his childhood (tufūliyyat) saw the war of the tribe of Qurayza in a book that belonged to (was authored by) Mullā Bāqir Majlisī, and has been sad and sorrowful ever-since," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 136

16. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Historical Facts

Claims the words in the Tablet of Wisdom are divine revelations from God⁶³³ and quotes verbatim⁶³⁴ therein, wrong historical facts from other history books.⁶³⁵

17. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Citing Verses of the Quran

Bahā'u'llāh: Whenever I want to quote Holy Books and scriptures they are revealed in a tablet before my face.⁶³⁶

Bahā'u'llāh multiple distortions while citing verses of the Quran in the Īqān.⁶³⁷ The Universal House of Justice Says it is no big deal!

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Those who distort two letters from the verses of the Quran are leaders of those who are in hell and their followers are lowly flies.⁶³⁸

⁶³³ "This is an Epistle which the All-Merciful hath sent down from the Kingdom of Utterance," Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 137.

⁶³⁴ "In many of the passages that follow concerning the Greek philosophers, Bahā'u'llāh quotes verbatim from the works of such Muslim historians as Abu'l-Fath-i-Shāhristānī (1076–1153 A.D.) and Imādu'd-Dān Abu'l-Fidā (1273–1331 A.D.)," Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 144 (footnote).

⁶³⁵ "Empedocles, who distinguished himself in philosophy, was a contemporary of David, while Pythagoras lived in the days of Solomon, son of David, and acquired Wisdom from the treasury of prophethood. It is he who claimed to have heard the whispering sound of the heavens and to have attained the station of the angels. In truth thy Lord will clearly set forth all things, if He pleaseth. Verily, He is the Wise, the All-Pervading," Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 145. Empedocles lived between 490–440 BC whilst David lived between 1040–970 BC. There are about 500 years of difference between these dates. Pythagoras lived between 570–495 BC whilst Solomon lived between 970–931 BC. The difference between these two is also about 500 years.

⁶³⁶ "Whenever We desire to quote the sayings of the learned and of the wise, presently there will appear before the face of thy Lord in the form of a tablet all that which hath appeared in the world and is revealed in the Holy Books and Scriptures," Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 149.

⁶³⁷ See section titled Bahā'u'llāh's Religious Knowledge

⁶³⁸ "He had written the blessed verse of the Quran "what are these statues/images that you are worshipping" (mā hādhihī l-tamāthīl al-latī antum `alayhā `ākīfūn) [and had written the last word] as `āfīkūn and the [text] is in the possession of Mīrzā Yaḥyā Qazwīnī. Pay attention that the leader of this group cannot make a distinction between `ākīf and `āfīk and he distorts the evident

18. Bahā'u'llāh and Divine Knowledge: Revisions in the Divine Texts

Bahā'u'llāh revealed a Holy book, found out that it had multiple grammatical mistakes and discovered many errors in citing the verses of the Quran. He then proceeded to revise it, and gave out a second version, and then claimed “the latter is better and more appropriate”!⁶³⁹

19. Bahā'u'llāh and Adhering to the Customs of the Previous People

In matters of sex, Bahā'u'llāh adhered to the customs of Muslims and took three wives. However he forbids this for everyone else.⁶⁴⁰ When citing the Quran, he put aside the custom of the Muslims in carefully citing the exact verses of the Quran and erroneously cites many verses in the book of Īqān.

verse of the Book of God in his own handwriting! This writing has been unwillingly inscribed by his pen so that it becomes evident that he is the chief of the distorters and the leader of those who are in Hell. Some of the followers of that unknown person (meaning Mīrzā Yahyā) —even though they saw this [distortion] with their own eyes—didn't wake up and proved that they were lowly flies that followed any caller and bended with any breeze,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Muntakhabātī az makātīb Ḥadrat ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 430.

⁶³⁹ “A copy of a correct Īqān was given to Jināb-i-‘Alī Akbar, My Glory be upon him. Existing copies should be brought into conformity with this copy, or new transcriptions made from it. The latter is better and more appropriate.” Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitab-i-Iqān, p. 26.

⁶⁴⁰ When the UHJ is asked as to why Bahā'u'llāh had three wives when he himself forbade it, it is claimed: “He was following the Laws of the previous Dispensation and the customs of the people of His own land,” Letter from Universal House of Justice to an individual believer dated 23/10/1995: http://bahai-library.com/uhj_wives_bahauallah (retrieved 1/6/2104).

20. Bahā'u'llāh and Citing Shia Narrations

Bahā'u'llāh forged many narrations and distorted many others to prove that the Bāb was divine.⁶⁴¹ He then labeled the Shia as being unmindful selfish shunners of truth because they did not believe in his forged and distorted narrations.⁶⁴²

21. `Abdu'l-Bahā and Citing Verses of the Quran

`Abdul-Bahā distorted dozens of verses from the Quran.⁶⁴³ He announced those who distort two letters from the verses of the Quran are leaders of those who are in hell and their followers are lowly flies.⁶⁴⁴ Yet he distorted the same verse of the Quran that he is using to bash Mīrzā Yaḥyā because Mīrzā Yaḥyā had misplaced two letters in it!⁶⁴⁵

⁶⁴¹ See section titled Bahā'u'llāh's Religious Knowledge

⁶⁴² “Consider, that even the year in which that Quintessence of Light is to be made manifest hath been specifically recorded in the traditions, yet they still remain unmindful, nor do they for one moment cease to pursue their selfish desires. According to the tradition, Mufaḍḍal asked Ṣādiq saying: “What of the sign of His manifestation, O my master?” He made reply: “In the year sixty, His Cause shall be made manifest, and His Name shall be proclaimed.” How strange! Notwithstanding these explicit and manifest references these people have shunned the Truth,” Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, pp. 253–254.

⁶⁴³ See section titled `Abdu'l-Bahā's Religious Knowledge

⁶⁴⁴ “He had written the blessed verse of the Quran “what are these statues/images that you are worshipping” (mā hādhihī l-tamāthīl al-latī antum `alayhā `ākifūn) [and had written the last word] as `āfikūn and the [text] is in the possession of Mīrzā Yaḥyā Qazwīnī. Pay attention that the leader of this group cannot make a distinction between `ākif and `āfik and he distorts the evident verse of the Book of God in his own handwriting! This writing has been unwillingly inscribed by his pen so that it becomes evident that he is the chief of the distorters and the leader of those who are in Hell. Some of the followers of that unknown person (meaning Mīrzā Yaḥyā) —even though they saw this [distortion] with their own eyes—didn't wake up and proved that they were lowly flies that followed any caller and bended with any breeze,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabāt az makātīb Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 430.

⁶⁴⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā mentions the verse as mā hādhihī l-tamāthīl al-latī antum `alayhā `ākifūn. The underlined word should be lahā! (see previous footnote).

22. The Bāb's Education

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “(1) It was universally admitted by the Shī’is that (2) He had never studied in any school and (3) had not acquired knowledge from any teacher (4) all the people of Shīrāz bear witness to this.”⁶⁴⁶

Four false statements in a single sentence.⁶⁴⁷

23. Is It in Accordance with Reason to Prohibit Someone from Doing Something in the Past?

The Bāb, while about 29 years old, gave orders to his childhood teacher to not hit him until he is five years old!⁶⁴⁸

24. Had Bahā’u’llāh Associated with the Learned and the ‘Ulamā?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “As all the people of Persia know, He had never studied in any school, nor had He associated with the ‘ulamā or the men of learning.”⁶⁴⁹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: My father used to associate with the learned and the ‘Ulamā!⁶⁵⁰

⁶⁴⁶ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 25.

⁶⁴⁷ See the section titled The Bāb's education.

⁶⁴⁸ “Say O Muḥammad, my teacher. Do not hit me before my age finishes five even for a moment for my heart is very very soft. After that discipline me but not more than I can bear. If you want to hit me do not [hit me] more than five times. And do not hit me on my flesh (lahm) unless there is a covering over it. If you exceed [these guidelines] your wife will be illegal for you for nineteen days. If you forget and if you don’t have a companion, then you must give in charity for every beating nineteen mithqāls of gold if you want to be faithful. And do not hit but very very softly,” Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 6, chapter 11.

⁶⁴⁹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 27.

⁶⁵⁰ “When He was only thirteen or fourteen years old He became renowned for His learning. He would converse on any subject and solve any problem presented to Him. In large gatherings He would discuss matters with the ‘Ulamā (leading mullās) and would explain intricate religious questions. All of them used to listen to Him with the greatest interest,” J. E. Esslemont, Bahā’u’llāh and the New Era, p. 48; “In whatever meeting, scientific assembly or theological

25. Is Quoting the Words of Others a Sign of Not Having Divine Knowledge?

Bahā'u'llāh: “I mislike the copious citation from sayings of the past; for quotation from the words of others proveth acquired learning, not the divine bestowal.”⁶⁵¹

Ponder on these questions:

- Why would Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā cite hundreds of lines of poetry in their writings without acknowledging the original composers?⁶⁵²
- Why would Bahā'u'llāh quote verbatim⁶⁵³ many wrong passages about philosophers from Muslim historians in the Tablet of Wisdom whilst claiming the tablet is a divine revelation from God?⁶⁵⁴
- Why would Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā refer countless times to the sayings of the learned men,⁶⁵⁵ scientists,⁶⁵⁶ and what has been written in the books?⁶⁵⁷
- Why would Bahā'u'llāh refer to books to gain knowledge.⁶⁵⁸ discussion He was found, He became the authority of explanation upon intricate and abstruse questions presented,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 220.

⁶⁵¹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Seven Valleys And the Four Valleys, p. 26.

⁶⁵² See Vahid Rafati's Ma'ākhiz ash'ār dar āthār Bahā'ī.

⁶⁵³ “In many of the passages that follow concerning the Greek philosophers, Bahā'u'llāh quotes verbatim from the works of such Muslim historians as Abu'l-Fath-i-Shāhristānā (1076–1153 A.D.) and Imādu'd-Dān Abu'l-Fidā (1273–1331 A.D.),” Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 144 (footnote).

⁶⁵⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 137.

⁶⁵⁵ For instance, “The learned men, that have fixed at several thousand years the life of this earth . . .” Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 163.

⁶⁵⁶ For instance, “For instance copper can transmute into Gold but earth/soil (turab) does not have this possibility in actualness (bil-fi'l). Since the scientists have already mentioned these subjects this servant did not like to mention it comprehensively,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 44.

⁶⁵⁷ For instance, “Mention hath been made in certain books of a deluge which caused all that existed on earth,” Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 174.

26. Bahā'u'llāh's Childhood: Happiness or Sorrow?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “The early part of His life was passed in the greatest happiness.”⁶⁵⁹

Bahā'u'llāh: “This oppressed one in his childhood (ṭufūliyyat) saw the war of the tribe of Qurayza in a book that belonged to (was authored by) Mullā Bāqir Majlisī, and has been sad and sorrowful ever-since.”⁶⁶⁰

27. Kissing the Hand of Ones Murderer

Bahā'u'llāh: Had it not been against God’s law I would have kissed the hand of the one who intends to kill me.⁶⁶¹

Bahā'u'llāh: My followers kiss the hands of those who intend to kill them.⁶⁶²

⁶⁵⁸ For instance, “This oppressed one in his childhood (ṭufūliyyat) saw the war of the tribe of Qurayza in a book that belonged to (was authored by) Mullā Bāqir Majlisī, and has been sad and sorrowful ever-since,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā’idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 136; “We purposed to read some of his works. Although We never felt disposed to peruse other peoples’ writings, yet as some had questioned Us concerning him, We felt it necessary to refer to his books, in order that We might answer Our questioners with knowledge and understanding. His works, in the Arabic tongue, were, however, not available . . . We sent for the book, and kept it with Us a few days. It was probably referred to twice,” Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, pp. 184–186.

⁶⁵⁹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 27.

⁶⁶⁰ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā’idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 136.

⁶⁶¹ “God is my witness! Had it not been in conflict with that which the Tablets of God have decreed, I would have gladly kissed the hands of whosoever attempted to shed my blood in the path of the Well-Beloved,” Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 102.

⁶⁶² “He bareth his breast to meet the darts of the enemy and raiseth his head to greet the sword of destiny; nay rather, he kisseth the hand of his would-be murderer and surrendereth his all,” Bahā'u'llāh, Gems of Divine Mysteries, p. 29.

28. When and Where to Bury the Dead

Bahā'u'llāh: "It is forbidden you to transport the body of the deceased a greater distance than one hour's journey from the city."⁶⁶³

Under Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's orders, this one hour limit changes to fifty years and thousands of kilometers for the Bāb!⁶⁶⁴

29. Does Bahā'u'llāh Intend to Abrogate the Book of Bayān?

⁶⁶³ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 230.

⁶⁶⁴ "As observed in a previous chapter the mangled bodies of the Bāb and His fellow-martyr, Mīrzā Muḥammad-`Alī, were removed, in the middle of the second night following their execution, through the pious intervention of Hājī Sulaymān Khān, from the edge of the moat where they had been cast to a silk factory owned by one of the believers of Milān, and were laid the next day in a wooden casket, and thence carried to a place of safety. Subsequently, according to Bahā'u'llāh's instructions, they were transported to Tīhrān and placed in the shrine of Imām-Zādiḥ Ḥasan. They were later removed to the residence of Hājī Sulaymān Khān himself in the Sar-Chashmih quarter of the city, and from his house were taken to the shrine of Imām-Zādiḥ Ma`šūm, where they remained concealed until the year 274 1284 A.H. (1867–1868), when a Tablet, revealed by Bahā'u'llāh in Adrianople, directed Mullā `Alī-Akbar-i-Shāhmīrzādī and Jamāl-i-Burūjirdī to transfer them without delay to some other spot . . . Hājī Shāh Muḥammad buried the casket beneath the floor of the inner sanctuary of the shrine of Imām-Zādiḥ Zayd, where it lay undetected until Mīrzā Asadu'llāh-i-Iṣfahānī was informed of its exact location through a chart forwarded to him by Bahā'u'llāh. Instructed by Bahā'u'llāh to conceal it elsewhere, he first removed the remains to his own house in Tīhrān, after which they were deposited in several other localities such as the house of Ḥusayn-`Alī-i-Iṣfahānī and that of Muḥammad-Karīm-i-`Aṭṭār, where they remained hidden until the year 1316 (1899) A.H., when, in pursuance of directions issued by `Abdu'l-Bahā, this same Mīrzā Asadu'llāh, together with a number of other believers, transported them by way of Iṣfahān, Kirmanshāh, Baghdād and Damascus, to Beirut and thence by sea to `Akkā, arriving at their destination on the 19th of the month of Ramadān 1316 A.H. (January 31, 1899), fifty lunar years after the Bāb's execution in Tabriz," Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, pp. 273–274.

Bahā'u'llāh: We will re-enforce the Bayān's decrees and prove them. God curse those who say we abrogated it and break their mouths.⁶⁶⁵

Bahā'u'llāh: The book of Bayān has been abrogated.⁶⁶⁶

30. Noah's Flood: Symbolic or Reality?

Shoghi: The flood is symbolic.⁶⁶⁷

Bahā'u'llāh: The flood is a reality and destroyed everything on earth.⁶⁶⁸

⁶⁶⁵ "Say: The polytheists thought that we might want to abrogate what was revealed unto the Point of Bayan (Nuqṭat al-Bayān which means the Bab). Say: By my Merciful Lord, even if we had intended [to do] what they had thought, no one was allowed to object to God who has created everything . . . but God has desired by this manifestation [meaning Bahā'u'llāh himself] to reinforce what has been revealed by the Point of Bayan . . . thus we will reinforce his decrees and will prove his writings [or signs] on earth with power and authority," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 390; "Although everyone knows that by this great manifestation what has been revealed in the Bayān has been proved/made firm, made obvious, and has been fulfilled; the name of God has been elevated; the remnants of God have been distributed to the West and East; and the Farsi Bayān has been endorsed particularly for this manifestation, but they have been constantly writing 'that they (meaning the Baha'is) have abrogated the Bayān' so that they may induce doubts in the hearts and the calf may be worshipped," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, pp. 45-46; "They have attributed to this Station (meaning Bahā'u'llāh)—by whose authority all [divine] Books speak—that he has abrogated the decrees of the Bayān. May the curse of God fall upon the unjust," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 103; "I swear to God that if an individual from the followers of the Bayān mentions the abrogation of that book, God will break the mouth of the speaker and defamer. I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333;

⁶⁶⁶ "The book of Aqdas abrogates all the decrees of the book of Bayān . . . everyone's [religious] source is [now] the book of Aqdas not the book of Bayān. The decrees of the Bayān are [now] abrogated," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 2, p. 106.

⁶⁶⁷ "The statement in 'Seven Days of Creation' certainly cannot be considered authoritative or correct. The Ark and the Flood we believe are symbolical," Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File (New Delhi: Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1983), chap. XLI, no. 1716.

⁶⁶⁸ "Manifestations . . . were dispatched in the first centuries and invited the people to the truth. But because of the disturbances and changes in the world some of their names and sayings have been lost. In the books the flood has been mentioned and in that event everything that was on earth was drowned including history records and other things. Furthermore, there have been many revolutions which have annihilated (the records) of some events . . ." Bahā'u'llāh, Muntakhabātī az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, pp. 115–116.

31. Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā as Scientists

- Nuclear Physics:
 - Coppers transmutes into Gold after 70 years!⁶⁶⁹
 - Atoms are indestructible!⁶⁷⁰
- Physics: Both convex and concave mirrors focus light in a real point that creates great heat!⁶⁷¹
- Geology:
 - The Earth's age (world's age) is several thousand years!⁶⁷²
 - All minerals possess a spirit and life.⁶⁷³
- Biology:
 - Some creatures are created by spontaneous generation!⁶⁷⁴

⁶⁶⁹ "For instance, consider the substance of copper. Were it to be protected in its own mine from becoming solidified, it would, within the space of seventy years, attain to the state of gold," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 157.

⁶⁷⁰ "Scientific philosophy has demonstrated that a simple element ('simple' meaning 'not composed') is indestructible, eternal. The soul, not being a composition of elements, is, in character, as a simple element, and therefore cannot cease to exist," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 90–91.

⁶⁷¹ "Like sunlight that does not have a complete effect on a flat mirror, but when it shines on a concave or convex mirror, all its heat is focused in a single point and the heat of that point will become stronger than fire," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ayyām tis`a, p. 324.

⁶⁷² Bahā'u'llāh claims that this date has been given by the learned men. Since the learned men have not given this date, then these words are his own beliefs: "The learned men, that have fixed at several thousand years the life of this earth [the age of this world], have failed, throughout the long period of their observation, to consider either the number or the age of the other planets," Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 163. The correct translation is the world's age.

⁶⁷³ "As to the existence of spirit in the mineral: it is indubitable that minerals are endowed with a spirit and life according to the requirements of that stage. This unknown secret, too, hath become known unto the materialists who now maintain that all beings are endowed with life," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel, p. 9.

⁶⁷⁴ "Know that the creatures are of many kinds . . . some are created in wombs others [are created] by spontaneous regeneration (khalq al-sā`a) and come into existence by themselves, such as the animals that are created in fruits, and a group are created in eggs. These are the types of creation of [living] things," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 24.

- o There is absolutely no difference and distinction between male and female plants and animals!⁶⁷⁵
- Chemistry: Plants survive on a watery element called carbon and hydrogen that comes from the mouth of animals!⁶⁷⁶
- Astronomy:
 - o The Sun is Stationary, Fixed, and Ever Occupies the Same Space!⁶⁷⁷
 - o All stars have planets and all these planets have countless aliens on them!⁶⁷⁸
 - o All stars have aliens living on them!⁶⁷⁹

⁶⁷⁵ “Plants have male and female and animals too have male and female and there is no distinction. Look at the plant kingdom. Is there any distinction between male plants and female plants? Rather there is complete equality; and in the Animal kingdom too, there is no distinction at all,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 149–150.

⁶⁷⁶ “From the breath of animals a watery element (ʿunsur) spreads that is nowadays called hydrogen and carbon and this gives life to plants,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 459.

⁶⁷⁷ “The animal cannot become aware of the fact that the earth is revolving and the sun stationary. Only processes of reasoning can come to this conclusion. The outward eye sees the sun as revolving. It mistakes the stars and the planets as moving about the earth. But reason decides their orbit, knows that the earth is moving and the other worlds fixed, knows that the sun is the solar center and ever occupies the same place, proves that it is the earth which revolves around it,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 417.

⁶⁷⁸ “Consider, moreover, the manifold divergencies that have resulted from the theories propounded by these men. Know thou that every fixed star hath its own planets, and every planet its own creatures, whose number no man can compute,” Bahā'u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 163; “Regarding the passage on p. 163 of the ‘Gleanings’: The creatures which Bahā'u'llāh states to be found on every planet cannot be considered to be necessarily similar or different from human beings on this earth. Bahā'u'llāh does not specifically state whether such creatures are like or unlike us. He simply refers to the fact that there are creatures on every planet. It remains for science to discover one day the exact nature of these creatures. (From a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an individual believer, February 9, 1937),” Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XLI, no. 1581.

⁶⁷⁹ “All celestial stars have special creatures. When this planet earth that is comparably infinitely small is not empty and in vain, then these great bright shining [heavenly] bodies are a different matter altogether (meaning they definitely possess life). It has been explicitly [mentioned] in the Quran, “And from His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and the animals/beasts (dābbah) He scattered in both of them.” He says in both of them not in it (meaning only earth). It is very clear that in both of them there are creatures that have souls. For dābbah (animal/beast) is used [to refer to] a creature that has a soul and moves,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabāt az makātib Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 480; “He explicitly says in the Quran, “And from His signs is the creation of the heavens and the earth and the animals/beasts (dābbah) He scattered in both of

- Humanitarianism: The more oppressed that you are the better.⁶⁸⁰ Do not protest to oppressors.⁶⁸¹ Self-victimize yourself by not defending yourself!⁶⁸² Baha'is kiss the hand of those who want to kill them!⁶⁸³
- Human rights: Confiscating peoples' property and banishing them based on religious matters are more dear than everything that is in the Skies and earth!⁶⁸⁴ them.” This means that there are [creatures] that have souls in both the sky and Earth. Thus it is clear that all these bright [heavenly] bodies are inhabited and the light of truth shines and beams in all of them. God has not created these infinite bright [heavenly] bodies in vain,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Muntakhabātī az makātīb Haḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā, vol. 6, no. 481; “Regarding (the question about) the species of these creatures and if they are like the creatures on earth, (the answer is) yes. But their difference is like the difference between sea dwelling, land dwelling, air dwelling, and fire dwelling animals and the difference in their nature and the variance in the balance of elements (that create them), those creatures differ in the composite parts that they are created from,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 1, p. 120.

⁶⁸⁰ “The more you are oppressed the more favored it has and it will be,” Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 127; “Know, by the Age of God, that being oppressed is loved [by God] . . . God, the Almighty, has loved being oppressed and will continue to do so,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idī-i āsimānī, vol. 4, pp. 349–350;

⁶⁸¹ “[Our] friends must leave the actions and deeds of the oppressors to God and must not protest in any way,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idī-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 44.

⁶⁸² “As a religious body, Baha'is have, at the express command of Bahā'u'llāh, entirely abandoned the use of armed force in their own interests, even for strictly defensive purposes. In Persia many, many thousands of the Bābīs and Baha'is have suffered cruel deaths because of their faith. In the early days of the Cause the Bābīs on various occasions defended themselves and their families by the sword, with great courage and bravery. Bahā'u'llāh, however, forbade this,” J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp. 169–170.

⁶⁸³ “He bareth his breast to meet the darts of the enemy and raiseth his head to greet the sword of destiny; nay rather, he kisseth the hand of his would-be murderer and surrendereth his all,” Bahā'u'llāh, Gems of Divine Mysteries, p. 29.

⁶⁸⁴ Compare what Bahā'u'llāh says about the book of Bayān: “I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth,” and the orders given therein: “The fifth chapter of the fifth unit which is about the decree of taking the property of those who do not believe in [the religion] of Bayan and giving it back if they become believers in this religion, except in the lands where taking [property] is not possible,” The Bāb, Farsi Bayan, unit 5, chap. 5; “The sixteenth chapter of the seventh unit which is about [the decree] that all rulers who rise who are [followers] of the religion of the Bayan, leave no-one in their land who is not a follower of this religion. This is compulsory upon all the people too,” The Bāb, Farsi Bayan, unit 7, chap. 16;

- Psychology: The communities must not shun the citizens for it has a demoralizing effect and will cause perversion of character;⁶⁸⁵ but we will shun people!⁶⁸⁶
- History: Empedocles was a contemporary of David and Pythagoras lived in the days of Solomon!⁶⁸⁷
- Linguistics:
 - o Bahā'u'llāh commits many grammatical and linguistic mistakes when writing the Ṭiqān!⁶⁸⁸

⁶⁸⁵ “One thing remains to be said: it is that the communities are day and night occupied in making penal laws, and in preparing and organizing instruments and means of punishment. They build prisons, make chains and fetters, arrange places of exile and banishment, and different kinds of hardships and tortures, and think by these means to discipline criminals, whereas, in reality, they are causing destruction of morals and perversion of characters,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 271; “The community, on the contrary, ought day and night to strive and endeavor with the utmost zeal and effort to accomplish the education of men, to cause them day by day to progress and to increase in science and knowledge, to acquire virtues, to gain good morals and to avoid vices, so that crimes may not occur. At the present time the contrary prevails; the community is always thinking of enforcing the penal laws, and of preparing means of punishment, instruments of death and chastisement, places for imprisonment and banishment; and they expect crimes to be committed. This has a demoralizing effect,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 272.

⁶⁸⁶ “The Hands of the Cause of God must be ever watchful and so soon as they find anyone beginning to oppose and protest against the Guardian of the Cause of God, cast him out from the congregation of the people of Bahā and in no wise accept any excuse from him. How often hath grievous error been disguised in the garb of truth, that it might sow the seeds of doubt in the hearts of men!” `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 12; “Shun any man in whom you perceive enmity for this Servant, though he may appear in the garb of piety of the former and later people, or may arise to the worship of the two worlds,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), p. 431.

⁶⁸⁷ “Empedocles, who distinguished himself in philosophy, was a contemporary of David, while Pythagoras lived in the days of Solomon, son of David, and acquired Wisdom from the treasury of prophethood. It is he who claimed to have heard the whispering sound of the heavens and to have attained the station of the angels. In truth thy Lord will clearly set forth all things, if He pleaseth. Verily, He is the Wise, the All-Pervading,” Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 145. Empedocles lived between 490–440 BC whilst David lived between 1040–970 BC. There are about 500 years of difference between these dates. Pythagoras lived between 570–495 BC whilst Solomon lived between 970–931 BC. The difference between these two is also about 500 years.

⁶⁸⁸ “Regarding stylistic and grammatical changes: numerous changes are recorded, all of which are reflected in the texts transcribed during the time of Bahā'u'llāh, i.e., assumed to have been

- Dentistry: Humans have canine teeth to break nuts with!⁶⁸⁹
- Geography: Christopher Columbus discovered America using his reason!⁶⁹⁰
- Ophthalmology:
 - The Pupil of the Eye is Black to Attract the Rays of the Sun!⁶⁹¹
 - The Pupil of the Eye is the Source of Light!⁶⁹²
- Theology:
 - `Abdu'l-Bahā claims God says in the Qur'an that everything is living!⁶⁹³ God says "We made from water everything living."⁶⁹⁴ seen and approved by Him," Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitab-i-Iqan, p.27.

⁶⁸⁹ "Thou hast written regarding the four canine teeth in man, saying that these teeth, two in the upper jaw and two in the lower, are for the purpose of eating meat. Know thou that these four teeth are not created for meat-eating, although one can eat meat with them. All the teeth of man are made for eating fruit, cereals and vegetables. These four teeth, however, are designed for breaking hard shells, such as those of almonds." Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXIV, no. 1007.

⁶⁹⁰ Although Christopher Columbus discovered America by sheer chance when trying to find an alternative way to India, `Abdu'l-Bahā claims: "For example, man is in this hemisphere; but, like Columbus, through the power of his reason he discovers another hemisphere—that is, America—which was until then unknown," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 144; "An animal in Europe could not foresee and plan the discovery of America as Columbus did. It could not take the globe map of the earth and scan the various continents, saying, "This is the eastern hemisphere; there must be another, the western hemisphere." `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 417.

⁶⁹¹ "So the science of physiology—that is to say, the knowledge of the composition of the members—records that the reason and cause of the difference in the colors of animals, and of the hair of men, of the redness of the lips, and of the variety of the colors of birds, is still unknown; it is secret and hidden. But it is known that the pupil of the eye is black so as to attract the rays of the sun, for if it were another color—that is, uniformly white—it would not attract the rays of the sun." `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, pp. 192–193.

⁶⁹² "Although the pupil of the eye is black in color, but it is the mine of light. You must become like this. The essence must be luminous not the face. Thus say with utmost certitude and sureness, 'O Lord, make a dazzling light, a glowing lamp, and a rising star, so that I may illuminate the hearts by the shining beam of the Abhā kingdom,'" `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 7, pp. 60–61.

⁶⁹³ "He saith in the Qur'ān, 'All things are living.'" `Abdu'l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel, p. 9.

⁶⁹⁴ Quran, 21:30

- Father and son distort multiple verses from the Quran when citing them.⁶⁹⁵
 - Bahā'u'llāh claims he is the creator of multiple Gods.⁶⁹⁶
- Science: Materialists believe that all things have a spirit and life!⁶⁹⁷
- Deductive reasoning: Since roosters are superior to hens then there is no doubt that males are superior to females and stronger. Since lioness' are fiercer thus females are stronger and more important than males!⁶⁹⁸

⁶⁹⁵ Refer to the tables we provided in the current chapter.

⁶⁹⁶ "All Gods became Gods from the flow of my affairs and all Lords became Lords by the overflowing of my decree," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 2, p. 255.

⁶⁹⁷ "As to the existence of spirit in the mineral: it is indubitable that minerals are endowed with a spirit and life according to the requirements of that stage. This unknown secret, too, hath become known unto the materialists who now maintain that all beings are endowed with life." `Abdu'l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel, p. 9.

⁶⁹⁸ "Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible." Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā'i' al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153; "'Abdu'l-Bahā smiled and asked: 'What will you say if I prove to you that the woman is the stronger wing?' The answer came in the same bright vein: 'You will earn my eternal gratitude!' at which all the company made merry. 'Abdu'l-Bahā then continued more seriously: 'The woman is indeed of the greater importance to the race. She has the greater burden and the greater work. Look at the vegetable and the animal worlds. The palm which carries the fruit is the tree most prized by the date grower. The Arab knows that for a long journey the mare has the longest wind. For her greater strength and fierceness, the lioness is more feared by the hunter than the lion.'" `Abdu'l-Bahā, `Abdu'l-Bahā in London, pp. 102–103.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is the principle “Religion Must be in Conformity With Science and Reason” a new principle?

Hundreds of years before Bahā’u’llāh, Shia Islam clearly referred to the relationship between reason, science, and belief, and described the Prophets as the awakeners of people’s reasons. This issue was so important that the sentence “Whatever reason decrees, is also decreed by religion, and whatever religion decrees, is also decreed by reason,” was widespread among the scholars.

2) Did Baha’i leaders follow this principle?

Bahā’u’llāh neither considers reason nor science to be a criterion for recognizing the truth. Rather, he believes the yardstick for someone having any reason or science is their acceptance of Baha’ism. Aside from this, the works of the Bab, Bahā’u’llāh, and `Abdu’l-Bahā are filled with sayings and orders that are both against science reason. This shows that they either didn’t believe in this principle, or based on this principle, the Bābī and Baha’i faiths are invalid.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

If the meaning of science, is that which is empirically determined with modern technology, there is no doubt that this principle is not reasonable, for these sciences are subject to change. If the meaning of reason is “Complete Divine Reason” that men lack, then this is also incorrect because reason has been mentioned as a tool and criterion for finding the truth about a religion. If this only resides with God then what use is it to us?

CHAPTER 5:

The Removal of All Prejudice

"The fifth Baha'i principle is that sexual prejudice, religious prejudice, spiritual prejudice, national prejudice, and political prejudice are the destroyers of human foundations and any form of prejudice ruins the basis of humankind. Not until these prejudices are removed, will the human world attain tranquility. The proof for [this claim] is that all wars and battles and all enmities and hatreds which have occurred amongst humans were either the result of national prejudice or the result of political prejudice. The human world has not seen peace for 6000 years and the reason for this lack of peace is these prejudices. Until there is prejudice, there will be war, there will be hatred, there will be enmity, and there will be inconvenience. If the human world is to attain comfort, we must dump all these prejudices or else tranquility will be impossible."⁶⁹⁹

⁶⁹⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 147–148.

The definition of the Removal of Prejudice is that all forms of prejudice, whatsoever, must be put aside.

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

National prejudice is also [rooted in] pure ignorance. For the surface of Earth is a single nation and all of planet earth is man's home. Man has created these limits and borders and these limits and borders did not exist in nature . . . as for economical prejudice, it is obvious that the increase in international relations and exchanging goods and every economical center which is created in any land, will inevitably expand to other lands and general welfare will show itself. So, why have prejudice? But regarding political prejudice, God's policies must be followed and it is very clear that divine policies are grander than human policies. We must follow divine policies for He is the same to all people and has no difference. He is the base of all divine religions.⁷⁰⁰

⁷⁰⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, pp. 105–106.

Is This Principle New?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā claims this principle is new:

A new religious principle is that prejudice and fanaticism—whether sectarian, denominational, patriotic or political—are destructive to the foundation of human solidarity; therefore, man should release himself from such bonds in order that the oneness of the world of humanity may become manifest.⁷⁰¹

As we already mentioned, Bahā’u’llāh had grown up in a Shia community and for years, was under the influence of those beliefs. The Shia belief about prejudice and zeal states that not all kinds of zeal are undesirable. Showing zeal towards what is right and is logically and rationally correct is by no means bad. On the other hand, having indiscriminate prejudice on race, incorrect beliefs, and even one’s family must be put aside. The third Shia Imam explains it like this

Prejudice [is bad] when it results in a sin. For instance, [regarding tribal prejudice], if a man regards the worst person in his tribe better than the best person from another tribe, this is prejudice, but if a person loves his tribe this is not ⁷⁰¹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

prejudice. Another form of prejudice is when a man assists his tribe in oppressing [another group].⁷⁰²

This is how the Prophet of Islam describes the outcome of having prejudice:

He who has prejudice or others show prejudice because of him, then he has removed the necklace of faith from his neck (meaning he no longer has any faith).⁷⁰³

The Baha'i view about prejudice has elements borrowed from Shia Islam combined with a fair amount of illogical extremism. This extremism, which regards all prejudice and zeal void irrespective of their outcome, is to an extent novel, but nevertheless unjustifiable.

⁷⁰² Al-Kulaynī, al-Kāfī, vol. 2, p. 308

⁷⁰³ Al-Kulaynī, al-Kāfī, vol. 2, p. 308

Did the Founders of Baha'ism Refrain From Prejudice?

A quick review of Baha'i scripture and history shows that Baha'i leaders have shown great a great amount of prejudice regarding different matters. We will now enumerate some of these instances:

1- The Bāb

Some of the most extreme and most violent prejudice and zeal in Baha'i history can be found in the laws and actions of the Bāb:

- The order to destroy all non-Bābī books.⁷⁰⁴
- The order to destroy all monuments.⁷⁰⁵
- The order to exile or massacre all non-Bābī people.⁷⁰⁶

⁷⁰⁴ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān: "Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this order (meaning the Bab's creed)."

⁷⁰⁵ "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it," 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266

⁷⁰⁶ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān: "The sixteenth chapter of the seventh unit which is about [the decree] that all rulers who rise who are [followers] of the religion of the Bayan, leave no-one in their land who is not a follower of this religion. This is compulsory upon all the people too"; "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those

- Prohibition of teaching any book but those that the Bāb had revealed.⁷⁰⁷
- The order to confiscate the wealth of non-Bābīs.⁷⁰⁸

Even with all these savage and irrational laws, Baha’i prejudice and zeal towards the Bāb is so great that he is regarded by them as one of the greatest prophets of God. Bahā’u’llāh had so much zeal with respect to the Bāb that he had uttered that a single word from his book was more dear to him than anything in the skies and on the earth.⁷⁰⁹

2- Removal of Prejudice: Only for Non-Baha’is

If all prejudice and zeal must be put aside, even religious zeal, then Baha’is too, must put aside their religious beliefs and stop preaching their religion to others. As we previously showed, when ‘Abdu’l-Bahā speaks about setting aside religious prejudice, he only addresses non-Baha’is:

Zoroastrians say we are right, Jews say we are right, Christians say we are right, and Buddhists say we are right. How can the [one who is really] right be shown? The follower of Moses must put aside prejudice, the Christian must put aside prejudice, and the Buddhist must put aside prejudice.

who believed [in the Bāb’s religion] and verified it,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266.

⁷⁰⁷ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān: “The tenth chapter of the fourth unit which is about [the decree] that it is prohibited to teach any book but the book of Bayān.”

⁷⁰⁸ The Bāb, Farsi Bayan: “The fifth chapter of the fifth unit which is about the decree of taking the property of those who do not believe in [the religion] of Bayan and giving it back if they become believers in this religion, except in the lands where taking [property] is not possible.”

⁷⁰⁹ “I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth,” Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

Not until this is performed will it be possible to expose the truth . . . [no one] should have prejudice.⁷¹⁰

Why have Baha'is been excluded from this order? Why shouldn't they too put aside prejudice? Why don't Baha'is practice what they preach? Why does `Abdu'l-Bahā state that words needs actions but his own words remain only as words:

Words need actions. Words without actions are like a bee without honey or a tree without fruits.⁷¹¹

3- Baha'i Attitude Toward Deniers

The Baha'i corpus is filled with sentences about the need to put aside all prejudice. For example:

Keep aloof from the scent of ignorant prejudice, enmity, vulgar hatred, and sexual, national and religious delusions, for they are all against God's religion and His satisfaction and will deprive mankind of God's graces . . . do not have the slightest hatred towards anyone from any nation, religion, tribe, sex, or land, rather show utmost compassion and friendship.⁷¹²

But when it concerns Baha'ism directly, this is no longer the case and a very disturbing prejudice can be seen in Bahā'u'llāh's orders:

We must avoid deniers in all affairs and must not become fond of them or sit and converse with them even for a ⁷¹⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.18.

⁷¹¹ Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta`ālim Bahā'ī, p. 1.

⁷¹² Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta`ālim Bahā'ī, pp. 366–367.

moment, for by God the [effect of] evil individuals on pure individuals is like fire on dry wood and heat on cold snow.⁷¹³

We showed many other similar quotes in the second chapter.

4- Baha'is Have No Prejudice but Non-Baha'is Are Bastards

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

Praise God that you have accepted this great affair that is the light of the horizons and the promoter of the oneness of humanity. You detest all prejudice and show utmost compassion and kindness to all religions. You love all humanity.⁷¹⁴

We must not desire ourselves and must regard others as better than ourselves, even those who are not believers . . . we must see all people superior to ourselves . . . we must see other peoples shortcomings as our own shortcomings for if we didn't have shortcomings ourselves we couldn't have seen the shortcomings of others. Man must always see himself as imperfect and others perfect.⁷¹⁵

The falsity of the claims of having no prejudice and loving all humanity can be seen when we compare `Abdu'l-Bahā's words with those of his father. As we showed in chapter two, Bahā'u'llāh regards all those who deny him as being bastards.

5- Baha'is Have No Prejudice but Non-Baha'is Are Animals

According to Bahā'u'llāh non-Baha'is are animals:

⁷¹³ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, pp. 39.

⁷¹⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, pp. 81–82.

⁷¹⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīnīy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 49, p. 326–327.

Today, according to the decree of the Point of Bayān (meaning the Bāb), those individuals who turn away from this Novel Affair (meaning Baha'ism) are deprived of the garb of being called and described [as humans?] and are assembled and mentioned as animals in the presence of God.⁷¹⁶

Non-Baha'is must be viewed as earthworms and their sound is the buzz of flies⁷¹⁷. They are mentioned among the livestock⁷¹⁸.

Instead of preaching to non-Baha'is, `Abdu'l-Bahā should have reminded his father that:

This century, is the century of progress. These prejudices are unjustified. These are rooted in ignorance.⁷¹⁹

Is considering non-Baha'is to be non-humans not a clear sign of prejudice? Whose words should Baha'is adhere to? `Abdu'l-Bahā who claims prejudice is rooted in ignorance? Or Bahā'u'llāh who insists on having prejudice?

6- Baha'is Are Jewels and Other People Worthless Rocks

If any creed or group had claimed that they themselves were jewels and all other people were worthless pieces of rock, would Baha'is not have expressed their dissatisfaction because of such blatant prejudice? Why is it acceptable for Bahā'u'llāh to utter such words:

⁷¹⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 213.

⁷¹⁷ "Do not see the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) but as earthworms and their sounds but the buzzing of flies," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 1, no. 20, p. 183.

⁷¹⁸ "O group of polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism), if you take pride in your name remaining amongst the animals or being mentioned amongst the livestock, then take pride in that for you are worthy of it," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 81, p. 452.

⁷¹⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 25.

My friends are the pearls of [this] order and all others are earthly pebbles . . . a single one of these (Baha'is) is more precious than a million others (non-Baha'is).⁷²⁰

Why must one show such ignorance, as `Abdu'l-Bahā puts it, by having all this prejudice:

We must neither say bad things nor quarrel. We must know that all are the servants of one God and are encompassed with his sea of mercy . . . see how ignorant people can be by being prisoners of such prejudice.⁷²¹

Even though the words of the leaders of this creed have a high degree of prejudice in them, `Abdu'l-Bahā announces with great pride that:

We must thank God a hundred thousand times every moment, that thank-god, we have been freed from ignorant prejudice and are kind to all of God's sheep.⁷²²

7- Non-Baha'is Inherit Nothing from Baha'i Parents

If in the Baha'i creed, religious prejudice has really been abolished, and all people, regardless of their religion have equal rights, then why are non-Baha'is deprived of their share of inheritance from their deceased parents?⁷²³ And why does `Abdu'l-Bahā insist that there are equality of rights:

⁷²⁰ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idiy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 353.

⁷²¹ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 25.

⁷²² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 43.

⁷²³ "Bahā'u'llāh states that non-Baha'is have no right to inherit from their Bahā'ī parents or relatives," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 184.

There is equality between people and complete brotherhood. Justice implies that the rights of humankind be protected and preserved and all have equal rights.⁷²⁴

How can such discriminatory laws be considered just and manifestations of complete brotherhood? How are they not examples of clear religious prejudice? Perhaps Baha'u'llah has a totally new definition for prejudice.

8- Baha'is Have No Prejudice but All Non-Baha'is Are Ignorant and Unreasonable

We have quoted Baha'u'llah multiple times saying only Baha'is can be referred to as knowledgeable and reasonable. If this is not prejudice, then what is it? Is this the meaning of not seeing ourselves superior to others, as described below:

One of Bahā'u'llāh's teachings is mutual aid between humans. This aid is much greater than equality. It means that not only one must not see himself superior to others; rather, he must sacrifice his life and belongings for other people.⁷²⁵

9- Racial prejudice in Baha'i teachings

As we already pointed out in the second chapter, there exists a certain degree of racial prejudice in the Baha'i scripture. For instance `Abdu'l-Bahā believes that Turks deserve ridiculous answers⁷²⁶ and all Africans ⁷²⁴ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

⁷²⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 107.

⁷²⁶ "When Djemal Pasha . . . reached Acre and asked to see me, I mounted a donkey and headed for his home. As soon as he saw me, he greeted me and sat me next to him and without hesitation said: "You are a corrupter of religion and that is why the government of Iran exiled you here . . ." I thought to myself that he is a Turk and I must give him a ridiculous and silencing answer," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 3, p. 42–43.

are like savage wild animals⁷²⁷ that are cows with human faces until they are nurtured.⁷²⁸

10- Sexual Prejudice

Although Baha'is preach for equality between men and women, their laws show a great degree of prejudice and discrimination towards women and women are regarded inferior to men.⁷²⁹ For example, they take a smaller share of inheritance⁷³⁰ and cannot be a member of the Universal House of Justice.⁷³¹ We will present many other examples in the tenth chapter.

With all these forms of prejudice, 'Abdu'l-Bahā still insists that:

To reach the goal of (removing prejudice) we strive . . . but others just talk.⁷³²

Yes they strive. They strive by saying non-Baha'is are like dry wood that are only worthy of fire,⁷³³ no socializing is allowed with them,⁷³⁴

⁷²⁷ "The inhabitants of a land like Africa are all like wild savages and land-dwelling animals that lack common-sense and knowledge and are all wild. There is not a single wise and civilized person among them," 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 331

⁷²⁸ "The wild tribes have no superiority over animals. For example, what is the difference between African blacks and American blacks? The [black Africans] are cows that God has created with human faces. The [black Americans] are civilized, intelligent, and have culture," 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 3, p. 48.

⁷²⁹ "A woman's question was referred to him who had asked why hasn't God made any woman Prophets and why have all Divine Manifestations been men. He answered, 'Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible,'" Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā'i' al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

⁷³⁰ The deceased's property are split into 2520 portions. Out of these, 1080 are for the children, 390 for the wives, fathers 330, mothers 270, brothers 210, sisters 150, teachers 90 ('Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, p. 117–119).

⁷³¹ 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 27, p. 219.

⁷³² 'Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 99.

and the earth will be cleansed from their filth when the Baha'i kingdom materializes.⁷³⁵

⁷³³ "Anyone who has a garden will not allow the dry trees to remain in the garden and will definitely cut them and throw them in fire, for dry wood is only worthy of fire. Thus, O inhabitants of my orchard, protect yourselves from the wicked poisonous breath and void breeze which is socializing with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and the unaware (ghāfil)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

⁷³⁴ "Do not socialize with those who deny God (meaning non-Baha'is) and his signs and keep away from their kind," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39; "In it incumbent on ever soul to keep away from the wicked breath of the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39; "Know that God has forbidden his friends from meeting with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and hypocrites," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 280. for more quotes refer to chapter 2.

⁷³⁵ "God will soon take out from the sleeves of power the hands of strength and dominance and will make the Servant (Bahā'u'llāh) victorious and will cleanse the earth from the filth of every rejected polytheist (deniers of Baha'ism). And they will stand by the cause and will conquer the lands using my mighty eternal name and will enter the lands and they will be feared by all the servants," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 90, p. 587.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

Not all forms of prejudice and zeal can be considered bad. For instance, national prejudice and zeal, in times of foreign intervention, is by no means detestable, rather it is necessary. Bahā'u'llāh even detests national prejudice and pride:

There is no pride in loving ones country, rather [there is only pride] in loving the whole world.⁷³⁶

‘Abdu’l-Bahā further advocates this belief:

We title every fenced patch [of land] homeland and fancifully call it mother[land], whilst planet Earth is everybody’s mother[land], not this fenced patch. We live a few days on this earth and will finally be buried in it. It is our eternal grave. Is it reasonable to shed blood over this eternal grave and rip each-other apart? Of course not! Neither God is satisfied with nor does any rational person admit [such a thing]. Pay attention to the blessed animals which have no territorial disputes and have complete friendship with one-another and live in groups. For instance, if an eastern pigeon, a western pigeon, a northern pigeon, and a southern pigeon, ⁷³⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Ishrāqāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, pp. 20–21.

come together at a single location, they immediately show affection to each other. All blessed animals and birds are like this too. As for predatory animals, as soon as they see each other, they attack and tear one another apart. It is impossible for them to live in a unit land.⁷³⁷

Are our mother lands just a patch of fenced off earth that we shouldn't care about? Should we only care about the earth as a whole? If a foreign force invades us what do we do? Lay down our arms, and allow them to invade, just like what `Abdu'l-Bahā did when the British invaded Palestine?

History shows that this attitude is not limited to laying down arms and in extreme cases results in serving the enemy. It was because of this attitude that `Abdu'l-Bahā was awarded the title of Knighthood for his service to the invading forces.⁷³⁸ The same invading forces who in a few years, would lay the foundations for a nation whose very foundations were based on national and tribal prejudice: A Jewish country for a Jewish people. Is this how prejudice is removed?

This attitude was not only limited to `Abdu'l-Bahā'. During the Russian wars with Persia, Bahā'u'llāh was imprisoned for his alleged role in plotting to kill Nāṣir al-Dīn Shah. In a series of events, whose reason was never revealed, the Russian government exerted pressure on the Iranian government to free Bahā'u'llāh from prison. These efforts bore fruit and Bahā'u'llāh was released after four months. A tablet was revealed by Bahā'u'llāh to thank the Russian government:

In the days when this Wronged One was sore-afflicted in prison, the minister of the highly esteemed government (of Russia)—may God, glorified and exalted be He, assist him!—

⁷³⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, pp. 105–106.

⁷³⁸ Baha'is relate `Abdu'l-Bahā's Knighthood to humanitarian services. This title is given to a person who serves the British Empire, not to someone who provides humanitarian services to people being oppressed under an invading army. What is more ironic, is the fact that the title of knighthood is provided by the invading forces, not the defenders.

exerted his utmost endeavor to compass My deliverance. Several times permission for My release was granted. Some of the `ulamās of the city, however, would prevent it. Finally, My freedom was gained through the solicitude and the endeavor of His Excellency the Minister . . . His Imperial Majesty, the Most Great Emperor—may God, exalted and glorified be He, assist him!—extended to Me for the sake of God his protection—a protection which has excited the envy and enmity of the foolish ones of the earth.⁷³⁹

Pay attention to Bahā'u'llāh's prayers for the Russian government. He asks God, twice, to "assist" the government whose country is invading his homeland! Why? Only because they secured his release from prison. Bahā'u'llāh doesn't even care that this government is the same government who is responsible for the deaths of thousands of people in his homeland in their bid to conquer it and take over its natural resources. It seems that the only thing he cares about is his own freedom.

Bahā'u'llāh claims that the Russians extended their protection for him "for the sake of God." One wonders if the Russians truly offered protection for the followers of a group who were inciting civil war in a country that they were at war with, merely "for the sake of God".

This does not mean that prejudice and zeal are justified in every case. Extreme neutrality is just as problematic as extreme prejudice. Defending one's country, family, or tribe during certain times of danger does not mean that one should defend every unjust action that happens in it. Clearly this is not a case of black and white.

Would it not have been better if Bahā'u'llāh had stuck with the Shia model of prejudice instead of presenting a radical extreme version? The first Shia Imam (who is often cited by Baha'i leaders) determines when it is justified by saying:

⁷³⁹ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 106

If one must have prejudice, then they should have prejudice on virtuous morals, praiseworthy actions, and admirable matters . . .⁷⁴⁰

Should we not have prejudice towards the truth? Are truth and falsehood the same? Are the oppressed and the oppressor the same? When the Nazi's invaded France in World War II, should the French have laid down their arms and ignored the situation, because the entire earth is their homeland, not just France? This is a clear example of the classic situation in which, in an attempt to remedy one extreme, someone has fallen into the opposite extreme.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

⁷⁴⁰ Sayyid Raḍī, Nahj al-balāgha, sermon 192.

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”⁷⁴¹

⁷⁴¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Removing All Prejudice or Prohibition of Meeting with Non-Baha'is

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Have no prejudice and show no hatred towards any religion.⁷⁴²

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: Keep away from non-Baha'is and do not socialize with them.⁷⁴³

2. Having No Prejudice or Considering All Non-Baha'is Ignorant and Unreasonable?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Religious prejudice destroys the foundations of humanity.⁷⁴⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: Only Baha'is are knowledgeable and reasonable and non-Baha'is are ignorant and lack reason.⁷⁴⁵

⁷⁴² "Keep aloof from the scent of ignorant prejudice, enmity, vulgar hatred, and sexual, national and religious delusions, for they are all against God's religion and His satisfaction and will deprive mankind of God's graces . . . do not have the slightest hatred towards anyone from any nation, religion, tribe, sex, or land, rather show utmost compassion and friendship," Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta'ālīm Bahā'ī, pp. 366–367.

⁷⁴³ "Do not socialize with those who deny God (meaning non-Baha'is) and his signs and keep away from their kind," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39; "In it incumbent on ever soul to keep away from the wicked breath of the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39; "Know that God has forbidden his friends from meeting with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and hypocrites," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 280. for more quotes refer to chapter 2.

⁷⁴⁴ "The fifth Baha'i principle is that sexual prejudice, religious prejudice, spiritual prejudice, national prejudice, and political prejudice are the destroyers of human foundations," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁷⁴⁵ "From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha'is)," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 138–139; "If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word 'yes' (meaning does not become a Baha'i), the Lord will not pay attention to him (ladī l-Ḥaqq madhkūr na) and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111; "The general criterion is what we mentioned and any soul who has success in it, meaning recognizes and realizes the Sunrise of Manifestation (meaning himself), will be mentioned in the Divine Book as someone who possesses reason or else he will be (mentioned as) ignorant even if he himself thinks that his reason equals that of the

3. Removing Prejudice or Claiming Each Baha'i worth More than a Million Non-Baha'is?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: People must not regard themselves superior to others.⁷⁴⁶

Bahā'u'llāh: "My friends are the pearls of [this] order and all others are earthly pebbles . . . a single one of these (Baha'is) is more precious than a million others (non-Baha'is),"⁷⁴⁷

4. Removing Prejudice or Depriving Non-Baha'is from Their Share of Inheritance?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All people have equal rights.⁷⁴⁸

Bahā'u'llāh: Non-Baha'is do not inherit from their Baha'i parents.⁷⁴⁹ whole world," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 7, p. 160; "No one has denied or will deny what has been revealed by the Ancient Pen (meaning himself) in this Most Great Manifestation regarding society, unity, manners, rites, and being occupied with what has benefits for the people, except that he completely lacks reason," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 168.

⁷⁴⁶ "One of Bahā'u'llāh's teachings is mutual aid between humans. This aid is much greater than equality. It means that not only one must not see himself superior to others; rather, he must sacrifice his life and belongings for other people," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 107.

⁷⁴⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, p. 353.

⁷⁴⁸ "There is equality between people and complete brotherhood. Justice implies that the rights of humankind be protected and preserved and all have equal rights," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

⁷⁴⁹ "Bahā'u'llāh states that non-Baha'is have no right to inherit from their Bahā'ī parents or relatives," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 184.

5. Removing All Prejudice or Calling Non-Baha'is Animals

`Abdu'l-Bahā: The truth can only be exposed when all religions remove prejudice.⁷⁵⁰

Bahā'u'llāh: Non-Baha'is are animals.⁷⁵¹

6. Removing All Prejudice or Calling Non-Baha'is Bastards

`Abdu'l-Bahā: "This century, is the century of progress. These prejudices are unjustified. These are rooted in ignorance."⁷⁵²

Bahā'u'llāh: Non-Baha'is are Bastards⁷⁵³.

⁷⁵⁰ "The follower of Moses must put aside prejudice, the Christian must put aside prejudice, and the Buddhist must put aside prejudice. Not until this is performed will it be possible to expose the truth . . . [no one] should have prejudice," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.18.

⁷⁵¹ "Today, according to the decree of the Point of Bayān (meaning the Bāb), those individuals who turn away from this Novel Affair (meaning Baha'ism) are deprived of the garb of being called and described [as humans?] and are assembled and mentioned as animals in the presence of God," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 213; "Do not see the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) but as earthworms and their sounds but the buzzing of flies," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 1, no. 20, p. 183; "O group of polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism), if you take pride in your name remaining amongst the animals or being mentioned amongst the livestock, then take pride in that for you are worthy of it," Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 81, p. 452; "Oh you donkeys! Whatever God says is the truth and will not become void by the words of the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 174; "When the one who turned away from God halted (in accepting me) and fell off the path, in that moment his body left the garb of humanness and appeared and became visible in the skin of animals. Sanctified is He who changes the beings how he likes," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 110.

⁷⁵² `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 25.

⁷⁵³ "Whoever denies this apparent exalted luminous grace (meaning Baha'ism), it is worthy that he asks his state from his mother and he will soon be returned to the bottom of hell," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, pp. 355 and `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāyghān, p. 78; "Whoever has the enmity of this servant (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) in his heart, certainly Satan has entered their mother's bed," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāyghān, p. 79.

7. Removing All Prejudice or Saying Non-Baha'is Are like Dry Wood That Are Only Worthy of Fire?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: We act to remove prejudice but others just talk.⁷⁵⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: Non-Baha'is are like dry wood that are only worthy of fire.⁷⁵⁵

8. Removing Prejudice or Depriving of All Graces, Those Who View Non-Baha'is as Humans?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: People must not regard themselves superior to others.⁷⁵⁶

Bahā'u'llāh: Whoever call my deniers humans, will be deprived of all of God's graces.⁷⁵⁷

⁷⁵⁴ "To reach the goal of (removing prejudice) we strive . . . but others just talk," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 99.

⁷⁵⁵ "Anyone who has a garden will not allow the dry trees to remain in the garden and will definitely cut them and throw them in fire, for dry wood is only worthy of fire. Thus, O inhabitants of my orchard, protect yourselves from the wicked poisonous breath and void breeze which is socializing with the polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism) and the unaware (ghāfil)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idī-i āsimānī, vol. 8, p. 39.

⁷⁵⁶ "One of Bahā'u'llāh's teachings is mutual aid between humans. This aid is much greater than equality. It means that not only one must not see himself superior to others; rather, he must sacrifice his life and belongings for other people," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 107.

⁷⁵⁷ "From this day, any individual that mentions as human a single person from those who deny me—whether that [denier] has a high or low stature—they will be excluded from all of (God's) Merciful Graces, let alone trying to prove [those deniers] have dignity or stature," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī, p. 140.

9. Removing Racial Prejudice or Calling All Black Africans Irrational Savages?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Prejudice destroys the foundations of humanity.⁷⁵⁸

`Abdu'l-Bahā: The inhabitants of a land like Africa are all like wild savages and land-dwelling animals that lack common-sense and knowledge.⁷⁵⁹

10. Having No Prejudice or Saying Turks Deserve Ridiculous Answers?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: “In the presence of God there is no [such thing] as English, French, Turk, or Persian. To God they are all the same.”⁷⁶⁰

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Turks deserve ridiculous answers.⁷⁶¹

⁷⁵⁸ “The fifth Baha’i principle is that sexual prejudice, religious prejudice, spiritual prejudice, national prejudice, and political prejudice are the destroyers of human foundations,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁷⁵⁹ “The inhabitants of a land like Africa are all like wild savages and land-dwelling animals that lack common-sense and knowledge and are all wild. There is not a single wise and civilized person among them,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 331; “The wild tribes have no superiority over animals. For example what is the difference between African blacks and American blacks? The [black Africans] are cows that God has created with human faces. The [black Americans] are civilized, intelligent, and have culture . . .” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 3, p. 48.

⁷⁶⁰ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishraq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 45-46.

⁷⁶¹ “When Djemal Pasha⁷⁶¹ . . . reached Acre⁷⁶¹ and asked to see me, I mounted a donkey and headed for his home. As soon as he saw me, he greeted me and sat me next to him and without hesitation said: “You are a corrupter of religion and that is why the government of Iran exiled you here . . .” I thought to myself that he is a Turk and I must give him a ridiculous and silencing answer,” Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 3, p. 42–43.

11. Having No Prejudice or Praising the Most Prejudice Based Religion to Ever Exist?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Religious prejudice destroys the foundations of humanity.⁷⁶²

The Bāb: Destroy all non-Bābī books.⁷⁶³ Massacre all non-Bābis and destroy their monuments.⁷⁶⁴ Teaching non-Bābī books is prohibited.⁷⁶⁵

Bahā'u'llāh: "I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth."⁷⁶⁶

12. Removing All Prejudice or Discrimination between Men and Women?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All people have equal rights.⁷⁶⁷

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: Women are inferior to men,⁷⁶⁸ they take a smaller share of inheritance,⁷⁶⁹ and cannot be a member of the UHJ.⁷⁷⁰

⁷⁶² "The fifth Baha'i principle is that sexual prejudice, religious prejudice, spiritual prejudice, national prejudice, and political prejudice are the destroyers of human foundations," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 147.

⁷⁶³ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān: "Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this order (meaning the Bab's creed)"; "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266.

⁷⁶⁴ "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt: 1330 AH), vol. 2, p. 266.

⁷⁶⁵ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān: "The tenth chapter of the fourth unit which is about [the decree] that it is prohibited to teach any book but the book of Bayān."

⁷⁶⁶ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

⁷⁶⁷ "There is equality between people and complete brotherhood. Justice implies that the rights of humankind be protected and preserved and all have equal rights," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is Removing All Prejudice a new principle?

The extreme form of removing all kinds of prejudice brought forward by Bahā'u'llāh is novel to an extent but nevertheless incorrect and unacceptable.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

There are numerous documented instances where Baha'i leaders have expressed, religious, racial, and sexual prejudice. This shows that those who created this principle didn't adhere to it themselves.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

No rational person will accept that all kinds of prejudice and zeal must be removed. In other religions such as Islam, this fact has been explained by pointing out that having prejudice on what is right and favorable is not only good but also defensible.

⁷⁶⁸ "A woman's question was referred to him who had asked why hasn't God made any woman Prophets and why have all Divine Manifestations been men. He answered: 'Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible,'" Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā'i` al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

⁷⁶⁹ The deceased's property are split into 2520 portions. Out of these, 1080 are for the children, 390 for the wives, fathers 330, mothers 270, brothers 210, sisters 150, teachers 90 (ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, p. 117–119).

⁷⁷⁰ ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 27, p. 219.

CHAPTER 6:

The Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity

“Every human being has the right to live; they have a right to rest, and to a certain amount of well-being. As a rich man is able to live in his palace surrounded by luxury and the greatest comfort, so should a poor man be able to have the necessities of life. Nobody should die of hunger; everybody should have sufficient clothing; one man should not live in excess while another has no possible means of existence.”⁷⁷¹

⁷⁷¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 131–132.

The Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity means that universal wealth must be distributed in such a way that all people—rich or poor—live in peace and tranquility.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

People are of different [social] classes. Some are extremely wealthy others extremely poor. One lives in a splendid palace whilst another doesn’t even have a hole [to live in]. One has all kinds of food on his table another doesn’t even have a single loaf of bread . . . thus the means of livelihood for people must be remedied.⁷⁷²

He stresses that the Equalization of the Means of Livelihood, does not mean that everyone should have equal wealth, rather, it means that the wealthy should help the needy:

Remedying the means of livelihood for humans is necessary. [This does not] mean equality . . . Humans cannot be all the same because they are different in creation. Some have first-degree intelligence, others have medium intelligence, and others are completely deprived of it. Is it possible for someone who has very high intelligence to be equal to someone who has no intelligence at all?⁷⁷³

He believes that people of all social classes must live a tranquil life irrespective of their class and position:

All must become needless and everyone must have tranquility proportional to their position and status. Just as a ruler has honor and is immersed in blessings, the poor must too have daily sustenance and must not be left in great abjection and be deprived of this living world by starvation.⁷⁷⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā states that there must exist different social ranks and classes:

We must strive for the eternal salvation of humankind. In this respect, laws are needed so [social] classes [and differences] remain and [at the same time] the members of the community be in complete peace. Because a community is ⁷⁷² `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 134.

⁷⁷³ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 134.

⁷⁷⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 32–33.

like a [military] camp that needs generals, majors, lieutenants, and privates. All members cannot be generals or privates. There must be [different] classes and different ranks are needed.⁷⁷⁵

`Abdu'l-Bahā clearly expresses that social ranks and classes will not be abolished. The Baha'i vision is to create a community with moderate social classes:

It is better that moderation be introduced. Moderation means a series of laws and systems must be put in place which prevent some people from unnecessary accumulation of wealth and [at the same time] provide the necessary needs of the public.⁷⁷⁶

`Abdu'l-Bahā further iterates that this principle cannot be implemented unless laws are passed and legislation is introduced which oblige the wealthy to give some of their wealth to the needy:

It is not acceptable that some are extremely wealthy whilst others are extremely poor. Reforms must be introduced and laws must be implemented so that all enjoy welfare and well-being. It shouldn't be such that one is poverty-stricken and another enjoys utmost opulence. For instance, a wealthy person who has great wealth must not allow another person to remain in a state of poverty and must consider his needs so that he reaches peace. This must be enforced by law and the wealthy must give the surplus of their wealth to the needy themselves. The laws of a country should be such that according to God's tradition everyone has tranquility.⁷⁷⁷

⁷⁷⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 138.

⁷⁷⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 142.

⁷⁷⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 135.

`Abdu'l-Bahā repeats a few times that there must be a law or legislation that prevents the accumulation of wealth by the wealthy and causes them to give the surplus of their revenue to the needy. This clearly shows that this principle must be enforced through the use of legal means and possibly by using excessive force. In an unusual change of mind, he immediately claims that distribution of wealth by the wealthy must be performed out of free will not force:

The wealthy must have mercy on the poor, but out of free will not by force. It is useless if force is used. There must not be force but a general law by which everyone will know their duty.⁷⁷⁸

He then continues by presenting an example on how this should be implemented. Amazingly, the example he presents still relies on legal obligation like all the previous quotes. Whatever `Abdu'l-Bahā is saying, contradicts itself and does not make any sense, whether in theory or in action.

⁷⁷⁸ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 148.

Is the Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity a New Principle?

Modern economic movements date back to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. All these movements have the common belief that society is economically flawed and not in favor of the general population. The doctrines proposed by these movements were all brought forward with the promise of reform and better means of livelihood for the people. Many of these doctrines, when implemented, failed to perform as promised and were put aside.

The current principle that the Baha'i leadership has proposed, is a solution to the economic problems of the modern world. How this model will perform when implemented has yet to be seen.

Religious teachings about social justice have existed ever since antiquity. This is a goal most, if not all, religions have been striving to achieve. The system proposed by Shia Islam, is based on two different actions: The first is a legal obligation which is enforced by the government and the second is a religious obligation, which is unto the adherents to apply to and is not enforced by the government.

In the first form, a certain percentage of certain kinds of wealth, when exceeding a fixed amount, are paid to the government to be used for the welfare of the general population and also the needy. In the second form, the wealthy are recommended to pay charity to the needy. It is up to them to decide to pay these alms and they are in no way obliged to do so although God will judge them in the hereafter for these actions:

God has placed the sustenance of the needy amongst the wealth of the wealthy. No poor person starves but because of the benefiting of a wealthy person. God will question [the wealthy] because of [these actions].⁷⁷⁹

Some of the elements of the model proposed by `Abdu'l-Bahā are strikingly similar to the Islamic model. Borrowing elements from Islam is so common, that when `Abdu'l-Bahā is asked about the tax called zakāt, he replies:

We ordered that the zakāt be paid as has been revealed in the Quran.⁷⁸⁰

Even though both religious and social movements before Bahā'u'llāh had all strived to reach this goal, `Abdu'l-Bahā claims this principle is new and no religion has spoken about it:

He has set forth the solution and provided the remedy for the economic question. No religious Books of the past Prophets speak of this important human problem.⁷⁸¹

⁷⁷⁹ Sayyid Raḍī, Nahj al-balāgha, saying no. 328.

⁷⁸⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīnīy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 12, p. 149.

⁷⁸¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

Did the Founders of the Baha’i Creed Follow the Goal of Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity?

1- Confiscating the wealth of all non-Bābīs:

Bab had given orders to confiscate the wealth of all who didn’t believe in him:

The fifth chapter of the fifth unit which is about the decree of taking the property of those who do not believe in [the religion] of Bayan and giving it back if they become believers in this religion, except in the lands where taking [property] is not possible.⁷⁸²

2- All kinds of outrageous fines for Bābīs

In the book of Bayān, for every misdemeanor committed, an outrageous fine has to be paid to the Bāb. For instance:

⁷⁸² The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 5, chap. 5.

You have been prohibited in the Bayān from having more than nineteen books. If you do so, you will be fined 19 mithqāls⁷⁸³ of gold.⁷⁸⁴

He who deliberately saddens another [follower of the Bāb], must pay a fine of nineteen mithqāls of gold, or else silver, or else must repent to God nineteen times.⁷⁸⁵

It has been destined in the sixth chapter to remember God's Oneness nineteen times [every day] from the beginning of night to the end of day. If you do not perform this [deliberately] after you have been informed, a fine of 19 mithqāls of fine diamonds will be imposed.⁷⁸⁶

After the aforementioned decree, he continues to order the remembrance of himself, and other figures every day for nineteen times and imposes the following fines if such an act is not performed: nineteen mithqāls of gold, five mithqāls of red rubies, and five mithqāls of yellow rubies. The Bab's writings are replete with fines of this form.

3- Loans with Interest and Usury

Usury has been prohibited in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam:

If you lend money to one of my people among you who is needy, do not treat it like a business deal; charge no interest.⁷⁸⁷

⁷⁸³ Each mithqāl is equal to about 3.6 grams.

⁷⁸⁴ The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 11, chap. 7.

⁷⁸⁵ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 7, chap. 18.

⁷⁸⁶ The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn, chap. 6, p. 3.

⁷⁸⁷ Exodus, 22:25

Do not take interest or any profit from them, but fear your God, so that they may continue to live among you. You must not lend them money at interest or sell them food at a profit.⁷⁸⁸

And for taking interest, which was forbidden, and for consuming the people's money unjustly, we have prepared for the disbelievers among them a painful retribution.⁷⁸⁹

Although lending with interest and usury are profitable for the lender, they are a pain and cause of hardship for the borrower who is usually in need and has financial problems. Bahā'u'llāh, without foreseeing the outcomes of his actions, announces that loans with interest are permissible:

We see many people who are in need of [these kinds of loans]. If there is no profit [in the loan] the affairs will not move forward. It is very rare that someone becomes successful in tolerating and heeding someone who is the same gender as himself, his countryman, or brethren, and gives them a loan without interest. So, as a favor to [God's] servants, we made loans with interest like all other forms of deals which people make with each-other. The profit gained [by lending] money, is now permissible, pure, and clean, because this order has been revealed from the Sky of Ordinance, so that the people of earth can be engrossed in remembering/speaking about the Beloved of the World, with utmost peace, tranquility, happiness, and pleasure.⁷⁹⁰

⁷⁸⁸ Leviticus, 25:36–37

⁷⁸⁹ Quran 4:161

⁷⁹⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 24, p. 202.

Bahā'u'llāh's justification for allowing interest is "If there is no profit [in the loan] the affairs will not move forward." Didn't God know this when He prohibited this act in all other religions?

He further claims that lending with interest is a favor from God so that people would become engrossed in remembering him with peace and tranquility. The only thing that is clear is having a loan with interest neither brings peace nor tranquility.

Apparently, this new law decreed by Bahā'u'llāh had a devastating effect on the livelihood of Baha'is who adhered to it. This effect was such that `Abdu'l-Bahā ordered his followers to refrain from these kinds of loans in the strictest sense:

From now on do not give loans with interest to anyone because `Abdu'l-Bahā dislikes interest even though it is legitimate. Only give [loans] without interest and take no loan with interest from anybody.⁷⁹¹

Again, there is a clear contradiction between Bahā'u'llāh and his son. It is not clear why `Abdu'l-Bahā, who is only allowed to interpret Bahā'u'llāh's laws, directly orders his followers to disobey his father's orders and deprives them of the "favor to [God's] servants."

4- Outrageous fines for fornication and adultery

God hath imposed a fine on every adulterer and adulteress, to be paid to the House of Justice nine mithqāls of gold, to be doubled if they should repeat the offence . . . Although the term translated here as adultery refers, in its broadest sense, to unlawful sexual intercourse between either married or unmarried individuals (see note 36 for a definition of the term), `Abdu'l-Bahā has specified that the punishment here prescribed is for sexual intercourse between persons who are unmarried . . . In relation to the application of the fine, Bahā'u'llāh clearly specifies that each succeeding fine is double the preceding one; thus the fine imposed increases in geometrical progression.⁷⁹²

⁷⁹¹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīnī-y-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 24, p. 204.

Unmarried people who engage in acts of sexual intercourse—especially teenagers— will likely frequently perform such acts. The number of times copulation occurs in a year can easily reach one hundred times if this shameful act is performed only twice a week. The amount of gold payable by each of these two people equals to: $3.6 \text{ grams} * 9 * 2^{100} = 41071879447394632608493183854 \text{ kilograms}$, which is fairly equal to 8000 times the weight of the earth. Just in case you are wondering, the fine will be about 34000 kilos of Gold if copulation is performed only 20 times. We'll leave it to up to the readers to judge the practicality of these luminous laws. One wonders how a society governed by this law will ever be able to get closer to economic justice and attaining a means of livelihood for all people.

In fact this law is so outrageous that, as is standard for problematic Baha'i laws, its implementation has been postponed until a future time:

The imposition of this fine is intended for a future condition of society, at which time the law will be supplemented and applied by the Universal House of Justice.⁷⁹³

5- Excommunication and Shunning

Excommunicated members of the community have to break all ties with their family members. If the breadwinner of the family is excommunicated, his/her family will be left with no source of income.

⁷⁹² Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 200–202.

⁷⁹³ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 201.

Likewise, if a dependent is excommunicated, they will have to fend off for themselves and find an alternative source of sustenance. Is this how the means of livelihood are equalized in this creed?

6- Deceased's living residence

According to Baha'i law a deceased's living residence is solely the property of his oldest son even if the deceased has left no other wealth behind:

The living residence belongs to the oldest living son, whether or not the deceased has any other wealth. The oldest living son also takes his share from the other belongings.⁷⁹⁴

How can the Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity be achieved by such laws?

7- Treatment of Thieves

Where does a thief receive sustenance from after being punished according to Baha'i law?

Exile and imprisonment are decreed for the thief, and, on the third offence, place ye a mark upon his brow so that, thus identified, he may not be accepted in the cities of God and His countries.⁷⁹⁵

If a thief is caught for the third time a mark must be put on his brow so that he will not be accepted in any city or country. Thus he will be completely deprived of all means of livelihood! Is this law problematic? No problem, this is how it is resolved:

⁷⁹⁴ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīnīy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, p. 128.

⁷⁹⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 35–36.

The punishments for theft are intended for a future condition of society, when they will be supplemented and applied by the Universal House of Justice.⁷⁹⁶

⁷⁹⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 198.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

If the purpose of this principle is the assistance of the needy by the wealthy and implementation of a series of laws and legislations which help in closing the income gap between different groups of the community, then yes it is completely logical and rational. The problem in reaching such a goal, is to bring forward a practical program and to introduce a system which allows the efficient implementation of such a program.

`Abdu'l-Bahā believes the only program that can reach this goal is the one devised by Bahā'u'llāh:

The economic problem will not be completely solved but by these teachings, rather, it is impossible [to solve them by any other method].⁷⁹⁷

He believes that to overcome economic problems, the first group in which reform must take place in are the farmers because they make up the bulk of the working class:

The economic problem [must be solved] by starting from the farmers until it reaches other groups. For the population of farmers is many more times higher than other [working] classes. Thus, it is worthy to start from the farmers and farmers are the foremost working class of the community. Yes, in each village a council consisting of the most rational people of the village must be set up and the village must be managed by that council. A public storehouse must be built and a secretary assigned to it. At the time of harvest, with the knowledge of the council, some of the produce from [all farmers] must be taken to supply the storehouse.⁷⁹⁸

⁷⁹⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 135.

What `Abdu'l-Bahā proposes is neither novel nor exceptional. The only point that is somewhat troubling is the fact that the poor farmers and peasants have been selected as the first class that must be reformed. This reformation is in no way helpful to them because they must give up some of their produce for the welfare of others, while the role of other groups in this system has not been specified.

The justification for starting with the peasants is even more interesting: they make up a larger portion of the community. Would it not be better to start with the minority groups who hold the largest wealth in the community and not the majority groups who are themselves the neediest? It seems awfully convenient for the small elite controlling all the wealth that it is the farmers and pheasants who should take the first step.

Four means have been devised by Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā to Equalize the means of livelihood to allow the flow and distribution of wealth and prevent it from accumulating in the possession of a small minority:

1- Inheritance

⁷⁹⁸ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 135–136.

Inheritance is distributed amongst seven groups.⁷⁹⁹ Under some circumstances portions of the inheritance are handed over to the Universal House of Justice. If deemed appropriate, the UHJ can use some of this money for equalization of the means of livelihood or for propagating Baha'i beliefs. Inheritance is only distributed in the aforementioned manner if the deceased does not leave a will. If the deceased has specified in his will for his wealth to be distributed in a manner which goes against the equalization of the means of livelihood, no one can protest his or her decision.

Furthermore, inheritance usually stays in the family and is not distributed in the community to help those who are in need.

In any case, the laws of inheritance in the Baha'i creed do not have a meaningful influence in achieving the goal of the current principle, and are sometimes in conflict with it. For instance, as we already pointed out, the living residence of the deceased becomes the property of his eldest son, even if the deceased has left no other wealth.

2- Tax

In the Baha'i creed two kinds of taxes are payable. The first is paid to the government according to the laws of each country. The government then does with these taxes what it wishes, whether waging war or helping the needy. This tax has nothing to do with equalizing the means of livelihood.

The second is called `ushr (one tenth) which is a religious tax imposed on Baha'is in accordance with Baha'i law. `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

It is not fair to put the same tax on both the rich and the needy. The needy must be exempted from paying tax. It is not fair that the needy pay one tenth as tax and the wealthy pay ⁷⁹⁹ The deceased's property are split into 2520 portions. Out of these, 1080 are for the children, 390 for the wives, fathers 330, mothers 270, brothers 210, sisters 150, teachers 90 (ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, pp. 117–119).

one tenth too . . . laws are needed [to address this] issue . . . I will tell you God's law [regarding this issue] . . . the farmers plant crops in a village and produce is harvested. One tenth of the harvest is taken from both the rich and the needy [as tax]. Then a public storehouse is erected in the village and both the tax and the produce are gathered there. It is then possible to see who is wealthy and who is poor. Nothing will be taken from the farmers who have been able to produce only enough to feed their families and procure their daily needs. All the produce and taxes are now in the general storehouse. If there are crippled people in the village, their minimum sustenance will be provided from the storehouse. On the other hand, a wealthy person who [for instance] needs only fifty thousand kilos for a living but has produced five hundred thousand kilos will be taxed twice as much (meaning one fifth) and whatever remains in the storehouse at the end of the year will be employed for general use.⁸⁰⁰

In this plan which is slightly different from the previous one, the poor still remain poor and the rich, rich. In the aforementioned system, the poorer farmer classes achieve nothing extra from the taxes and no equalization of the means of livelihood is achieved. The only group that benefits from this system are a small number of crippled people.

Thus, the wealthy classes still keep the bulk of their wealth and accumulate it while the poorer classes retain what they had before and nothing is added to it. The plan devised by `Abdu'l-Bahā does not help in the flow of wealth from the wealthy to the poor and no equalization is achieved. It may sound interesting on paper, but in action achieves nothing novel. It resembles the tax systems employed in all governments.

⁸⁰⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 148–150.

3- Huqūq Allah

Huqūq Allah or God's Share, is a form of tax Baha'is must pay to the Universal House of Justice. When a Baha'i person's wealth exceeds the price of nineteen mithqāls of gold, 19 percent of the wealth must be handed over to the UHJ.⁸⁰¹ This tax is then used by the UHJ in whatever affairs they deem appropriate and is in no way guaranteed to be used for the equalization of the means of livelihood.

A point worth considering is the striking similarity between this tax and the tax of Khums in Shia Islam. In Shia Islam, 20 percent of the annual surplus of a person's expenses are paid as Khums tax. Out of this 20 percent, half is directly given to poverty-stricken descendants of Prophet Muḥammad (it is forbidden to give these people normal charity). At least in the Shia method, some form of equalization of the means of livelihood is achieved, because wealth is directly given to the needy, but in the Baha'i version, the wealth is given to the UHJ.

4- Zakāt tax

As we previously mentioned, this tax has been directly copied from Islamic teachings:

We ordered that the zakāt be paid as has been revealed in the Quran.⁸⁰²

As we can see, the Baha'i system proposed for the equalization of the means of livelihood is based on systems that were already implemented in government taxing systems or have been borrowed from Islamic Sharia. The irony is that the proposed system has a minimal effect on the Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity, for wealth is not redistributed among the needy in a manner which helps close the gap between the rich and the poor, rather, it is merely a method for taxing the people of society.

⁸⁰¹ See `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 9, pp. 94 & 101.

⁸⁰² `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 12, p. 149.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”⁸⁰³

⁸⁰³Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is Equalizing the Means of Livelihood a New Principle?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Former religious books have not spoken about this problem.⁸⁰⁴

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “We ordered that the zakāt be paid as has been revealed in the Quran.”⁸⁰⁵

2. Is Usury Good or Bad? Does ‘Abdu’l-Bahā Hate Bahā’u’llāh’s Favors to the People?

‘Bahā’u’llāh: We made usury legal as a favor to God’s servants.⁸⁰⁶

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Even though usury is allowed no one is allowed to engage in such an act because I hate it.⁸⁰⁷

3. Helping the Needy a Legal Obligation or Voluntary?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: The wealthy must voluntarily help the poor.⁸⁰⁸

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Helping the needy must be enforced by law.⁸⁰⁹

⁸⁰⁴ “”He has set forth the solution and provided the remedy for the economic question. No religious Books of the past Prophets speak of this important human problem,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

⁸⁰⁵ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i hudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 12, p. 149.

⁸⁰⁶ “So, as a favor to [God’s] servants, we made loans with interest like all other forms of deals which people make with each-other. The profit gained [by lending] money, is now permissible, pure, and clean, because this order has been revealed from the Sky of Ordinance, so that the people of earth can be engrossed in remembering/speaking about the Beloved of the World, with utmost peace, tranquility, happiness, and pleasure,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i hudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 24, p. 202.

⁸⁰⁷ “From now on do not give loans with interest to anyone because ‘Abdu’l-Bahā dislikes interest even though it is legitimate. Only give [loans] without interest and take no loan with interest from anybody,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i hudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 24, p. 204.

⁸⁰⁸ “The wealthy must have mercy on the poor, but out of free will not by force. It is useless if force is used,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 148.

⁸⁰⁹ “For instance, a wealthy person who has great wealth must not allow another person to remain in a state of poverty and must consider his needs so that he reaches peace. This must be enforced

4. Equalization of Means of Livelihood or Paying Thousands of Tons of Gold to the UHJ?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Remedying the means of livelihood for humans is necessary.⁸¹⁰

Bahā’u’llāh: After 20 times of adultery pay 34 tons of gold to the UHJ and after 100 times, 8000 times the weight of earth.⁸¹¹

5. Equalization of the Means of Livelihood or Depriving Some of Any Livelihood at All?

When the Baha’i kingdom materializes thieves⁸¹² and excommunicated individuals⁸¹³ are kicked out of the community and are deprived of means of livelihood.

by law and the wealthy must give the surplus of their wealth to the needy themselves,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 135.

⁸¹⁰ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 134.

⁸¹¹ “God hath imposed a fine on every adulterer and adulteress, to be paid to the House of Justice nine mithqāls of gold, to be doubled if they should repeat the offence . . . Although the term translated here as adultery refers, in its broadest sense, to unlawful sexual intercourse between either married or unmarried individuals (see note 36 for a definition of the term), ‘Abdu’l-Bahā has specified that the punishment here prescribed is for sexual intercourse between persons who are unmarried . . . In relation to the application of the fine, Bahā’u’llāh clearly specifies that each succeeding fine is double the preceding one; thus the fine imposed increases in geometrical progression,” Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 200–202.

⁸¹² “Exile and imprisonment are decreed for the thief, and, on the third offence, place ye a mark upon his brow so that, thus identified, he may not be accepted in the cities of God and His countries,” Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 35–36.

⁸¹³ No one is allowed to speak or interact with these individuals.

6. Must There Be Complete Equality between All People?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: There must be complete equality between all people.⁸¹⁴

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Complete equality is not possible in the community because people have different ranks and are from different classes.⁸¹⁵

7. Has God Made Distinctions between People?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: God has created people without any differences or distinctions.⁸¹⁶

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: People have different degrees of intelligence.⁸¹⁷

⁸¹⁴ “There is equality between people and complete brotherhood. Justice implies that the rights of humankind be protected and preserved and all have equal rights,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

⁸¹⁵ “We must strive for the eternal salvation of humankind. In this respect, laws are needed so [social] classes [and differences] remain and [at the same time] the members of the community be in complete peace. Because a community is like a [military] camp that needs generals, majors, lieutenants, and privates. All members cannot be generals or privates. There must be [different] classes and different ranks are needed,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 138.

⁸¹⁶ “The God of the world created all [humans] from clay and created everyone from one element, created all from one progeny, created all in one land, and created [all] under the shadow of one sky, has created them with common emotions, and did not put any differences. He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42.

⁸¹⁷ “Remedying the means of livelihood for humans is necessary. [This does not] mean equality . . . Humans cannot be all the same because they are different in creation. Some have first-degree intelligence, others have medium intelligence, and others are completely deprived of it. Is it possible for someone who has very high intelligence to be equal to someone who has no intelligence at all,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 134.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is the Equalization of the Means of Livelihood for All Humanity a new principle?

All previous religions and most economic movements, have in one form or another, strived to achieve this goal and to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor. Wishing for this to happen will bear no fruit unless an efficient method is implemented to achieve this goal. The methods put forward by the Baha'i creed are mostly similar to methods already legislated in Islam or proposed by advocates of economic movements. Thus the claim that this principle is novel is baseless.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

We showed a number of Baha'i laws which go against this principle. These, are all a confirmation of the superficiality of this slogan in Baha'ism.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

Equalizing the means of livelihood and narrowing the gap between the rich and the poor is definitely logical and a wish all humanity and religions had. In the Baha'i creed, it is claimed that the only method which can be used to reach this goal is the one put forward by Bahā'u'llāh. A quick analysis of this method shows that it lacks a means to bridge the gap between the rich and the poor and at most can only help the extremely poverty-stricken.

CHAPTER 7:

Establishment of a Universal House of Justice and Supreme Tribunal⁸¹⁸

“The world is in the need of universal peace. The world will not rest unless universal peace is announced. The governments and nations must create a supreme tribunal to which differences are referred to and that supreme tribunal will settle them.”⁸¹⁹

⁸¹⁸ As we already mentioned in the introduction, `Abdu'l-Bahā mentions the principle of “The Equality of Rights,” as the seventh principle. Since this topic is discussed in detail in the principles of “The Oneness of Humanity” and “The Equality of Men and Women,” we have replaced it with the subject of the Universal House of Justice and the Supreme Tribunal.

⁸¹⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 48.

The Universal House of Justice (UHJ) is an institution made up of nine people who are selected by ballot and work under the supervision of the Guardian of the Cause of God. The supreme tribunal is a committee which governs all world affairs with representatives from all nations of the world.

The Universal House of Justice (UHJ) is the highest governing body of the Baha'i administrative organization. Its establishment was originally proposed by Bahā'u'llāh but he failed to establish it. After Bahā'u'llāh, `Abdu'l-Bahā too tried in vain to establish it. Shoghi aspired to achieve this goal but he also failed. Even with all the spiritual and material sources at their disposal, the Baha'i prophet, the interpreter of his words, and the Guardian of the Cause of God, all failed to realize this dream.

The Baha'i community is administrated using two complementary sources. The first is in charge of legislation which is made up of the following:

- The rulers and constitutions of the nations Baha'is reside in
- Bahā'u'llāh's orders and writings
- The Universal House of Justice.

The second is in charge of interpreting and paraphrasing Baha'i laws and orders and consists of `Abdu'l-Bahā and after him the Guardians of the Cause of God who are Shoghi⁸²⁰ and his male descendants.⁸²¹

We will now proceed with analyzing the groups which constitute these sources.

⁸²⁰ "Bahā'u'llāh designated `Abdu'l-Bahā, His eldest Son, as His Successor and the Interpreter of His Teachings. `Abdu'l-Bahā in His turn appointed His eldest grandson, Shoghi Effendi, to succeed Him as interpreter of the holy Writ and Guardian of the Cause. The interpretations of `Abdu'l-Bahā and Shoghi Effendi are considered divinely guided and are binding on the Bahā'īs," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 221.

⁸²¹ "O my loving friends! After the passing away of this wronged one, it is incumbent upon the Aghsān (Branches), the Afnān (Twigs) of the Sacred Lote-Tree, the Hands (pillars) of the Cause of God and the loved ones of the Abhā Beauty to turn unto Shoghi Effendi—the youthful branch branched from the two hallowed and sacred Lote-Trees and the fruit grown from the union of the two offshoots of the Tree of Holiness,—as he is the sign of God, the chosen branch, the Guardian of the Cause of God, he unto whom all the Aghsān, the Afnān, the Hands of the Cause of God and His loved ones must turn. He is the Interpreter of the Word of God and after him will succeed the first-born of his lineal descendents," `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

1- Rulers and National Constitutions

As opposed to all other religions, Baha'is must adhere to the orders of the kings and governments they live in regardless of whether these laws are correct, incorrect, moral, or oppressive. Bahā'u'llāh argues that since God has granted the kings and rulers authority over their lands, no one is allowed to oppose or disobey them:

God Mighty and Majestic be He, has granted the evident lands to the rulers. No one is allowed to oppose the verdict of the heads of the country.⁸²²

Every nation must have a high regard for the position of its sovereign, must be submissive unto him, must carry out his behests, and hold fast his authority. The sovereigns of the earth have been and are the manifestations of the power, the grandeur and the majesty of God.⁸²³

‘Abdu’l-Bahā too, orders Baha'is to obey the rulers and kings:

No movement—minor or major—must be made without the consent and permission of the government. Whoever makes the slightest movement without the permission of the government will have disobeyed the Blessed Affair (meaning the Baha'i creed) and no excuse will be accepted from him. God's definite order is that the government must be obeyed. This [order] neither needs to be paraphrased nor interpreted. An example of obeying the government is this: not a single word can be published without the government's permission. The duty of God's Friends is to obey and submit to the ⁸²² Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 324.

⁸²³ Bahā'u'llāh, Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, p. 89.

government whether [that government is] a state or constitutional.⁸²⁴

According to Baha'i teachings, government orders must be preferred over Baha'i laws:

The laws revealed by Bahā'u'llāh in the Aqdas are, whenever practicable and not in direct conflict with the Civil Law of the land, absolutely binding on every believer or Bahā'ī institution whether in the East or in the West.⁸²⁵

This means that regardless of the government being just or unjust, right or wrong, Baha'is must adhere to its rules and orders even if it means disobeying their own religious decrees!

Although `Abdu'l-Bahā had declared that "God's definite order is that the government must be obeyed. This [order] neither needs to be paraphrased or interpreted," and neither him nor Bahā'u'llāh had announced any exception with regard to this law, Shoghi insists on implementing his own interpretation of these words. Shoghi claims that governments must only be obeyed if they impose limits on Baha'i administrative affairs. In matters of belief no compromise is allowed and Baha'is must disobey the government even if they are killed or banished:

Obedience to the state is so vital a principal of the Cause that should the authorities in . . . [sic] decide to-day to prevent the Baha'is from holding any meeting or publishing any literature they should obey . . . [sic] But, as already pointed out, such an allegiance is confined merely to administrative matters which if checked can only retard the progress of the Faith for some time. In matters of belief, however, no compromise whatever ⁸²⁴ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 75, pp. 463–464.

⁸²⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 6.

should be allowed, even though the outcome of it be death or expulsion (From a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an individual believer, February 11, 1934).⁸²⁶

According to the government rules of some countries, Baha'is are not allowed to teach or preach their religion amongst non-Baha'is. These orders are blatantly ignored by the Baha'i community under the disguise of discrimination and freedom of religion. Ironically, Baha'is gladly oblige to similar laws in Israel.

2- Bahā'u'llāh's Orders and Writings

The laws legislated by Bahā'u'llāh are incomplete and address very few issues. To remedy this shortcoming, Bahā'u'llāh has put it up to the UHJ to fill in the gaps regarding the laws that he had not decreed:

It is incumbent upon the Trustees of the House of Justice to take counsel together regarding those things which have not outwardly been revealed in the Book, and to enforce that which is agreeable to them. God will verily inspire them with whatsoever He willeth.⁸²⁷

For instance, the punishment for robbery has been declared to be:

Exile and imprisonment are decreed for the thief, and, on the third offence, place ye a mark upon his brow so that, thus identified, he may not be accepted in the cities of God and His countries.⁸²⁸

⁸²⁶ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXIX, no. 1455.

⁸²⁷ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1991 [first pocket-size edition]), p. 23.

⁸²⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 35–36.

But nothing has been said about the conditions of the thief and the severity of his actions that lead to such punishments. The order given to Baha'is is:

All details concerning the nature of the mark, how the mark is to be applied, how long it must be worn, on what conditions it may be removed, as well as the seriousness of various degrees of theft have been left by Bahā'u'llāh for the Universal House of Justice to determine when the law is applied.⁸²⁹

According to Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'u'llāh's laws are incomplete:

Severed from the no less essential institution of the Universal House of Justice this same System of the Will of `Abdu'l-Bahā would be paralyzed in its action and would be powerless to fill in those gaps which the Author of the Kitāb-i-Aqdas has deliberately left in the body of His legislative and administrative ordinances.⁸³⁰

With Bahā'u'llāh's laws and orders incomplete and limited to only a few subjects, the UHJ is the only body that remains that can have a meaningful effect on the everyday lives of Baha'is.

If the laws brought by this new creed are incomplete and must be completed by a group of people who are perfectly capable of committing mistakes, then what advantage does this religion have over ordinary legislative bodies in every country that consist of a number of fallible lawmakers? What problem has this creed solved?

3- Universal House of Justice

⁸²⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 198.

⁸³⁰ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 148.

The Universal House of Justice is the supreme governing body of the Baha'i creed and constitutes of nine members. The next governing body is the National Spiritual Assembly that is responsible for the administration of the Baha'is of a country. Next in rank are the Regional Baha'i councils that act under the supervision of the National Spiritual Assemblies. The lowest level of governance is performed by the Local Spiritual Assemblies.

Members of each of the aforementioned institutions are selected by ballot. All these institutions were originally referred to as Houses of Justice by Bahā'u'llāh but were given other names later on:

The Lord hath ordained that in every city a House of Justice be established wherein shall gather counsellors to the number of Bahā, and should it exceed this number it doth not matter.⁸³¹

The Universal House of Justice can legislate new Baha'i laws but may not alter the scriptural laws defined by Bahā'u'llāh and 'Abdu'l-Bahā'. Baha'is regard the decrees of the UHJ to be divine and free from error:

And now, concerning the House of Justice which God hath ordained as the source of all good and freed from all error, it must be elected by universal suffrage, that is, by the believers.⁸³²

The duties and method of administration of the UHJ are as follows:

By this House is meant the Universal House of Justice, that is, in all countries, a secondary House of Justice must be instituted, and these secondary Houses of Justice must elect the members of the Universal one. Unto this body all things must be referred. It enacteth all ordinances and regulations that are not to be found in the explicit Holy Text. By this body all the difficult problems are to be resolved and the guardian of the Cause of God is its sacred head and the distinguished member for life of that body. Should he not attend in person its deliberations, he must appoint one to represent him. Should any of the members commit a sin, injurious to the common weal, the guardian of the Cause of God hath at his own discretion the right to expel him, whereupon the people must elect another one in his stead.⁸³³

⁸³¹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 29.

⁸³² Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'ī Administration (US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1974), p. 10.

No Baha'i member is allowed under any condition to disobey the orders of the UHJ. In many cases, perpetrators have been excommunicated from the Baha'i community.

4- Guardian of the Cause of God

The Guardians of the Cause of God are the legal interpreter and paraphrasers of Bahā'u'llāh's words. `Abdu'l-Bahā was the first of these and after him, this duty was given to Shoghi⁸³⁴ and his male descendants:

O my loving friends! After the passing away of this wronged one, it is incumbent upon the Aghsān (Branches), the Afnān (Twigs) of the Sacred Lote-Tree, the Hands (pillars) of the Cause of God and the loved ones of the Abhā Beauty to turn unto Shoghi Effendi—the youthful branch branched from the two hallowed and sacred Lote-Trees and the fruit grown from the union of the two offshoots of the Tree of Holiness,—as he ⁸³³ Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'ī Administration, p. 10.

⁸³⁴ “Bahā'u'llāh designated `Abdu'l-Bahā, His eldest Son, as His Successor and the Interpreter of His Teachings. `Abdu'l-Bahā in His turn appointed His eldest grandson, Shoghi Effendi, to succeed Him as interpreter of the holy Writ and Guardian of the Cause. The interpretations of `Abdu'l-Bahā and Shoghi Effendi are considered divinely guided and are binding on the Bahā'īs,” Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 221.

is the sign of God, the chosen branch, the Guardian of the Cause of God, he unto whom all the Aghsān, the Afnān, the Hands of the Cause of God and His loved ones must turn. He is the Interpreter of the Word of God and after him will succeed the first-born of his lineal descendents.⁸³⁵

Regarding the Guardian and the UHJ, there are a number of fundamental contradictions and inconsistencies which are literally ignored by the Baha'i community and administration.

The first is about the Baha'i belief that 'Abdu'l-Bahā had superhuman knowledge⁸³⁶ but he failed to foresee the fact that Shoghi was sterile and would have no children, and he erroneously stated that the Guardians are "the first-born of his lineal descendents."⁸³⁷

The second is 'Abdu'l-Bahā's claim that Shoghi (the Guardian) is blessed with unerring guidance:

The sacred and youthful branch, the Guardian of the Cause of God, as well as the Universal House of Justice to be universally elected and established, are both under the care and protection of the Abhā Beauty, under the shelter and unerring guidance of the Exalted One (may my life be offered up for them both). Whatsoever they decide is of God. Whoso obeyeth him not, neither obeyeth them, hath not obeyed God; whoso rebelleth against him and against them hath rebelled against God; whoso opposeth him hath opposed ⁸³⁵ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

⁸³⁶ "He is, above and beyond these appellations, the "Mystery of God"—an expression by which Bahā'u'llāh Himself has chosen to designate Him, and which, while it does not by any means justify us to assign to Him the station of Prophethood, indicates how in the person of 'Abdu'l-Bahā the incompatible characteristics of a human nature and superhuman knowledge and perfection have been blended and are completely harmonized," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

⁸³⁷ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

God; whoso contendeth with them hath contended with God;
whoso disputeth with him hath disputed with God.⁸³⁸

Yet, this unerring guidance was of no use to him and he failed in appointing the next Guardian whilst he was still alive as he had been ordered:

O ye beloved of the Lord! It is incumbent upon the Guardian of the Cause of God to appoint in his own life-time him that shall become his successor, that differences may not arise after his passing.⁸³⁹

The third matter is the Universal House of Justice which can only be run under the supervision of the Guardian of the Cause of God. After Shoghi, the Guardians ceased to exist and the UHJ lacks any legal basis for functioning. Thus in less than a hundred years after Bahā'u'llāh's declaration, his prophecies reached a state of complete unfulfillment and the current UHJ and Baha'i administration have no legitimacy whatsoever.⁸⁴⁰ Shoghi explains it more clearly:

This new Order which is superior to the void sickly orders of the world and is unique, unparalleled, and unheard of throughout the history of religions, is based on two powerful pillars: the first which is greater is the pillar of divine Guardianship that is the source of interpretations and the second pillar is the divine Universal House of Justice that is the reference of legislation. Just as it is impossible to separate between the laws of the Legislator of the Order (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) and his fundamental basis' which the Center of ⁸³⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

⁸³⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 12.

⁸⁴⁰ "The guardian of the Cause of God is its sacred head and the distinguished member for life of that body. Should he not attend in person its deliberations, he must appoint one to represent him," Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'ī Administration, p. 10.

the Covenant has declared, separating the two pillars of the New Order from each-other is impossible and infeasible.⁸⁴¹

Divorced from the institution of the Guardianship the World Order of Bahā'u'llāh would be mutilated and permanently deprived of that hereditary principle which, as 'Abdu'l-Bahā has written, has been invariably upheld by the Law of God. "In all the Divine Dispensations," He states, in a Tablet addressed to a follower of the Faith in Persia, "the eldest son hath been given extraordinary distinctions. Even the station of prophethood hath been his birthright." Without such an institution the integrity of the Faith would be imperiled, and the stability of the entire fabric would be gravely endangered. Its prestige would suffer, the means required to enable it to take a long, an uninterrupted view over a series of generations would be completely lacking, and the necessary guidance to define the sphere of the legislative action of its elected representatives would be totally withdrawn. Severed from the no less essential institution of the Universal House of Justice this same System of the Will of 'Abdu'l-Bahā would be paralyzed in its action and would be powerless to fill in those gaps which the Author of the Kitāb-i-Aqdas has deliberately left in the body of His legislative and administrative ordinances.⁸⁴²

Thus the gaps in Bahā'u'llāh's laws are to remain forever unfilled and his decrees incomplete. The Baha'i system remains paralyzed, the integrity of the faith imperiled, and the necessary guidance to define the sphere of the legislative action of its elected representatives are totally withdrawn! What Shoghi is saying here is that the lack of a ⁸⁴¹ Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt mubāraki khiṭāb bi aḥibbā' sharq (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa 'Arabī, 149 B.[1992]), p. 301.

⁸⁴² Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 148.

Guardian, is the final nail in the coffin of the Baha'i creed . . . even with all these clear clues and errors, Baha'is still propagate their religion with pride and insist that their religion is from God and the sole source of salvation for mankind.

Is a Universal Governing Organization and Tribunal a Novel Idea?

Bahā'u'llāh opines that the system in England seems appropriate for the Baha'i administration:

The system of government which the British people have adopted in London appeareth to be good, for it is adorned with the light of both kingship and of the consultation of the people.⁸⁴³

Would someone who has divine knowledge speak about matters with such doubt, stating that the British system “appeareth to be good”?

It was based on this system that appears good to Bahā'u'llāh, that has both a king and public consultation, that Bahā'u'llāh proposed the UHJ system with the Guardian (as the king) and the elected members for consultation. Thus, as can be seen the method devised by Bahā'u'llāh is merely a copy of the governing system in England. `Abdu'l-Bahā further admits that UHJ membership is based on European parliaments:

If differences occur, the Universal House of Justice must swiftly settle the differences, and whatever the majority expresses [as a decision] is the definite truth. The [members of] House of Justice must be selected using the same ⁸⁴³ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 93.

mechanism and methods that the [members] of parliament in European countries are selected.⁸⁴⁴

Both the system and the selection method of the UHJ are based on British and European governance systems. Thus there is nothing novel in this system, it is merely an imitation of what Bahā'u'llāh and 'Abdu'l-Bahā had observed or heard of after they were banished from Persia. It is strange that even though these two Baha'i figures admit that their method is not new, Shoghi insists that the structures of this twin institution are similar to nothing the world has seen:

The Bahā'ī Commonwealth of the future, of which this vast Administrative Order is the sole framework, is, both in theory and practice, not only unique in the entire history of political institutions, but can find no parallel in the annals of any of the world's recognized religious systems. No form of democratic government; no system of autocracy or of dictatorship, whether monarchical or republican; no intermediary scheme of a purely aristocratic order; nor even any of the recognized types of theocracy, whether it be the Hebrew Commonwealth, or the various Christian ecclesiastical organizations, or the Imamate or the Caliphate in Islām—none of these can be identified or be said to conform with the Administrative Order which the master-hand of its perfect Architect has fashioned.⁸⁴⁵

The pillars that sustain its authority and buttress its structure are the twin institutions of the Guardianship and of the Universal House of Justice. The central, the underlying aim which animates it is the establishment of the New World Order as adumbrated by Bahā'u'llāh. The methods it employs, ⁸⁴⁴ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 501.

⁸⁴⁵ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 152.

the standard it inculcates, incline it to neither East nor West, neither Jew nor Gentile, neither rich nor poor, neither white nor colored.⁸⁴⁶

Baha'is believe that if the whole world—not only Baha'is—establish a Universal House of Justice, world peace would be reached. This global UHJ is referred to as the Supreme or International Tribunal. `Abdu'l-Bahā declares:

From amongst all governments and nations, using general polling, a supreme tribunal must be established. The differences and quarrels between the governments and nations must be settled in that tribunal so that they do not result in war.⁸⁴⁷

He believes that peace and tranquility can only be achieved when this tribunal is established:

Not until the flag of peace is raised and a great universal court of justice is established in which all affairs and differences between governments are settled, the world of creation will not have peace.⁸⁴⁸

The United Nations is an organization which fits the criterion set out by `Abdu'l-Bahā to a great extent and Baha'is have a very close connection to it. Unfortunately, more than sixty-five years after its establishment, the outcome that `Abdu'l-Bahā had envisioned for such an organization has not materialized, and the world, even with all its nations being a part of this tribunal, is still infested with war and oppression and peace is nowhere in sight. These sixty-five years have shown this tribunal has failed the test of time and it cannot—as Baha'is ⁸⁴⁶ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 157.

⁸⁴⁷ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

⁸⁴⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 150.

claim—achieve world peace and tranquility. Yes, this international body might have prevented some wars, but this is nothing new or out of the ordinary, for ever since antiquity, all nations had avoided war through negotiations.

The hope and goal of achieving global peace under the umbrella of a global system is not a matter for Baha'is to show pride in as being something novel or an astounding trait of their creed. It has been and still is the hope of all peaceful movements throughout the world and all divine religions.

Has This Pillar of the Baha'i Creed Been Implemented? Is It Logical and Are the Methods Proposed in It Applicable?

1-What Is Being Addressed: The Problems of the People or the Governments?

When Baha'is say, "from amongst all governments and nations a supreme tribunal must be established," if they are referring to an organization like the United Nations, a fundamental contradiction arises. Such an organization will not necessarily help the people or be of any benefit to them, because the people in the UN represent their respective governments, not their people, and not all governments are truly representative of their people.

The UN resolves the problems between the governments, not the people. In this process, the problem is usually resolved through threats of vetoing, sanctions, and even war, with the outcome of the resolution usually being in favor of a global superpower, not rightness and wrongness. This system is neither rational nor in compliance with divine teachings and justice.

As we already pointed out, even with the establishment of the UN, peace is still nowhere in sight, and neither the UN nor any similar organization proposed by Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā can bring about universal peace.

2- Baha'i Non-Interference in Political Matters.

According to Shoghi, in the future, all the worlds governments will unite under a single nation governed by the Baha'i creed:

Its watchword is the unification of the human race; its standard the "Most Great Peace"; its consummation the advent of that golden millennium—the Day when the kingdoms of this world shall have become the Kingdom of God Himself, the Kingdom of Bahā'u'llāh.⁸⁴⁹

The problem that arises here is that Baha'is believe that political matters are of no concern to them and they have been strictly ordered to refrain from any political interference or activities. This order is so hard to come by that during Shoghi's guardianship, he twisted the orders of his predecessors and announced a modified version of non-interference in politics. This trend continues to this day in the orders given out by the UHJ. The non-interference as put forth by Shoghi gives Baha'is the freedom to vote to political parties on the condition that they are not identified with one party or another:

...no vote cast or office undertaken by a Bahā'ī should necessarily constitute acceptance, by the voter or office holder, of the entire programme of any political party. No Bahā'ī can be regarded as either Republican or Democrat, as such. He is above all else, the supporter of the principles enunciated by Bahā'u'llāh, with which, I am firmly convinced, the programme of no political party is completely harmonious . . . (From a letter of Shoghi Effendi to the National Spiritual ⁸⁴⁹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 157.

Assembly of the United States and Canada, January 26, 1933: Bahā'ī News, No. 85, July, 1934, p. 2)⁸⁵⁰

As regards the non-political character of the Faith,... The friends may vote, if they can do it, without identifying themselves with one party or another. To enter the arena of party politics is surely detrimental to the best interests of the Faith and will harm the Cause. It remains for the individuals to so use their right to vote as to keep aloof from party politics, and always bear in mind that they are voting on the merits of the individual, rather than because he belongs to one party or another. The matter must be made perfectly clear to the individuals, who will be left free to exercise their discretion and judgement. But if a certain person does enter into party politics and labours for the ascendancy of one party over another, and continues to do it against expressed appeals and warnings of the Assembly, then the Assembly has the right to refuse him the right to vote in Bahā'ī elections. (From a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States and Canada, March 16, 1933)⁸⁵¹

The matter of politics as discussed in most English compilations follows the same trend. We will now present the original radical policy of not interfering in politics as taught by `Abdu'l-Bahā and Bahā'u'llāh. This policy sums into the following main points:

- Baha'is are not allowed to participate in political affairs or interfere with them in any way, whether they are right or wrong. They are not even allowed to protest government actions.

⁸⁵⁰ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXIX, no. 1442.

⁸⁵¹ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXIX, no. 1443.

- Baha'is are not allowed to speak about political affairs. Saying a single word has been prohibited, even privately between Baha'is.
- If a Baha'i wants to speak about political matters other Baha'is must prevent him.
- The only thing regarding political matters which Baha'is are allowed to do is to pray and supplicate.
- Even private discussions of political affairs between Baha'is is equal to exiting the Baha'i creed.

`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The differences and agreements between the guardians of [government] affairs is not the business of the friends of God. They must never utter such words. The duty of the friends of God is to obey the orders and laws of his highness the king. What he orders, they must obey. They must completely submit and comply with the [orders of] the guardians of the affairs. If a tension occurs between them it does not concern the friends of God for [their duty is what the Poet Ḥāfiẓ says:] “Ḥāfiẓ, your only duty is to pray.” What we intend [to say] is that the friends of God must not utter a single word about politics because it is not their concern. Rather, they must only be engrossed with their own affairs and servitude [to the cause]. They must inspire about getting close to God and to rise in appeasing Him and be the cause of peace, tranquility, happiness, and joy of the human world. If a single person wants to utter something about the affairs of the leadership or government in the presence of the friends of God, that they (meaning the government) have said so and so or they have done so and so, then the friend of God must answer, “These affairs are not our business, we are the citizens of the ruler and under the protection of his highness the king. The rulers best know how to manage their affairs.” . . . Especially since we have been prohibited from speaking about or interfering in political matters by definite decrees . . . You should make the friends of God understand and realize this subject.⁸⁵²

In one of Bahā'u'llāh's tablets revealed in honor of Ibn Abhar, he says:

If a single person from the friends wants to discuss political affairs at his own home or at other gatherings, then he must first cut all relationships with this Cause, and everyone must know that he [no longer] has any relation with this Cause. It's up to him [to decide].⁸⁵³

He also declares in a tablet revealed in honor of Ibn Aṣḍaq:

The criterion for being or not being a Baha'i is this: whoever interferes in political affairs and utters anything or makes a move outside his duties, then this is reason enough that he is not a Baha'i. No other proof is needed.⁸⁵⁴

ʿAbdu'l-Bahā further iterates:

If any [Baha'i] wants to utter a single word about the affairs of the government or protest about the guardians of [governmental] affairs, others must disagree with him. Because the Cause of God, definitely has not had and does not have any connection with political matters. Political matters are the concern of the guardians of [governmental] affairs, what connection does it have to the souls that must be engaged in perfecting the status and morals and in ⁸⁵² ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, pp. 335–336.

⁸⁵³ ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, p. 336.

⁸⁵⁴ ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, p. 336.

encouraging [in attaining] virtues. Verily, no one must [do anything] outside their duties.⁸⁵⁵

Fifth is general prohibition about doing what incites mischief and causes corruption and interfering in any political affair whatsoever and not to speak about them even by merely moving their lips.⁸⁵⁶

He also says:

Religion is detached from politics. Religion has no access to political matters, rather, religion is related with the world of morals. [Religion] is an inner spiritual affair which is concerned with the heart not the materialistic world. Religious leaders must nurture and teach and promote good morals. They must not interfere in political affairs.⁸⁵⁷

We are not going to elongate this section by listing the real-life hypocritical actions of Baha'is regarding interference in politics. Rather, we will only ask one fundamental question: When all the world and governments become Baha'is, as Bahā'u'llāh has predicted, then who is going to manage the political and governing affairs, because Baha'is have been strictly prohibited from going anywhere near those matters?

3- Infallibility of the Universal House of Justice

All divine religions believe that their laws come directly from God through an Infallible Being that He had appointed. Baha'is believe that the decisions of a few fallible people—who themselves have been selected by another group of fallibles—are free from error and the will of God:

⁸⁵⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, p. 337.

⁸⁵⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, p. 337.

⁸⁵⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

It is incumbent upon the Trustees of the House of Justice to take counsel together regarding those things which have not outwardly been revealed in the Book, and to enforce that which is agreeable to them. God will verily inspire them with whatsoever He willeth, and He, verily, is the Provider, the Omniscient.⁸⁵⁸

Inasmuch as for each day there is a new problem and for every problem an expedient solution, such affairs should be referred to the Ministers of the House of Justice that they may act according to the needs and requirements of the time. They that, for the sake of God, arise to serve His Cause, are the recipients of divine inspiration from the unseen Kingdom. It is incumbent upon all to be obedient unto them.⁸⁵⁹

For instance, the Universal House of Justice, if it be established under the necessary conditions - with members elected from all the people - that House of Justice will be under the protection and the unerring guidance of God. If that House of Justice shall decide unanimously, or by a majority, upon any question not mentioned in the Book, that decision and command will be guarded from mistake.⁸⁶⁰

It is logically unacceptable to believe that a group of error prone people⁸⁶¹ will always reach an error-free judgment. Even though the official Baha'i version insists on the absolute correctness of the decisions of the UHJ, Shoghi begs to differ:

⁸⁵⁸ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 23.

⁸⁵⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 90–91.

⁸⁶⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 172.

⁸⁶¹ One of the duties of the Guardian of the Cause is to relieve of duty any sinful member of the UHJ: "Should any of the members commit a sin, injurious to the common weal, the guardian of the Cause of God hath at his own discretion the right to expel him, whereupon the people must elect another one in his stead," Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'ī Administration, p. 10.

Though the Guardian of the Faith has been made the permanent head of so august a body he can never, even temporarily, assume the right of exclusive legislation. He cannot override the decision of the majority of his fellow-members, but is bound to insist upon a reconsideration by them of any enactment he conscientiously believes to conflict with the meaning and to depart from the spirit of Bahā'u'llāh's revealed utterances.⁸⁶²

The last sentence clearly and in explicit terms shows that the UHJ can make mistakes and even reach conclusions that are in conflict with Bahā'u'llāh's words. Is Shoghi the final piece of this organization which gives it, its unique infallibility? If yes, then even by Baha'i standards, the UHJ is still fallible because a Guardian of the Cause of God does not exist.

4- Legitimacy of the Universal House of Justice Depends on the Existence of the Guardian of the Cause of God

In his will, 'Abdu'l-Bahā orders all Baha'is to follow Shoghi and the other Guardians of the Cause who are his descendants one after the other (bikran ba'da biki). He warns that disobeying this order will be a breach in the cause of God and will subvert His Word.⁸⁶³ According to these strict orders, the UHJ is only be legitimate if it is under the governance and supervision of the Guardian of the Cause of God. The creed will only remain safe and impregnable if the Guardian is obeyed:

The mighty stronghold shall remain impregnable and safe through obedience to him who is the Guardian of the Cause of God. It is incumbent upon the members of the House of Justice, upon all the Aghsān, the Afnān, the Hands of the ⁸⁶² Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 150.

⁸⁶³ 'Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

Cause of God to show their obedience, submissiveness and subordination unto the Guardian of the Cause of God, to turn unto him and be lowly before him.⁸⁶⁴

The Guardian is inseparable⁸⁶⁵ from the UHJ and all Baha'is including the members of the UHJ must obey him. As we previously mentioned, one of his duties is to expel any member of the UHJ who commits a sin, another duty of the Guardian is to prevent any decision which he sees being against Bahā'u'llāh's teachings. We ask again: If the UHJ is infallible then why does the Guardian have to make sure It's decisions are in accordance with the teachings of the cause? And why is the Guardian allowed to veto these decisions? If the infallibility of the UHJ is dependent on the existence of the Guardian, then why do Baha'is insist the current UHJ is infallible even without a Guardian?

The Guardianship is so important that Shoghi stresses time after time that it is virtually inseparable from the UHJ:

This new Order which is superior to the void sickly orders of the world and is unique, unparalleled, and unheard of throughout the history of religions, is based on two powerful pillars: the first which is greater is the pillar of divine Guardianship that is the source of interpretations and the second pillar is the divine Universal House of Justice that is the reference of legislation. Just as it is impossible to separate between the laws of the Legislator of the Order (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) and his fundamental basis' which the Center of the Covenant has declared, separating the two pillars of the New Order from each-other is impossible and infeasible.⁸⁶⁶

⁸⁶⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

⁸⁶⁵ "the Guardian of the Faith has been made the permanent head of so august a body," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 150.

⁸⁶⁶ Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt mubāraki khiṭāb bi aḥibbā' sharq (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa `Arabī, 149 B.[1992]), p. 301.

Shoghi even goes on to say that the Guardian has the ability to foresee the future and defines the guidance of the legislative actions of the elected members:

Without such an institution [meaning the Guardian] the integrity of the Faith would be imperiled, and the stability of the entire fabric would be gravely endangered. Its prestige would suffer, the means required to enable it to take a long, an uninterrupted view over a series of generations would be completely lacking, and the necessary guidance to define the sphere of the legislative action of its elected representatives would be totally withdrawn.⁸⁶⁷

The credibility of the claim that the Guardian has “an interrupted view over a series of generations,” can be seen in the fact that Shoghi could not even foresee his own death and died without leaving a will or appointing a successor.

`Abdu'l-Bahā wills that after Shoghi the station of the Guardian of the Cause of God belongs to Shoghi's eldest son and continues likewise in the next generations. If the eldest son does not possess the necessary spiritual traits to take such a position then the Guardian must appoint another one of his male offspring:

O ye beloved of the Lord! It is incumbent upon the Guardian of the Cause of God to appoint in his own life-time him that shall become his successor, that differences may not arise after his passing. He that is appointed must manifest in himself detachment from all worldly things, must be the essence of purity, must show in himself the fear of God, knowledge, wisdom and learning. Thus, should the first-born of the Guardian of the Cause of God not manifest in himself the truth of the words:—“The child is the secret essence of its sire,” that is, should he not inherit of the spiritual within him (the Guardian of the Cause of God) and his glorious lineage not be matched with a goodly character, then must he, (the Guardian of the Cause of God) choose another branch to succeed him.⁸⁶⁸

⁸⁶⁷ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 148.

Neither Bahā'u'llāh, nor `Abdu'l-Bahā, and not even Shoghi himself, with their claimed superhuman knowledge⁸⁶⁹ and divine inspirations had predicted that Shoghi was sterile and incapable of bearing offspring. Thus, after the demise of Shoghi in 1957, the Baha'i creed—once and for all—lost its greatest inseparable pillar of credibility and remains without a Guardian to date. According to what we put forward from the sayings of the three most important Baha'i figures, the UHJ is no longer legitimate and lacks any legal basis of functioning whatsoever.

After Shoghi's death, a group of prominent Baha'is under the guidance of Shoghi's wife (Ruhiyyih), organized a conference in 1963 in which they selected nine people as the members of the Universal House of Justice who immediately started work in Haifa, Israel. This trend continues to this day without any legal basis.

Baha'is claim that the creation of the UHJ is completely justified and the nine body governing council fulfills the role of the Guardian too. Those who utter these words should again read what Shoghi had openly announced:

It should be stated, at the very outset, in clear and unambiguous language, that these twin institutions of the Administrative Order of Bahā'u'llāh should be regarded as divine in origin, essential in their functions and complementary in their aim and purpose.⁸⁷⁰

⁸⁶⁸ Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'ī Administration, p. 8.

⁸⁶⁹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

⁸⁷⁰ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 148.

Neither can, nor will ever, infringe upon the sacred and prescribed domain of the other. Neither will seek to curtail the specific and undoubted authority with which both have been divinely invested.⁸⁷¹

These two pillars complement each-other and neither can interfere in the domain of the other. Shoghi further stresses that the separation of these two pillars is under no condition allowed or attainable:

Separating the two pillars of the New Order from each-other is impossible and infeasible.⁸⁷²

The matters regarding the UHJ and the Guardian have confused the Baha'is to such an extent that they have uttered all kinds of strange interpretations and justifications. We advise these people to carefully refer to the closing statement of `Abdu'l-Bahā's will:

Beware lest anyone falsely interpret these words, and like unto them that have broken the Covenant after the Day of Ascension (of Bahā'u'llāh) advance a pretext, raise the standard of revolt, wax stubborn and open wide the door of false interpretation. To none is given the right to put forth his own opinion or express his particular conviction. All must seek guidance and turn unto the Center of the Cause and the House of Justice.⁸⁷³

In any case, after the death of Shoghi the Baha'i community plunged in a state of turmoil and discord. Two distinct groups struggled to introduce themselves as the righteous successors of Shoghi. The first group was under the directorship of Shoghi's widow, Ruhyyih and the second headed by the then president of the International Baha'i ⁸⁷¹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 150.

⁸⁷² Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt mubāraki khiṭāb bi aḥibbā' sharq, p. 301.

⁸⁷³ Shoghi Effendi, Bahā'ī Administration, p. 12..

Council, who was a man by the name of Charles Mason Remey. Remey challenged the creation of the UHJ by Rūḥiyyih and announced that he was the righteous Guardian of the Cause.

Currently, the followers of Rūḥiyyih and the followers of Remey are in a state of enmity and feud and neither recognizes the authority of the other. Baha'is regard the followers of Remey as heretics and covenant breakers and prohibit their followers from socializing with them. On the other hand, at every opportunity, the followers of Remey announce that they are the true followers of the Orthodox Baha'i faith and the Haifan UHJ is illegal.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”⁸⁷⁴

⁸⁷⁴Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is the Structure of the UHJ Novel?

Shoghi: The Baha'i administrative system is unique.⁸⁷⁵

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: Copy the British⁸⁷⁶ and European⁸⁷⁷ administration systems.

2. Are the Decisions of the UHJ Free from Error?

Shoghi, `Abdu'l-Bahā, and Bahā'u'llāh: The UHJ is under the protection of the unerring guidance of God.⁸⁷⁸

Shoghi: If the members of the UHJ make an erroneous decision, the Guardian must correct them.⁸⁷⁹

⁸⁷⁵ "The Bahā'ī Commonwealth of the future, of which this vast Administrative Order is the sole framework, is, both in theory and practice, not only unique in the entire history of political institutions, but can find no parallel in the annals of any of the world's recognized religious systems. No form of democratic government; no system of autocracy or of dictatorship, whether monarchical or republican; no intermediary scheme of a purely aristocratic order; nor even any of the recognized types of theocracy, whether it be the Hebrew Commonwealth, or the various Christian ecclesiastical organizations, or the Imamate or the Caliphate in Islām—none of these can be identified or be said to conform with the Administrative Order which the master-hand of its perfect Architect has fashioned," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 152. "The methods it employs, the standard it inculcates, incline it to neither East nor West, neither Jew nor Gentile, neither rich nor poor, neither white nor colored," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 157.

⁸⁷⁶ "The system of government which the British people have adopted in London appeareth to be good, for it is adorned with the light of both kingship and of the consultation of the people," Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 93.

⁸⁷⁷ "The [members of] House of Justice must be selected using the same mechanism and methods that the [members] of parliament in European countries are selected," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 501.

⁸⁷⁸ "God will verily inspire them with whatsoever He willeth," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 23; "They that, for the sake of God, arise to serve His Cause, are the recipients of divine inspiration from the unseen Kingdom," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 90–91; and "House of Justice will be under the protection and the unerring guidance of God . . . decision and command will be guarded from mistake," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 172.

⁸⁷⁹ "He cannot override the decision of the majority of his fellow-members, but is bound to insist upon a reconsideration by them of any enactment he conscientiously believes to conflict with the meaning and to depart from the spirit of Bahā'u'llāh's revealed utterances," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 150.

3. Is It Possible to Separate the Guardian from the Universal House of Justice?

Shoghi: The Guardian is inseparable from the Universal House of Justice.⁸⁸⁰

Baha'ism in its current state lacks any credibility because it has no Guardian.

4. Are Baha'is Allowed to Participate in Political Matters?

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā: Baha'is must not interfere in political and government matters and must not utter a single word about political matters, even privately amongst themselves. Who that does so is not a Baha'i.⁸⁸¹

Shoghi: Baha'is are allowed to vote to political parties.⁸⁸²

⁸⁸⁰ "This new Order which is superior to the void sickly orders of the world and is unique, unparalleled, and unheard of throughout the history of religions, is based on two powerful pillars: the first which is greater is the pillar of divine Guardianship that is the source of interpretations and the second pillar is the divine Universal House of Justice that is the reference of legislation. Just as it is impossible to separate between the laws of the Legislator of the Order (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) and his fundamental basis' which the Center of the Covenant has declared, separating the two pillars of the New Order from each-other is impossible and infeasible," Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt mubāraki khiṭāb bi aḥibbā' sharq, p. 301.

⁸⁸¹ "The friends of God must not utter a single word about politics because it is not their concern," "we have been prohibited from speaking about or interfering in political matters by definite decrees." "If a single person from the friends wants to discuss political affairs at his own home or at other gatherings, then he must first cut all relationships with this Cause, and everyone must know that he [no longer] has any relation with this Cause. It's up to him [to decide]," "If any [Baha'i] wants to utter a single word about the affairs of the government or protest about the guardians of [governmental] affairs, others must disagree with him," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīni-y-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, pp. 335–337.

⁸⁸² "As regards the non-political character of the Faith,... The friends may vote, if they can do it, without identifying themselves with one party or another," Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXIX, no. 1443.

5. Who Will Govern the Baha'i Kingdom?

Shoghi: Baha'is will rule the world.⁸⁸³

`Abdu'l-Bahā and Bahā'u'llāh: Baha'is must not interfere in political and government matters and must not utter a single word about political matters, even privately amongst themselves. Who does so is not a Baha'i.⁸⁸⁴

6. Obeying the Government

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Obey the Government in all matters. This order needs no interpretation.⁸⁸⁵

Shoghi: Disobey government orders in matters of faith even if the result is your death or banishment.⁸⁸⁶

⁸⁸³ "Its watchword is the unification of the human race; its standard the "Most Great Peace"; its consummation the advent of that golden millennium—the Day when the kingdoms of this world shall have become the Kingdom of God Himself, the Kingdom of Bahā'u'llāh," Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 157.

⁸⁸⁴ "The friends of God must not utter a single word about politics because it is not their concern," "we have been prohibited from speaking about or interfering in political matters by definite decrees." "If a single person from the friends wants to discuss political affairs at his own home or at other gatherings, then he must first cut all relationships with this Cause, and everyone must know that he [no longer] has any relation with this Cause. It's up to him [to decide]," "If any [Baha'i] wants to utter a single word about the affairs of the government or protest about the guardians of [governmental] affairs, others must disagree with him," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 52, pp. 335–337.

⁸⁸⁵ "No movement—minor or major—must be made without the consent and permission of the government. Whoever makes the slightest movement without the permission of the government will have disobeyed the Blessed Affair (meaning the Baha'i creed) and no excuse will be accepted from him. God's definite order is that the government must be obeyed. This [order] neither needs to be paraphrased or interpreted. An example of obeying the government is this: not a single word can be published without the government's permission. The duty of God's Friends is to obey and submit to the government whether [that government is] a state or constitutional," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 75, p. 463–464.

⁸⁸⁶ "Obedience to the state is so vital a principal of the Cause that should the authorities in . . . [sic] decide to-day to prevent the Baha'is from holding any meeting or publishing any literature they should obey . . . [sic] But, as already pointed out, such an allegiance is confined merely to administrative matters which if checked can only retard the progress of the Faith for some time. In matters of belief, however, no compromise whatever should be allowed, even though the outcome of it be death or expulsion(From a letter written on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an

7. Baha'i Prophecies Fulfilled?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: The guardians are Shoghi's lineal descendants.⁸⁸⁷

But, Shoghi dies and leaves behind no descendants!

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Shoghi must appoint the next Guardian whilst alive.⁸⁸⁸

But, Shoghi dies without appointing a Guardian.

Shoghi: The Guardian is inseparable from the UHJ.⁸⁸⁹ individual believer, February 11, 1934),” Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XXXIX, no. 1455.

But, A Guardian no longer exists!

⁸⁸⁷ “O my loving friends! After the passing away of this wronged one, it is incumbent upon the Aghsān (Branches), the Afnān (Twigs) of the Sacred Lote-Tree, the Hands (pillars) of the Cause of God and the loved ones of the Abhā Beauty to turn unto Shoghi Effendi . . . He is the Interpreter of the Word of God and after him will succeed the first-born of his lineal descendents,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 11.

⁸⁸⁸ “O ye beloved of the Lord! It is incumbent upon the Guardian of the Cause of God to appoint in his own life-time him that shall become his successor, that differences may not arise after his passing,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, p. 12.

⁸⁸⁹ “the Guardian of the Faith has been made the permanent head of so august a body,” Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 150; “This new Order which is superior to the void sickly orders of the world and is unique, unparalleled, and unheard of throughout the history of religions, is based on two powerful pillars: the first which is greater is the pillar of divine Guardianship that is the source of interpretations and the second pillar is the divine Universal House of Justice that is the reference of legislation. Just as it is impossible to separate between the laws of the Legislator of the Order (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) and his fundamental basis' which the Center of the Covenant has declared, separating the two pillars of the New Order from each-other is impossible and infeasible,” Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī'āt mubāraki khiṭāb bi aḥibbā' sharq (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa `Arabī, 149 B.[1992]), p. 301; “Divorced from the institution of the Guardianship the World Order of Bahā'u'llāh would be mutilated and permanently deprived of that hereditary principle which, as `Abdu'l-Bahā has written, has been invariably upheld by the Law of God . . . Without such an institution the integrity of the Faith would be imperiled, and the stability of the entire fabric would be gravely endangered. Its prestige would suffer, the means required to enable it to take a long, an uninterrupted view over a series of generations would be completely lacking, and the necessary guidance to define the sphere of the legislative action of its elected representatives would be totally withdrawn. Severed from the no less essential institution of the Universal House of Justice this same System of the Will of `Abdu'l-Bahā would be paralyzed in its action and would be powerless to fill in those gaps which the Author of the Kitāb-i-Aqdas has deliberately left in the body of His legislative and administrative ordinances.” Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 148.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Are the Universal House of Justice and a Supreme Tribunal Novel?

Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā had given orders for the Universal House of Justice to be based on British and European administrative systems. Thus they cannot claim that their administrative system is in any way novel.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

According to Bahā'u'llāh, `Abdu'l-Bahā, and Shoghi's strict orders and directives, the Universal House of Justice is only legal if it is headed by the Guardian of the Cause. After Shoghi the Guardian ceased to exist and this principle is no longer applicable. Before Baha'is preach the establishment of a Supreme tribunal, they should first resolve their inner problems and then postulate that their teachings are the only hope for establishing world peace.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

Baha'is claim that the Universal House of Justice is infallible. How can the decisions of an institute made of up a group of fallible people who have in turn been selected by another group of fallible people be free from error?! The exact same trend exists in all parliaments and poll-based decision making circles and none have ever claimed that their decisions are final and free from error. If the infallibility of the UHJ is a result of it being headed by the Guardian of the Cause, then even by this standard the UHJ is fallible since it is being operated without the supervision of a Guardian.

Thus claiming that this body is infallible and its decisions final is in no way reasonable.

CHAPTER 8:

Universal Compulsory Education

“The eighth principle of his highness Bahā’u’llāh is that education of all [people] is essential. It is necessary that the guidelines and laws of education be the same [everywhere] so that all humankind are given identical education. This means education and nurturing must be the same in all schools. All elements and methods must be the same so that the oneness of humanity is established in the hearts from an early age.”⁸⁹⁰

⁸⁹⁰ `Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 148.

The definition of Universal Compulsory Education means all the people of the world must forcefully be identically educated using the exact same methods and curriculum.

Bahā'u'llāh says:

Knowledge is as wings to man's life, and a ladder for his ascent. Its acquisition is incumbent upon everyone.⁸⁹¹

⁸⁹¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, p. 26.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā follows his father’s footsteps and declares that education is compulsory for all:

Educating and nurturing is compulsory by the Blessed Beauty’s definite decree. Whoever neglects [this order] will be deprived of [God’s] great bounties.⁸⁹²

In this new era, [it has been mentioned] in God’s book that educating and nurturing is a compulsory matter, not optional. This means that it is absolutely mandatory for fathers and mothers to endeavor to educate and nurture girls and boys to the utmost extent.⁸⁹³

If a family lacks the means to educate their offspring, the expenses must be provided from public funds:

Every child must be educated as much as needed. If the parents can pay for its expenses, that is great. If not, the community must prepare the necessary means for the child’s education.⁸⁹⁴

‘Abdu’l-Bahā further stresses that these orders must not be forsaken:

Regarding [these orders] no weakness must be shown and they must not be neglected. If the child is killed it is definitely better than it being left ignorant. For the innocent child will be infested with all kinds of imperfections and will be questioned by the Lord and interrogated and will be dispraised and rejected by the people.⁸⁹⁵

⁸⁹² ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 214.

⁸⁹³ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 214–215.

⁸⁹⁴ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 109.

⁸⁹⁵ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 334.

If the parents neglect this most greatest matter, which has been revealed by the pen of the Ancient Lord (Mālik Qidam) in the Book of Aqdas, they will be deprived of the right of fatherhood and will be regarded guilty by God.⁸⁹⁶ ⁸⁹⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 214.

Is This Principle of Universal Compulsory Education Novel?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā claims:

Bahā’u’llāh declares that all mankind should attain knowledge and acquire an education. This is a necessary principle of religious belief and observance, characteristically new in this dispensation.⁸⁹⁷

Hundreds of years before Bahā’u’llāh was born, the necessity of education and it being compulsory, had been brought up by philosophers like Plato (427–348 BC) and Aristotle (384–322 BC). The first official movements in support of compulsory education were during the reforms of the sixteenth century Christian monk, Martin Luther.

During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and after the industrial revolution, European countries had come to the conclusion that education was fundamental to development and advancement. The modern schooling system was introduced in Germany during the eighteenth century and was soon adopted in other European countries. In the nineteenth century, non-European countries like Japan and the United States adopted a policy of compulsory primary school education.

Apart from philosophical recommendations and national constitutions, divine religions have been a source of promoting education and the acquisition of knowledge ever since antiquity. Education and seeking knowledge were greatly emphasized in the scripture of Shia Islam. Can we believe that Bahā'u'llāh had not seen these clear orders while he was in Persia?

⁸⁹⁷ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

The introductory chapters of many Shia narration collections like al-Kāfī and Biḥār al-anwār are related to the topics of acquiring knowledge and education. Seeking knowledge was advocated even if it resulted in travelling to faraway lands. The Prophet Muḥammad has stated:

Seek knowledge even if it is located in China.⁸⁹⁸

Education was so important in Islamic teachings that the Prophet of Islam had explicitly decreed:

Acquiring knowledge is compulsory for every man and woman.⁸⁹⁹

With these clear narrations existing in the Shia corpus, why do Baha'is insist their principles are novel? As usual, `Abdu'l-Bahā contradicts himself and admits:

The honored prophets have come to nurture and educate mankind, to turn men into the manifestation of light, inform them about the truth of secrets, and to elevate the human world materialistically and spiritually.⁹⁰⁰

⁸⁹⁸ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 1, p.180.

⁸⁹⁹ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 1, p.170.

⁹⁰⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 99.

Did the Founders of Baha'ism Implement the Principle of Universal Compulsory Education?

1- Baha'is and Compulsory Education

`Abdu'l-Bahā had insisted that all people everywhere should be educated using the exact same manner and system:

It is necessary that the guidelines and laws of education be the same [everywhere] so that all humankind are given the same education. This means education and nurturing must be the same in all schools. All elements and methods must be the same.⁹⁰¹

This method has not been implemented in Baha'i communities to any extent. Baha'is receive the same tutoring and education that all non-Baha'is receive. There exists no compulsion nor equality in the methods and degrees of education a Baha'i receives. Since this teaching is completely impractical using the aforementioned format, `Abdu'l-Bahā changed his mind and announced that there is no need for equal methods and degrees of education for all, rather education must be according to capacity:

⁹⁰¹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 148.

Among other teachings and principles Bahā'u'llāh counsels the education of all members of society. No individual should be denied or deprived of intellectual training, although each should receive according to capacity. None must be left in the grades of ignorance, for ignorance is a defect in the human world. All mankind must be given a knowledge of science and philosophy—that is, as much as may be deemed necessary. All cannot be scientists and philosophers, but each should be educated according to his needs and deserts.⁹⁰²

There is nothing exciting or outstanding about this order. All systems of education have been and still are based on the capacity of the student. How `Abdu'l-Bahā hadn't come by this order in the first place—with all his superhuman knowledge—is a question that the Baha'is must answer.

2- The Bābī Meaning of Education

The predecessor of Bahā'u'llāh, had he succeeded in spreading his creed, would have limited education to a few mere topics uttered in his own books. For he had given orders to destroy all non-Bābī books,⁹⁰³ had prohibited teaching anything but the Bayān,⁹⁰⁴ and had prohibited owning more than nineteen books.⁹⁰⁵ The leader of a creed that goes about claiming that a single letter from these laws is more dear to him

⁹⁰² `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p.108.

⁹⁰³ "Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this order (meaning the Bab's creed)," The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 6, chap. 6.

⁹⁰⁴ "Teaching a book other than the book of Bayān is not allowed unless it has in it what is related to theology (kalām). [Teaching] those [sciences] which have been invented such as logic (manṭiq), principles [of Jurisprudence] (uṣūl), and other [sciences], is not permitted for those who have faith," The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 4, chap. 10.

⁹⁰⁵ "You have been prohibited in the Bayān from having more than nineteen books. If you do so, you will be fined 19 mithqāls of gold," The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 11, chap. 7.

than everything that is in the skies and the earth,⁹⁰⁶ cannot exactly boast about being a promoter of education.

3- Education and Nurturing Will Not Dispel Ignorance

In the Baha'i creed the criterion for ignorance and non-ignorance is not education. The criterion is accepting Baha'ism or rejecting it. We will repeat here what we have quoted many times:

If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word 'yes' (meaning does not become a Baha'i), the Lord will not pay attention to him (ladī l-Haqq madhkūr na) and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people.⁹⁰⁷

From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha'is).⁹⁰⁸

The general criterion is what we mentioned and any soul who has success in it, meaning recognizes and realizes the Sunrise of Manifestation (meaning himself), will be mentioned in the Divine Book as someone who possesses reason or else he will be (mentioned as) ignorant even if he himself thinks that his reason equals that of the whole world.⁹⁰⁹

⁹⁰⁶ "I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

⁹⁰⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111.

⁹⁰⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', pp. 138–139.

⁹⁰⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 Badī'), vol. 7, p. 160. In the scanned image of this book available at reference.bahai.org this page has been incorrectly replaced with the same page from vol. 8 of the book. The typed file in Microsoft Word format does not have this error.

4- The Outcome of the Education Baha'i Leaders Received

As we showed in Chapter 4, the result of the education Baha'i leaders received was the utterance of facts that were contrary to established sciences like physics, history, biology, and astrology. For example, they believe aliens live on all stars and planets, some creatures are created by spontaneous generation, and that Bahā'u'llāh was the creator of multiple Gods.

5- The Manners of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā as Two Examples of Baha'i Education and Nurturing

Bahā'u'llāh's manners are a clear example of the intended result of Baha'i education and nurturing. He called those who opposed him donkeys⁹¹⁰ and called his brother polytheist, calf, scarab (dung beetle), tyrant, and Satan.⁹¹¹ He even went as far as calling non-Baha'is bastards⁹¹² and animals.⁹¹³

We should point out again that this degree of manners and politeness emanates from the same Bahā'u'llāh that says:

⁹¹⁰ "Oh you donkeys! Whatever God says is the truth and will not become void by the words of the polytheists," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 174.

⁹¹¹ "When Mīrzā Yahyā Azal started opposing the works, deeds, and words of his esteemed brother (Bahā'u'llāh) in Edirne⁹¹¹ . . . he dropped down from his [high] stature and the rank of union and agreement [that he had with Bahā'u'llāh] and was gradually—in the tablets, works, and revelations [from Bahā'u'llāh]—referred to with codes, references, and names such as the polytheist, the calf, the scarab (dung beetle), the tyrant, the Satan, the devil, the foul swamp, the buzzing of a fly, and similar names," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 345–346.

⁹¹² "Whoever denies this apparent exalted luminous grace (meaning Baha'ism), it is worthy that he asks his state from his mother and he will soon be returned to the bottom of hell," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Mā'idīy-i āsimānī, vol. 4, pp. 355 and `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāyḡān, p. 78; "Whoever has the enmity of this servant (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) in his heart, certainly Satan has entered their mother's bed," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganj-i shāyḡān, p. 79.

⁹¹³ For example, "Today, according to the decree of the Point of Bayān (meaning the Bāb), those individuals who turn away from this Novel Affair (meaning Baha'ism) are deprived of the garb of being called and described [as humans?] and are assembled and mentioned as animals in the presence of God," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 213.

Politeness is one of mankind's traits that distinguishes him from other [creatures]. He who has no success in [being polite] then his demise certainly has—and will have—priority over his existence.⁹¹⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā followed his father's example and used the same rude trend of name-calling towards his opponents:

They are senile like arrogant fools and not seashells full of gems. They are ecstatic from the smell of garbage like dung beetles and not from the scent of a flower of gardens. They are lowly earthworms buried beneath the great earth not high flying birds. They are bats of darkness not the searchlights of clear horizons. They always make excuses and like ravens, have nested in the landfills of fall (autumn) . . . so you Oh true friend and spiritual helper . . . attack these unjust foxes and like a high soaring eagle drive away these hateful ravens from this field.⁹¹⁵

The words of `Abdu'l-Bahā best describe this situation:

We should be fair. How can we expect a person that has failed in nurturing his children, spouse, and family to succeed in nurturing the people of the world? Is there any doubt or uncertainty about this issue? By God, no!⁹¹⁶

How can someone be a promoter of universal compulsory education when he fails to educate himself and his children?! According to `Abdu'l-Bahā, the validity of a prophet's claim can be verified by observing his ability in educating and nurturing human kind:

⁹¹⁴Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 203–204.

⁹¹⁵`Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 442–443.

⁹¹⁶`Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 182.

Prophets are public teachers. If we want to see that prophets are teachers we must independently seek the truth. If [prophets] nurture the souls and take them from the depths of ignorance to the peaks of knowledge, then they are surely true prophets.⁹¹⁷

6- Baha'is Must be Educated Only in Baha'i Schools

`Abdu'l-Bahā gives strict orders to his followers to not send their children to non-Baha'i schools:

It is absolutely prohibited for the children of the friends to go to the schools of others (meaning non-Baha'is).⁹¹⁸

Is this the meaning of the Oneness of Humanity and not having prejudice? Why is this distinction made between Baha'is and non-Baha'is?

What is more interesting is the fact that `Abdu'l-Bahā, as usual, did not mind not practicing what he preached. Although he strictly ordered Baha'is to not enroll their children in non-Baha'i schools, he enrolled Shoghi in non-Baha'i schools himself:

It was here that Shoghi Effendi had a very significant dream which he recounted to me and which I wrote down. He said that when he was nine or ten years old, living with his nurse in this house and attending school in Haifa, he dreamed that he and another child, an Arab schoolmate, were in the room in which 'Abdu'l-Bahā used to receive His guests in the house in Akka . . .⁹¹⁹

⁹¹⁷ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 203–204.

⁹¹⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (probably Tehran), vol. 5, p. 170.

⁹¹⁹ Rūhīyyih Rabbani, The Priceless Pearl (London: Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1969), p. 16.

This trend continued until Shoghi finished high school and college:

Shoghi Effendi entered the best school in Haifa, the College des Freres, conducted by the Jesuits. He told me he had been very unhappy there. Indeed, I gathered from him that he never was really happy in either school or university. In spite of his innately joyous nature, his sensitivity and his background - so different from that of others in every way - could not but set him apart and give rise to many a heart-ache; indeed, he was one of those people whose open and innocent hearts, keen minds and affectionate nature seem to combine to bring upon them more shocks and suffering in life than is the lot of most men. Because of his unhappiness in this school 'Abdu'l-Baha decided to send him to Beirut where he attended another Catholic school as a boarder, and where he was equally unhappy. Learning of this in Haifa the family sent a trusted Baha'i woman to rent a home for Shoghi Effendi in Beirut and take care of and wait on him. It was not long before she wrote to his father that he was very unhappy at school, would refuse to go to it sometimes for days, and was getting thin and run down. His father showed this letter to 'Abdu'l-Baha Who then had arrangements made for Shoghi Effendi to enter the Syrian Protestant College, which had a school as well as a university, later known as the American College in Beirut, and which the Guardian entered when he finished what was then equivalent to the high school.⁹²⁰ ⁹²⁰ Rūhīyyih Rabbani, The Priceless Pearl, p. 17.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

It is obvious that education for all people is preferred and valuable. What is more important than education itself, is the curriculum and content by which the goals of education must be achieved. Although `Abdu'l-Bahā insists on compulsory education and an identical curriculum and method of education for all people, neither the curriculum and nor the subjects that must be taught have been specified in detail. The only thing that `Abdu'l-Bahā has explicitly expressed his opinion on are a few of the subjects that must be taught in children's classes:

The subjects to be taught in children's schools are many, and for lack of time We can touch on only a few: First and most important is training in behaviour and good character; the rectification of qualities; arousing the desire to become accomplished and acquire perfections, and to cleave unto the religion of God and stand firm in His Laws; to accord total obedience to every just government, to show forth loyalty and trustworthiness to the ruler of the time, to be well wishers of mankind, to be kind to all.

And further, as well as in the ideals of character, instruction in such arts and sciences as are of benefit, and in foreign tongues. Also, the repeating of prayers for the well-being of ruler and ruled; and the avoidance of materialistic works that are current among those who see only natural causation, and tales of love, and books that arouse the passions.

To sum up, let all the lessons be entirely devoted to the acquisition of human perfections.⁹²¹

Apparently, what Baha'is have been ordered to teach in their schools are based on Baha'i teachings that `Abdu'l-Bahā sums up as, "entirely devoted to the acquisition of human perfections." We already showed the results of these human perfections in Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's attitudes which were a mixture of name-calling, insults, and rude manners to their opponents, and all kinds of defamatory statements regarding non-Baha'is.

Furthermore, `Abdu'l-Bahā's order to teach children foreign tongues contradicts his father's order for languages to be reduced to only one, and for only that language to be taught in schools:

Languages must be reduced to one common language to be taught in all the schools of the world.⁹²²

As we previously said, `Abdu'l-Bahā had prohibited his followers from sending their children to non-Baha'i schools. This order has been widely ignored by Baha'is:

It is absolutely prohibited for the children of the friends to go to the schools of others (meaning non-Baha'is) for this is [a cause of] humiliation for the Cause of God and they will be completely deprived of the Blessed Beauty's graces. Because they will be educated/nurtured elsewhere and they will disgrace the Baha'is.⁹²³

⁹²¹ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. VIII, no. 494.

⁹²² Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 90.

⁹²³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (probably Tehran), vol. 5, p. 170.

What is extraordinary are the words used by `Abdu'l-Bahā to describe the result of Baha'is studying in non-Baha'i schools: humiliation (dhillat) of the Cause of God and disgrace (ruswā'ī) of Baha'is and being completely deprived of the Blessed Beauty's graces!

One wonders why these words have been uttered. Does `Abdu'l-Bahā regard all forms of education other than what the Baha'is preach invalid to such an extent that when Baha'is are educated and nurtured using those methods they will become a disgrace and cause of humiliation for this creed? Or is he afraid that Baha'i children will expose the true face of Baha'ism amongst non-Baha'is which will result in their disgrace and humiliation?

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”⁹²⁴

⁹²⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Is the Principle of Compulsory Universal Education New?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All mankind should attain knowledge and acquire education. This is a characteristically new teaching of Bahā'u'llāh in this dispensation.⁹²⁵

Shia Islam: The Prophet, Muḥammad, says: “Acquiring knowledge is compulsory for every man and woman.”⁹²⁶

`Abdu'l-Bahā: The Prophets have come to nurture and educate mankind.⁹²⁷

2. Is Education the Same for All or Dependent on Capacity?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All humankind must receive the same education with the same guidelines and the same methods.⁹²⁸

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Everyone cannot be a scientist. Only educate people according to their capacity and needs!⁹²⁹

⁹²⁵ “Bahā'u'llāh declares that all mankind should attain knowledge and acquire an education. This is a necessary principle of religious belief and observance, characteristically new in this dispensation,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

⁹²⁶ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār (Beirut: Mu'assisat al-Wafā, 1404 AH), vol. 1, p. 170.

⁹²⁷ “The honored prophets have come to nurture and educate mankind, to turn men into the manifestation of light, inform them about the truth of secrets, and to elevate the human world materialistically and spiritually,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 99.

⁹²⁸ “It is necessary that the guidelines and laws of education be the same [everywhere] so that all humankind are given the same education. This means education and nurturing must be the same in all schools. All elements and methods must be the same,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 148.

⁹²⁹ “Among other teachings and principles Bahā'u'llāh counsels the education of all members of society. No individual should be denied or deprived of intellectual training, although each should receive according to capacity. None must be left in the grades of ignorance, for ignorance is a defect in the human world. All mankind must be given a knowledge of science and philosophy—that is, as much as may be deemed necessary. All cannot be scientists and philosophers, but each should be educated according to his needs and deserts,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 108.

3- Loving Laws That Promote Ignorance or Claiming That All People Must Be Educated?

Bahā'u'llāh: There must be universal compulsory education.

The Bāb in the Bayān: Destroy all non-Bābī books,⁹³⁰ teach nothing but the Bayān,⁹³¹ and do not own more than nineteen books.⁹³²

Bahā'u'llāh: A single letter from the Bayān is more dear to me than everything that is in the skies and the earth.⁹³³

4- Will Education Dispel Ignorance?

Reason and common-sense: Education will dispel ignorance.

Bahā'u'llāh: If you have all the knowledge on earth but do not become a Baha'i you are ignorant.⁹³⁴

⁹³⁰ "Chapter six of the sixth unit which is about destroying all books but those that have been written or will be written about this order (meaning the Bab's creed)," The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 6, chap. 6.

⁹³¹ "Teaching a book other than the book of Bayān is not allowed unless it has in it what is related to theology (kalām). [Teaching] those [sciences] which have been invented such as logic (manṭiq), principles [of Jurisprudence] (uṣūl), and other [sciences], is not permitted for those who have faith," The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 4, chap. 10.

⁹³² "You have been prohibited in the Bayān from having more than nineteen books. If you do so, you will be fined 19 mithqāls of gold," The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 11, chap. 7.

⁹³³ "I [swear by] He who in His hand is my soul and my essence, a single letter from the Bayān is dearer to me than everything that is in the heavens and the earth," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī, vol. 5, p. 333.

⁹³⁴ "If today, someone grasps all of the knowledge on earth but stops at the word 'yes' (meaning does not become a Baha'i), the Lord will not pay attention to him (ladī l-Ḥaqq madhkūr na) and he will be considered as the most ignorant amongst the people," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 111; "From now on nobody is to be called knowledgeable, except those who have decorated themselves with the garment of this New Affair (meaning those who have become Baha'is)," Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', pp. 138–139.

5. The Criterion for Being a True Prophet: Good Nurturing and Education of People

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: A prophet who cannot nurture people is not a prophet.⁹³⁵

The result of ‘Abdu’l-Bahā being nurtured by his father: My enemies are “senile like arrogant fools and not seashells full of gems. They are ecstatic from the smell of garbage like dung beetles.”⁹³⁶

6. Are Baha'is Allowed to Attend Non-Baha'i Schools?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: You are absolutely prohibited from sending your children to non-Baha’i schools for they will be a cause of humiliation and disgrace to the faith.⁹³⁷

‘Abdu’l-Bahā Sends Shoghi to attend the best non-Baha’i schools in Palestine.⁹³⁸

⁹³⁵ “Prophets are public teachers. If we want to see that prophets are teachers we must independently seek the truth. If [prophets] nurture the souls and take them from the depths of ignorance to the peaks of knowledge, then they are surely true prophets,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 203–204.

⁹³⁶ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 442–443.

⁹³⁷ “It is absolutely prohibited for the children of the friends to go to the schools of others (meaning non-Baha’is) for this is [a cause of] humiliation for the Cause of God and they will be completely deprived of the Blessed Beauty’s graces. Because they will be educated/nurtured otherwise and they will disgrace the Baha’is,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (probably Tehran), vol. 5, p. 170.

⁹³⁸ “It was here that Shoghi Effendi had a very significant dream which he recounted to me and which I wrote down. He said that when he was nine or ten years old, living with his nurse in this house and attending school in Haifa, he dreamed that he and another child, an Arab schoolmate, were in the room in which ‘Abdu’l-Baha used to receive His guests in the house in Akka . . . Shoghi Effendi entered the best school in Haifa, the College des Freres, conducted by the Jesuits . . . ‘Abdu’l-Baha decided to send him to Beirut where he attended another Catholic school as a boarder . . . ‘Abdu’l-Baha Who then had arrangements made for Shoghi Effendi to enter the Syrian Protestant College, which had a school as well as a university,” Rūhīyyih Rabbani, The Priceless Pearl, pp. 16–17.

7. Must Foreign Languages Be Taught at Schools?

`Abdul'-Bahā: Teach foreign languages at school.⁹³⁹

Bahā'u'llāh: Reduce all languages to one and only teach that language at school!⁹⁴⁰

⁹³⁹ “And further, as well as in the ideals of character, instruction in such arts and sciences as are of benefit, and in foreign tongues,” Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. VIII, no. 494.

⁹⁴⁰ “Languages must be reduced to one common language to be taught in all the schools of the world.,” Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 90.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is Universal Compulsory Education a New Principle?

Before Bahā'u'llāh, education up to a specific class or age had become compulsory in many countries like Germany and Japan. Even before that, many religions advocated education and learning of knowledge and sciences. Thus, this teaching is not new.

2) Did the Leaders of Baha'ism Act upon This Principle?

In accordance with this teaching, `Abdu'l-Bahā had prohibited his followers from sending their children to non-Baha'i schools. At the same time, he himself had sent Shoghi to the best non-Baha'i schools in Haifa. Furthermore, in the Baha'i creed, no single curriculum has been provided to achieve the goal of identical education for all people.

3) Is This Principle Rational and Logical?

This teaching is logical but the extreme version put forward by `Abdu'l-Bahā in which he prohibits his followers from going to non-Baha'i schools is unreasonable.

CHAPTER 9:

A Universal Auxiliary Language

“Ninth, a universal language shall be adopted and be taught by all the schools and institutions of the world. A committee appointed by national bodies of learning shall select a suitable language to be used as a medium of international communication. All must acquire it. This is one of the great factors in the unification of man.”⁹⁴¹

⁹⁴¹ Abdu'l-Bahā', The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 182.

The definition of “A Universal Auxiliary Language” is a common language that all people must have to reach the goal of the Oneness of Humanity.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

The question of diversity of tongues is a very difficult one. There are more than eight hundred languages in the world, and no person could acquire them all. The races of mankind are not isolated as in former days. Now, in order to be in close relationship with all countries it is necessary to be able to speak their tongues. A universal language would make intercourse possible with every nation. Thus it would be needful to know two languages only, the mother tongue and the universal speech. The latter would enable a man to communicate with any and every man in the world!⁹⁴²

⁹⁴² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 155–156.

Is the Principle of a Universal Auxiliary Language New?

The problem of an Auxiliary language has existed ever since antiquity when people with different languages had engaged in trade with each other. Nicholas Olster's Empires of the World: A Language History of the World, manifests great insight into this topic. Every empire would promote the language of their interest among the lands they conquered to communicate efficiently with the new peoples and citizens. Persian, Greek, Arabic, and English are just a few of the languages that had served this purpose throughout history. An auxiliary language has always been a necessity of communication and has been addressed by different methods worldwide.

In modern times, because of advances in communication and transport, a great interest has been shown in a universal auxiliary language. In the early nineteenth century, many such languages were created and were being promoted. One of the earliest of these languages was called Communicationssprache, and was created by Joseph Schipfer and published in 1839. Subsequently many other auxiliary languages were introduced the most important ones being Universalglot in 1868, Volapuk in 1879, and Esperanto in 1887. Except for Esperanto, which under very optimistic estimates has at most 2 million adherents, none of these languages gained popularity.

Thus, the need for an auxiliary language is neither a creation of Baha'is, nor a necessity that other groups had not thought of before Bahā'u'llāh, nor something that hadn't been created before them. This principle is under no condition novel or new.

Did the Founders of Baha'ism Implement This Principle?

1- Baha'i Scripture and Official Documents Have Been Written in Three Languages

Although `Abdu'l-Bahā announces that an auxiliary language is needed and will be “one of the great factors in the unification of man,”⁹⁴³ Baha'i scriptures have been authored in at least three different languages. Shoghi Effendi's book, God Passes By, was written in English as are most letters and announcements from the Universal House of Justice. The books written by the Bāb, Bahā'u'llāh, and `Abdu'l-Bahā have been written in a mixture of both Arabic and Farsi, thus rendering them useless for a great range of audiences. Furthermore, there are even Turkish Poems written by `Abdu'l-Bahā.⁹⁴⁴

Bahā'u'llāh insists that although only two languages are needed—the mother tongue and the auxiliary language—much effort must be put to limit the languages of the world to one, that is the auxiliary language:

We have decreed before that it has been destined to speak with two tongues and a great effort must be put to limit this to one [tongue] and the same [applies] to the handwriting. So ⁹⁴³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 182.

⁹⁴⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Majmū'iy-i munājāt-hāyi ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā (Germany: Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī), pp. 396–397 that the lives of the people will not be wasted and nullified in learning different languages.⁹⁴⁵

One becomes speechless when reading these words. How can someone who has revealed his own words in two different languages, and whose successors have added a third and fourth language in their writings, give the order to make as much effort possible to limit the world's languages to one? Why does a person that claims to be the Manifestation of God not practice what he preaches?

With this attitude, instead of kick starting the Auxiliary Language by revealing their words in a single unified language, Baha'i leaders have significantly retarded its creation by revealing texts in multiple languages.

2- Why Would a Persian Prophet Communicate with Persians in Arabic?

The Bāb, Bahā'u'llāh, and `Abdu'l-Bahā have all used a mixture of Arabic and Farsi in their writings and speeches. This makes no sense given that they were speaking to a group of people who were Persians not Arabs. What is the use in talking to a Persian in Arabic if he is not going to understand what you are saying and the message will not be conveyed?

Based on common-sense, the Quran says:

We sent no messenger but with the tongue of his people so that he may explain to them.⁹⁴⁶

If the purpose of a Messenger or Prophet is to explain and convey God's words to the people, then it makes sense for him to speak their tongue, not some foreign language. The question is, why did these three figures perform such an unreasonable act in contrast to what is expected from a divine figure? And then on top of this, claim that they strive for a unified language? We will allow Adib Taherzadeh—a former member of the Universal House of Justice—to explain why:

⁹⁴⁵ `Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 33.

⁹⁴⁶ Quran, 14:4

In Persia in the nineteenth century most people were illiterate, under the domination of the clergy whom they blindly obeyed. There were two educated classes, divines and government officials, plus a small number of others. Only the religious leaders and divines, however, could be called learned. They used to spend decades of their lives applying themselves to theology, Islamic law, jurisprudence, philosophy, medicine, astronomy and, above all, the Arabic language and its literature. Since Arabic was the language of the Qur'ān, the divines attached great importance to its study. Many would spend a lifetime mastering the language because of its vast scope and wealth of expression. They considered no treatise worthy of perusal unless it was composed and written in Arabic, and no sermon from the pulpit as moving or eloquent unless the Mullā preaching it had used an abundance of difficult and often incomprehensible Arabic words. By this means they excited the imagination of their often illiterate audiences who were fascinated by the apparently learned discourse of their clergy, despite the fact that they might not understand a single word. The normal yardstick for determining the depth of a man's learning was his knowledge of the Arabic language and the size of his turban!⁹⁴⁷

What Adib Taherzadeh says boils down to this: The reason someone would speak Arabic to a Farsi audience, was to make them believe he was knowledgeable although the audience didn't understand a word that he was uttering. The same attitude has been followed by the Baha'i figures. Truly, what purpose do the abundance of difficult and often incomprehensible Arabic words, put on top of the high amounts of esoteric, mystical, vague, and sometimes incomprehensible expressions in the works of the Bāb and Bahā'u'llāh serve, but to excite the imagination of their audiences and induce them into thinking they are knowledgeable?

⁹⁴⁷ Adib Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahā'u'llāh (Oxford, 1974), vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

3- Baha'is Have Been Ordered to Learn Multiple Languages!

Although Bahā'u'llāh insists that "We have decreed before that it has been destined to speak with two tongues and a great effort must be put to limit this to one [tongue],"⁹⁴⁸ Baha'is have been ordered to learn many other languages. The Farsi language has been held with high esteem. Baha'is have been ordered to learn it and it has even been prophesized that it will soon be sanctified in all the world! `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

Make as much effort as possible to learn the Farsi language, for this language will soon be sanctified on all of earth and it will have great use in spreading the Breath of God, elevating the Word of God, and deducing the meanings of God's verses.⁹⁴⁹

Bahā'u'llāh too, has uttered similar words:

God-willing, everyone will mention the Destination of the People of the World (probably referring to himself) by using the creative Farsi language, for this language has and will always be sweet.⁹⁵⁰

A great emphasis has also been placed on learning Arabic:

⁹⁴⁸ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 33.

⁹⁴⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 114.

⁹⁵⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 111.

The beloved Guardian has stressed that the children and the youth of the friends must also learn the Arabic language and use this eloquent language to benefit from the tablets and blessed writings.⁹⁵¹

Not content with this, Baha'is have been ordered to learn English and German:

The exalted decision of the beloved Guardian has been for the Baha'i youth to learn firstly English and secondly German and show the utmost effort and seriousness [in learning these languages].⁹⁵²

And finally, 'Abdu'l-Bahā advises his followers to teach children foreign languages without specifying what or how many languages:

And further, as well as in the ideals of character, instruction in such arts and sciences as are of benefit, and in foreign tongues.⁹⁵³

Thus an average Baha'i is expected to learn or be able to communicate in six languages: Arabic, Farsi, English, German, their mother tongue, as well as the universal auxiliary language proposed by Bahā'u'llāh. Apparently, Bahā'u'llāh had forgotten too soon what he had uttered about people's lives being wasted in learning more than one language:

We have decreed before that it has been destined to speak with two tongues and a great effort must be put to limit this to one [tongue] and the same [applies] to the handwriting. So ⁹⁵¹ 'Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i hudūd wa ahkām, chap. 25, p. 206.

⁹⁵² 'Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i hudūd wa ahkām, chap. 25, pp. 205–206.

⁹⁵³ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. VIII, no. 494.

that the lives of the people will not be wasted and nullified in learning different languages.⁹⁵⁴

One day, while in Constantinople, Kamāl Pāshā visited this Wronged One. Our conversation turned upon topics profitable unto man. He said that he had learned several languages. In reply We observed: “You have wasted your life. It beseemeth you and the other officials of the Government to convene a gathering and choose one of the divers languages, and likewise one of the existing scripts, or else to create a new language and a new script to be taught children in schools throughout the world. They would, in this way, be acquiring only two languages, one their own native tongue, the other the language . . . and the people would be relieved and freed from the necessity of acquiring and teaching different languages.”⁹⁵⁵

Is Bahā’u’llāh really serious when he claims the people would “be acquiring only two languages” while he reveals his writings in two different ones and his followers are expected to communicate in six languages? We will leave it to the readers to judge these words for themselves.

4- The Baha’i Administration Has Failed in Implementing This Principle

Bahā’u’llāh has said:

Ere this, in Our Epistles, have We commanded the Trustees of the House of Justice, either to choose one of the existing tongues, or to originate a new one, and in like manner to ⁹⁵⁴ ‘Abd al-Hamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 33.

⁹⁵⁵ Bahā’u’llāh, Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, pp. 137–138.

adopt a common script, teaching these to the children in all the schools of the world, that the world may become even as one land and one home.⁹⁵⁶

Although Baha'is propagate this principle with great pride and regard it as one of their greatest teachings in achieving oneness of humanity, the Baha'i administration has failed after more than 150 years, in implementing Bahā'u'llāh's direct order in implementing this principle or even selecting or creating a single language to serve this purpose!

`Abdu'l-Bahā too had put great emphasis on the implementation of this principle:

Were we in possession of a universal language, the Western books could easily be translated into that language, and the Eastern peoples be informed of their contents. In the same way the books of the East could be translated into that language for the benefit of the people in the West. The greatest means of progress towards the union of East and West will be a common language. It will make the whole world one home and become the strongest impulse for human advancement. It will upraise the standard of the oneness of humanity. It will make the earth one universal commonwealth. It will be the cause of love between the children of men. It will cause good fellowship between the various races.⁹⁵⁷

Instead of starting a campaign for a universal auxiliary language and translating Baha'i works into a single universal language, Baha'is have started a campaign of translating their literature into every possible language in the world and according to official Baha'i figures, Baha'i ⁹⁵⁶ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p.163.

⁹⁵⁷ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.164-165.

literature has been translated into 800 different languages worldwide!⁹⁵⁸

In a letter from the Universal House of Justice (UHJ) to an individual dated 8 June 1980, the UHJ simply puts the blame on governments for not implementing this language:

You are quite correct in stating that there are two different provisions in the Sacred Texts for the selection of an International Auxiliary Language. On the one hand, this task is given to the governments of the world, on the other it is given to the House of Justice. It is not possible now to see how this will come about, but it would seem reasonable to assume that, long before the Bahā'ī community is large enough or can exercise the authority to produce such a world-embracing change, events will compel the governments, either progressively or all in concert, to select an International Auxiliary Language to be taught as a second language in all schools and to be used in all international commerce. At a much later stage, possibly at the time of the Bahā'ī World Commonwealth, the Universal House of Justice may well decide to review the situation and either confirm the decision that the governments had made, or change the choice to a more suitable language.⁹⁵⁹

Why does a person who claims to be a manifestation of God with Divine Knowledge fail to point the Baha'i administration to an appropriate and specific language to be used for this task? Why is the UHJ waiting all these years to see which language will be universally accepted as a universal language? If these figures were Divinely Inspired and had superhuman knowledge, then why did they not tell the world about the auxiliary language of the future and why did they not propagate that specific language? Is it not because neither `Abdu'l-Bahā nor Bahā'u'llāh could foresee the future, and the UHJ fears that any language they select for this purpose will result in a failure, like what happened when `Abdu'l-Bahā selected Esperanto to serve this purpose?

⁹⁵⁸ For example see <http://news.bahai.org/media-information/statistics> (retrieved 25/01/2014)

⁹⁵⁹ Paul Desailly, Making World Peace Real: The Baha'i Faith and Esperanto (Melbourne: Howard Perkins, 2003), p. 40 (electronic version: http://www.bahaindex.com/documents/Making_World_Peace_Real.pdf)

5- Why Did the Universal House of Justice, in Contrast to `Abdu'l-Bahā's Orders and Advice, Disregard Esperanto

At an Esperanto meeting in Paris in 1913, `Abdu'l-Bahā uttered the following words about this language:

Now, praise be to God that Dr. Zamenhof⁹⁶⁰ has invented the Esperanto language. It has all the potential qualities of becoming the international means of communication. All of us must be grateful and thankful to him for this noble effort; for in this way he has served his fellowmen well. With untiring effort and self-sacrifice on the part of its devotees Esperanto will become universal. Therefore every one of us must study this language and spread it as far as possible so that day by day it may receive a broader recognition, be accepted by all nations and governments of the world, and become a part of the curriculum in all the public schools. I hope that Esperanto will be adopted as the language of all the future international conferences and congresses, so that all people need acquire only two languages—one their own tongue and the other the international language. Then perfect union will be established between all the people of the world. Consider how difficult it is today to communicate with various nations. If one studies fifty languages one may yet travel through a country and not know the language. Therefore I hope that you will make the utmost effort, so that this language of Esperanto may be widely spread.⁹⁶¹

⁹⁶⁰ The creator of Esperanto

Although `Abdu'l-Bahā had made explicit statements about making great effort to spread this language as far as possible, the UHJ has yet to accept this language as a universal auxiliary language.

The justification put forward for this action further shows that this religion lacks divinity:

While these allusions to Esperanto are specific and encouraging, it remains true that until the House of Justice has acted on the matter in accordance with Bahā'u'llāh's instruction the Bahā'ī Faith is not committed to Esperanto nor to any other living or artificial tongue. `Abdu'l-Bahā Himself said: "The love and effort put into Esperanto will not be lost, but no one person can construct a Universal Language."—`Abdu'l-Bahá in London, p. 95.

Which language to adopt, and whether it is to be a natural or constructed one, is a decision which the nations of the world will have to make.⁹⁶²

The Baha'i creed was supposed to bring guidance to the world and guide the people to right path. If a principle is put forward then the best way for it to be implemented must also be explicitly announced by either naming a language or creating a language for all to abide to and propagate. Unfortunately, not only has this act not been performed, but the exact opposite has occurred and the selection of such a language has been conferred upon the governments of the world. Should we be thankful for this new principle? Was this not the exact attitude that governments have had ever since antiquity but in smaller or larger scales? Did we really need the Baha'i creed to tell the world what they ⁹⁶¹ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p.165.

⁹⁶² J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.165-166.

already knew and were striving to achieve by themselves anyway? Should the people of the world be thankful for this so called new, but apparently very obvious, principle?

Furthermore, pay attention to how `Abdu'l-Bahā admits that they are weak and have no divine knowledge at all. He says, "No one person can construct a Universal Language." Not even someone who claims to have created multiple Gods?⁹⁶³ Apparently not . . .

6- How Can Someone Who is Helpless in Learning Another Language but His Mother Tongue, Order Other People to Learn Many Languages?

The Bāb and Bahā'u'llāh have written many of their works in Arabic but since this wasn't their mother tongue, their Arabic works have a fair amount of etymological and syntactical errors. We have showed in Chapter 4 some of the grammatical errors Bahā'u'llāh had made in the book of Īqān that were subsequently fixed. Since this topic is fairly advanced and only suitable for a special audience, we will only mention a few of the more obvious errors here that can be understood with little explanation and without delving into Arabic linguistics.

a- Using non-Arabic characters and words in Arabic sentences

Arabic and Farsi share almost the exact same alphabet. The only difference between them are four characters that exist in Farsi but not in Arabic: p, ch, g, zh. Interestingly enough, the Bāb wrote in the Arabic Bayān:

If possible acquire all the writings of the Point (meaning the Bāb) even if they are in printed form (not hand-written).⁹⁶⁴

⁹⁶³ "All Gods became Gods from the flow of my affairs and all Lords became Lords by the overflowing of my decree," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 255.

⁹⁶⁴ Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 9, chap. 10. The Arabic sentence says:

The Farsi word for print is chāp. The characters ‘ch’ and ‘p’ used in this word do not exist in Arabic. The Bāb used this Persian word with non-existent characters in an Arabic sentence. This is while the Arabic word for printing is ṭabʿ, which he could have been easily used!

A similar fallacy can be seen in the works of Bahāʾuʾllāh. In a tablet addressed to Pope Pius IX he says:

O Pope! Rend the veils asunder. He Who is the Lord of Lords is come overshadowed with clouds, and the decree hath been fulfilled by God.⁹⁶⁵

The Farsi word for Pope is Pāp. The Arabic word is al-Bābā. Bahāʾuʾllāh has used the Farsi word with non-existent Arabic characters in the Arabic sentence. Here is an image of what he has written:⁹⁶⁶

ان يا پاپا ان اخرق الاحجاب قد اتى ربّ الارباب فى ظلل
السحاب و قضى الامر من لدى الله المقتدر المختار. ان

The errors in these works were so obvious that the Bāb decided to justify them in one of his writings:

Finding errors in diacritics (ʿirāb), recitation (qirāʾat), and linguistics of the Arabic [works] is invalid, because the linguistic laws are derived from these verses and not (the opposite) where the verses are based on these (laws). There is no doubt that the owner of these verses (meaning himself)

"انتم اذ استطعتم كل آثار النقطة تملكون و لو كان جايًا"

⁹⁶⁵ Bahāʾuʾllāh, The Summons of the Lord of Hosts, p. 54–55.

⁹⁶⁶ For the original Arabic sentence see Bahāʾuʾllāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i Aʿlā, vol. 1, no. 1, p. 33.

has denied having any knowledge about these (linguistic) laws.⁹⁶⁷

What the Bāb is saying here boils down to this: Any mistakes you find in my words and any inconsistencies with the Arabic language are due to your own ignorance. From now on, Arabic language laws and linguistics must be updated to become in conformity with my words!

As we mentioned in Chapter 4, Bahā'u'llāh had made the exact same justification when he was questioned about the errors in his writings and the writings of the Bāb:

Say, oh you ignorant man; look at the words of God using His Eyes so that you may realize they are free of the allusions and the grammatical conventions of the people for He possesses the knowledge of the worlds. Say, if the words of God were revealed based on your grammatical conventions and (the laws) that are with you, then they would be like your words, oh group of people who are veiled (from the truth).⁹⁶⁸

You and your kind have said that the words of the Great Bāb and the Most Complete Remembrance are wrong and not in conformance with the grammatical conventions of the people. You still haven't understood that the divine revealed words are the yardstick for all and what is lower than it cannot be a yardstick. Every grammatical convention that is not in accordance with the divine verses has no credibility.⁹⁶⁹

These words are senseless. According to Bahā'u'llāh the criterion for the truth is he and only he. Reason, knowledge, language and everything imaginable are to be measured by his words even though his ⁹⁶⁷ The Bāb, Farsi Bayān, unit 2, chap. 1.

⁹⁶⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 71.

⁹⁶⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 78.

words are unscientific, illogical, unreasonable, and in many cases simply wrong. He uses similar reasoning in the Aqdas:

Say: O leaders of religion!⁹⁷⁰ Weigh not the Book of God with such standards and sciences as are current amongst you, for the Book itself is the unerring Balance established amongst men. In this most perfect Balance whatsoever the peoples and kindreds of the earth possess must be weighed, while the measure of its weight should be tested according to its own standard, did ye but know it.⁹⁷¹

We analyzed this subject extensively in Chapter 4 and will not repeat our statements here.

b- Using Meaningless Arabic Words and Phrases

The use of meaningless words and Arabic phrases is especially apparent in the works of the Bāb. For instance the Bāb says:

The water of life (semen) is pure and you have been created from it. You must taltufanna [!] your bodies from it so that you may have great pleasure.⁹⁷²

The underlined word is totally meaningless in this context and does not make sense. We will not refer to any more examples of this kind. We will simply mention a quote from Professor John Walbridge of Indiana University:

The Aqdas is written in a lofty and austere Arabic with little rhetorical ornamentation, a style somewhat similar to that of ⁹⁷⁰ In the Arabic version of the Aqdas, the words used are yā ma`shar al-`ulamā which translates to “O group of scholars.” This has been translated to “O leaders of religion,” in the official Baha’i version.

⁹⁷¹ Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 56.

⁹⁷² The Bāb, Arabic Bayān, unit 5, chap. 15.

the Qur'an. As is usual in Bahā'u'llāh's Arabic, there are some deviations from Arabic norms reflecting Persian usage. There are occasional grammatical innovations but many fewer than in the Arabic writings of the Bab.⁹⁷³

Professor Walbridge is clearly stating the works of the Bāb have even more mistakes in them than the works of Bahā'u'llāh. He solves the problem of the errors in the writings of these figures by stating these errors are simply innovations or deviations from Arabic norms. Is it really that hard to see that these obvious mistakes were made because neither the Bāb nor Bahā'u'llāh had sufficient knowledge about the Arabic language?

7- Multiple Fallacies in Translations of Baha'i Texts That Are Propagated by the Baha'i Administration

We have mentioned some of these errors in the previous chapters and will put forward some more samples here. Our first sample is from Paris Talks:

Why is there so much interest and eager sympathy shown towards these twenty individuals, while for five thousand persons there is none? Because they are not French. If they are cut to pieces it is of no concern They are all men, they all belong to the family of mankind, but they are of other lands and races. It is no concern of the disinterested countries if these men are cut to pieces, this wholesale slaughter does not affect them!⁹⁷⁴

⁹⁷³ This is part of an article authored in 1999 and titled Kitab-i Aqdas, the Most Holy Book. It was intended for possible inclusion in The Baha'i Encyclopedia: http://bahai-library.com/walbridge_encyclopedia_kitab_aqdas (retrieved 12/2/2014)

⁹⁷⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, p. 115.

The section in brackets has been deleted in the English translation although it exists in the original Farsi sermon.⁹⁷⁵ Why? Maybe to hide `Abdu'l-Bahā's criticism of the French government? The rest of the translation has also been greatly distorted.

Here is another sample:

In formulating the principles and laws a part hath been devoted to penalties which form an effective instrument for the security and protection of men.⁹⁷⁶

The correct translation should be:

In the principles and laws there is a chapter on qiṣāṣ (an eye-for-eye or law of retaliation) which is a cause of security and protection for the servants (of God).⁹⁷⁷

Another sample:

The unbelievers and the faithless have set their minds on four things: first, the shedding of blood [beheading]; second, the burning of books; third, the shunning of the followers of other religions; fourth, the extermination of other communities and groups⁹⁷⁸

Beheading has been translated to shedding blood probably to reduce the savagery in the Bāb's orders.

An example from the notes in the book of Aqdas:

⁹⁷⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, pp. 204–207.

⁹⁷⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 93.

⁹⁷⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iyi az alwāḥ Jamāl Aqdas Abhā ki ba'd az kitāb Aqdas nāzil shudih, 1st ed. (Langenhain [Germany]: Lajniyi Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī Wa `Arabī, 137 B.), p. 53.

⁹⁷⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, p. 91.

In all the Divine Dispensations the eldest son hath been given extraordinary distinctions. Even the station of prophethood hath been his birthright.⁹⁷⁹

This is the correct translation:

In all the Divine Dispensations the eldest son hath been given extraordinary distinctions. Even the Prophetic inheritances belonged to him.

The Prophetic inheritances (mirāth nabuwwat) were the special belongings of the Prophets that could not be passed to ordinary people. Things such as Solomon's Ring (Seal) or Moses's Staff. These have nothing to do with the station of Prophethood that has been translated in the official Baha'i translation. Furthermore, none of these have been the birthright of the eldest son in previous dispensations.

The distortions in Official Baha'i translations are more than we can enumerate. The most appropriate statement that can describe these translations is a section from Professor Juan Cole's response to the UHJ, when he was unjustly accused of wrongdoing when he had translated the Tablet of the Maiden⁹⁸⁰ to English:

Moreover, the Universal House of Justice's own translations, as represented in Tablets of Bahā'u'llāh and some of the compilations, are riddled with errors and mistranslations that give an extremely misleading impression of the intent of the original on a number of occasions. So it is not as if the UHJ's own record in translation work is spotless. Unfortunately, it is precisely the attitude of suspicion toward qualified academics and the rigidity of their preconceived opinions, evident in their letter on the Tablet of the Hourī, that has caused them to so discount solid expertise and resulted in these many errors in their publications.⁹⁸¹

⁹⁷⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 186-7.

⁹⁸⁰ We will speak more on this in the twelfth chapter.

These translations that are riddled with flaws, errors, and distortions, have been distributed under the authorization of the Universal House of Justice and have been printed and redistributed by official Baha'i centers worldwide multiple times in the last century and in most cases no step has been taken whatsoever to correct them.

8- Errors and Outright Distortions in Provisional Translations of Baha'i Texts

Provisional translations, is a term used by Baha'is to refer to works and translations that have not yet been verified by the Baha'i administration. Nevertheless, these translations are widely circulated and used by Baha'is. We will refer to a sample here.

Dr. Ḥabīb Mu'ayyad was `Abdu'l-Bahā's physician for 8 years. He kept a diary of his years with `Abdu'l-Bahā and finally distributed his memoirs in the year 118 Badī` under the title *Khātirāt-i Ḥabīb*⁹⁸² (Ḥabīb's memoirs). A translation of this book was provided by the prominent Baha'i researcher and translator, Dr. Ahang Rabbani, in his multi-volume work titled: Witnesses to Babi and Bahā'ī History.⁹⁸³ The third volume of this work is dedicated to Dr. Mu'ayyad's diary and has been named: Eight Years Near Abdu'l-Bahā: The Diary of Dr. Habib Mu'ayyad. This is what he writes:

One day when Bahā'u'llāh had returned from Sulaymāniyyah, He was walking in the street with the late Āqā Mīrzā Muhammad-Qulī. A kabob-maker had whispered, "Once more the Bābīs have come into the open." The Blessed Beauty told

⁹⁸¹ http://bahai-library.com/uhj_lawh_huriyyih_cole

⁹⁸² Published by the Iranian Baha'i Publishing Trust (Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī)

⁹⁸³ http://bahai-library.com/rabbani_witnesses_history (retrieved 15/1/2014)

Mīrzā Muhammad-Qulī, “Rebuke him appropriately!” Mīrzā Muhammad-Qulī grabbed his beard and punished him. The Kabobī took a complaint to the constable, but was thrown in jail and told, “Obviously you must have grievously insulted them for the Bābīs to have punished you in such manner!”⁹⁸⁴

Below is an image from the original Farsi book for comparison:

We already provided the correct translation of this text in Chapter Two, we will repeat it here for the purpose of comparison:

⁹⁸⁴ Ahang Rabbani, Eight Years Near Abdu'l-Bahā: The Diary of Dr. Habib Mu'ayyad, p. 276: http://bahai-library.com/pdf/r/rabbani_diary_habib_muayyad_2013.pdf (retrieved 15/1/2014)

Table 4: Comparison between correct and distorted Baha'i translation of Bahā'u'llāh's orders to hit a man

Original Farsi	Ahang Rabbani's Trans.	Correct Trans.
وقتي جمال مبارك از سليمانيه تشریف آوردند يك روز توي كوچه تشریف مي بردند با مرحوم آقا ميرزا محمدقلي، يك شخص كباب فروش آهسته گفت: باز بابي ها آفتابي شدند. جمال مبارك به ميرزا محمدقلي فرمودند: بز توي دهنش. ميرزا محمد قلي ريش او را گرفته توي سرش مي زد. رفت نزد ايلچي شكايه كرد. ايلچي خود او را حبس كرد. گفت يقين جسارت بزرگي کرده اي كه بايها تو را زده اند.	One day when Bahā'u'llāh had returned from Sulaymāniyyah, He was walking in the street with the late Āqā Mīrzā Muhammad-Qulī. A kabob-maker had whispered, "Once more the Bābīs have come into the open." The Blessed Beauty told Mīrzā Muhammad-Qulī, "Rebuke him appropriately!" Mīrzā Muhammad-Qulī grabbed his beard and punished him. The Kabobī took a complaint to the constable, but was thrown in jail and told, "Obviously you must have grievously insulted them for the Bābīs to have punished you in such manner!"	When his holiness returned from Sulaymaniyah, he was strolling in the street one day with the late Āqā Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī. A Kabob seller quietly said, "These Bābīs have appeared again!" The Blessed Beauty said to Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī, "Hit him in the mouth!" Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī grabbed his beard and started hitting him in the head. [The man] went to the ambassador and complained. The ambassador imprisoned the man (instead of assisting him) and said, "without doubt, you must have greatly insulted the Bābīs that they hit you."

Ahang Rabbani has deliberately distorted the meaning of the word hit three times to portray a peaceful Bahā'u'llāh. When confronted with this distortion, Baha'is claim that "hit in the mouth" is also used as slang in Persian to rebuke someone verbally. The context of the quote and the reactions therein clearly show that this meaning was not intended and the poor kabob seller was physically abused by the person executing Bahā'u'llāh's orders and not verbally. If a verbal rebuking was intended Bahā'u'llāh would have at least prevented his follower from hitting the kabob seller in the head or would have apologized for the harsh response, but he did not and the kabob seller had been forced to take a complaint to the constable.

Furthermore, the word hit has been used three times in the quote and only the first instance could have had two meanings not the others, however the meaning of all three instances has been distorted.

9- Why Didn't `Abdu'l-Bahā Speak English in England and French in Paris?

Bahā'is believe that Bahā'u'llāh and his successor `Abdu'l-Bahā are infallible and possess Divine or superhuman knowledge. According to Shia Islam—which Bahā'u'llāh adhered to before becoming a Bābī—one of the traits of the Messengers of God and their successors, is the ability to speak the language of all people and races. Abā Ṣalt a disciple of the eighth Shia Imam, al-Riḍā, narrates:

(Imam) al-Riḍā would speak with all the people by their own tongues and by God, from amongst the people, he was the most eloquent and most knowledgeable about all languages. One day I said to him, “O Son of God’s Apostle, I am astounded that you know all these different languages!” He replied, “O Ābā Ṣalt, I am God’s proof over His creations. God will not appoint a Proof over a group (whilst that Proof) cannot speak their tongue.”⁹⁸⁵

Why couldn't `Abdu'l-Bahā speak English or French in his travels to Europe and America? What kind of superhuman Knowledge and what form of Divine Appointment did he possess that lacked one of the main traits needed to communicate God's messages to the people?

⁹⁸⁵ Al-Ṣadūq, ʿUyūn akhbār al-Riḍā (n.p.: Intishārāti Jahān: 1378 AH), vol. 2, p. 228.

10- Wrong Data Given to English Speaking Audience

Lacking the linguistic means to investigate the truth, non-Farsi speaking audiences are usually presented with distorted facts about the Baha'i creed. This is not peculiar to ordinary Bahā'īs but is an act that was also performed by `Abdu'l-Bahā.

The current estimate of the number of Baha'is in the world is at most 5–7.5 million adherents. These numbers have been dismissed by a number of academics and it is believed that the actual worldwide Baha'i population is much lower. As we will show, the exaggeration in the Baha'i population was first initiated by `Abdu'l-Bahā when presenting wrong statistics to non-Farsi speaking audiences.

In 2012 the Official Website of “the Baha'is of the United States” published the Daily Centenarian,⁹⁸⁶ an archive of hundreds of American newspaper articles (and their images which we have provided below) from 1912 that were related to `Abdu'l-Bahā's journey to America and his speeches therein. Based on the worldwide Baha'i population mentioned in these articles, we have constructed a table in reverse chronological order that shows the name of the newspaper, the date published, and the population statistic cited:

Table 5: World Baha'i population according to newspapers in 1912

no.	Newspaper Name	Date	Mentioned Population
1	Troy NY Press	16/12/2012	over 10,000,000 ⁹⁸⁷
2	The Christian Commonwealth	8/12/1912	3,000,000 ⁹⁸⁸
3	The New York Times	6/12/1912	Thousands in America. ⁹⁸⁹

⁹⁸⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/daily-archive>

⁹⁸⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/head-new-religious-cult-has-thousands-followers>

⁹⁸⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/return-england-abdul-baha>

⁹⁸⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-sails-away-0>

4	The New York Times (Palo Alto, CA)	10/11/1912	Several million ⁹⁹⁰
5	San Francisco Call	12/10/1912	7,000,000 Persian followers ⁹⁹¹
6	San Francisco California Chronicle	8/10/1912	3,000,000 ⁹⁹²
7	unnamed (Seattle)	6/10/1912	No less than 20,000,000 ⁹⁹³
8	San Francisco California Examiner	6/10/1912	No less than 3,000,000 ⁹⁹⁴
9	San Francisco California Bulletin	4/10/1912	Several million ⁹⁹⁵
10	The SFO Call (San Francisco, CA)	4/10/1912	Several million ⁹⁹⁶
11	Oakland Tribune (San Francisco, CA)	4/10/1912	Several million ⁹⁹⁷
12	The Sacramento Bee (San Francisco, CA)	4/10/1912	Several million ⁹⁹⁸
13	San Jose California Herald	3/10/1912	Several million ⁹⁹⁹
14	San Francisco Chronicle	3/10/1912	Several million ¹⁰⁰⁰
15	The Oakland Enquirer (Oakland, CA)	2/10/1912	Several million ¹⁰⁰¹
16	The Evening Standard (Salt)	30/9/1912	10,000,000 ¹⁰⁰²

⁹⁹⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/leland-stanford>

⁹⁹¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/charitable-woman-may-aid-bahaism>

⁹⁹² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-abbas-says-object-mission-unify-all-creeds>

⁹⁹³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-abbas-will-visit-seattle>

⁹⁹⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-brings-gospel-peace>

⁹⁹⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-give-lecture-oakland>

⁹⁹⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-lecture-universal-peace>

⁹⁹⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-prophet-lecture-here-0>

⁹⁹⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/women-should-have-rights-men-he-says>

⁹⁹⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-talk-stanford>

¹⁰⁰⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/apostle-bahaism-speak-stanford>

¹⁰⁰¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahai-prophet-will-speak-here>

¹⁰⁰² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-abbas-comes-lecture-bahai-religion>

	Lake, UT)
17	Rocky Mountain News (New York, NY)	22/9/1912	Millions ¹⁰⁰³
18	Spokane Washington Daily Chronicle	17/9/1912	3,000,000 ¹⁰⁰⁴
19	Harbor Grace Standard (Montreal, QC)	7/9/1912	3,000,000 in Persia alone ¹⁰⁰⁵
20	Biddeford Maine Weekly Journal	6/9/1912	3,000,000 ¹⁰⁰⁶
21	London Ontario paper	3/9/1912	8000 in America ¹⁰⁰⁷
22	Portland Oregon Oregonian	1/9/1912	3,000,000 ¹⁰⁰⁸
23	The Montreal Gazette (Montreal, QC)	29/8/1912	3,000,000 in Persia alone
24	The Montreal Daily Star (Montreal, QC)	24/8/1912	Over 3,000,000 in Persia alone ¹⁰⁰⁹
25	Oakland Cal Enquirer (Berkeley, CA)	8/8/1912	Millions ¹⁰¹⁰
26	The Evening Post (New York)	23/7/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰¹¹
27	The Pittsburgh Pennsylvania Press	15/7/1912	20,000,000 ¹⁰¹²
28	The Brooklyn Daily Eagle (New York)	13/7/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰¹³
29	New York Sun	7/7/1912	Several Hundred Thousand ¹⁰¹⁴

¹⁰⁰³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-coming-persian-prophet-teaches-new-faith>

¹⁰⁰⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-prophet-god-asked-come-spokane>

¹⁰⁰⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-peace-prophet-gives-message-canada-through-standard>

¹⁰⁰⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-greenacre-conferences>

¹⁰⁰⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahai-revelation-comes-city>

¹⁰⁰⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-coming-tour-interest-his-religion>

¹⁰⁰⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/famous-teacher-coming>

¹⁰¹⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/local-artist-wins-fame-portrait>

¹⁰¹¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-speak-1>

¹⁰¹² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/aged-head-new-religion-gives-views>

¹⁰¹³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/unitarian-persian-prophet>

30	The Van Nuys News (Van Nuys, CA)	5/7/1912	Millions ¹⁰¹⁵
31	The Agitator Wellsboro Pennsylvania	3/7/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰¹⁶
32	unnamed (New York)	26/6/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰¹⁷
33	Grand Rapids Minnesota Press	24/6/1912	3,000,000 ¹⁰¹⁸
34	Brooklyn Daily Eagle NY	17/6/1912	Many millions ¹⁰¹⁹
35	The Anaconda Standard (Montclair, NJ)	16/6/1912	14,000,000
36	The Evening News (San Jose)	15/6/1912	2,000,000 ¹⁰²⁰
37	The Evening Bulletin Philadelphia	10/6/1912	250,000 in America ¹⁰²¹
38	Philadelphia Pennsylvania Public Ledger	10/6/1912	More than 3,000,000 ¹⁰²²
39	Middletown Time-Press (Montclair, NJ)	3/6/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰²³
40	unnamed paper in New York	26/5/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰²⁴
41	Worcester Telegram 2nd edition	24/5/1912	Millions in near east and hundreds of thousands in the US ¹⁰²⁵
42	Worcester Evening Post	24/5/1912	Millions in near east and hundreds of thousands in

¹⁰¹⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-gives-his-impressions-new-york>

¹⁰¹⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/leader-bahaism-here-1>

¹⁰¹⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-make-his-home-montclair>

¹⁰¹⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-will-stay-america>

¹⁰¹⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/church-and-its-work>

¹⁰¹⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-abbas-pulpit>

¹⁰²⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-head-new-religion-brotherhood>

¹⁰²¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/old-persian-mystic-stirs-teachings>

¹⁰²² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-sage-pays-visit-city>

¹⁰²³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/ Jerseys-new-resident>

¹⁰²⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-will-stay-america>

¹⁰²⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/new-faith-head-heard>

			the US ¹⁰²⁶
43	Worcester Massachusetts Post	23/5/1912	Millions in near east and hundreds of thousands in the US ¹⁰²⁷
44	Worcester Telegram 2nd edition	22/5/1912	Millions and 100,000 in the US ¹⁰²⁸
45	Worcester Evening Gazette	21/5/1912	Millions and several hundred thousand in the US ¹⁰²⁹
46	The Syracuse Herald	11/5/1912	20,000,000 ¹⁰³⁰
47	Grand Valley Times (Moab, UT)	10/5/1912	Millions ¹⁰³¹
48	The Oelwein Daily Register (Oelwein, IA)	10/5/1912	Millions ¹⁰³²
49	Manitoba Free Press	9/5/1912	3,000,000 in the Orient ¹⁰³³
50	Marble Rock Journal (Floyd, IA)	9/5/1912	Millions ¹⁰³⁴
51	The Palo Alto Tribune (Emmetsburg, IA)	8/5/1912	Millions ¹⁰³⁵
52	Pittsburgh Pennsylvania Post	6/5/1912	15,000,000 ¹⁰³⁶
53	New York Tribune	5/5/1912	20,000,000 in the world 5000 in America ¹⁰³⁷
54	unnamed (chicago)	1/5/1912	40,000,000 ¹⁰³⁸

¹⁰²⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/head-new-religion-clark-college-speaker>

¹⁰²⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/head-new-religion-clark-college-speaker-0>

¹⁰²⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-speak-0>

¹⁰²⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abbas-effendi-coming-give-talk-clark>

¹⁰³⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/prophet-may-come>

¹⁰³¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/leader-bahaism-here-3>

¹⁰³² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/leader-bahaism-here-4>

¹⁰³³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/readers-notes>

¹⁰³⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/leader-bahaism-here-2>

¹⁰³⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/leader-bahaism-here-0>

¹⁰³⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-speak>

¹⁰³⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-talks-kate-carew-things-spiritual-and-mundane>

¹⁰³⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahaist-leader-opens-oriental-court-here>

55	Chicago Illinois News	29/4/1912	40,000,000 ¹⁰³⁹
56	The Hutchinson News (Chicago)	27/4/1912	14,000,000 ¹⁰⁴⁰
57	Houston Texas Chronicle	24/4/1912	15,000,000 with several hundred thousand in the US and Canada ¹⁰⁴¹
58	Cleveland Ohio Leader	22/4/1912	2,000,000 ¹⁰⁴²
59	The New York Times	21/4/1912	Tens of thousands ¹⁰⁴³
60	New York Tribune	18/4/1912	Millions ¹⁰⁴⁴
61	Pittsburg PA Times	17/4/1912	20,000,000 ¹⁰⁴⁵
62	Albany New York Press	15/4/1912	Many millions ¹⁰⁴⁶
63	Buffalo New York Courier	15/4/1912	Many millions ¹⁰⁴⁷
64	The Lexington Herald	14/4/1912	Hundreds of thousands when Bahā'u'llāh was alive ¹⁰⁴⁸
65	Chicago Illinois Post	13/4/1912	2,000,000 with 5,000 in the US ¹⁰⁴⁹
66	New York Herald	13/4/1912	20,000,000 ¹⁰⁵⁰
67	The Chicago Illinois Defender	13/4/1912	Millions ¹⁰⁵¹
68	New York Tribune	12/4/1912	20,000,000 ¹⁰⁵²

¹⁰³⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahaist-chief-missing>

¹⁰⁴⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahaists-honor-leader>

¹⁰⁴¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/people-worth-while>

¹⁰⁴² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-hailed-new-messiah-comes-teach-unity-world>

¹⁰⁴³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/message-abdul-baha-head-bahais-0>

¹⁰⁴⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/letters-editor-abdul-baha>

¹⁰⁴⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/head-new-cult>

¹⁰⁴⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-explains-plan-unite-all-religions>

¹⁰⁴⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/western-world-behind-spiritual-civilization>

¹⁰⁴⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/servant-god-headed-america-0>

¹⁰⁴⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-and-chicago>

¹⁰⁵⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-dazed-citys-rush-calls-new-york-beehive-0>

¹⁰⁵¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-abbas-coming-lewis-g-gregory>

¹⁰⁵² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-prophet-here>

69	New York Sun	12/4/1912	2,000,000 ¹⁰⁵³
70	unnamed (Washington DC)	27/3/1912	Thousands in America ¹⁰⁵⁴
71	The New York Times	4/3/1912	One third of Persians ¹⁰⁵⁵
72	SFO Daily News (San Francisco, CA)	28/2/1912	Millions ¹⁰⁵⁶
73	The Montreal Daily Star (Montreal, QC)	10/2/1912	2,000,000 ¹⁰⁵⁷
74	Sault Ste. Marie Ontario Evening News	5/2/1912	Millions ¹⁰⁵⁸
75	Boston Massachusetts Evening Transcript	27/1/1912	Thousands ¹⁰⁵⁹
76	unnamed (Chicago)	7/1/1912	2,000,000 ¹⁰⁶⁰

These exaggerations are totally outrageous and go up to numbers like 40 million! Although, the source of many of these numbers has not been mentioned in the newspapers, in the case of a few of these articles, it has been stated that the numbers have been provided by `Abdu'l-Bahā himself.

Upon arriving in the United States, `Abdu'l-Bahā is quoted by the New York Times as saying that he has no way of estimating the number of his followers but that they are overall about two million:

The philosopher enjoyed a tiny pinch of snuff and leaned back in his chair. Answering questions, he said he expected to stay

¹⁰⁵³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/disciples-here-hail-abdul-baha>

¹⁰⁵⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/persian-brings-gospel-love-0>

¹⁰⁵⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahai-leader-due-here>

¹⁰⁵⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/after-40-years-prison>

¹⁰⁵⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/eastern-sage-coming-city-new-message-0>

¹⁰⁵⁸ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/after-forty-years-prison-bahai-leader-plans-visit-followers-united-states-0>

¹⁰⁵⁹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/coming-abdul-baha-abbas>

¹⁰⁶⁰ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/dedicate-temple-bahai-chicagos-north-shore> in the United States four or perhaps five months, and that he wanted to see everything of interest. He will visit all the large cities before sailing from San Francisco for Japan. He had no way of estimating the number of his followers.

Twenty million? Oh, no. Perhaps 2,000,000¹⁰⁶¹ the world over. Did he believe, in women suffrage? Yes, positively, and in the entire emancipation of women. He believed also that divorce is justifiable for many causes. (Disciples Here Hail Abdul Baha, New York Sun, 12 April 1912)¹⁰⁶² over his shoulders. His broad beard and mustache are as gray as his hair. His forehead is broad, full and high and his nose is large and aquiline. Abdul Baha's eyes are blue and large, his glance is penetrating. He wore a voluminous outer coat of gray wool which swept from his shoulders to the floor. Under the jobbeh was a linen coat, the gaba. His turban was white. His feet were encased in narrow pointed shoes

APRIL 12, 1912.—Copyright, 1912, by the Sun Printing and Publishing Association.

Twenty million? Oh, no. Perhaps 2,000,000 the world over. Did he believe in women suffrage? Yes, positively, and in the entire emancipation of women. He believed also that divorce is justifiable for many causes.

"Complete incompatibility," he said slowly, "is the chief cause of unhappy marriages. It brings hatred. It should be relieved by divorce."

From the hotel he was taken in an automobile to the home of Edward Kinney where followers from this and other cities

Figure 8: Image of newspaper that quotes 'Abdu'l-Bahā as saying the world Baha'i population is about 2 million

The same number is repeated in another paper the next day:

He estimates the number of his followers at about 2,000,000, about 5,000 of these being in this country. (Leader of New Cult [rest of title is missing], Chicago Illinois Post, 13 April 1912)¹⁰⁶³

¹⁰⁶¹ Although a zero is missing but the ',' after the letter '2' shows that this number is 2,000,000.

¹⁰⁶² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/disciples-here-hail-abdul-baha>

¹⁰⁶³ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-and-chicago>

Figure 9: Image of another newspaper that quotes `Abdu'l-Bahā as saying the world Baha'i population is about 2 million

Matters become even more interesting. Six months into his stay these numbers dramatically change. He is quoted as saying he has ten million followers:

`Abdu'l-Bahā Abbas, leader of the Bahā'ī movement, which he says has 10,000,000 followers in the world, is in Salt Lake City. He is making a tour of the United States and plans to lecture on his religion here. (Comes [sic] to Lecture on Bahal [sic] Religion, The Evening Standard [Salt Lake], 30 September 1912)¹⁰⁶⁴

¹⁰⁶⁴ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-abbas-comes-lecture-bahai-religion>

Figure 10: Image of newspaper that quotes `Abdu'l-Bahā as saying the world Baha'i population is about 10 million

This high number is further strengthened by a quote from another newspaper several days later in which `Abdu'l-Bahā claims he has converted several million people to Baha'ism himself:

The disciple is a martyr to religion and claims to have converted several million people, including Christian, Mohammedans and Jews to the Baha'ism faith. (Women Should Have Rights of Men, The Sacramento Bee [San Francisco] 4 October 1912)¹⁰⁶⁵

¹⁰⁶⁵ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/women-should-have-rights-men-he-says>

Figure 11: Image of newspaper that quotes 'Abdu'l-Bahā as saying he has converted several million people to Baha'ism himself

The number of American Baha'is can also be found in 'Abdu'l-Bahā's words. As we previously quoted, upon arriving in the US, he had mentioned his American followers to be around 5000:

He estimates the number of his followers at about 2,000,000, about 5,000 of these being in this country. (Leader of New Cult [rest of title is missing], Chicago Illinois Post, 13 April 1912)¹⁰⁶⁶

Furthermore, in his farewell speech he had claimed that he had converted thousands of Americans during his eight month stay in America:

About 100 members of the New York Bahā'ī Society, 80 per cent. of whom are women, went to the pier to see `Abdu'l-Bahā off and were deeply moved as he delivered his final address to them in the lounge. He said that during his tour of the United States he had converted thousands of men and women and that they would work among their churches after he had gone for the furtherance of the movement for universal peace. (Abdul Baha Sails Away, The New York Times, 6 December 1912)¹⁰⁶⁷

¹⁰⁶⁶ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-and-chicago>

¹⁰⁶⁷ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-sails-away-0>

NEW YORK CITY TIMES

Friday, December 6, 1912

ABDUL BAHÁ SAILS AWAY.

Persian Prophet Bids Followers Here a Farewell for Life.

Abdul Baha, the Bahai prophet and peace advocate, sailed yesterday for Liverpool on the Celtic, after spending seven months in this country preaching to his followers and bidding them farewell on this earth. The prophet, who wore his white turban, was accompanied by his secretary, interpreter, and body servant.

About 100 members of the New York Bahai Society, 80 per cent. of whom are women, went to the pier to see Abdul Baha off and were deeply moved as he delivered his final address to them in the lounge. He said that during his tour of the United States he had converted thousands of men and women and that they would work among their churches after he had gone for the furtherance of the movement for universal peace.

Figure 12: Image of newspaper that quotes `Abdu'l-Bahā as saying he has converted thousands of Americans to Baha'ism during his stay in America.

If we conservatively assume that `Abdu'l-Bahā had converted another five thousand people to the Baha'í faith during his stay in America—based on the thousands that he had claimed—then we can estimate the total number of American Baha'is to be around ten thousand.

Subsequently, based on what the papers quoted from `Abdu'l-Bahā, there must have been two or ten million Baha'is worldwide (millions of which he had converted) and ten thousand in America at the end of 1912. According to a survey by two prominent Baha'i authors¹⁰⁶⁸ the number of Baha'is 42 years later—in 1954—were only 213,000 worldwide and only 10,000 in North America, Europe, and Anglo-Pacific combined!

Even if we assume a large margin of error for all numbers, the estimated population of 1912 is still very large and greatly exaggerated. Ignoring the population growth, `Abdu'l-Bahā's statistics are respectively about 9.4 times and 46 times the Baha'i population of 42 years later! These are the words of the Mystery of God who possesses superhuman knowledge¹⁰⁶⁹ and is the Unerring Pen.¹⁰⁷⁰

There is another point in these exaggerations that is worth mentioning. `Abdu'l-Bahā apparently didn't mind these large numbers being published in these papers although he protested other facts that he deemed needed to be corrected. For instance:

`Abdul-Bahā, "Servant of Ineffable Splendor," has arrived in Chicago from Persia to establish a world-wide peace between religion and science, but feels a little doubtful of our newspapers because a reporter wrote that he wore a robe and turban of red and white stripes — which he never did; so there! ([title missing], Inter Ocean [Chicago] 2 May 1912)¹⁰⁷¹

The paper that `Abdu'l-Bahā was referring to was published a day earlier:

`Abdul-Bahā, "Servant of Ineffable Splendor," Adviser to 40,000,000 Through World . . . The high priest sat in a big

¹⁰⁶⁸ P. Smith, M. Momen, The Baha'i faith 1957–1988: A survey of contemporary developments, Religion 19 (1989), pp. 63–91: http://bahai-library.com/momen_smith_developments_1957-1988 (retrieved 28/2/2014)

¹⁰⁶⁹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

¹⁰⁷⁰ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 75.

¹⁰⁷¹ <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/abdul-baha-servant-splendor> plush chair during the brief reception. He wore a long, flowing robe, striped with red and white. His beard reached almost to his waist. A turban of the same material as the robe was wound about his head. (Bahaist Leader Opens Oriental Court Here, unnamed [Chicago] 1 May 1912)¹⁰⁷²

BAHAIST LEADER OPENS ORIENTAL COURT HERE

Persian High Priest of Universal Brotherhood Cult Greets
Host of Followers.
CHICAGO

FAITHFUL FLOCK TO THRONE

Abdul-Baha, "Servant of Ineffable Splendor," Adviser to 40,- 000,000 Through World.

An oriental court that sways the des-tines of 40,000,000 persons throughout the world has been established temporarily in Chicago.

"INNER CIRCLE" ADMITTED.

None but Persians were permitted to enter the presence of the "Servant of the Ineffable Splendor" during his first few hours at the hotel. Later a favored few, comprising the "inner circle" of the cult, were allowed to pass through the suite and to touch his hand.

The high priest sat in a big plush chair during the brief reception. He wore a long, flowing robe, striped with red and white. His beard reached almost to his waist. A turban of the same material as the robe was wound about his head.

A half dozen Persians stood about the "throne." A dozen or more American women from Boston, New York and Washington formed the background. Hardly a word was spoken.

After the reception the priest again went into seclusion. It was announced that he was dining. Abdul-Baha has his own native cook.

In the evening Abdul-Baha held another reception. One hundred followers flocked to his apartments, which were filled with costly flowers. The priest gave all a cordial welcome. He had changed his costume of

Figure 13: Image of newspaper that claimed 'Abdu'l-Bahā had worn a red and white striped robe.

Apparently, the color of his turban was an important point that needed to be corrected but his 40 million non-existent followers were not.

Why is wrong data given to non-English speaking audiences? Professor Juan Cole's statements seem fairly reasonable:

¹⁰⁷² <http://centenary.bahai.us/news/bahaist-leader-opens-oriental-court-here>

The statements of the Universal House of Justice must be understood against a background of twentieth-century Bahā'ī translation practice, in which it has been the custom to limit the amount of material translated, to suppress large parts of the scriptural corpus by simply not making them available or by ensuring they stay out of print, and by translating in such a way as to build bridges to Western converts and potential converts. The purpose of such translation is not academic accuracy, but building up a seemingly seamless scriptural corpus in English that smooths over internal contradictions and supports the contemporary 'party line;' and making the scriptural corpus bland enough and 'naturalized' enough in English to ensure it does not pose a Public Relations problem inside or outside the community.¹⁰⁷³

¹⁰⁷³ http://bahai-library.com/uhj_lawh_huriyyih_cole

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

Learning a new language is no simple task and can only be justified when there is a need or necessity for such an action. Currently, there are millions (if not billions) of people in the world who do not need to learn a new language for it has no benefit to them. Why force a peasant or farmer working in a remote part of Africa or South America to learn a second language? Why force the ordinary people of any country who are living their lives peacefully and without any problem to learn a new language for no reason at all?

When the need is felt, people will themselves strive to learn a new language. For instance, students will probably feel the need to learn English as a scientific language. Merchants and businessmen might feel the need to learn the language of the countries they are trading with. Dignitaries and ambassadors will probably have this attitude too, but the majority of the people will have no need to learn a new language and it will be a complete waste of time.

Furthermore, the poor reception of auxiliary languages like Esperanto show that such languages are failure prone because many people—based on their social, national, and cultural beliefs—will under no circumstance accept a predefined language that they do not favor as a universal auxiliary language.

The greatest flaw in this principle, by far, is the farfetched argument `Abdu'l-Bahā puts forward to justify it. He believes that the differences between nations and people are caused by differences in their languages and these will only be dispelled once a universal language is implemented:

What is the difference between Germany and France? It is only the difference of language.¹⁰⁷⁴

Misunderstandings are the reason behind differences. When [people] understand each other's tongues no misunderstanding will remain. Everyone will show affection and kindness to others and the East and the West will become united and in harmony.¹⁰⁷⁵

Is there no difference between Germany and France, but the difference in their languages? Will the differences between these two countries disappear overnight if they speak the same language? Are misunderstandings only caused because of differences in languages? Are there no misunderstandings between people with the same language living in the same country? Are all differences rooted in misunderstandings and differences in languages?

The answer to all the above questions is clearly: No. This is how `Abdu'l-Bahā justifies the aforementioned reasoning:

We can see how in the past ages, the unification of language became a cause of friendship and unity. Thirteen-hundred years ago, the Copts, Syrians, and Assyrians were different nations and had great quarrels and wars with each other. When they were forced to speak Arabic, their language became unified and they are now all Arabs and a single nation. Even though Egyptians were Copts, Syrians were Syrians, Baghdadis were Chaldean, and the people of Mosul were Assyrians, but the unification of language made them all a common nation related to each other in such a way that this relationship will never break apart. Also, in Syria, there are different religions like Catholic, Orthodox, Druze, Shia, Sunni, and Alawites, but because they have a single language they are like a single nation. If you ask any of them (about his race), he will reply I am an Arab even though some are Romans, some Hebrew, some Syriacs, and others Greek. It is the unification of language that has integrated all of them.¹⁰⁷⁶

¹⁰⁷⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 234.

¹⁰⁷⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 230.

We will not delve into the incorrect historical and geographical facts in this speech. But how can we, in any sense of the word, claim that the mostly Arab Middle-East, with all the countries and tribes mentioned in this quote, is integrated in a way that it will never break apart? Has there ever, in the past century, been even a short period of peace between all these groups because they all became Arabs? Did the unity of language make all these different groups friends, and iron out their differences? This simply is unreasonable, for in contrast to what `Abdu'l-Bahā claims, the unification of language is not a definite cause for affection, harmony, or peace.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

¹⁰⁷⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 37.

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”¹⁰⁷⁷

¹⁰⁷⁷Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. How Many Languages Must One Learn Other than His Mother's Tongue?

`Abdu'l-Bahā and Bahā'u'llāh: At most two languages are needed: the mother tongue and the Universal Auxiliary Language.¹⁰⁷⁸ Great effort must be put to limit this to one language.¹⁰⁷⁹

Bahā'u'llāh, `Abdu'l-Bahā', and Shoghi: Other than your mother tongue learn the Auxiliary language, Arabic¹⁰⁸⁰, Farsi¹⁰⁸¹, English, and German!¹⁰⁸²

¹⁰⁷⁸ "A universal language would make intercourse possible with every nation. Thus it would be needful to know two languages only, the mother tongue and the universal speech," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 155–156.

¹⁰⁷⁹ "We have decreed before that it has been destined to speak with two tongues and a great effort must be put to limit this to one [tongue] and the same [applies] to the handwriting. So that the lives of the people will not be wasted and nullified in learning different languages," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 33 (citing Bahā'u'llāh)

¹⁰⁸⁰ "The beloved Guardian has stressed that the children and the youth of the friends must also learn the Arabic language and use this eloquent language to benefit from the tablets and blessed writings," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 25, p. 206.

¹⁰⁸¹ "Make as much effort as possible to learn the Farsi language, for this language will soon be sanctified on all of earth and it will have great use in spreading the Breath of God, elevating the Word of God, and deducing the meanings of God's verses," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 114.

¹⁰⁸² "The exalted decision of the beloved Guardian has been for the Baha'i youth to learn firstly English and secondly German and show the utmost effort and seriousness [in learning these languages]," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 25, pp. 205–206.

2. The Meaning of “Putting Great Effort to Limit the Languages of the World to One”

Bahā’u’llāh: Great effort must be put to limit the languages to one.¹⁰⁸³

Bahā’u’llāh, Abdu’l-Bahā, and Shoghi reveal verses, utter words, and give orders in Arabic, Farsi, English, and Turkish.¹⁰⁸⁴

Bahā’u’llāh, Abdu’l-Bahā, and Shoghi order their followers to learn five languages other than their mother tongues: the Universal Auxiliary Language, Arabic, Farsi, German and English.¹⁰⁸⁵

The Universal House of Justice: Translates Baha’i literature into 800 different languages worldwide.¹⁰⁸⁶

3. Is Learning Foreign Languages a Waste of Time?

Bahā’u’llāh: Definitely!¹⁰⁸⁷

Shoghi and `Abdu’l-Bahā and Bahā’u’llāh: Of course not. Learn your mothers tongue, the auxiliary language, Arabic, Farsi, German, and English!¹⁰⁸⁸

¹⁰⁸³ “We have decreed before that it has been destined to speak with two tongues and a great effort must be put to limit this to one [tongue] and the same [applies] to the handwriting. So that the lives of the people will not be wasted and nullified in learning different languages,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 33 (citing Bahā’u’llāh)

¹⁰⁸⁴ For Turkish see: `Abdu’l-Bahā, Majmū’iy-i munājāt-hāyi ḥaḍrat `Abdu’l-Bahā, pp. 396–397.

¹⁰⁸⁵ See footnotes in no. 1.

¹⁰⁸⁶ For example see <http://news.bahai.org/media-information/statistics> (retrieved 25/01/2014)

¹⁰⁸⁷ “We have decreed before that it has been destined to speak with two tongues and a great effort must be put to limit this to one [tongue] and the same [applies] to the handwriting. So that the lives of the people will not be wasted and nullified in learning different languages.” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 33; “One day, while in Constantinople, Kamāl Pāshā visited this Wronged One. Our conversation turned upon topics profitable unto man. He said that he had learned several languages. In reply We observed: ‘You have wasted your life. It becometh you and the other officials of the Government to convene a gathering and choose one of the divers languages, and likewise one of the existing scripts, or else to create a new language and a new script to be taught children in schools throughout the world. They would, in this way, be acquiring only two languages, one their own native tongue, the other the language . . . and the people would be relieved and freed from the necessity of acquiring and teaching different languages.” Bahā’u’llāh, Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, pp. 137–138.

4. Why Reveal Arabic Verses for a Persian Audience?

The Bāb and Bahā'u'llāh reveal verses in Arabic for a Persian audience, many of which are vague and sometimes incomprehensible.

Adib Taherzade (former UHJ member): The reason someone speaks Arabic to a Persian audience is to excite their imagination and fascinate them into thinking he is knowledgeable.¹⁰⁸⁹

¹⁰⁸⁸ See footnotes from previous page.

¹⁰⁸⁹ "In Persia in the nineteenth century most people were illiterate, under the domination of the clergy whom they blindly obeyed. There were two educated classes, divines and government officials, plus a small number of others. Only the religious leaders and divines, however, could be called learned . . . Since Arabic was the language of the Qur'ān, the divines attached great importance to its study. Many would spend a lifetime mastering the language because of its vast scope and wealth of expression. They considered no treatise worthy of perusal unless it was composed and written in Arabic, and no sermon from the pulpit as moving or eloquent unless the Mullā preaching it had used an abundance of difficult and often incomprehensible Arabic words. By this means they excited the imagination of their often illiterate audiences who were fascinated by the apparently learned discourse of their clergy, despite the fact that they might not understand a single word. The normal yardstick for determining the depth of a man's learning was his knowledge of the Arabic language and the size of his turban!" Adib Taherzadeh, The Revelation of Bahā'u'llāh, vol. 1, pp. 18–19.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is a Universal Auxiliary Language a new principle?

The need for a universal auxiliary language has always existed and depending on the conditions, one of the existing languages in the world has played this role either nationally or internationally. Before Bahā'u'llāh had spoken about this principle, Communicationsprache, was created by Joseph Schipfer and published in 1839 to serve this purpose. Subsequently many other auxiliary languages were introduced the most important ones being Universalglot in 1868, Volapuk in 1879, and Esperanto in 1887.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

This principle was ignored by Baha'i leaders to such an extent that they produced their teachings in three different languages: Arabic, Farsi, and English, and ordered their followers to learn five languages other than their mother tongues.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

The nations of the world, for many different reasons, will not accept a Universal Auxiliary Language chosen for them by another group or party. Furthermore, `Abdu'l-Bahā believes this principle is a cause of unity and friendship which in most cases is incorrect.

CHAPTER 10:

The Equality of Men and Women

“The tenth principle of his Highness Bahā’u’llāh is the unity of men and women; for in the view of God men and women are equal. They are all from the human race and the descendants of Adam. Because being male or female is not specific to the human race. Plants have male and female and animals too have male and female and there is no distinction. Look at the plant kingdom. Is there any distinction between male plants and female plants? Rather there is complete equality; and in the Animal kingdom too, there is no distinction at all. They are all under the shadow of God’s mercy.”¹⁰⁹⁰

¹⁰⁹⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 149–150.

The definition of the Equality of Men and Women is that men and women are equal in all rights and affairs.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā likens men and women to a bird’s two wings. He says:

The human world, like birds, needs two wings. One women and the other men. Flight is not possible with one wing. A shortcoming of one wing will cause hardship for the other.¹⁰⁹¹

From the teachings of his highness Bahā’u’llāh is the unity of women and men, for the human world has two wings. One wing is men and the other wing women. The bird will not fly ¹⁰⁹¹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 134.

unless both wings are equal. If one wing is weak flight is not possible. Unless the world of women becomes equal to the world of men in attaining virtues and accomplishments, prosperity and salvation will be impossible and unfeasible.¹⁰⁹²

`Abdu'l-Bahā believes the difference between men and women is rooted in how they are brought up and nurtured:

Up to now, the reason women lagged behind men was because women were not nurtured like men. If women were nurtured like men, there is no doubt that they would have become like men. When they attain the virtues of men, they will surely reach the rank of equality.¹⁰⁹³

He emphasizes:

Men and women are both humans and the servants of one Lord. In the presence of God there is no such thing as man and woman. Whoever has a purer heart and better actions is closer to God, whether he is a man or a woman. The differences we see now are caused by differences in nurturing for women are not nurtured like men. If they are nurtured like men they will become equal in all ranks, because they are both humans and share the same ranks. God has made no distinction.¹⁰⁹⁴

Bahā'is preach that if the world is to reach peace and unity, women must be allowed to attain the highest social, national, and international positions without discrimination and limitations, and be given the right to freely implement their views.

¹⁰⁹² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 107.

¹⁰⁹³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 150.

¹⁰⁹⁴ Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta`ālim Bahā'ī, p. 283.

Baha'i leaders have tried to portray themselves as women's rights advocates in order to make their creed more appealing to the modern society. Shoghi Effendi says:

Baha'is worldwide have the opportunity to show the world that they have achieved a new style concerning the relation between the two sexes. Aggression and the use of force have been obliterated and they have been replaced with co-operation and consultation. If women's stature in the Baha'i teachings is properly exhibited, it will definitely attract more attention.¹⁰⁹⁵

By expressing sympathy for women—especially the women in Iran¹⁰⁹⁶—Shoghi tries to portray Baha'ism as a creed with equal rights for the genders. When Baha'i teachings are more closely analyzed, it is apparent that there is no equality in rights, rather, there is a great inclination towards men.

¹⁰⁹⁵ Extracts from one of Shoghi's letters to the National Assembly of Iran dated 7 June 1931.

¹⁰⁹⁶ The Universal House of Justice writes in a letter dated 20 June 2008: "There are, of course, many pressing issues that occupy the minds of those striving to promote the prosperity and well-being of Iran. Chief among them is, no doubt, the critical need to remove barriers hindering the progress of women in society . . . You are particularly well placed to contribute to the promotion of this principle . . . Many of your compatriots are eager to see the realization of the universal principle of the equality of men and women. They will no doubt welcome you to join them in learning how to promote, step by step, conditions that enable the women of Iran to overcome impediments blocking their progress and participate fully, as equals of men, in all areas of human endeavour."

Were the Baha'is the first group to promote women's rights? Had no creed, religion, or group expressed such beliefs before them?

Throughout history, there have always been groups who have lobbied against discrimination towards women. The height of these campaigns occurred during the French Revolution at the end of the eighteenth century. This ultimately resulted in the creation of the Feminist movements.¹⁰⁹⁷

These movements were caused by critical woes such as having been deprived of the right to vote, having been given improper education, having been viewed as the inferior sex, and having been victimized by violence. They had started years before the advent of Baha'ism and had already gained much momentum and support in Western countries. There are many essays and books from those times that clearly show this matter. One of the earliest works was Mary Wollstonecraft's Vindication of the Rights Of Woman (1792). During Bahā'u'llāh's years, this topic was very hot in the West and a great number of writings have reached us from that era. Some of these works have words in them strikingly similar to what Baha'is propagate. For example, John Stuart ¹⁰⁹⁷ Although the supporters of Feminism used the slogan of women's rights to boost this movement, but Feminism was also promoted by capitalists and tycoons as a means to attain cheap labor. Women were usually paid half the wage of men and were more productive. We do not wish to pass judgment on the validity of all of the goals of all of the different groups under the umbrella of feminism here, but only bring it up as a reference of the prevalence of such ideas before the creation of Baha'ism.

Mill says the following words in the starting paragraph of his book, The Subjection of Women (1869):

That the principle which regulates the existing social relations between the two sexes—the legal subordination of one sex to the other—is wrong itself, and now one of the chief hindrances to human improvement; and that it ought to be replaced by a principle of perfect equality, admitting no power or privilege on the one side, nor disability on the other.¹⁰⁹⁸

Very similar to Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's claimed divine Revelations. Coincidence? Another famous women's rights activist of those times was Anna Kingsford. She too like Bahā'u'llāh claimed to have visions and divine inspirations from childhood to when she died. Here is a sample of her inspirations from Clothed Within the Sun (1889):

I HEARD last night in my sleep a voice speaking to me, and saying--

1. You ask the method and nature of Inspiration, and the means whereby God revealeth the Truth. 2. Know that there is no enlightenment from without: the secret of things is revealed from within. 3. From without cometh no Divine Revelation: but the Spirit within beareth witness. 4. Think not I tell you that which you know not: for except you know it, it cannot be given to you . . . 9. And Illumination is the Light of Wisdom, whereby a man perceiveth heavenly secrets. 10. Which Light is the Spirit of God within the man, showing unto him the things of God. 11. Do not think that I tell you anything you know not; all cometh from within: the Spirit that ¹⁰⁹⁸ John Stuart Mill, The subjection of Women (London: Longmans, Green and Co., 1869), chap. 1, p. 1: <http://www.sacred-texts.com/wmn/subjwmn.txt> (retrieved, 2/9/2014).

informeth is the Spirit of God in the prophet . . . 15. There are many such, but their words are as the words of men who know not: these are not prophets nor inspired . . . 19. Of such beware, for they speak many lies, and are deceivers, working often for gain or for pleasure sake: and they are a grief and a snare to the faithful . . . 24. By prayer, by fasting, by meditation, by painful seeking, hast thou attained that thou knowest . . . 27. Thou hast attained with patience, O prophet! God hath revealed the truth to thee from within.¹⁰⁹⁹

Very similar to Bahā'u'llāh's words. Here is another sample from her inspirations:

1. And now I show you a mystery and a new thing, which is part of the mystery of the fourth day of creation . . . But when the woman shall be created, God shall give unto her the kingdom; and she shall be first in rule and highest in dignity. 7. Yea, the last shall be first; and the elder shall serve the younger. 8. So that women shall no more lament for their womanhood: but men shall rather say, "O that we had been born women!" 9. For the strong shall be put down from their seat; and the meek shall be exalted to their place. 10. The days of the covenant of manifestation are passing away: the gospel of interpretation cometh. 11. There shall nothing new be told; but that which is ancient shall be interpreted. 12. So that man the manifestor shall resign his office; and woman the interpreter shall give light to the world. 13. Hers is the fourth office: she revealeth that which the Lord hath manifested. 14. Hers is the light of the heavens, and the brightest of the planets of the holy seven. 15. She is the fourth dimension; the eyes which enlighten; the power which ¹⁰⁹⁹ Anna (Bonus) Kingsford, Clothed With the Sun (London: John M. Watkins, 1889), pp.4–5: <http://www.sacred-texts.com/wmn/cws/cws06.htm> (retrieved 11/2/2014).

draweth inward to God. 16. And her kingdom cometh; the day of the exaltation of woman. 17. And her reign shall be greater than the reign of the man; for Adam shall be put down from his place; and she shall have dominion for ever. 18. And she who is alone shall bring forth more children to God than she who hath an husband. 19. There shall no more be a reproach against women: but against men shall be the reproach. 20. For the woman is the crown of man, and the final manifestation of humanity. 21. She is the nearest to the throne of God, when she shall be revealed. 22. But the creation of woman is not yet complete: but it shall be complete in the time which is at hand. 23. All things are thine, O Mother of God: all things are thine, O Thou who risest from the sea; and Thou shalt have dominion over all the worlds.¹¹⁰⁰

The claims, words, and sentences are very similar to Bahā'u'llāh's. Are we supposed to believe that anyone who utters sentences like these is connected to the Divine?

Other women's rights titles include *The Garden of Eden; or The Paradise Lost & Found*¹¹⁰¹ (1890), *Woman, Church And State*¹¹⁰² (1893), and *The Woman's Bible*¹¹⁰³ (1898).

Some of the verses of the Quran, revealed to the Prophet of Islam about 1400 years ago, are strikingly similar to what Baha'i leaders preached. For instance, `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

In the presence of God, there is no such thing as feminine or masculine. Whoever has better deeds and greater faith is ¹¹⁰⁰ Anna (Bonus) Kingsford, Clothed With the Sun (London: John M. Watkins, 1889), pp.6–7: <http://www.sacred-texts.com/wmn/cws/cws06.htm> (retrieved 11/2/2014).

¹¹⁰¹ Victoria Claflin Woodhull

¹¹⁰² Matilda Joselyn Gage

¹¹⁰³ Elizabeth Cady Stanton and the Revising Committee closer to God. In the Divine world, there is no male or female. They are both the same.¹¹⁰⁴

Now compare this with the following verses of the Quran:

Oh people! We created you from a male and a female. We made you nations and tribes, that you may know one another. The most honorable amongst you in the sight of God is the most pious.¹¹⁰⁵

Whoever does good, whether male or female, and is a believer, then they will enter paradise and will be given sustenance without limit.¹¹⁰⁶

Whoever does good deeds from amongst the males and females, and is a believer, we will make them live a good life, and we will reward them by the best of what they used to do.¹¹⁰⁷

Now compare these quotes with the following sayings from early Christian saints:

O womanly nature, overcoming the manly in the common struggle for salvation and demonstrating that male and female are distinctions of body and not of soul (Saint Gregory of Nazianzus [330–390 AD]).¹¹⁰⁸

We understand that the virtue of man and woman is the same. For if there is One God for both, there is one Instructor ¹¹⁰⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 220.

¹¹⁰⁵ Quran, 49:13

¹¹⁰⁶ Quran, 40:40

¹¹⁰⁷ Quran 16:97

¹¹⁰⁸ Everett Ferguson, Inheriting Wisdom: Readings for Today from Ancient Christian Writers (Massachusetts: Hendrickson Publishers, 2004), p. 184.

for both, one church, one temperance, one sense of shame, a common nourishment, a united marriage, with respiration, sight, hearing, knowledge, hope, obedience and love all the same. The life of men and women is common; they also have in common grace, salvation, virtue and training . . . Therefore men and women also share in common the name, "human being" . . . We acknowledge that each race has the same nature and possesses the same virtue. With regard to humanity, a woman does not possess one nature while a man manifests another; they have the same nature and so also the same virtue . . . Since there is sameness with regard to the soul, women will attain the same virtue . . . It is possible for men and women equally to share in perfection (Saint Clement of Alexandria [150–215 AD]).¹¹⁰⁹

Furthermore, Bahā'u'llāh, who was reared and nurtured in Iran, was quite familiar with the Shi'a Islamic beliefs regarding women. For instance women were urged to acquire knowledge just like men:

Acquiring knowledge is compulsory for every man and woman.¹¹¹⁰

The Prophet of Islam had urged his followers to show the greatest benevolence to women:

The best of you are those who are most benevolent to their wives and (amongst all people) I am the most benevolent to my wives.¹¹¹¹

¹¹⁰⁹ Everett Ferguson, Inheriting Wisdom: Readings for Today from Ancient Christian Writers, p. 181.

¹¹¹⁰ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 1, p.170.

¹¹¹¹ al-'Āmilī, Wasā'il a-Shī'a (Qum: Mu'assisatu Āl al-Bayt, 1409 AH), vol. 20, p. 171.

The first Shia Imam had strictly prohibited his followers from oppressing women:

They are a trust from God amongst you. Do not hurt or abuse them.¹¹¹²

Thus, this principle cannot be regarded as a novel teaching uniquely brought forth by Bahā'u'llāh.

¹¹¹² Al-Nūrī, Mustadrak al-wasā'il, vol. 14, p. 251.

Do Baha'is Truly Believe That Men and Women Are Equal? Do Their Actions Support Their Words?

1- Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā's Opinion about Women:

A closer inspection of the words of Bahā'u'llāh and his son clearly show that they regarded men superior to women and they had based the pillars of their religion on this belief:

A woman's question was referred to him (meaning `Abdu'l-Bahā) who had asked why hasn't God made any woman Prophets and why have all Divine Manifestations been men. He answered: "Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible."¹¹¹³

`Abdu'l-Bahā is clearly telling a woman that men are superior and stronger. He contradicts himself elsewhere and states we must not tell women they are weaker and inferior:

On the contrary, we must declare that her capacity is equal, even greater than man's. This will inspire her with hope and ambition, and her susceptibilities for advancement will ¹¹¹³ Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā'i' al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

continually increase. She must not be told and taught that she is weaker and inferior in capacity and qualification.¹¹¹⁴

Let us take a look at another quote from `Abdu'l-Bahā:

In this new cycle (daur badī), God's slave-maids (meaning women) must be thankful a thousand times every moment that the Hand of Favor (meaning Bahā'u'llāh) saved them from the depths of humility and made them reach the peak of men's honor.¹¹¹⁵

According to this quote, `Abdu'l-Bahā believes that by default, men are superior to women; "peak of men's honor" clearly shows this meaning. The default superiority of men in the Baha'i creed can also be seen elsewhere. Bahā'u'llāh says:

Today, whoever amongst the slave-maids (meaning women) succeeds in recognizing He Who is the Goal of the World, will be considered a man in the Divine Book (dar kitāb 'ilāhī az rijāl maḥsūb).¹¹¹⁶

Once a woman recognizes Bahā'u'llāh, she will be considered a man by God! Thus, men are regarded as the privileged sex whose stature women can only reach by the help of Bahā'u'llāh. Furthermore, the criterion used to show inferiority is being a woman, and the criterion used to show superiority is being a man. Thus, a successful woman is considered a man and an unsuccessful man is considered a woman. Here is how Bahā'u'llāh puts it:

¹¹¹⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 76.

¹¹¹⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 231.

¹¹¹⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

Oh slave-maids! Rise for the true affair like men. Today, there are many women who God considers as men, and some men who are considered women.¹¹¹⁷

Why would someone utter these words if he believes men and women are equal? Man being considered as woman! Woman being considered as man!

`Abdu'l-Bahā preaches that

With the help and grace of the Blessed Beauty (meaning Bahā'u'llāh), I endeavor to promote the world of women to such an extent that all will become astonished.¹¹¹⁸

But when he addresses women he views them as highly inferior:

Oh dear divine slave-maids! Do not pay attention to your [lack of] capacities and competencies. Rather, rely on the grace and kindness of the Blessed Beauty, because that everlasting beneficence will turn a shrub into a blessed tree, will turn a mirage into cool water, will turn a lost speck into the essence of existence, will turn a perishing ant into a tutor of the school of knowledge.¹¹¹⁹

In other words: Oh dear women, do not be sad that you are incompetent and incapable; my father can make up for these deficiencies for he can turn the lowliest things into the most exalted creatures.

`Abdu'l-Bahā even goes on to say:

¹¹¹⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

¹¹¹⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 7, p. 136.

¹¹¹⁹ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 7, pp. 135–6.

Women are of two kinds. One kind are worldly who have no share from your Lord's graces. And the other kind are spiritual who are like the pulse of an artery.¹¹²⁰

The strange thing about this sentence is that women are separated in only two distinct groups: worldly and spiritual with no rank in between. Furthermore, the above sentence contradicts `Abdu'l-Bahā's own words:

The God of the world created all [humans] from clay and created everyone from one element, created all from one progeny, created all in one land, and created [all] under the shadow of one sky, has created them with common emotions, and did not put any differences. He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy.¹¹²¹

`Abdu'l-Bahā claims that God has "put no differences in any grace or mercy" but a group of women "have no share from your Lord's graces." `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

Women and men have been and will always be equal in the sight of God.¹¹²²

Bahā'u'llāh utters the exact opposite:

Today, there are many women who God considers as men, and some men who are considered women.¹¹²³

¹¹²⁰ Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta`ālim Bahā'ī, 2nd ed., p. 284.

¹¹²¹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42 (citing `Abdu'l-Bahā').

¹¹²² Various, A Compilation on Women, p. 21.

¹¹²³ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

The two final quotes that we will place here that are the pinnacle of all contradictions in this principle. `Abdu'l-Bahā claims that women are actually more important than men:

'Abdu'l-Bahā smiled and asked: "What will you say if I prove to you that the woman is the stronger wing?" The answer came in the same bright vein: "You will earn my eternal gratitude!" at which all the company made merry. 'Abdu'l-Bahā then continued more seriously: "The woman is indeed of the greater importance to the race. She has the greater burden and the greater work. Look at the vegetable and the animal worlds. The palm which carries the fruit is the tree most prized by the date grower. The Arab knows that for a long journey the mare has the longest wind. For her greater strength and fierceness, the lioness is more feared by the hunter than the lion.¹¹²⁴

Up until now, `Abdu'l-Bahā was claiming "there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible." In another place he has stated there is absolute equality even in the animal and plant kingdoms¹¹²⁵ and now that it suits `Abdu'l-Bahā to claim something else, he contradicts himself and claims there is no equality rather the female is more important and stronger even in the vegetable and animal kingdom!

There is another similar speech from `Abdu'l-Bahā in the Federation of Women's Clubs. Because his audience was mainly comprised of women, he went to great heights to please them and, at the same time contradicted his own words multiple times:

¹¹²⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, `Abdu'l-Bahā in London, pp. 102–103.

¹¹²⁵ Refer to the opening quote of this chapter.

When we consider the kingdoms of existence below man, we find no distinction or estimate of superiority and inferiority between male and female. Among the myriad organisms of the vegetable and animal kingdoms sex exists, but there is no differentiation whatever as to relative importance and value in the equation of life. If we investigate impartially, we may even find species in which the female is superior or preferable to the male. For instance, there are trees such as the fig, the male of which is fruitless while the female is fruitful. The male of the date palm is valueless while the female bears abundantly. Inasmuch as we find no ground for distinction or superiority according to the creative wisdom in the lower kingdoms, is it logical or becoming of man to make such distinction in regard to himself? The male of the animal kingdom does not glory in its being male and superior to the female. In fact, equality exists and is recognized. Why should man, a higher and more intelligent creature, deny and deprive himself of this equality the animals enjoy? His surest index and guide as to the creative intention concerning himself are the conditions and analogies of the kingdoms below him where equality of the sexes is fundamental.¹¹²⁶

`Abdu'l-Bahā's analogies are very unique. He has a great tendency to compare humans with animals and vegetables whenever he wants to explain the equality of sexes. These are two groups in which equality is nearly nonexistent.

In the next sections we will analyze the Baha'i laws regarding women and their conformance with the principle of Equality of Men and Women.

2-Women and Inheritance

¹¹²⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 470.

According to Baha'i law, a mother's share from inheritance is smaller than a father's and a sister's share is smaller than a brother's.¹¹²⁷ This discrimination shows itself in another form when dividing the deceased's wealth amongst his or her children. The oldest living son has complete rights to the residence of the deceased and no other inheritors have a right to this property. Bahā'u'llāh says in the Book of Aqdas:

We have assigned the residence and personal clothing of the deceased to the male, not female, offspring, nor to the other heirs.¹¹²⁸

It is further explained that:

He specifies that if there be more than one residence, the principal and most important one passes to the male offspring.¹¹²⁹

Regarding this law `Abdu'l-Bahā states:

The living residence belongs to the oldest living son, whether or not the deceased has any other wealth. The oldest living son also takes his share from the other belongings.¹¹³⁰

Thus, if the deceased has left nothing behind but the home he lived in, it belongs to the oldest son and the other heirs have absolutely no share whatsoever! The discrimination doesn't end here. If the deceased has any debts, they must be settled from the other remaining properties ¹¹²⁷ The deceased's property are split into 2520 portions. Out of these, 1080 are for the children, 390 for the wives, fathers 330, mothers 270, brothers 210, sisters 150, teachers 90 (`Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, p. 117–119).

¹¹²⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 186.

¹¹²⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 186.

¹¹³⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, p. 128.

and the eldest son's share can only be used if the other properties are not enough to settle the debt:

QUESTION: If the deceased hath not settled his obligation to Ḥuqūqu'llāh, nor paid his other debts, are these to be discharged by proportionate deductions from the residence, personal clothing and the rest of the estate, or are the residence and personal clothing set aside for the male offspring, and consequently the debts must be settled from the rest of the estate? And if the rest of the estate is insufficient for this purpose, how should the debts be settled?

ANSWER: Outstanding debts and payments of Ḥuqūq should be settled from the remainder of the estate, but if this is insufficient for the purpose, the shortfall should be met from his residence and personal clothing.¹¹³¹

The discrimination between male and female heirs goes down one more generation:

Should the son of the deceased have passed away in the days of his father and have left children, they will inherit their father's share.¹¹³²

Now, what happens if the passed-away child of the deceased is a female? Her children don't take all her share and it must be re-divided amongst all heirs:

This aspect of the law applies only in the case of the son who predeceases his father or mother. If the daughter of the deceased be dead and leave issue, her share will have to be ¹¹³¹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 130.

¹¹³² Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 122–3.

divided according to the seven categories specified in the Most Holy Book.¹¹³³

As we can see, in contrast to the principle of “Equality of Men and Women,” there is neither equality nor unity in the laws of inheritance regarding these two sexes.

To justify this discrimination, Baha’i leaders have brought forth an argument:

In a Tablet, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā indicates that the residence and personal clothing of a deceased man remain in the male line. They pass to the eldest son and in the absence of the eldest son, they pass to the second-eldest son, and so on. He explains that this provision is an expression of the law of primogeniture, which has invariably been upheld by the Law of God. In a Tablet to a follower of the Faith in Persia He wrote: “In all the Divine Dispensations the eldest son hath been given extraordinary distinctions. Even the station of prophethood hath been his birthright.” With the distinctions given to the eldest son, however, go concomitant duties. For example, he has the moral responsibility, for the sake of God, to care for his mother and also to consider the needs of the other heirs.¹¹³⁴

This justification has four flaws:

First, pay attention to the word distinction which has been used twice in the quote. Remember this is the same creed that claims God has made absolutely no distinction between people¹¹³⁵ and between male ¹¹³³ Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 187.

¹¹³⁴ Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 186-7.

¹¹³⁵ “The second principle is the Oneness of Humanity: all humans are divine sheep and God is the kind shepherd who has utter compassion towards all the sheep and has made no distinction [between them],” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 3, p. 67.

or female (we already showed this in the introductory quotes of this chapter).

Second, there was supposed to be equality between men and women. This justification still fundamentally contradicts this principle.

Third, whilst the laws of inheritance are legally binding, moral responsibilities are not. Thus, a Baha'i can legally acquire the living residence and freely neglect his moral responsibilities.

Fourth, suppose that we accept this justification. Now consider the case where the deceased only has female children. One would expect the living residence of the deceased to be passed on to the eldest female offspring and along with that the moral responsibilities. Unfortunately another discriminative law has been legislated:

Two thirds of the residence and personal clothing pass to the female offspring, and one third to the House of Justice, which God hath made to be the treasury of the people.

Why discriminate against the female offspring and give a third of their share to the UHJ, while if the same share was for the eldest son it would be solely for him to keep? Why can the eldest female offspring not inherit the house? Who has to fulfill the moral responsibilities?

If you are wondering if any belongings of the deceased are solely passed to the female offspring, the answer is yes. They get to keep their mother's rags and old clothes:

In the case of the deceased mother all her used clothing is to be equally divided amongst her daughters.¹¹³⁶

If you are still wondering what happens to the mother's unused and new clothes, well the girls do not get to keep them and they are divided between all the groups of aforementioned inheritors:

¹¹³⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 165.

Her unworn clothing, jewels and property must be divided among her heirs.¹¹³⁷

And finally, let's see how `Abdu'l-Bahā being the oldest son, acted towards the moral responsibilities that he himself introduced. In the following table we have listed the wives and children of Bahā'u'llāh who `Abdu'l-Bahā was morally responsible for.

Table 6: The people that `Abdu'l-Bahā was morally responsible for and their fate.

Name	Relation with `Abdu'l-Bahā	Death	Fate
Gowhar	Step-mother	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant breaker
Fatemeh Mahdi Ulya	Step-mother	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant-breaker
Assiyeh Khanum	Mother	Before Bahā'u'llāh	-
Forughuyeh Nuri	Half-sister	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant breaker
Bahieh Khanum	Sister	After Bahā'u'llāh	Faithful
Mirza Mihdi	Brother	Before Bahā'u'llāh	-
Muhammad Ali	Half-brother	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant breaker
Samadiyyih Nuri	Half-sister	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant breaker
Diya'u'llah	Half-brother	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant breaker
Badi'u'llah	Half-brother	After Bahā'u'llāh	Covenant breaker

Out of the eight people that `Abdu'l-Bahā was responsible for—other than his sister—all others were labeled as covenant breakers and shunned them from the Baha'i community by `Abdu'l-Bahā and Shoghi! Is this is the meaning of “moral responsibility” and “considering the needs of the other heirs”?!

The discriminations in inheritance are not limited to these instances. We will move on as to not elongate this section. But before that, a final note must be mentioned:

¹¹³⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 187.

As we already said, Bahā'u'llāh proclaimed that, "We have assigned the residence and personal clothing of the deceased to the male, not female, offspring"¹¹³⁸ and "He specifies that if there be more than one residence, the principal and most important one passes to the male offspring."¹¹³⁹ Now here is the catch, Bahā'u'llāh does not say that these belong to the oldest male, but states they belong to the male offspring. The Arabic text of the Aqdas too clearly shows this meaning. Now why would 'Abdu'l-Bahā change this law and limit the heirs of the deceased's living residence to only the oldest living male instead of all the male offspring? Are we supposed to believe it has nothing to do with the fact that he himself was Bahā'u'llāh's oldest living male offspring?

3-Women's Dowry

According to Bahā'u'llāh:

No marriage may be contracted without payment of a dowry, which hath been fixed for city-dwellers at nineteen mithqāls¹¹⁴⁰ of pure gold, and for village-dwellers at the same amount in silver. Whoso wisheth to increase this sum, it is forbidden him to exceed the limit of ninety-five mithqāls. Thus hath the command been writ in majesty and power.¹¹⁴¹

Why would a creed who preaches novelty in its laws and equality between men and women, ask men to pay dowry to women? Why not the opposite? If there is equality and no discrimination between the sexes then why should one party pay the other? Either, no side should pay the other, or both sides should pay equal amounts. How can a creed that cannot abide by its own laws of equality among its adherents, ¹¹³⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 186.

¹¹³⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 186.

¹¹⁴⁰ 3.6 grams.

¹¹⁴¹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 207-8.

preach global equality of rights between men and women and between all races?

If according to Bahā'u'llāh's second principle, God has made no distinction between people, then why should villagers be entitled to a dowry of silver but city-dwellers to a dowry of gold?

4- Polygamy

Even though Baha'is express opposition to polygamy, their leader was a polygamist and had three wives. Bahā'u'llāh even allowed his followers to have two wives and an unspecified number of virgins at their service:

God hath prescribed matrimony unto you. Beware that ye take not unto yourselves more wives than two. Whoso contenteth himself with a single partner from among the maidservants of God, both he and she shall live in tranquillity. And he who would take into his service a maid may do so with propriety [He who takes a virgin to serve him it would be permissible for him].¹¹⁴²

What we have quoted is the official Baha'i translation. Unfortunately the correct translation of the last sentence has been deliberately distorted. This is the original Arabic text: "man 'ittakhadha bikran li khidmatih lā ba'sa `alayh." Which translates to: "He who takes a virgin to serve him, there is no problem with that." We have placed this in square brackets at the end of the quote.

Why do Baha'is distort their scripture? What are they trying to hide? How does it make sense to speak about taking a virgin for service—or a maid according to the flawed translation—in the middle of a discussion about marriage? Are wives solely seen as an instrument to perform house chores who can be replaced with a serving virgin or maid? Or does one who cannot marry, can simply satisfy himself with a virgin who serves him? The context of Bahā'u'llāh's words when viewed within the undistorted translation, imply another meaning which we will leave to the readers to judge.

¹¹⁴² Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 41.

When Bahā'u'llāh (or `Abdu'l-Bahā) is asked about this specific verse he gives an answer which further endorses polygamy:

QUESTION: Concerning the verse: "he who would take into his service a maid may do so with propriety."

ANSWER: This is solely for service such as is performed by any other class of servants, be they young or old, in exchange for wages; such a maiden is free to choose a husband at whatever time she pleaseth, for it is forbidden either that women should be purchased, or that a man should have more wives than two.¹¹⁴³

Strangely, Baha'is insist polygamy is not allowed in the Baha'i creed. To prove this claim, they bring forward one of `Abdu'l-Bahā's sayings, which in clear contradiction to his father's orders and using flawed reasoning, tries to prove that polygamy is not allowed:

(1)Know thou that polygamy is not permitted under the law of God, for contentment with one wife hath been clearly stipulated. (2)Taking a second wife is made dependent upon equity and justice being upheld between the two wives, under all conditions. (3)However, observance of justice and equity towards two wives is utterly impossible. (4)The fact

¹¹⁴³ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 116. This question and answer have also been translated incorrectly in the official Baha'i translation. We present here the correct translation:

QUESTION: Concerning the verse: "He who takes a virgin to serve him it would be permissible for him."

ANSWER: This is solely for service, just as other young and old are paid for service. Whenever that virgin wants to marry it is up to her to decide, for buying slave-girls is prohibited and having more than two wives is also prohibited.

that bigamy has been made dependent upon an impossible condition is clear proof of its absolute prohibition. (5)Therefore it is not permissible for a man to have more than one wife.¹¹⁴⁴

We have marked the five sentences with numbers for easy reference.

(1) Bahā'u'llāh had in no way stipulated that men must only have one wife. He had merely said that having one wife will bring about tranquility. What `Abdu'l-Bahā is attributing to Bahā'u'llāh is purely baseless.

(2) Bahā'u'llāh had in no place mentioned that taking a second wife depends on equity and justice under all conditions, neither in the book of Aqdas and nor anywhere else. Again, `Abdu'l-Bahā is attributing something to Bahā'u'llāh which is false and not a shred of evidence has been brought forward to backup this claim.

(3) First, there is no evidence to support the claim that observing justice between two wives is impossible. Second, pay attention to the phrase utterly impossible. This phrase means something is absolutely impossible. Like how it is absolutely impossible for 2 times 2 to equal to something other than 4. `Abdu'l-Bahā is saying it is absolutely impossible to observe justice between two wives. Here's the catch, something that is absolutely impossible becomes possible for Bahā'u'llāh, meaning 2 times 2 can equal to 5, and Bahā'u'llāh can observe equity between not two, but three wives.

(4) `Abdu'l-Bahā claims bigamy has been made allowed based on an impossible condition! For all we know, Bahā'u'llāh put absolutely no conditions for bigamy. Furthermore, is it not absurd to make a law which can only be implemented under impossible conditions? Where is the common-sense in that?

(5) Based on the four previous assumptions—that are all wrong—it is concluded that polygamy is forbidden in the Baha'i creed!

¹¹⁴⁴ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

To justify why Bahā'u'llāh had three wives, Baha'is usually put forth the argument that since Bahā'u'llāh was practicing Islam before he became a Baha'i, he was legally allowed to have three wives. In a letter from the Universal House of Justice dated 23/10/1995 to an individual believer¹¹⁴⁵ it has been mentioned:

Regarding the wives of Bahā'u'llāh, extracts from letters written on behalf of the beloved Guardian set this subject in context. They indicate that Bahā'u'llāh was "acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded", and that He was following "the customs of the people of His own land":

"... as regards Bahā'u'llāh's marriage it should be noted that His three marriages were all contracted before He revealed His Book of Laws, and even before His declaration in Baghdād, at a time when Bahā'ī marriage laws had not yet been known, and the Revelation not yet disclosed (25 May 1938 to a National Spiritual Assembly)."

"Bahā'u'llāh had no concubine, He had three legal wives. As He married them before the "Aqdas" (His book of laws) was revealed, He was only acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded. He made plurality of wives conditional upon justice; 'Abdu'l-Bahā interpreted this to mean that a man may not have more than one wife at a time, as it is impossible to be just to two or more women in marriage (11 February 1944 to an individual believer)."

... Bahā'u'llāh married the first and second wives while He was still in Tihrān [sic], and the third wife while He was in baghdād. At that time, the Laws of the "Aqdas" had not been revealed, and secondly, He was following the Laws of the previous Dispensation and the customs of the people of His own land (14 January 1953 to an individual believer).

¹¹⁴⁵ http://bahai-library.com/uhj_wives_bahauallah (retrieved 1/6/2104)

All the above justifications are fundamentally flawed. We already showed the fallacy in `Abdu'l-Bahā's justification. The second justification presented here simply states that since Bahā'u'llāh had married his three wives when he was still a Muslim it was perfectly legal for him to do so. This is a blatant lie:

The Bāb announced his new religion in 1844. The exact date that Bahā'u'llāh became a Bābī is unknown but it is definite that it occurred before 1848 when he attended the conference of Badasht—in which Islamic law was officially abrogated and superseded—and he took on the name Bahā. So by 1848 he was definitely a Bābī. Now let us review the years when Bahā'u'llāh married his wives: Bahā'u'llāh married his first wife Āsīyih in 1835 while he was still a Muslim. He married his second wife Fatimih in 1849 when he was no longer a Muslim but a Bābī! What was Shoghi thinking when he had uttered: "He was only acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded."?

In Shoghi's translation of Dawn Breakers it has been mentioned that Ṭāhīrih, a great advocate of the Bāb had openly preached the Bāb's ideas, one of which was monogamy:

She began to correspond with the Bāb and soon espoused all his ideas. She did not content herself with a passive sympathy but confessed openly the faith of her Master. She denounced not only polygamy but the use of the veil and showed her face uncovered in public to the great amazement and scandal of her family and of all the sincere Mussulmans but to the applause of many other fellow citizens who shared her enthusiasm and whose numbers grew as a result of her preaching.¹¹⁴⁶

Other Baha'i authors have also echoed this belief in their writings:

The Bāb's laws abolished polygamy except in the case of infertility.¹¹⁴⁷

Bahā'u'llāh was openly practicing bigamy while according to Shoghi it was not legal and Ṭāhirih was actively denouncing it in accordance with the Bab's beliefs.

From this point onwards, matters become even more interesting. Bahā'u'llāh married his third wife Gawhar in 1862 when he was still a Bābī and this third marriage too was completely illegal according to what Shoghi claims are Bābī laws. Apparently, in the Baha'i creed, 'Abdu'l-Bahā, Shoghi, and the UHJ are all allowed to utter false facts to justify Bahā'u'llāh's illegal actions.

The story does not end yet. Buried deep within untranslated Baha'i scriptures, exist quotes from 'Abdu'l-Bahā in which he explicitly states that those who claim I have stated that polygamy is illegal are liars. We will repeat the quote from Aqdas first:

(1)Know thou that polygamy is not permitted under the law of God, for contentment with one wife hath been clearly stipulated. (2)Taking a second wife is made dependent upon equity and justice being upheld between the two wives, under all conditions. (3)However, observance of justice and equity towards two wives is utterly impossible. (4)The fact that bigamy has been made dependent upon an impossible condition is clear proof of its absolute prohibition. (5) Therefore it is not permissible for a man to have more than one wife.¹¹⁴⁸

¹¹⁴⁶ Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation, p. 270 (footnote).

¹¹⁴⁷ Robert H. Stockman, The Baha'i Faith: A Guide For the Perplexed (Bloomsbury Academic, 2012), chap. 6, section on the fortress of Maku.

Concerning polygamy, this has been decreed and will not be abrogated. `Abdu'l-Bahā has not abrogated this law and [accusation of abrogation] is a lie [made up] by the friends. What I said is that He has made polygamy bound on the precondition of justice. As long as someone does not attain certitude that he can practice justice and his heart is not certain that he can practice justice, he should not marry a second [wife]. But if he becomes certain that he can practice justice on all levels, then marrying a second [wife] is permitted. Just as has been the case in the Holy Land: the [Baha'i] friends wished to marry a second [wife] but on this precondition, and this servant (meaning himself) never abstained [from giving permission], but insisted that justice must be implemented, and justice is the peak of abstention; but they said, that they will practice justice and wished to marry a second [wife]. Such false accusations (meaning charges that `Abdu'l-Bahā prohibited bigamy) are the whisperings of those who wish to induce doubts and [see] how much they are making matters ambiguous. The purpose was to state that polygamy without justice is not allowed and that justice is very difficult [to achieve].¹¹⁴⁹

In a previous quote from the Book of Aqdas `Abdu'l-Bahā had stated that “However, observance of justice and equity towards two wives is utterly impossible.”¹¹⁵⁰ But he contradicts himself here by stating that “The purpose was to state that polygamy without justice is not allowed and that justice is very difficult [to achieve].” Justice is no longer utterly impossible it is only very difficult to achieve! He had also stated, “Know thou that polygamy is not permitted under the law of God . . . The fact that bigamy has been made dependent upon an impossible condition is clear proof of its absolute prohibition. (5)Therefore it is not permissible for a man to have more than one wife.”¹¹⁵¹ Pay attention that he uses the words “not permitted,” “absolute prohibition,” and “not permissible” while in the recent words we quoted from him, he explicitly states that there is no prohibition in having two wives! The contradictions are glaring.

¹¹⁴⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

¹¹⁴⁹ Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, (Tehran: n.p., 131 B.), vol. 4, p. 176.

¹¹⁵⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

Let us take a look at another letter which he apparently sent to a Baha’i who was practicing bigamy:

You asked about polygamy. According to the text of the Divine Book having two wives is lawful and legal and was never prohibited, rather it is legitimate and allowed. Do not be unhappy, but take justice into consideration so that you may be as just as possible. What has been uttered is that since justice is very difficult [to achieve], therefore peace is in having one wife. But in your case, of course you should not be unhappy.¹¹⁵²

This quote further contradicts Baha’i claims about the illegality of polygamy. What is more interesting is the fact that `Abdu’l-Bahā clearly tells the Baha’i person to not be unhappy on account of his practice of bigamy! He advises him to be “as just as possible.” This takes the subject to a whole new level. Whereas up to now he had insisted that practicing justice is impossible or very hard to achieve and bigamy is only and only, allowed on the precondition that justice be implemented on all levels, he is now clearly putting aside this precondition and merely reducing it to being as just as possible!

¹¹⁵¹ Bahā’u’l-lāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

¹¹⁵² Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, vol. 4, p. 174.

It is obvious and clear that polygamy is allowed in the Baha'i creed and all arguments stated by the Baha'i administration to deny this fact are invalid and contradictory.

Regarding the subject of polygamy, `Abdu'l-Bahā, Shoghī, the UHJ, and their followers are clearly altering the evident meaning of Bahā'u'llāh's decrees. An act that is completely forbidden and carries with it grave consequences:

Whoso interpreteth what hath been sent down from the heaven of Revelation, and altereth its evident meaning, he, verily, is of them that have perverted the Sublime Word of God, and is of the lost ones in the Lucid Book.¹¹⁵³

In any case, there remains one last question: If there is really equality between men and women, then why are women not allowed to practice polygamy? Not that we want to advocate this act, but there was supposed to be complete equality in rights, was there not?

5-Membership in the Universal House of Justice

According to Baha'i law, women cannot become members of the Universal House of Justice (UHJ).¹¹⁵⁴ If there is equality between men and women, then why can women not be elected to take a seat in this governing body of the Baha'i world community? Why is the highest attainable spiritual and managing station in Baha'ism off-limits to women?

This contradiction is so obvious that even `Abdu'l-Bahā has tried to justify it:

The House of Justice, however, according to the explicit text of the Law of God, is confined to men; this for a wisdom of ¹¹⁵³ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 221.

¹¹⁵⁴ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 27, p. 219.

the Lord God's, which will ere long be made manifest as clearly as the sun at high noon.¹¹⁵⁵

This justification fails to address the issue of equality of rights, for whatever the wisdom behind this law—contrary to Baha'i claims of equality—the inequality between the sexes is still retained!

Furthermore, as is the usual Baha'i attitude with respect to problematic laws, the matter has been passed to the future to silence any criticism.

6-Station of Guardianship

The Guardian of the Cause can only be a male descendant of 'Abdu'l-Bahā'. Although this issue is no longer a matter of concern because the prophecies of these infallible manifestations turned out to be false, the question still remains as to why women are deprived of this right.

It is astonishing that even with the existence of such laws, Baha'is insist on equality of rights between men and women and the existence of no distinction between them.

7- Baha'i pilgrimage (hajj)

Bahā'u'llāh says:

The Lord hath ordained that those of you who are able shall make pilgrimage to the sacred House, and from this He hath exempted women as a mercy on His part.¹¹⁵⁶

If this exemption of women is a mercy—as Bahā'u'llāh puts it—then why are men deprived of this mercy? After all, there was supposed to be equality between men and women and no distinction, was there ¹¹⁵⁵ Various, A Compilation on Women (Research Department of the Universal House of Justice, Bahā'ī World Centre, 1986), p. 7.

¹¹⁵⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 191.

not? Had `Abdu'l-Bahā not claimed that God has not put differences in any grace and mercy:

He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy.¹¹⁵⁷

Bahā'is argue that since travelling is cumbersome and tiring, God has shown this mercy to women and has taken them out of harm's way. If this is the case why not show mercy to the men based on the same reasoning; for men become tired too. Why is distinction made and why are men discriminated? Where is the equality that was being preached with pride? Furthermore, this creed was supposedly formulated for the 21st century not the dark ages. Travelling is no longer tiring, cumbersome, or harmful. How can the argument that this is a mercy for women be justified?

8- Upbringing of Children

The duty of upbringing the children has been chiefly given to the women. This has been called a privilege for the mother! Shoghi says:

The task of bringing up a Bahā'ī child, as emphasized time and again in Bahā'ī writings, is the chief responsibility of the mother, whose unique privilege is indeed to create in her home such conditions as would be most conducive to both his material and spiritual welfare and advancement.¹¹⁵⁸

`Abdu'l-Bahā further iterates that mothers are the primary trainers of children:

¹¹⁵⁷ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42.

¹¹⁵⁸ Research Department of the Universal House of Justice, A Compilation on Bahā'ī Education (Baha'i World Center, 1976), p. 50.

O maid-servants of the Merciful! It is incumbent upon you to train the children from their earliest babyhood! It is incumbent upon you to beautify their morals! It is incumbent upon you to attend to them under all aspects and circumstances, inasmuch as God—glorified and exalted is He! —hath ordained mothers to be the primary trainers of children and infants. This is a great and important affair and a high and exalted position, and it is not allowable to slacken therein at all!¹¹⁵⁹

Upbringing children is a difficult task. If there was supposed to be complete equality between men and women in this creed, then why has this difficult task been imposed on the mother? And if this task is a privilege and a “high and exalted position,” then why give this privilege to the mother? Why not privilege the father? If there is supposed to be equality between the two sexes, why insist that this task is primarily the duty of the mother? Is it that hard to simply say both parents have equal responsibility?

To justify this inconsistency Baha’is claim that the duties are balanced by giving the father the responsibility to support the family:

The training which a child first receives through his mother constitutes the strongest foundation for his future development. A corollary of this responsibility of the mother is her right to be supported by her husband—a husband has no explicit right to be supported by his wife.¹¹⁶⁰

This justification is acceptable from anyone but a Baha’i; for Baha’is insist there is absolute equality between men and women and there is ¹¹⁵⁹ `Abdu’l-Bahā, Tablets of Abdul-Baha Abbas (Bahā’ī Publishing Committee, 1909 edition), p. 606.

¹¹⁶⁰ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā’ī Reference File, chap. XVI, no. 730.

no distinction. This justification still fails to address this issue and contradicts the current principle.

10- Boys Are Branches Girls Are Leaves

Bahā'u'llāh didn't even adhere to the equality of sexes regarding his own family. He labeled his male offspring as Branches (Aghsān) and his female offspring as Leaves (waraqāt).

11- Dowry and Virginity

If a husband finds out his wife is not a virgin he can take back the dowry even though the marriage was not conditioned on the virginity of the spouse:

Should the husband, after the payment of the dowry, discover that the wife is not a virgin, the refund of the dowry and of the expenses incurred may be demanded.¹¹⁶¹

So what actions can a woman take if she finds out her husband was not a virgin, if the marriage was not based on the condition of virginity? The UHJ clearly gives the answer: Nothing!

In one of these cases you cite, for example, that of a wife who is found by her husband not to have been a virgin, the dissolution of the marriage can be demanded only "if the marriage has been conditioned on virginity"; presumably, therefore, if the wife wishes to exercise such a right in respect to the husband, she would have to include a condition as to his virginity in the marriage contract.¹¹⁶²

¹¹⁶¹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 151.

12- Women Must Obey Men

Baha'is claim men and women are equal. On the subject of obedience, 'Abdu'l-Bahā has clearly stated that women must obey their husbands:

O Handmaids of the Self-Sustaining Lord! Exert your efforts so that you may attain the honour and privilege ordained for women. Undoubtedly the greatest glory of women is servitude at His Threshold and submissiveness at His door; it is the possession of a vigilant heart, and praise of the incomparable God; it is heartfelt love towards other handmaids and spotless chastity; it is obedience to and consideration for their husbands and the education and care of their children; and it is tranquillity, and dignity, perseverance in the remembrance of the Lord, and the utmost enkindlement and attraction.¹¹⁶³

As usual, the Universal House of Justice has tried to in vain to justify this act:

This exhortation to the utmost degree of spirituality and self-abnegation should not be read as a legal definition giving the husband absolute authority over his wife, for, in a letter written to an individual believer on 22th July 1943, the beloved Guardian's secretary wrote on his behalf:

"The Guardian, in his remarks...about parents and children, wives and husbands' relations in America meant that there is a tendency in that country for children to be too independent of the wishes of their parents and lacking in the respect due to them. Also wives, in some cases, have a tendency to exert an unjust degree of domination over their husbands which, of course, is not right, anymore than that the husband should unjustly dominate his wife.”¹¹⁶⁴

¹¹⁶² Memorandum by UHJ on "Monogamy, Sexual Equality, Marital Equality, and the Supreme Tribunal," dated 27/06/1996, p. 6: http://bahai-library.com/uhj_equality_monogamy_uhj (retrieved 02/08/2014)

¹¹⁶³ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XVI, no. 749.

Whereas `Abdu'l-Bahā strictly tells women to be obedient to their husbands, the Baha'i administration plays with words in an attempt to convince their Western audience that this is not the case. A more careful analysis of the quote shows that these words simply mean a man has authority over his wife but it is not absolute and a man dominates his wife but must not do so unjustly. Thus, women must still be obedient of their husbands and are dominated by them.

There are many similar quotes and letters in the Baha'i scripture from the UHJ which try to show the contrary, none of which change the fact that the original order from `Abdu'l-Bahā was for women to obey their husbands and not the opposite.

Even though so many blatant examples of discrimination and inequality between the two sexes exist in this creed, `Abdu'l-Bahā still insists that

Men and women are equal in all rights. There is no distinction whatsoever.¹¹⁶⁵

He establishes the equality of man and woman. This is peculiar to the teachings of Bahā'u'llāh, for all other religions have placed man above woman.¹¹⁶⁶

¹¹⁶⁴ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, chap. XVI, no. 750.

¹¹⁶⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

¹¹⁶⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 455.

Is This Principle Correct From a Rational and Logical Perspective?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā claims that for the human world to reach salvation complete equality between men and women must be established:

The salvation of the human world will not become complete unless there is complete equality between women and men.¹¹⁶⁷

Not until complete equality is achieved between the rights of males and females, the human world will not make astonishing advancements.¹¹⁶⁸

Men and women are equal in all rights. There is no distinction whatsoever.¹¹⁶⁹

What ‘Abdu’l-Bahā is clearly claiming is that there is or must be complete and utter equality between men and women and their rights. This belief is illogical. Under no circumstances can two different groups with great differences in their emotional, psychological, and physical aspects be expected to be exactly equal and have perfectly identical rights. What is more rational, are rights which are proportional to males and rights which are proportional to females. When approached with these contradictions, the UHJ finally decided to give a new verdict on this matter in 1975:

¹¹⁶⁷ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 150.

¹¹⁶⁸ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 235.

¹¹⁶⁹ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

Concerning your questions about the equality of men and women, this, as ‘Abdu’l-Bahā has often explained, is a fundamental principle of Bahā’u’llāh; therefore the Laws of the “Aqdas” should be studied in the light of it. Equality between men and women does not, indeed physiologically it cannot, mean identity of functions. In some things women excel men, for others men are better fitted than women, while in very many things the difference of sex is of no effect at all. The differences of function are most apparent in family life. The capacity for motherhood has many far-reaching implications which are recognized in Bahā’ī Law. For example, when it is not possible to educate all one’s children, daughters receive preference over sons, as mothers are the first educators of the next generation. Again, for physiological reasons, women are granted certain exemptions from fasting that are not applicable to men (24 July 1975 to an individual believer).¹¹⁷⁰

Does this letter solve the problem? No, for the UHJ has apparently forgotten that ‘Abdu’l-Bahā was saying there is absolutely no distinction and privilege and there is complete equality of rights and is contradicting him by claiming there are distinctions, privileges, and inequality of rights! Here is another justification from 1981:

You are quite right in stating that men and women have basic and distinct qualities. The solution provided in the teachings of Bahā’u’llāh is not, as you correctly observe, for men to become women, and for women to become men. ‘Abdu’l-¹¹⁷⁰ Various, A Compilation on Women, p. 14.

Bahā gave us the key to the problem when He taught that the qualities and functions of men and women “complement” each other. He further elucidated this point when He said that the “new age” will be “an age in which the masculine and feminine elements of civilization will be more properly balanced” (22 April 1981 to an individual believer).¹¹⁷¹

This again contradicts the sayings of `Abdu'l-Bahā, for he had claimed there is no distinction at all. The two completely equal sexes, as taught by Bahā'u'llāh, have now been changed by the UHJ to two different sexes with complementary functions!

The last letter we will show from the UHJ basically contradicts itself for it claims there is equality but at the same time diversity:

It may be helpful to stress ... that the Bahā'ī principle of the equality of men and women is clearly stated in the teachings, and the fact that there is diversity of function between them in certain areas does not negate this principle (23 August 1984 to two believers).¹¹⁷²

Another irrational justification about this principle is `Abdu'l-Bahā's reasoning that if men and women become equal then the foundations of war will be destroyed:

When all mankind shall receive the same opportunity of education and the equality of men and women be realized, the foundations of war will be utterly destroyed. Without equality this will be impossible because all differences and distinction are conducive to discord and strife. Equality between men and women is conducive to the abolition of warfare for the reason that women will never be willing to ¹¹⁷¹ Various, A Compilation on Women, p. 15.

¹¹⁷² Various, A Compilation on Women, p. 15.

sanction it. Mothers will not give their sons as sacrifices upon the battlefield after twenty years of anxiety and loving devotion in rearing them from infancy, no matter what cause they are called upon to defend. There is no doubt that when women obtain equality of rights, war will entirely cease among mankind.¹¹⁷³

Woman by nature is opposed to war; she is an advocate of peace. Children are reared and brought up by the mothers who give them the first principles of education and labour assiduously in their behalf. Consider, for instance, a mother who has tenderly reared a son for twenty years to the age of maturity. Surely she will not consent to having that son torn asunder and killed in the field of battle. Therefore, as woman advances toward the degree of man in power and privilege, with the right of vote and control in human government, most assuredly war will cease; for woman is naturally the most devoted and staunch advocate of international peace.¹¹⁷⁴

These justifications are wrong on many levels. The partial implementation of complete equality between female and male roles in society has not stopped war, but instead caused women to become separated from their families in order to serve active combat roles in the military.

We have already shown the extent that this principle is implemented in Baha'i laws regarding the rights of men and women. These discriminations are not limited only to the rights concerning the two sexes. For instance:

¹¹⁷³ Various, A Compilation on Bahā'ī Education (Research Department of the Universal House of Justice, Bahā'ī World Centre, 1976), p. 58.

¹¹⁷⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 375.

- Non-Baha’i family members inherit nothing from Baha’is.¹¹⁷⁵
- Shares of inheritance are not equal.¹¹⁷⁶
- Ex-communicated Baha’is are deprived of all rights of socializing with Baha’is even if they are their closest relatives.¹¹⁷⁷

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

¹¹⁷⁵ “Bahā’u’llāh states that non-Bahā’īs have no right to inherit from their Bahā’ī parents or relatives,” Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 184.

¹¹⁷⁶ The deceased’s property are split into 2520 portions. Out of these, 1080 are for the children, 390 for the wives, fathers 330, mothers 270, brothers 210, sisters 150, teachers 90.

¹¹⁷⁷ “A question was asked about the friends that, as a result of their ignorance and neglect, had been excluded from administrative affairs about whether they should be invited to public assemblies or not? He (Shoghi) said, ‘inviting them is not permitted.’ And it was asked about those that had been excluded from the community whether greeting and speaking with them was permitted? He replied, ‘if they have been spiritually excommunicated, speaking with them is not permitted in any way,’” Shoghi Effendi, Tauqī`āt-i mubārak-i (1945–1952), pp. 94–95.

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”¹¹⁷⁸

¹¹⁷⁸Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Are Men and Women Equal or Do They Have Distinctions?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: There is no distinction between men and women and there is complete equality.¹¹⁷⁹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: There is no doubt that men are superior to women and stronger.¹¹⁸⁰

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Women are more important and stronger.¹¹⁸¹

2. Can the Human World Fly with Unequal Wings?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “The human world, like birds, needs two wings. One women and the other men.”¹¹⁸² A bird will not fly unless both wings are equal.¹¹⁸³

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: The woman is the stronger wing!¹¹⁸⁴

¹¹⁷⁹ “The tenth principle of his Highness Bahā’u’llāh is the unity of men and women; for in the view of God men and women are equal. They are all from the human race and the descendants of Adam. Because being male or female is not specific to the human race. Plants have male and female and animals too have male and female and there is no distinction. Look at the plant kingdom. Is there any distinction between male plants and female plants? Rather there is complete equality; and in the Animal kingdom too, there is no distinction at all,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 149–150.

¹¹⁸⁰ “Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger,” Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

¹¹⁸¹ “‘Abdu’l-Bahā smiled and asked: “What will you say if I prove to you that the woman is the stronger wing?” The answer came in the same bright vein: “You will earn my eternal gratitude!” at which all the company made merry. ‘Abdu’l-Bahā then continued more seriously: “The woman is indeed of the greater importance to the race . . .” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā in London, pp. 102–103.

¹¹⁸² ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 134.

¹¹⁸³ “From the teachings of his highness Bahā’u’llāh is the unity of women and men, for the human world has two wings. One wing is men and the other wing women. The bird will not fly unless both wings are equal. If one wing is weak flight is not possible. Unless the world of women becomes equal to the world of men in attaining virtues and accomplishments, prosperity and salvation will be impossible and unfeasible,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 107.

¹¹⁸⁴ “‘Abdu’l-Bahā smiled and asked: “What will you say if I prove to you that the woman is the stronger wing?” The answer came in the same bright vein: “You will earn my eternal gratitude!” at which all the company made merry. ‘Abdu’l-Bahā then continued more seriously: “The woman is indeed of the greater importance to the race . . .” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā in London, pp. 102–103.

3. Are Male and Female Plants and Animals Equal or Do They Have Distinctions?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: There is no doubt that the male is superior and stronger even in animals. Look at the peacock, the sparrow, and the pigeon.¹¹⁸⁵

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: There is no distinction between male and female plants and animals and there is complete equality.¹¹⁸⁶

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Female is important and stronger, look at the palm tree, look at the mare, look at the lioness.¹¹⁸⁷

¹¹⁸⁵ “Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible.” Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

¹¹⁸⁶ “The tenth principle of his Highness Bahā’u’llāh is the unity of men and women; for in the view of God men and women are equal. They are all from the human race and the descendants of Adam. Because being male or female is not specific to the human race. Plants have male and female and animals too have male and female and there is no distinction. Look at the plant kingdom. Is there any distinction between male plants and female plants? Rather there is complete equality; and in the Animal kingdom too, there is no distinction at all,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 149–150.

¹¹⁸⁷ “‘Abdu’l-Bahā smiled and asked: “What will you say if I prove to you that the woman is the stronger wing?” The answer came in the same bright vein: “You will earn my eternal gratitude!” at which all the company made merry. ‘Abdu’l-Bahā then continued more seriously: “The woman is indeed of the greater importance to the race. She has the greater burden and the greater work. Look at the vegetable and the animal worlds. The palm which carries the fruit is the tree most prized by the date grower. The Arab knows that for a long journey the mare has the longest wind. For her greater strength and fierceness, the lioness is more feared by the hunter than the lion.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā in London, pp. 102–103.

4. Must We Tell Women That They Are Weaker and Inferior?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Do not tell women that they are weaker and inferior.¹¹⁸⁸

‘Abdu’l-Bahā tells a women that men are superior and stronger.¹¹⁸⁹

5. Men and Women Are Equal in All Ranks, but Women Lack Capacity and Competency!

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Men and women are equal in all ranks.¹¹⁹⁰

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Oh women, don’t be sad that your capacities and competencies are low. My father can make up for these deficiencies for he can turn the lowliest things into the most exalted creatures.¹¹⁹¹

¹¹⁸⁸ “On the contrary, we must declare that her capacity is equal, even greater than man’s. This will inspire her with hope and ambition, and her susceptibilities for advancement will continually increase. She must not be told and taught that she is weaker and inferior in capacity and qualification.” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 76.

¹¹⁸⁹ “A woman’s question was referred to him who had asked why hasn’t God made any woman Prophets and why have all Divine Manifestations been men. He answered: “Although women and men share the same capacities and abilities, there is definitely no doubt that men are superior and stronger. Even in animals like pigeons, sparrows, peacocks, and other [birds] this advantage is visible,” Maḥmūd Zaraqānī, Badā’i’ al-āthār, vol. 1, p. 153.

¹¹⁹⁰ “Men and women are both humans and the servants of one Lord. In the presence of God there is no such thing as man and woman. Whoever has a purer heart and better actions is closer to God, whether he is a man or a woman. The differences we see now are caused by differences in nurturing because women are not nurtured like men. If they are nurtured like men they will become equal in all ranks, because they are both humans and share the same ranks. God has made no distinction,” Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta’ālim Bahā’ī, p. 283.

¹¹⁹¹ “Oh dear divine slave-maids! Do not pay attention to your [lack of] capacities and competencies. Rather, rely on the grace and kindness of the Blessed Beauty, because that everlasting beneficence will turn a shrub into a blessed tree, will turn a mirage into cool water, will turn a lost speck into the essence of existence, will turn a perishing ant into a tutor of the school of knowledge,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 7, pp. 135–6.

6. Is There Distinction between Men and Women in the View of God?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: In the view of God, there is no such thing as man or woman.¹¹⁹²

Bahā'u'llāh: God considers some men as women, and some women as men.¹¹⁹³

7. Men and Women Have Equal Rights but Women Have No Share Their Father's Living Residence

`Abdu'l-Bahā: There must be complete equality between men and women.¹¹⁹⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: Female offspring have no share from the deceased's living residence.¹¹⁹⁵

¹¹⁹² "In the presence of God, there is no such thing as feminine or masculine. Whoever has better deeds and greater faith is closer to God. In the Divine world, there is no male or female. They are both the same," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 220.

¹¹⁹³ "Today, whoever amongst the slave-maids (meaning women) succeeds in recognizing He Who is the Goal of the World, will be considered a man in the Divine Book (dar kitāb 'ilāhī az rijāl maḥsūb)," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

¹¹⁹⁴ "The salvation of the human world will not become complete unless there is complete equality between women and men," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 150.

¹¹⁹⁵ "We have assigned the residence and personal clothing of the deceased to the male, not female, offspring, nor to the other heirs," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 186.

8. Men and Women Must Have Equal Rights but Women Have a Smaller Share of Inheritance

`Abdu'l-Bahā: For the human world to advance, men and women must have completely equal rights.¹¹⁹⁶

Bahā'u'llāh: Mothers have a smaller share from inheritance compared with fathers as do sisters compared with brothers.¹¹⁹⁷

9. Men and Women Have Equal Rights except Sometimes Where Women Have No Rights at All.

`Abdu'l-Bahā: There is no distinction between the rights of men and women.¹¹⁹⁸

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Even if the only wealth left behind by the deceased is his living residence, the female offspring take no shares from it.¹¹⁹⁹

¹¹⁹⁶ “Not until complete equality is achieved between the rights of males and females, the human world will not make astonishing advancements,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.235.

¹¹⁹⁷ The deceased's property are split into 2520 portions. Out of these, 1080 are for the children, 390 for the wives, fathers 330, mothers 270, brothers 210, sisters 150, teachers 90 (`Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, pp. 117–119).

¹¹⁹⁸ “Men and women are equal in all rights. There is no distinction whatsoever,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p.232.

¹¹⁹⁹ “The living residence belongs to the oldest living son, whether or not the deceased has any other wealth. The oldest living son also takes his share from the other belongings,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 10, p. 128.

10. Polygamy, Yes or No?

Bahā'u'llāh: Men can only have two wives¹²⁰⁰ but I can have three.

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Men cannot have two wives.¹²⁰¹

11. `Abdu'l-Bahā and Justice in Polygamy

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Observing justice in polygamy is utterly impossible.¹²⁰²

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Observing justice in polygamy is very hard to come by.¹²⁰³

`Abdu'l-Bahā: In polygamist relations it suffices to be as just as possible.¹²⁰⁴

12. Did `Abdu'l-Bahā Say Men Can Only Have One Wife?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Men cannot have two wives.¹²⁰⁵

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Whoever claims I have said men cannot have two wives is a liar.¹²⁰⁶

¹²⁰⁰ "God hath prescribed matrimony unto you. Beware that ye take not unto yourselves more wives than two," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 41.

¹²⁰¹ "It is not permissible for a man to have more than one wife," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

¹²⁰² "Observance of justice and equity towards two wives is utterly impossible," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

¹²⁰³ "The purpose was to state that polygamy without justice is not allowed and that justice is very difficult [to achieve]," Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, vol. 4, p. 176.

¹²⁰⁴ "You asked about polygamy. According to the text of the Divine Book having two wives is lawful and legal and was never prohibited, rather it is legitimate and allowed. Do not be unhappy, but take justice into consideration so that you may be as just as possible. What has been uttered is that since justice is very difficult [to achieve], therefore peace is in having one wife. But in your case, of course you should not be unhappy." Asad-Allāh Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Amr wa khalq, 131 B., vol. 4, p. 174.

¹²⁰⁵ "It is not permissible for a man to have more than one wife," Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 206.

¹²⁰⁶ "Concerning polygamy, this has been decreed and will not be abrogated. `Abdu'l-Bahā has not abrogated this law and [accusation of abrogation] is a lie [made up] by the friends. What I said is that He has made polygamy bound on the precondition of justice . . . Such false

13. Equality of Rights or Having No Right to Be a Member of the Universal House of Justice?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: There is absolutely no distinction between the rights of men and women.¹²⁰⁷

`Abdu'l-Bahā and Bahā'u'llāh: Women cannot be a member of the Universal House of Justice.¹²⁰⁸

14. Equality of Rights or Distinction between Villagers and City-Dwellers?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: For justice to be served all must have equal rights.¹²⁰⁹

Bahā'u'llāh: Villagers have a dowry of silver and city-dwellers have a dowry of gold.¹²¹⁰ accusations (meaning charges that `Abdu'l-Bahā prohibited bigamy) are the whisperings of those who wish to induce doubts and [see] how much they are making matters ambiguous. The purpose was to state that polygamy without justice is not allowed and that justice is very difficult [to achieve].”

¹²⁰⁷ “Taking a second wife is made dependent upon equity and justice being upheld between the two wives, under all conditions.” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 232.

¹²⁰⁸ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 27, p. 219.

¹²⁰⁹ “Justice implies that the rights of humankind be protected and preserved and all have equal rights,” `Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 30.

¹²¹⁰ “No marriage may be contracted without payment of a dowry, which hath been fixed for city-dwellers at nineteen mithqāls of pure gold, and for village-dwellers at the same amount in silver. Whoso wisheth to increase this sum, it is forbidden him to exceed the limit of ninety-five mithqāls. Thus hath the command been writ in majesty and power,” Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, pp. 207–208.

15. Is God's Grace for All?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: We are all divine sheep and God has made no distinction between us.¹²¹¹ God has made no distinction in any grace or mercy.¹²¹²

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Some women have no share from God’s grace.¹²¹³

16. Why Did Bahā'u'llāh Have Three Wives?

Shoghi: He was following Islamic law.¹²¹⁴

Shoghi: Tāhīrih adopted the Bāb’s laws and openly denounced polygamy!¹²¹⁵

Bahā’u’llāh married his second and third wives when he was a Bābī not Muslim!

¹²¹¹ “All humans are divine sheep and God is the kind shepherd who has utter compassion towards all the sheep and has made no distinction [between them],” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātib, vol. 3, p. 67.

¹²¹² “The God of the world created all [humans] from clay and created everyone from one element, created all from one progeny, created all in one land, and created [all] under the shadow of one sky, has created them with common emotions, and did not put any differences. He created everyone the same and gives all sustenance, nurtures all, protects all, and is kind to all. He has put no differences in any grace or mercy,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Isḥrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 42.

¹²¹³ “Women are of two kinds. One kind are worldly who have no share from your Lord’s graces. And the other kind are spiritual who are like the pulse of an artery,” Riyāḍ Qadīmī, Gulzār-i ta’ālim Bahā’i, p. 284.

¹²¹⁴ “Bahā’u’llāh had no concubine, He had three legal wives. As He married them before the “Aqdas” (His book of laws) was revealed, He was only acting according to the laws of Islām, which had not yet been superseded. He made plurality of wives conditional upon justice; ‘Abdu’l-Bahā interpreted this to mean that a man may not have more than one wife at a time, as it is impossible to be just to two or more women in marriage (11 February 1944 to an individual believer).”

¹²¹⁵ “She began to correspond with the Bāb and soon espoused all his ideas. She did not content herself with a passive sympathy but confessed openly the faith of her Master. She denounced not only polygamy but the use of the veil and showed her face uncovered in public to the great amazement and scandal of her family and of all the sincere Mussulmans but to the applause of many other fellow citizens who shared her enthusiasm and whose numbers grew as a result of her preaching,” Nabīl Zarandī, The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl’s Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā’i Revelation, p. 270 (footnote).

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is the “Equality of Men and Women” a novel principle?

Both feminist and women’s rights movements had been lobbying for equal rights for women years before the advent of Baha’is and Bahā’u’llāh. Verses of the Quran and texts from Early Christian writers are strikingly similar to what Baha’i leaders have uttered about women.

2) Did the leaders of Baha’ism act upon this principle?

Bahā’u’llāh and Abdu’l-Bahā’s laws about inheritance, dowry, polygamy, pilgrimage, membership of the UHJ . . . are only a few of samples that show Baha’i leaders did not practice what they preached.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

If ‘equality’ means men and women have completely equal rights and duties, then this principle is not rational, for these two sexes have great psychological and physical differences which necessitate different rights and laws. But if equality means men and women should have rights proportional to their specific traits, then Baha’ism has brought forth nothing new, and all Abrahamic religions had already established such practice.

CHAPTER 11:

Establishment of Universal Peace

“Bahā’u’llāh’s eleventh principle is [the establishment] of universal peace. Not until the flag of peace is raised and a great universal court of justice is established in which all affairs and differences between governments are settled, the world of creation will not have peace. Rather, the foundation of the human world will be ploughed and the flames of mischief will grow and all lands—near and far—will become like ashes.”¹²¹⁶

¹²¹⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 150.

The establishment of universal peace means that under no circumstances must nations go to war with each other. A superpower must keep watch and make sure a war does not start.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

The world is in need of universal peace. Not until universal peace is announced will the world have comfort.¹²¹⁷

¹²¹⁷ ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 48.

Our wish is the Oneness of Humanity and our goal is universal peace. Thus we are united in [both] wish and goal and there is nothing in the existing world more important than these two affairs for the oneness of humanity gives humankind honor and universal peace brings tranquility to all those on earth. Thus we are united in [achieving] these two goals and there exists no goals greater than these . . . today a great power is needed to administer these exalted goals.¹²¹⁸

We already analyzed the establishment of the Universal House of Justice and the Supreme Tribunal in the seventh chapter. In this chapter, we will only discuss the subject of universal peace.

Baha'is claim that to achieve the goal of Oneness of Humanity, there is no remedy but to establish universal peace. This cannot be established without a superpower that acts as a watchdog, administering this universal peace. We will now proceed to analyze this teaching from the three aforementioned perspectives.

¹²¹⁸ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 52.

Is the Hope for Establishing Universal Peace Novel?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā claims:

Universal peace is assured by Bahā’u’llāh as a fundamental accomplishment of the religion of God—that peace shall prevail among nations, governments and peoples, among religions, races and all conditions of mankind. This is one of the special characteristics of the Word of God revealed in this Manifestation.

In 1795, years before Bahā’u’llāh, Immanuel Kant published Perpetual Peace with two main steps and guidelines for achieving global peace. Can we believe that Bahā’u’llāh or ‘Abdu’l-Bahā had not heard of this famous philosopher or his article? Or can we believe that they had not heard about this concept in other religions? They certainly had. ‘Abdu’l-Bahā admits that:

All Divine Books and all Divine Prophets and all rational people are unanimous and united [on the belief] that war brings about destruction and peace brings about prosperity.¹²¹⁹

¹²¹⁹ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 99.

It seems that what Baha'i leaders had in mind when speaking about universal peace, was the creation of a superpower which would guarantee that peace is established and sustained. `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

A superpower is needed to implement this peace, prevent this war, and announce the Oneness of Humanity . . . we are in need of a superpower.¹²²⁰

Bahā'u'llāh claims to be the savior which all religions had given glad-tidings about. The savior who was supposed to come and establish world peace once and for all. Yet, this claimant has passed away without fulfilling God's promise and his followers are still searching for a superpower, which was in fact, supposed to be their beloved deceased leader. For now, we will ignore this inconsistency.

Let us see what entity Baha'is believe is fit to take on this role and police the world: Maybe the United States, Russia, the Ottomans, or even the United Kingdom? After all, both he and his son have praised all these powers at different points in time. For instance, this is how Bahā'u'llāh praised the Imperial Russian government for freeing him from prison:

When this Wronged One was sore-afflicted in prison, the minister of the highly esteemed government (of Russia)—may God, glorified and exalted be He, assist him!—exerted his utmost endeavor to compass My deliverance. Several times permission for My release was granted. Some of the 'ulamās of the city, however, would prevent it. Finally, My freedom was gained through the solicitude and the endeavor of His Excellency the Minister . . . His Imperial Majesty, the Most Great Emperor—may God, exalted and glorified be He, assist him!—extended to Me for the sake of God his protection—a protection which has excited the envy and enmity of the foolish ones of the earth.¹²²¹

¹²²⁰ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, pp. 99–100.

Or `Abdu'l-Bahā's supplications for the Ottoman Empire:

Oh Lord, Oh Lord! I ask you by your unseen favors and your self-contained successes and your merciful graces, to assist the exalted Ottoman government and its Caliphate [stemming from the prophet] Muhammad to be spread on earth and be established on [Your] Throne, and in protecting its lands from plague, and safeguarding the center of its rule from humility. Oh Lord, preserve it in the cave of Your protection and support, and protect it with the eye of Your grace, and cover it with your merciful security. For it supports the Blessed Illuminated Monument and protects the Valley of Sinai, and spreads the shadow of its support over the heads of the Friends.¹²²²

The following supplication shows `Abdu'l-Bahā's cozy relations with the English government:

Oh Lord! Give grace to the great Emperor George V, the King of England, with your merciful successes and keep permanent his towering shadow on this lofty land (meaning Palestine).¹²²³

On a side note, in his 1911 journey to Europe, `Abdu'l-Bahā made some extraordinary claims about England:

The people of Iran are overjoyed that I have travelled here. My coming here will be a cause of friendship between Iran

¹²²¹ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 106.

¹²²² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 312.

¹²²³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 347.

and England. A complete relationship will be forged. The [relationship] will increase to such an extent that people from Iran will sacrifice their lives for England and likewise England will sacrifice itself for Iran.¹²²⁴

This speech is so full of falsity that one wonders how `Abdu'l-Bahā had come up with such strange claims. Why should the people of Iran have been overjoyed by `Abdu'l-Bahā's journey to England—a journey most if not all Iranians—did not even know about? No historical document exists today which even slightly shows Iranians had shown such emotions. No document exists that shows the people of Iran sacrificed themselves for England or England sacrificed itself for Iran. All available documents and historical facts show the opposite of `Abdu'l-Bahā's prophecies and to date, England is still widely regarded with suspicion and hatred by the Iranian people because of the atrocities it committed in Iran throughout the previous century and is considered as the root of most of their problems.

The aforementioned supplications themselves are in contradiction with the principle of Universal Peace. When these supplications were uttered—and in the era before and after them—the English, Ottoman, and the Russian empires were engaged in ruthless wars, imperialistic policies, and colonizations which had resulted in the death of millions of people and the transmission of the national wealth of weaker countries to these superpowers. Why had `Abdu'l-Bahā and Bahā'u'llāh prayed for such regimes? Why had they asked God to protect them, make them successful and make permanent their rule?!

`Abdu'l-Bahā's relations with warmongering and imperialistic governments was not limited to supplications and prayers. He was awarded a knighthood by the British government on 27 April 1920.

¹²²⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 23.

Figure 14: Ceremony of `Abdu'l-Bahā's knighthood.

Baha'is explain this event by claiming that the reason for this knighthood was `Abdu'l-Bahā's humanitarian achievements:

Through the war years, `Abdu'l-Bahā encouraged the Baha'is in the Jordan River valley and on the shores of the Sea of Galilee to plant crops. The wheat they produced was distributed to the needy population of Haifa, saving it from starvation. This humanitarian service was recognized by the British, who occupied Haifa at the end of September 1918. The British government knighted 'Abdu'l-Bahá in April 1920 and showed Him extraordinary signs of admiration and respect.¹²²⁵

Nor were the British authorities slow to express their appreciation of the role which `Abdu'l-Bahā had played in allaying the burden of suffering that had oppressed the inhabitants of the Holy Land during the dark days of that distressing conflict. The conferment of a knighthood upon Him at a ceremony specially held for His sake in Haifa, at the residence of the British Governor, at which notables of various communities had assembled.¹²²⁶

Why would a medal of honor based on service to the British government, be granted to someone who was allegedly helping feed the civilian population of a country the British were waging a war against? A government who had already shown it did not care about the civilians of the countries it invaded. The invasion of Persia by the British during the Great Persian famine in 1917–1919 (at nearly the same time they invaded Palestine), greatly intensified the disaster and directly and indirectly resulted in the death of not thousands but millions of innocent Persians.¹²²⁷ The British cared more about their interests in the Middle East than about the countless lives lost because of these invasions. Are we supposed to believe such a regime—with such a black resume—would really care about the starvation of a mere few hundred people that `Abdu'l-Bahā was providing for, while it was watching thousands and millions of people die of starvation due to its actions in other lands? What service was `Abdu'l-Bahā really providing to the British government?

¹²²⁵ This quote was taken on 21 December 2013 from the Baha'i Encyclopedia Project: http://www.bahai-encyclopedia-project.org/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=81:abdul-baha-abbas-1844-1921&catid=36:administrationinstitutions

¹²²⁶ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 306

¹²²⁷ See Mohammad Gholi Majd, The Great Famine and Genocide in Persia, 1917-1919 (University Press of America, 2003).

Shoghi gives us some clues to answer the last question. The following extracts are what Shoghi says about the Ottoman government in God Passes By:

Sulṭān `Abdu'l-`Azīz, who with Nāṣiri'd-Dīn Shāh was the author of the calamities heaped upon Bahā'u'llāh, and was himself responsible for three decrees of banishment against the Prophet; who had been stigmatized, in the Kitāb-i-Aqdas, as occupying the "throne of tyranny."¹²²⁸

In the Holy Land, however, though the outcome of that tremendous struggle was to liberate once and for all the Heart and Center of the Faith from the Turkish yoke, a yoke which had imposed for so long upon its Founder and His Successor such oppressive and humiliating restrictions . . . The privations inflicted on the inhabitants by the gross incompetence, the shameful neglect, the cruelty and callous indifference of both the civil and military authorities, though greatly alleviated through the bountiful generosity, the foresight and the tender care of 'Abdu'l-Bahā, were aggravated by the rigors of a strict blockade . . . The conclusion of this terrible conflict, the first stage in a titanic convulsion long predicted by Bahā'u'llāh, not only marked the extinction of Turkish rule in the Holy Land and sealed the doom of that military despot who had vowed to destroy 'Abdu'l-Bahā . . . The Head of the Faith, and its twin holy Shrines, in the plain of Akkā and on the slopes of Mt. Carmel, were henceforth to enjoy for the first time, through the substitution of a new and liberal régime for the corrupt administration of the past.¹²²⁹

¹²²⁸ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 225.

These quotes show the extreme hatred and enmity Baha’i leaders had towards the Ottomans. If a foreign force—who is friendly towards you for whatever reason—decides to attack your sworn enemy, would you not try to help them?

To see the extent of `Abdu’l-Bahā’s hypocrisy one only needs to compare these praises and prayers for the Ottoman Empire with Shoghi’s words regarding the same empire. Was `Abdu’l-Bahā really serious when he was asking God “to assist the exalted Ottoman Government and its caliphate”? That same empire that Shoghi refers to using the following words: Turkish yoke, throne of tyranny, military despot, corrupt administration! When that empire had power it was subject to the most extreme forms of flattery and praise by the Baha’i administration and when it was overthrown and no longer in power, it was attacked by the Baha’i administration using the most repulsive terms. The sincerity in these words is overwhelming.

What `Abdu’l-Bahā says and predicts about the United States is even more astounding. He says in a speech in the city of Cincinnati in November 1912:

America is a noble nation, a standard-bearer of peace throughout the world, shedding her light to all regions. Other nations are not untrammelled and free of intrigues like the United States, and are unable to bring about Universal Peace. But America, thank God, is at peace with all the world, and is worthy of raising the flag of brotherhood and International Peace.¹²³⁰

¹²²⁹ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, pp. 304–306.

¹²³⁰ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā’u’llāh and the New Era, pp.242–243.

These words were either uttered with the intention of deceiving the American public and giving them delusional pride, or obviously reflect `Abdu'l-Bahā's superhuman knowledge.<sup>1231</sup> If `Abdu'l-Bahā had the slightest knowledge about the United States' military conflicts and interventions he would have never uttered such words.

In the year 1912, the same year that `Abdu'l-Bahā made the aforementioned speech, the United States was in the midst of one of its most ruthless military engagements with its South American neighbors, today referred to as the Banana Wars. These wars were neither based on humanitarian reasons nor to achieve peace, but were wars being fought to loot South American countries from their national wealth and God-given graces and to expand the profit of American commercial organizations and tycoons. U.S. Marine Corps Major, General Smedley Butler, who was perhaps the single most active military officer in the Banana Wars, describes them like this:

I spent 33 years and four months in active military service and during that period I spent most of my time as a high class muscle man for Big Business, for Wall Street and the bankers. In short, I was a racketeer, a gangster for capitalism. I helped make Mexico and especially Tampico safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of half a dozen Central American republics for the benefit of Wall Street. I helped purify Nicaragua for the International Banking House of Brown Brothers in 1902-1912. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for the American sugar interests in 1916. I helped make Honduras right for the American fruit companies in 1903. In China in 1927 I helped see to it that Standard Oil went on its way unmolested. Looking back on it, I might have given Al Capone a few hints.

¹²³¹ Shoghi Effendi, The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh, p. 134.

The best he could do was to operate his racket in three districts. I operated on three continents.¹²³²

`Abdu'l-Bahā gives further glad-tidings about America and its peaceful attitude:

Undoubtedly, the American people and nation, have no intention of colonizing [another country] or expanding the circle of the countries [borders] and do not seek to attack other nations and countries.¹²³³

These words were uttered in the same year that America was engaged in at least two major wars: 1-The Moro Rebellion (1899 – 1913) against ethnic Muslims who lived in the Southern Philippines and resisted Spanish and American colonization. 2-Occupation of Nicaragua (1912–1933).

`Abdu'l-Bahā's prophecy was so precise that in the next one hundred years, the United States became—and still is—militarily engaged in hundreds of conflicts around the world. Some of the major ones being:

- The Mexican Revolution (1914–1919)
- Occupation of Haiti (1915–1934)
- Occupation of the Dominican Republic (1916–1924)
- World War I (1917–1918)
- Russian Civil War (1918–1920)
- World War II (1941–1945)
- Korean War (1950–1953)
- First Indochina War (1950–1954)
- Vietnam War (1953–1975)
- Laotian Civil War (1953–1975)
- Lebanon Crisis (1958)

¹²³² Eugene Jarecki, The American Way of War: Guided Missiles, Misguided Men, and a Republic in Peril, (Free Press, 2010), p. 145.

¹²³³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 69.

- Congo Crisis (1960-1965)
- Bay of Pigs Invasion (1961)
- Colombian Conflict (1964–present)
- Invasion of the Dominican Republic (1965–1966)
- War in Bolivia (1966–1967)
- Korean DMZ Conflict (1966–1969)
- Cambodian Civil War (1970–1975)
- Soviet War in Afghanistan (1979–1989)
- Lebanese Civil War (1982–1984)
- Invasion of Grenada (1983)
- Libya (1981, 1986, 1989)
- Iran (1987-1988)
- Invasion of Panama (1989–1990)
- Gulf War (1990–1991)
- Bosnian War (1993–1995)
- Kosovo War (1999)
- Afghanistan War (2001–present)
- Iraq War (2003–2011)

These wars resulted in the deaths of millions of people. ‘The standard-bearer of peace’ and the nation ‘worthy of raising the flag of brotherhood and International Peace’ as `Abdu’l-Bahā had prophesized, has been involved in more military conflicts than every other nation ever since these titles were given to it. Abdu’l-Bahā’s prayers were not answered when he uttered:

O God! Let this American democracy become glorious in spiritual degrees even as it has aspired to material degrees, and render this just government victorious. Confirm this revered nation to upraise the standard of the oneness of humanity, to promulgate the Most Great Peace, to become thereby most glorious and praiseworthy among all the nations of the world.¹²³⁴

It has become clear that “this just government” was not just and not a seeker of peace. The world has not yet forgotten the nuclear bombs dropped on the innocent men, women and children of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and the indiscriminate bombing of civilians in Vietnam.

Baha’is claim with pride that when ‘Abdu’l-Bahā spoke with the Japanese ambassador to the United States with the following words, he was warning him about a nuclear strike:

Scientific discoveries have increased material civilization. There is in existence a stupendous force, as yet, happily undiscovered by man. Let us supplicate God, the Beloved, that this force be not discovered by science until spiritual civilization shall dominate the human mind. In the hands of men of lower nature, this power would be able to destroy the whole earth.¹²³⁵

According to Baha’is, ‘Abdu’l-Bahā had apparently predicted that, ‘The standard-bearer of peace’ and the nation ‘worthy of raising the flag of brotherhood and International Peace,’ was going to nuke Japan and commit one of the greatest war crimes known to mankind.

¹²³⁴ Various, Bahā’ī Prayers: A Selection of Prayers Revealed by Bahā’u’llāh, the Bāb, and ‘Abdu’l-Bahā (US Bahā’ī Publishing Trust, 1991), p. 25.

¹²³⁵ Various, Japan Will Turn Ablaze! (Bahā’ī Publishing Trust of Japan, 1992 [revised edition]), p. 51.

Were Baha'i Leaders Peaceful and Against Violence?

`Abdu'l-Bahā believes that it does not suffice to say peace is good and war is bad. Talking and knowing will not create peace, rather, peace is obtained through action:

All rational people are unanimous and united [on the belief] that war brings about destruction and peace brings about prosperity. All are unanimous that war topples the foundations of humanity . . . Knowing something is not enough [to make it happen]. If a man knows richness is good, he will not become rich [only by knowing]. If a man knows knowledge is praiseworthy, he will not become knowledgeable [only by knowing]. If a man knows honor is acceptable, he will not become honorable [only by knowing]. Likewise, having knowledge is not the cause of attainment.¹²³⁶

So, to attain peace, we must act, not just claim that peace is good. In this section we will analyze how Baha'i leaders implemented this principle with their actions.

¹²³⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaqābāt, vol.2, pp. 99–100.

In the third chapter, we showed many instances where Baha'is and their forerunners had shown violent actions towards their opponents. Some of these were:

- The Bab's orders to burn non-Bābī books, behead and massacre those who did not believe in him, and to destroy all monuments.¹²³⁷
- The conflicts between the followers of the Bāb in a bid to become his successors.¹²³⁸
- Start of three major internal wars in Iran due to the Bāb's orders with tens of thousands of casualties.¹²³⁹
- The fights and quarrels between Bahā'u'llāh and his brother Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal and the consequent fights between their followers.
- The fights between `Abdu'l-Bahā and his brother Muḥammad `Alī Afandī for the succession of their father.¹²⁴⁰
- Shoghi's conflicts and fights with other Baha'i members.¹²⁴¹

¹²³⁷ "The utterance of the [book or religion] of Bayān in the day of the appearance of his Highness A'lā (meaning the Bāb) was to behead, burn the books, destroy the monuments, and massacre [everyone] but those who believed [in the Bāb's religion] and verified it," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb, vol. 2, p. 266.

¹²³⁸ Twenty seven people among the Bābīs brought themselves forth as the Promised One in the Book of Bayān, such as Mīrzā Yahyā Ṣubḥ Azal, Mīrzā Husayn `Alī Nūrī (Bahā'u'llāh), Mīrzā Asad-Allāh Dayyān, Mīrzā Muḥammad Nabīl Zarandī, Mīrzā Ghughā Darwīsh, and Sayyid Baṣīr Hindī. See Muḥammad `Alī Fayḍī, Haḍrat Bahā'u'llāh, pp. 103–104.

¹²³⁹ See `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Talkhīṣ tārikh Nabīl, pp. 330, 345–6, 434.

¹²⁴⁰ Bahā'u'llāh had willed that his successor would be Ghuṣn A`zam (`Abdu'l-Bahā') and after him Ghuṣn Akbar (`Abdu'l-Bahā's brother Muḥammad `Alī): "God has destined the station [for] Ghuṣn Akbar after his position (meaning `Abdu'l-Bahā'), for He is the Commanding Wise. We chose the Akbar after the A`zam, an order from the All Knowing and Aware (God). All must show kindness towards the two Ghuṣns . . . All must respect and admire the two Ghuṣns," Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, pp. 302–303. After Bahā'u'llāh's death the two brothers differed on the amount of authority they had and fights ensued between them and their followers.

¹²⁴¹ According to Bahā'u'llāh's orders the successor after `Abdu'l-Bahā was supposed to be his brother Ghuṣn Akbar. `Abdu'l-Bahā disobeyed this decree and instead appointed his own grandson Shoghi Effendi as his successor. This resulted in many differences and conflicts between Shoghi and many Baha'is who didn't accept his authority.

- Fights of Rūḥiyyih Maxwell and the members of the institution of the Hands of the Cause with Mason Remey.¹²⁴²

We will now mention two more examples:

1- Āghā Asad-Allah Kāshī

Āghā Asad-Allah Kāshī, who was known as the lioness, had a short height but showed great servitude and served in the Holy House up to the end of his life. His highness, `Abdu'l-Bahā, used to say, "Do you see this Āghā Asad-Allah and his short height? He would hang a long machete to his back and accompany the Blessed Beauty (Bahā'u'llāh) in Baghdad and the enemies of the Cause (Baha'ism) would fear him."¹²⁴³

The next section shows that Baha'i actions in Iraq were not limited to hanging swords and machetes to their backs.

2-Murders in Iraq

Bahā'u'llāh's older sister `Izziyi Khanum (Khanum Buzurg) further describes the situation in Iraq and tells us about the atrocities committed by his brother and his followers in Iraq:

They gathered a group of hooligans from different provinces of Iran and from the same places fugitives who had never believed in any religion and had no faith in any prophet and ¹²⁴² In contrast to what `Abdu'l-Bahā had prophesized, Shoghi was sterile and had no children to succeed him. In a bid to become his successor, an internal conflict erupted between Bahā'u'llāh's followers. Amongst these conflicts, the most intense was the one between Shoghi's widow (Rūḥiyyih Maxwell) and Mason Remey (President of the International Baha'i Council). Mason Remey claimed that the UHJ established by Rūḥiyyih Maxwell was illegitimate and in a countermove the UHJ excommunicated Mason Remey from the Baha'i community.

¹²⁴³ Ḥabīb Mu'ayyad, Khāṭirātī Ḥabīb, vol. 1, p.385 (footnote).

had no work but manslaughter and had no occupation but stealing peoples' property. Even though they claimed they were following [the customs] of Ḥusayn (the grandson of the Prophet Muḥammad who was ruthlessly murdered by Shimr on the orders of Yazīd) they summoned a group of Shimr-like people around themselves. The breath of any soul who uttered anything but what they were satisfied with was suffocated. They beat any head which made the slightest sound other than accepting their guardianship. They cut every throat which showed other than humbleness towards them. They pierced every heart which had love towards other than them. The first group whose names we previously mentioned fled to Karbala, Najaf and elsewhere fearing those bloodthirsty headsmen. They beheaded Sayyid Ismā'īl Iṣfahānī, they ripped Mīrzā Aḥmad Kāshī's guts, they killed Āghā Abul-Qāsim Kāshī and threw his body in the Tigris river, they finished Sayyid Aḥmad with a gun, they scattered Mīrzā Ridhā's brain with rocks, they cut Mīrzā `Alī's body from the sides and pushed him unto the path of demise. Other than these, they killed others in the darkness of night and threw their bodies in the Tigris river; yet others were killed in the Bazaar in daylight and cut to pieces with daggers and machetes . . . ¹²⁴⁴

Even with such a black and violent dossier, `Abdu'l-Bahā insists that Baha'ism is the cause of peace:

In a time when Iran was infested with war and battle and there were wars between religions and faiths, and religions had enmity towards each other and avoided one another and regarded others as impure, and there was war between governments, tribes, and lands, in such a time and such ¹²⁴⁴ `Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn, pp. 11–12.

darkness, his highness Bahā'u'llāh appeared and dispelled those darkness's.¹²⁴⁵

Any person with an iota of historical knowledge can clearly see the falsity of these claims, a falsity that continues on to this day. `Abdu'l-Bahā closes his eyes to all the atrocities committed by the followers of his father and tries to display a peaceful Baha'i religion and attributes all violence falsely to Islam (and rightly to Bābism):

In the Quran and [book of] Bayān, the order was [given] to invade other religions. But the book of Aqdas abrogated these orders, because using the sword has been completely abrogated and invasion has been completely prohibited. Even quarreling with other nations is not permissible.¹²⁴⁶

We will conclude this section with four questions:

1-`Abdu'l-Bahā says:

It may happen that at a given time warlike and savage tribes may furiously attack the body politic with the intention of carrying on a wholesale slaughter of its members; under such a circumstance defense is necessary.¹²⁴⁷

The conditions for self-defense put forward by `Abdu'l-Bahā are too far-fetched. What if a community is attacked by a savage tribe with only the intention of killing a few people? What if a community is attacked but there is no intention of killing anybody? What if a foreign country invades? Must the people lay down their arms because Bahā'u'llāh only approves of defense if Genghis Khan attacks? Should we be thankful for such insightful orders and laws? Did we need the Baha'i faith to tell us these obvious orders that anyone would have known by instinct?

¹²⁴⁵ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 72.

¹²⁴⁶ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkāṁ, chap. 36, p. 272.

¹²⁴⁷ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 171–172.

2-How can a creed claim to be the flag-bearer of peace when its leader announces with pride:

And you, oh friends of God, be clouds of grace for those who believe in God and his signs, and be certain torment for those who do not believe in God and are polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism).¹²⁴⁸

Be like a flame of fire to my enemies and a river of eternal life to my friends.¹²⁴⁹

God has made him (Bahā'u'llāh) a light for the monotheists (Baha'is) and a fire for the polytheists (non-Baha'is).¹²⁵⁰

God will soon take out from the sleeves of power the hands of strength and dominance and will make the Servant (Bahā'u'llāh) victorious and will cleanse the earth from the filth of every rejected polytheist (deniers of Baha'ism). And they will stand by the cause and will conquer the lands using my mighty eternal name and will enter the lands and they will be feared by all the servants.¹²⁵¹

3- How can a person who starts fights over the smallest incidents, claim to be the vanguard of peace:

When his holiness returned from Sulaymaniyah, he was strolling in the street one day with the late Āqā Mīrzā ¹²⁴⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 216.

¹²⁴⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb, p. 184.

¹²⁵⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 74, p. 372.

¹²⁵¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 90, p. 587.

Muḥammad Qulī. A Kabob seller quietly said, 'These Bābīs have appeared again!' His holiness said to Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī, 'Hit him in the mouth!' Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī grabbed his beard and started hitting him in the head.¹²⁵²

4- Why did Baha'is distort their books after it became apparent that 'Abdu'l-Bahā's prophecies about world peace being established in 1957 were false? We already mentioned this in the section on distortions in Chapter 1:

Perhaps the most important change in Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era was made on page 212 of the 1923 edition. Recorded as a Bahā'ī prophecy concerning the "Coming of the Kingdom of God," Esslemont cited Abdu'l-Bahā's interpretation of the last two verses of the Book of Daniel from the Bible. He stated that the 1335 days spoken of by Daniel represented 1335 solar years from Muhammad's flight to Medina in 622 A.D., which would equal 1957 A.D.. When asked "'What shall we see at the end of the 1335 days?'," Abdu'l-Bahā's reply was: "'Universal Peace will be firmly established, a Universal language promoted. Misunderstandings will pass away. The Bahā'ī Cause will be promulgated in all parts and the oneness of mankind established. It will be most glorious!'" In editions published after his death, Esslemont's words have been changed to say that Abdu'l-Bahā "reckoned the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy from the date of the beginning of the Muhammadan era" and one of Abdu'l-Bahā's Tablets is quoted on the same subject in which he writes, "'For according to this calculation a century will have elapsed from the dawn of the Sun of Truth . . . Esslemont recorded Abdu'l-Bahā as declaring explicitly that the prophecy was to be computed from the Hijra or 622 A.D. and that specific conditions would exist in the world upon it's fulfillment in 1957. When it became apparent that this Bahā'ī prophecy would not be fulfilled, it was replaced with the ambiguous material which has remained in the text to the present.¹²⁵³

¹²⁵² Ḥabīb Mu'ayyad, Khāṭirātī Ḥabīb, vol. 1, p.266.

¹²⁵³ Vance Salisbury, A Critical Examination of 20th-Century Baha'i Literature. http://bahai-library.com/salisbury_critical_examination_literature (retrieved 22/2/2014).

Is it Rational and Logical to Always be at Peace and Never Show violent Acts?

`Abdu'l-Bahā denies victims of abuse the right to self-defense. He believes that an abuser can only be punished by social institutions after they have committed their crime and the victims must make no effort to defend themselves during these heinous acts:

(1) If someone oppresses another, shows him injustice, and abuses him, and the [oppressed] counters likewise, then this act is revenge and is despicable. (2) For instance, if A kills B's son, then B is not allowed to kill A's son for this is revenge and despicable. Rather, B must counter by opposite actions [to what has been shown to him]. He must forgive and even if possible, offer his help to the abuser. Humans are worthy of [these actions].¹²⁵⁴

Number (1) simply means that if a person is attacked, abused, or oppressed, then they must not defend themselves, because this defense is revenge! The fallacy in (1) is that self-defense is equated to revenge. Number (2) is an example used for justification which is not in harmony with (1). Because (1) is about self-defense but (2) is really about revenge, which are two different things.

¹²⁵⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Mufāwāḍāt, pp. 186–187.

If a group of people attacks us and our family, must we simply wait and watch them do what they wish and not defend ourselves through what will most probably be violent actions? Or in the case that we decide to defend ourselves, should our only weapons be our bare hands because `Abdu'l-Bahā insists that in this era weapons have been abolished?¹²⁵⁵

Where is the common sense in Bahā'u'llāh's strict orders that being slain is better than slaying, even in self-defense:

As a religious body, Baha'is have, at the express command of Bahā'u'llāh, entirely abandoned the use of armed force in their own interests, even for strictly defensive purposes. In Persia, many many thousands of the Bābīs and Baha'is have suffered cruel deaths because of their faith. In the early days of the Cause, the Bābīs on various occasions defended themselves and their families by the sword with great courage and bravery. Bahā'u'llāh, however, forbade this. 'Abdu'l-Bahā writes: "When Bahā'u'llāh appeared, He declared that the promulgation of the truth by such means must on no account be allowed, even for purposes of self-defense. He abrogated the rule of the sword and annulled the ordinance of 'Holy War.' 'If ye be slain,' said He, 'it is better for you than to slay . . .'"¹²⁵⁶

And where is the common-sense in similar words from `Abdu'l-Bahā:

But the communities must protect the rights of man. So if someone assaults, injures, oppresses and wounds me, I will offer no resistance, and I will forgive him.¹²⁵⁷

¹²⁵⁵ "Using the sword has been completely abrogated," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 36, p. 272.

¹²⁵⁶ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.169–170.

¹²⁵⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 271.

Rapists, murders, criminals, thugs, hooligans, and enemy soldiers can freely do what they wish with Baha'is if they get hold of them in a place where the community cannot protect them. They are neither allowed to have weapons nor allowed self-defense. Is this logical and rational?

After all these preachings against war and not defending oneself, `Abdu'l-Bahā suddenly declares that war can bring about good:

A conquest can be a praiseworthy thing, and there are times when war becomes the powerful basis of peace, and ruin the very means of reconstruction. If, for example, a high-minded sovereign marshals his troops to block the onset of the insurgent and the aggressor, or again, if he takes the field and distinguishes himself in a struggle to unify a divided state and people, if, in brief, he is waging war for a righteous purpose, then this seeming wrath is mercy itself, and this apparent tyranny the very substance of justice and this warfare the cornerstone of peace.¹²⁵⁸

This quote single-handedly contradicts most if not all the quotes we previously mentioned. The same `Abdu'l-Bahā who was claiming that his father allegedly prevented Bābīs from using the sword even for strictly defensive purposes now claims that waging war for a righteous purpose is justified! Is defending one's women and children not a righteous act that the Bābīs were allegedly prevented from doing so?! If war can bring peace then why are Baha'is not allowed to defend themselves when they are attacked? If war is allowed then why is being slayed better than slaying? Where is the logic in all these contradictory laws and commands?

Yes, war can be a basis for peace, but why can "A conquest be a praiseworthy thing"? Remember what he previously said: "Using the sword has been completely abrogated and invasion has been completely prohibited. Even quarreling with other nations is not permissible.”¹²⁵⁹ What is more interesting is the original Farsi text which has been distorted in the English translation. The Farsi text says jahāngushāie wa kishwaristānī mamdūh which means “attacking [another country] to conquer their land is praiseworthy.” Is there any sense in what `Abdu’l-Bahā is saying? Is this how universal peace is to be achieved, by attacking other countries and taking their land?!

¹²⁵⁸ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 172.

What is even more contradictory is what he says elsewhere about wars for conquering the lands of others:

It is clear that man lives on this land for a few years [and once he dies] will go under it (i.e. buried in it) forever and it is his eternal grave. Is it worth it to go to war over this eternal graveyard?¹²⁶⁰

As usual, since `Abdu’l-Bahā’s orders about not defending one’s self were so irrational and farfetched, they became a source of confusion and perplexity among the Baha’i community and gave rise to many questions. In a bid to answer these questions, Shoghi and the Universal House of Justice gave answers which contradicted the words of `Abdu’l-Bahā’. We will quote all the section on Self Defense in the Baha’i creed from Hornby’s Lights of Guidance. Notice how none of Bahā’u’llāh and `Abdu’l-Bahā’s irrational orders about not defending oneself have been mentioned and instead new concepts have been introduced and self-defense has been justified:

C. Self-Defense

398. Bahā’ī Justified in Defending his Life in Emergency

“Regarding the question you raised: In an emergency, when there is no legal source at hand to appeal to, a Bahā’ī is perfectly justified in defending his life.” (From a letter written ¹²⁵⁹ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 36, p. 272.

¹²⁶⁰ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 104–105.

on behalf of Shoghi Effendi to an individual believer, July 24, 1943)

399. Self-Defense

“From the texts you already have available it is clear that Bahā’u’llāh has stated that it is preferable to be killed in the path of God’s good-pleasure than to kill, and that organized religious attack against Baha’is should never turn into any kind of warfare, as this is strictly prohibited in our Writings.

“The House of Justice does not wish at the present time to go beyond the guidelines given in the above-mentioned statements. The question is basically a matter of conscience, and in each case the Bahā’ī involved must use his judgment in determining when to stop in self-defense lest his action deteriorate into retaliation.

“Of course the above principles apply also in cases when a Bahā’ī finds himself involved in situations of civil disorder. We have, however, advised the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States that under the present circumstances in that country it is preferable that Baha’is do not buy nor own arms for their protection or the protection of their families” (From a letter of the Universal House of Justice to the National Spiritual Assembly of Canada, May 26, 1969: Messages from the Universal House of Justice, 1968-1973, p. 26).

400. Pioneer Living in a Remote Area Lacking Protection: Circumstances Under Which a Bahā’ī is Justified in Defending Self

“We have your letter of March 2, 1972 asking if ... a pioneer couple living in a remote area lacking police protection may have a weapon in their possession for defending themselves as thieves have broken into their house twice and robbed them. “A hitherto untranslated Tablet from ‘Abdu’l-Bahā points out that in the case of attack by robbers and highwaymen, a Bahā'ī should not surrender himself, but should try, as far as circumstances permit, to defend himself, and later on lodge a complaint with the government authorities. A statement in a letter written on behalf of the Guardian indicates that in an emergency when there is no legal force at hand to appeal to a Bahā'ī is justified in defending his life. Although we have advised certain National Assemblies in countries facing increasing civil disorder that it is preferable that Bahā'īs do not buy or own arms for their protection or the protection of their families, we feel that in the circumstances you have outlined in your letter it would be permissible for the pioneer family to keep a weapon in the house, provided the law permits." (From a letter of the Universal House of Justice to the National Spiritual Assembly of Honduras, March 20, 1972)

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”¹²⁶¹

¹²⁶¹Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Are Aggression and Abuse Forbidden?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: All kinds of aggression and quarreling are prohibited.¹²⁶²

Bahā'u'llāh's sister: Bahā'u'llāh and his followers ruthlessly murdered many people in Iraq.¹²⁶³

2. Universal Peace or Tormenting Bahā'u'llāh's Enemies?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: "Our wish is the Oneness of Humanity and our goal is universal peace."¹²⁶⁴

Bahā'u'llāh: "Be like a flame of fire to my enemies and a river of eternal life to my friends"¹²⁶⁵ "And you, oh friends of God, be clouds of grace for those who believe in God and his signs, and be certain torment for those who do not believe in God and are polytheists (deniers of Baha'ism)."¹²⁶⁶ "God has made him (Bahā'u'llāh) a light for the monotheists (Baha'is) and a fire for the polytheists (non-Baha'is)."¹²⁶⁷

¹²⁶² "Using the sword has been completely abrogated and invasion has been completely prohibited. Even quarreling with other nations is not permissible," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 36, p. 272.

¹²⁶³ See `Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn, pp. 11–12.

¹²⁶⁴ `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 52.

¹²⁶⁵ Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb, p. 184; The same quote can be found on p.196 on the typed version at: reference.bahai.org

¹²⁶⁶ Bahā'u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih, p. 216.

¹²⁶⁷ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 74, p. 372.

3. Should We Defend Ourselves If We Are Attacked?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: If someone attacks or wants to kill you don't defend yourself!¹²⁶⁸

Shoghi: Baha'is are perfectly justified in defending their lives!¹²⁶⁹

Bahā'u'llāh: No self-defense is allowed with weapons!¹²⁷⁰

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Self-defense is allowed when a savage tribe attacks with the intention of killing everybody!¹²⁷¹

¹²⁶⁸ "If someone abuses me, shows me injustice and oppresses me, and wounds the place of my liver, I will never show aggression," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Mufāwāḍāt, p. 189.

¹²⁶⁹ Helen Bassett Hornby, Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File, no. 398.

¹²⁷⁰ "As a religious body, Baha'is have, at the express command of Bahā'u'llāh, entirely abandoned the use of armed force in their own interests, even for strictly defensive purposes. In Persia, many many thousands of the Bābīs and Baha'is have suffered cruel deaths because of their faith. In the early days of the Cause, the Bābīs on various occasions defended themselves and their families by the sword with great courage and bravery. Bahā'u'llāh, however, forbade this . . ." J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.169–170.

¹²⁷¹ "It may happen that at a given time warlike and savage tribes may furiously attack the body politic with the intention of carrying on a wholesale slaughter of its members; under such a circumstance defense is necessary," J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 171–172.

4. Weapons and Wars Are Prohibited or Not?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Wars are prohibited in the Baha’i creed.¹²⁷²

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Sometimes to reach peace one must use war.¹²⁷³

5. Is Aggression Forbidden?

Bahā’u’llāh: All kinds of aggression and quarreling are prohibited.¹²⁷⁴

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: My father (Bahā’u’llāh) told his companions to hit the kabob seller in the mouth because he merely said the Bābīs have come again.¹²⁷⁵

¹²⁷² “In the Quran and [book of] Bayān, the order was [given] to invade other religions. But the book of Aqdas abrogated these orders, because using the sword has been completely abrogated and invasion has been completely prohibited,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 36, p. 272.

¹²⁷³ “A conquest can be a praiseworthy thing, and there are times when war becomes the powerful basis of peace, and ruin the very means of reconstruction. If, for example, a high-minded sovereign marshals his troops to block the onset of the insurgent and the aggressor, or again, if he takes the field and distinguishes himself in a struggle to unify a divided state and people, if, in brief, he is waging war for a righteous purpose, then this seeming wrath is mercy itself, and this apparent tyranny the very substance of justice and this warfare the cornerstone of peace,” J. E. Esslemont, Bahā’u’llāh and the New Era, p. 172.

¹²⁷⁴ “Using the sword has been completely abrogated and invasion has been completely prohibited. Even quarreling with other nations is not permissible,” ‘Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwārī, Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkām, chap. 36, p. 272.

¹²⁷⁵ “When his holiness returned from Sulaymaniyah, he was strolling in the street one day with the late Āqā Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī. A Kabob seller quietly said, ‘These Bābīs have appeared again!’ His holiness said to Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī, ‘Hit him in the mouth!’ Mīrzā Muḥammad Qulī grabbed his beard and started hitting him in the head,” Ḥabīb Mu’ayyad, Khāṭirātī Ḥabīb, vol. 1, p. 266.

6. Did Baha'ism Put an End to All Disputes and Fights?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Bahā'u'llāh dispelled all wars and battles between religions, governments, and tribes in Iran!¹²⁷⁶

History shows otherwise!

7. Can a Conquering Lands Be Praiseworthy?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Yes it can.¹²⁷⁷

`Abdu'l-Bahā: We must not go to war over these lands!¹²⁷⁸

8. When Will Universal Peace Be Established?

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Universal peace will be established in 1957.

*Prophecy was not fulfilled and was removed from Baha'i books!*¹²⁷⁹

¹²⁷⁶ "In a time when Iran was infested with war and battle and there were wars between religions and faiths, and religions had enmity towards each other and avoided one another and regarded others as impure, and there was war between governments, tribes, and lands, in such a time and such darkness, his highness Bahā'u'llāh appeared and dispelled those darkness's," `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, p. 72.

¹²⁷⁷ "A conquest can be a praiseworthy thing, and there are times when war becomes the powerful basis of peace, and ruin the very means of reconstruction," J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, p. 172.

¹²⁷⁸ "It is clear that man lives on this land for a few years [and once he dies] will go under it (i.e. buried in it) forever and it is his eternal grave. Is it worth it to go to war over this eternal graveyard?" `Abd al-Ḥamīd Ishrāq Khāwarī, Payām-i malakūt, pp. 104–105.

¹²⁷⁹ "Perhaps the most important change in Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era was made on page 212 of the 1923 edition. Recorded as a Bahā'ī prophecy concerning the "Coming of the Kingdom of God," Esslemont cited Abdu'l-Bahā's interpretation of the last two verses of the Book of Daniel from the Bible. He stated that the 1335 days spoken of by Daniel represented 1335 solar years from Muhammad's flight to Medina in 622 A.D., which would equal 1957 A.D.. When asked "What shall we see at the end of the 1335 days?," Abdu'l-Bahā's reply was: "Universal Peace will be firmly established, a Universal language promoted. Misunderstandings will pass away. The Bahā'ī Cause will be promulgated in all parts and the oneness of mankind established. It will be most glorious!" In editions published after his death, Esslemont's words have been changed to say that Abdu'l-Bahā "reckoned the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy from the date of the beginning of the Muhammadan era" and one of Abdu'l-Bahā's Tablets is quoted on the same subject in which he writes, "For according to this calculation a century will have elapsed from the dawn of the Sun of Truth . . . Esslemont recorded Abdu'l-Bahā as declaring explicitly that the prophecy was to be computed from the Hijra or 622 A.D. and that specific conditions would exist

8. Words of Wisdom:

`Abdu'l-Bahā: Iranians will sacrifice themselves for England and England will sacrifice itself for Iran!¹²⁸⁰

`Abdu'l-Bahā: America is at Peace with All countries and is worthy of raising the flag of peace and brotherhood!¹²⁸¹

`Abdu'l-Bahā: America does not intend to attack another country!¹²⁸²

Bahā'u'llāh: "If ye be slain, it is better for you than to slay"¹²⁸³

`Abdu'l-Bahā: "If someone assaults, injures, oppresses and wounds me, I will offer no resistance, and I will forgive him."¹²⁸⁴

`Abdu'l-Bahā: "If someone oppresses another, shows him injustice, and abuses him, and the [oppressed] counters likewise, then this act is revenge and is despicable."¹²⁸⁵

`Abdu'l-Bahā: "In the early days of the Cause the Bābīs on various occasions defended themselves and their families by the sword, with great courage and bravery. Bahā'u'llāh, however, forbade this."¹²⁸⁶

in the world upon its fulfillment in 1957. When it became apparent that this Bahā'ī prophecy would not be fulfilled, it was replaced with the ambiguous material which has remained in the text to the present," Vance Salisbury, A Critical Examination of 20th-Century Baha'i Literature. http://bahai-library.com/salisbury_critical_examination_literature (retrieved 22/2/2014).

¹²⁸⁰ "“My coming here will be a cause of friendship between Iran and England. A complete relationship will be forged. The [relationship] will increase to such an extent that people from Iran will sacrifice their lives for England and likewise England will sacrifice itself for Iran,” `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 23.

¹²⁸¹ "America is a noble nation, a standard-bearer of peace throughout the world, shedding her light to all regions. Other nations are not untrammelled and free of intrigues like the United States, and are unable to bring about Universal Peace. But America, thank God, is at peace with all the world, and is worthy of raising the flag of brotherhood and International Peace," J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.242–243.

¹²⁸² "Undoubtedly, the American people and nation, have no intention of colonizing [another country] or expanding the circle of the countries [borders] and do not seek to attack other nations and countries," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Khaṭābāt (Tehran), vol. 2, p. 69.

¹²⁸³ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.169–170.

¹²⁸⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 271.

¹²⁸⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Mufāwāḍāt, pp. 186–187.

¹²⁸⁶ J. E. Esslemont, Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era, pp.169–170.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is Universal Peace a novel principle?

All religions have hoped and strived for universal peace. Among philosophers, Kant had proposed a method to establish universal peace years before Bahā'u'llāh.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

The fights and disputes which were committed with the permission of Baha'i leaders, show that they themselves did not adhere to this principle. Bahā'u'llāh's order to be certain torment to his enemies is an official license for Baha'is to incite hatred amongst his enemies.

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

If a tyrant starts a war or a group of people attack another group, then all people with an iota of common sense will defend themselves. Thus the orders to put aside self-defense or limiting it to very far-fetched circumstances or hard-to-come-by conditions, lack any kind of reasoning and have no rational basis whatsoever.

CHAPTER 12:

The World of Humanity is in the Need of the Breath of the Holy Spirit

“The world of humanity cannot advance through mere physical powers and intellectual attainments; nay, rather, the Holy Spirit is essential . . . The body of man is in need of physical and mental energy, but his spirit requires the life and fortification of the Holy Spirit. Without its protection and quickening the human world would be extinguished . . . the human spirit which is not fortified by the presence of the Holy Spirit is dead and in need of resurrection by that divine power; otherwise, though materially advanced to high degrees, man cannot attain full and complete progress.”¹²⁸⁷

¹²⁸⁷ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), pp. 241–242

The World of Humanity is in the Need of the Breath of the Holy Spirit means that the human world is in the need of religion and Divine Inspirations.

‘Abdu’l-Bahā says:

The Divine Reality is Unthinkable, Limitless, Eternal, Immortal and Invisible. The world of creation is bound by natural law, finite and mortal. The Infinite Reality cannot be said to ascend or descend. It is beyond the understanding of man, and cannot be described in terms which apply to the phenomenal sphere of the created world. Man, then, is in extreme need of the only Power by which he is able to receive help from the Divine Reality, that Power alone bringing him into contact with the Source of all life.

An intermediary is needed to bring two extremes into relation with each other. Riches and poverty, plenty and need: without an intermediary power there could be no relation between these pairs of opposites. So we can say there must be a Mediator between God and Man, and this is none other than the Holy Spirit, which brings the created earth into relation with the 'Unthinkable One', the Divine Reality. The Divine Reality may be likened to the sun and the Holy Spirit to the rays of the sun. As the rays of the sun bring the light and warmth of the sun to the earth, giving life to all created beings, so do the 'Manifestations' bring the power of the Holy Spirit from the Divine Sun of Reality to give light and life to the souls of men.

Behold, there is an intermediary necessary between the sun and the earth; the sun does not descend to the earth, neither does the earth ascend to the sun. This contact is made by the rays of the sun which bring light and warmth and heat. The Holy Spirit is the Light from the Sun of Truth bringing, by its infinite power, life and illumination to all mankind, flooding all souls with Divine Radiance, conveying the blessings of God's Mercy to the whole world. The earth, without the medium of the warmth and light of the rays of the sun, could receive no benefits from the sun.

Likewise the Holy Spirit is the very cause of the life of man; without the Holy Spirit he would have no intellect, he would be unable to acquire his scientific knowledge by which his great influence over the rest of creation is gained. The illumination of the Holy Spirit gives to man the power of thought, and enables him to make discoveries by which he bends the laws of nature to his will. The Holy Spirit it is which, through the mediation of the Prophets of God, teaches spiritual virtues to man and enables him to attain Eternal Life.

All these blessings are brought to man by the Holy Spirit; therefore we can understand that the Holy Spirit is the Intermediary between the Creator and the created. The light and heat of the sun cause the earth to be fruitful, and create life in all things that grow; and the Holy Spirit quickens the souls of men. The two great apostles, St Peter and St John the Evangelist, were once simple, humble workmen, toiling for their daily bread. By the Power of the Holy Spirit their souls were illumined, and they received the eternal blessings of the Lord Christ.¹²⁸⁸

According to `Abdu'l-Bahā, the Holy Spirit is the intermediary between man and God by which man is given life, intellect, knowledge, thought, and eternal life.

¹²⁸⁸ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 57–59.

Is the Principle “the World of Humanity is in the Need of the Breath of the Holy Spirit” New?

The fact that humans always need a Divine Guide to show them God’s true path and message is nothing new. It has been the basis of all true religions and it was for this purpose that God had sent His Messengers and Prophets. This principle is a Basis of Shia Islamic doctrine and has been greatly emphasized in many traditions. These traditions not only vastly outnumber Baha’i beliefs about this concept but give an insight that is virtually inexistent in Baha’i teachings. For example, the following verse in the Quran clearly shows this meaning:

[O Prophet] You are a warner and for every people there is a guide.¹²⁸⁹

Imam al-Bāqir, the sixth Shia Imam, says about this verse:

The warner is the Prophet (Muḥammad) and (after him) the Guide is `Alī and in all ages there will be an Imam from amongst us who will guide (the people) to what the Prophet has brought (from God).¹²⁹⁰

The chapter that we mentioned this narration from is called Bāb al-iẓtirār ila al-Ḥujja (The Chapter about the necessity of a Divine Proof). In that chapter alone 118 narrations have been mentioned that all show the meaning that God will not leave the earth without a Divine Guide. The following narration from Imam `Alī, the first Shia Imam also explicitly explains this concept and mentions that this guidance is not necessarily given by a Proof that is readily available at hand:

¹²⁸⁹ Quran 13:7

¹²⁹⁰ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 23, p. 5.

The Earth will not become empty of someone who will stand with God's Proof, whether he is (living) openly and known, or insecurely and anonymously, so that God's proofs and clear evidences will not become void.¹²⁹¹

Regarding the concept of the Holy Spirit, a great inconsistency exists within Baha'i writings when compared with Shia Islamic beliefs. Whereas in Shia traditions it has been explicitly mentioned that the Holy Spirit only associates with the Divine Messengers and Guides, `Abdu'l-Bahā claims that the Holy Spirit is an intermediary between man and God not just the prophets:

. . . there must be a Mediator between God and Man, and this is none other than the Holy Spirit . . . the Holy Spirit is the very cause of the life of man; without the Holy Spirit he would have no intellect, he would be unable to acquire his scientific knowledge by which his great influence over the rest of creation is gained.¹²⁹²

Notwithstanding the high position it occupieth, still, with an eloquent tongue, through which the Spirit moveth, hearts are attracted and bosoms burn, it speaketh to the pure hearts and to the good and righteous souls in every spot of the earth . . . because the greatest and strongest proof for showing the ¹²⁹¹ Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār, vol. 23, p. 44.

¹²⁹² `Abdu'l-Bahā, Paris Talks, pp. 58–59.

abundance of the Spirit to the bodies is the very appearance of its power and influence in those bodies.¹²⁹³

The human spirit which is not fortified by the presence of the Holy Spirit is dead and in need of resurrection by that divine power; otherwise, though materially advanced to high degrees, man cannot attain full and complete progress.¹²⁹⁴

The concept of the Holy Spirit has been greatly spoken about in Christianity and there is no need to repeat it here. We can only conclude that this concept too, like all the other Baha'i principle is not new and has existed in previous religions.

¹²⁹³ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), pp. 368–369.

¹²⁹⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā (`Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only), pp. 241–242

How Did the Founders of Baha'ism Act Towards This Teaching, and is This Teaching Reasonable?

We showed in the previous perspective that the need for spirituality and Divine Guidance has always existed and it is because of this very need that God has sent His Apostles.

Baha'is claim that spiritual needs can only be addressed by God's Prophets and Messengers, and it is because of this that there must be a continuation of Prophets and Manifestations that bring new religions. `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

Everything is renewed and so, the essence of Divine Religion must be renewed too. Imitations must completely vanish and the light of truth must shine. The teachings that are the spirit of this era must be propagated, and those are the teachings of Bahā'u'llāh that are famous in the horizons and are the breath of the Holy Spirit.¹²⁹⁵

Baha'is claim that after the spring of each Prophet's teachings a winter occurs in which another Prophet must appear:

The spiritual world is like unto the phenomenal world. They are the exact counterpart of each other. Whatever objects appear in this world of existence are the outer pictures of the world of heaven. When we look upon the phenomenal world, we perceive that it is divided into four seasons; one is the season of spring, another the season of summer, another autumn and then these three seasons are followed by winter. When the season of spring appears in the arena of existence, the whole world is rejuvenated and finds new life . . . The spring and summer are followed by autumn and winter. The flowers wither and are no more; the leaves turn gray and life has gone. Then comes another springtime; the former springtime is renewed; again a new life stirs within everything . . . The appearances of the Manifestations of God are the divine springtime . . . Bahā'u'llāh has come into this world. He has renewed that springtime.¹²⁹⁶

¹²⁹⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātib (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 332.

All these parables have been mentioned to undermine the fact that according to Islamic beliefs, which Baha'u'llah claimed to be a successor to, the Prophet of Islam is the seal of the Prophets and there is no Prophet after him.

Since this fact was irrefutable, Bahā'u'llāh came up with a new scheme. He claimed that the Adamic Cycle (which is strictly unheard of in other religions) has come to an end and the Baha'i Cycle (this too is unfounded) has started and Muḥammad was the seal of the Adamic Cycle.

This is only a recipe prescribed for the previous religions. Although `Abdu'l-Bahā claims that religions must be renewed to prove Muḥammad was not the last Prophet and Bahā'u'llāh is a true Prophet, Bahā'u'llāh believes that he himself is the last Manifestation and there will be no Manifestations after him. This is what he utters after expressing his dissatisfaction with the Bābīs who were making new claims by the day:

¹²⁹⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, The Promulgation of Universal Peace, p. 10.

I swear by my True Self, all manifestations have come to an end by this Most Great Manifestation (meaning Baha'ism). Whoever claims (to be a manifestation) after that is a slandering¹²⁹⁷ liar. We ask God to make him successful in returning (to the correct path) and if he repents then He will accept the repentance and if he insists on what he is claiming God will send someone who will deal mercilessly with him.¹²⁹⁸

How is that when Islam claims it is the last religion from God, it is refuted by Baha'is because on the basis that the Breath of the Holy Spirit is needed to renew the people in all times and ages, but when Bahā'u'llāh makes the exact same claim it is totally acceptable?

When Bahā'u'llāh writes the book of Aqdas, he apparently forgets that he had already claimed there will be no manifestations after him. He writes that a new manifestation will come after at least a thousand years:

Whoso layeth claim to a Revelation direct from God, ere the expiration of a full thousand years, such a man is assuredly a lying impostor. We pray God that He may graciously assist him to retract and repudiate such claim. Should he repent, God will, no doubt, forgive him. If, however, he persisteth in his error, God will, assuredly, send down one who will deal mercilessly with him.¹²⁹⁹

In the notes under this verse it has been clearly mentioned:

The Dispensation of Bahā'u'llāh will last until the coming of the next Manifestation of God, Whose advent will not take ¹²⁹⁷ The Arabic words used hereon are nearly identical to what Bahā'u'llāh says in the Aqdas. Those words will be mentioned shortly.

¹²⁹⁸ Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 327.

¹²⁹⁹ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān, p. 32.

place before at least “a full thousand years” will have elapsed.¹³⁰⁰

These contradictions are very clear. In the first instance Bahā'u'llāh claims that no manifestation will ever appear again but elsewhere he claims a manifestation will appear no less than a thousand years from now!

The contradictions regarding the concept of cycles are even more severe. When Shoghi speaks about the Bāb's death he claims the Bāb's dispensation was the confluence (meeting point) of two different cycles:

Thus ended a life which posterity will recognize as standing at the confluence of two universal prophetic cycles, the Adamic Cycle stretching back as far as the first dawnings of the world's recorded religious history and the Bahā'ī Cycle destined to propel itself across the unborn reaches of time for a period of no less than five thousand centuries.¹³⁰¹

He is clearly stating that the Adamic and Baha'i cycles are two different cycles. Now see how he contradicts himself:

Concerning your question relative to the duration of the Bahā'ī Dispensation. There is no contradiction between Bahā'u'llāh's statement in the Īqān about the renewal of the City of God once every thousand years, and that of the Guardian in the Dispensation to the effect that the Bahā'ī cycle will extend over a period of at least 500,000 years. The apparent contradiction is due to the confusion of the terms cycle and dispensation. For while the Dispensation of Bahā'u'llāh will last for at least one thousand years, His Cycle will extend still farther, to at least 500,000 years. The Bahā'ī ¹³⁰⁰ Bahā'u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 195.

¹³⁰¹ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, pp. 54–55

cycle is, indeed, incomparable in its greatness. It includes not only the Prophets that will appear after Bahā'u'llāh, but all those who have preceded Him ever since Adam.¹³⁰²

Even though he had stated the Baha'i cycle started with the Bāb and the Adamic cycle started with Adam and ended with the Bāb he is now claiming that they are both one cycle! Furthermore, he is claiming a misunderstanding has occurred and dispensation and cycle have been taken to mean one word, which they are not! We would have believed him had it not been for `Abdul-Bahā who believes cycle (daur or kaur), and dispensation are all one. Here are a few examples:

In this great cycle¹³⁰³ (kaur) and in this new cycle (daur) legislation of materialistic laws are mostly referred to the House of Justice for this cycle (kaur) will have a great length and this cycle (daur) will have an eternal unending interval, vastness, and continuity.¹³⁰⁴

Look at the cycle (daur) of Moses: the Lord, Moses, and the gobetween was the fire. And in Christ's cycle (kaur): the Father, the Son, and the gobetween was the Holy Spirit. And in Muḥammad's cycle (daur): the Lord, and the Messenger, and the gobetween was Gabriel.¹³⁰⁵ ¹³⁰² Shoghi Effendi, Directives from the Guardian (India/Hawaii: 1973), p. 7.

¹³⁰³ The reason we have translated both words kaur and daur to cycle is because in Baha'i literature they have both been translated to cycle. For instance in Some Answered Questions, the 43rd question which is about "Two Classes of Prophets"¹³⁰³ the word cycle has been used twice in the English text: "The independent Prophets are the lawgivers and the founders of a new cycle," and "They change the general morals, promote new customs and rules, renew the cycle and the Law." In the Farsi translation of this work (Mufāwiḍāt) the first instance has been translated to daur and the second to kaur. This trend is repeated multiple times throughout the Farsi translation of God Passes By (Qarni badī).

¹³⁰⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 68.

¹³⁰⁵ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 1, p. 130.

. . . in the first manifestation the sun will stop in the middle of the sky for ten days, in the second manifestation twenty days and in the third manifestation thirty days. Know that the first manifestation in this report is the manifestation of his Highness the Messenger (meaning Prophet Muḥammad) in which the sun of reality stopped for ten days in that constellation and every day is equal to one century and by this calculation [those ten days] are a thousand years and that was the Muḥammadan cycle and cycle (daur and kaur) [!] . . . the second manifestation, was the manifestation of the Primal point, may my soul be sacrificed for him, in which the Sun of Truth stopped in that cycle (daur) for twenty years . . . in the cycle (daur) of the blessed beauty . . . whose length will be at least 500000 years . . . ¹³⁰⁶

Pay attention how he uses the word cycle (daur and kaur) to refer to what must have been the dispensation of Muḥammad. And then he uses the word cycle (daur) to refer to the Bab's dispensation. Based on the same reasoning, he probably means dispensation when he says the Baha'i cycle (daur) is 500000 thousand years. Bahā'u'llāh, `Abdu'l-Bahā, and Shoghi are not only contradicting themselves but are contradicting each other. This is what happens when a non-existing concept (the concept of cycles, daurs, and kours) is introduced and falsely attributed to God's true religions, to justify the appearance of a so called manifestation.

A further contradiction can be seen in `Abdu'l-Bahā's words regarding the length of the Baha'i cycle (daur). In the first quote he said it is eternal: "this cycle (daur) will have an eternal unending interval, vastness, and continuity" but in the second he says it will last for at least 500000 years!

¹³⁰⁶ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, pp. 75–76.

Whatever is meant by this principle, it breaks down when it is applied to Baha'i teachings. One further point remains about the Holy Spirit that must be mentioned. Shoghi writes:

at so critical an hour and under such appalling circumstances the "Most Great Spirit," as designated by Himself, and symbolized in the Zoroastrian, the Mosaic, the Christian, and Muhammadan Dispensations by the Sacred Fire, the Burning Bush, the Dove and the Angel Gabriel respectively, descended upon, and revealed itself, personated by a "Maiden," to the agonized soul of Bahā'u'llāh.¹³⁰⁷

The Most Great Spirit that Shoghi refers to is the same Holy Spirit of the current principle. This is clear for instance from the fact that he says it revealed itself to Jesus as a dove. This Holy Spirit had shown itself to Bahā'u'llāh personated as a maiden. What most Baha'is don't know is that their prophet had a bad habit of sexually fondling with the Holy Spirit when She appeared to him. We will show three instances.

The first instance is a tablet that starts with "In the Name of God who sings for (or over) the Branches" (Bismillah al-mugharrid `alā al-afnān). In this tablet Bahā'u'llāh describes in Arabic how he fondled with this maiden:

We were standing on the Throne when that radiant leaf entered wearing a long white gown and became like the shining full moon in the horizons of the sky. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! When she removed her face-veil the skies and earth glittered as if the essence of the Ancient One had shone on her with all its lights. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! She was smiling and bending like a Moringa branch¹³⁰⁸ in ¹³⁰⁷ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 101.

¹³⁰⁸ Moringa branch or ghusn al-Bān is used to refer to a slender woman.

the gaze of the All Merciful. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! She then went and started encircling for no reason or intention, as if the blossoms of love were being pulled towards her face by the magnet of her luminous beauty. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! She would walk whilst splendor was at her service, and the Kingdom of Beauty would glorify her behind her, because of her exquisite beauty and charm and her statuesque figure. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! Then we saw her black hair spread along her white neck, as if night and day had embraced each other in that illuminated place and far destination. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! When we stared at her face we saw a spot¹³⁰⁹ hidden under the veil of oneness that was shining from the horizon of her forehead. As if that spot had separated the tablets of the Merciful's Kindness in (the world) of existence from the books of the lovers in the horizons. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! And that spot gestured to another spot that was above her right breast. Exalted is the Possessor of secret and evident things that has created her, no eye has seen anything like her! The Body¹³¹⁰ of God rose and started walking and she started walking behind Him whilst she was listening to and was shaking and being pulled towards the verses of God. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! Then her happiness, joy, and yearning increased to an extent that she fainted. When she regained consciousness she came close and said, may my soul be sacrificed for your prison oh unseen mystery in the Kingdom of Creation. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! She continuously stared at the ¹³⁰⁹ Probably referring to the small black moles that were considered a sign of beauty amongst Persians.

¹³¹⁰ Haykal Allāh which probably means himself.

east of the Throne like someone who is drunk and bewildered until she wrapped her arm around her lord's neck and she pulled him towards her. As she came nearer closer we too inched closer and found in her what has been revealed in the Hidden Red Book from the Most High Pen. She then tilted her head and placed her face on her fingers like a crescent changing into full moon. Exalted is her Creator, no eye has seen anything like her! She then screamed and said; "May every being be sacrificed on account of your calamities, O you Lord of the earth and sky . . ." ¹³¹¹

This encounter ended with hugging each other. Bahā'u'llāh narrates another fantasy which is a little more extreme. He tells her to appear in whatever form she wants, then to dress, then to remove her veil, and finally hang her curly hair around her breasts:

Oh you Pen, inform the Maiden of Paradise. Say by the True God, today is your day. Appear in whatever form you want then wear the brocade of Names and the white silk dress however you want. Then come out of the room of eternity like a rising sun from the forehead of Bahā. Then descend from the Most High Den and stop between the earth and the sky then remove the veil from your white face so that you may rip the great veils from these [people?] and they may gaze at the Great Beauty of God the Holy, the Honored, the Beloved. O Maiden of Bahā . . . hang around both your breasts your fragrant curls so that you may bestow on the worlds the breeze of your Merciful Lord. ¹³¹²

In the next encounter Bahā'u'llāh finally succeeds in attaining what he had yearned for:

¹³¹¹ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 11, pp. 171–172.

¹³¹² Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā, vol. 2, no. 89, pp. 575–576.

She then descended, drew near, and came forward until she stood before me. I was bewildered at the delicacy of her creation and her exquisite behavior. I found in myself a perplexity due to my yearning for her and an attraction due to my love for her. I rose my hand to her and removed the bottom of her veil from her shoulder and found her hair to be spread in wavy curls on her back and hanging down to near her legs in ringlets . . . once I saw her as the fire that had kindled in the Divine Tree . . . she then came forward until she stood opposite my face and spoke with a tone like the tone of a dove . . . when I paid attention with all my being I heard the mention of God the Most Exalted the Abhā in her tunes and the name of God the Most Exalted the Most High in her chants. It was then that I became attracted, perplexed, and hazed from her exquisite voice so I raised my hand once more and bared a breast from her breasts that were hidden behind her dress . . .¹³¹³

If this is the Holy Spirit that Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā are referring to, it is easy to see why they insist it is a cause of eternal life! And no, this is no metaphor, this occurred in reality for `Abdu'l-Bahā says:

The visions of the Prophets are not dreams; no, they are spiritual discoveries and have reality. They say, for example, "I saw a person in a certain form, and I said such a thing, and he gave such an answer." This vision is in the world of wakefulness, and not in that of sleep. Nay, it is a spiritual discovery which is expressed as if it were the appearance of a vision.¹³¹⁴

¹³¹³ Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā (Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 125 B.[Reprinted, H-Bahai: East Lansing, Mi., 2000]), vol. 4, pp. 383–384.

¹³¹⁴ `Abdu'l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 251.

It is interesting to know that this last quote which is known as the Tablet of the Maiden (Lauḥ Ḥūrī) was ordered by Bahā'u'llāh to be destroyed but was saved by the pleas of Bahā'u'llāh's secretary.¹³¹⁵ This is not the only tablet that Bahā'u'llāh had ordered to be destroyed:

No less an authority than Mīrzā Āqā Jān, Bahā'u'llāh's amanuensis, affirms, as reported by Nabīl, that by the express order of Bahā'u'llāh, hundreds of thousands of verses, mostly written by His own hand, were obliterated and cast into the river. "Finding me reluctant to execute His orders," Mīrzā Āqā Jān has related to Nabīl, "Bahā'u'llāh would reassure me saying: 'None is to be found at this time worthy to hear these melodies.' ...Not once, or twice, but innumerable times, was I commanded to repeat this act."¹³¹⁶

Reading Bahā'u'llāh's real visions and fondling with the Holy Spirit (the Maiden) one can only wonder what stories about the Maiden were inscribed in these tablets that Mīrzā Āqā Jān had accepted to destroy them.

Bahā'u'llāh's justification is even more disturbing: "None is to be found at this time worthy to hear these melodies." Since he ordered these tablets to be destroyed instead of being saved for a people in the future who might be worthy of hearing those melodies, we can safely assume that not only did there not exist a person worthy of hearing them at that time, but there would never be one. Either way, these questions remain to be answered: Why reveal hundreds of thousands of verses that no one is worthy of hearing? Why reveal hundreds of thousands of verses that you will ultimately order to be destroyed? What Messenger from God is this that orders his own teachings to be destroyed? Is it not absurd? Or maybe we should ask: What was Bahā'u'llāh trying to hide?

¹³¹⁵ According to Professor John Walbridge of Indiana University in an article titled "Erotic Imagery in the Allegorical Writings of Bahā'u'llāh" available online: http://bahai-library.com/walbridge_erotic_allegory (retrieved 2/8/2014).

¹³¹⁶ Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, p. 138.

Bahā'u'llāh's writings are strongly reminiscent of Sufi and mystic poetry not prophetic revelations. This is not strange because after all, he had lived with Sufis and mystics for two years in the mountains of Kurdistan and his sister had explicitly declared that he had been associating with mystics and Sufis for years when he was in Tehran.

It is up to you to draw your own conclusions!

Bahā'u'llāh:
“Contradiction has and will not
ever have a way in the sanctified realm of the Divine Manifestations.”¹³¹⁷

¹³¹⁷Bahā'u'llāh, Badī', p. 126.

1. Are Religions Renewed?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: “Everything is renewed and so, the essence of Divine Religion must be renewed too.”¹³¹⁸

Bahā’u’llāh: There will be no more prophets or manifestations after me.¹³¹⁹

2. When Will a New Prophet Appear?

Bahā’u’llāh: Never!¹³²⁰

Bahā’u’llāh: Not before a thousand years!¹³²¹

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Not before 500000 years!¹³²²

¹³¹⁸ ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 3, p. 332.

¹³¹⁹ “I swear by my True Self, all manifestations have come to an end by this Most Great Manifestation (meaning Baha’ism). Whoever claims (to be a manifestation) after that is a slandering liar,” Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 327.

¹³²⁰ “I swear by my True Self, all manifestations have come to an end by this Most Great Manifestation (meaning Baha’ism). Whoever claims (to be a manifestation) after that is a slandering liar,” Bahā’u’llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 327.

¹³²¹ “The Dispensation of Bahā’u’llāh will last until the coming of the next Manifestation of God, Whose advent will not take place before at least ‘a full thousand years’ will have elapsed,” Bahā’u’llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas, p. 195.

¹³²² ‘Abdu’l-Bahā uses the word cycle to refer to dispensation: “. . . in the first manifestation the sun will stop in the middle of the sky for ten days, in the second manifestation twenty days and in the third manifestation thirty days. Know that the first manifestation in this report is the manifestation of his Highness the Messenger (meaning Prophet Muḥammad) in which the sun of reality stopped for ten days in that constellation and every day is equal to one century and by this calculation [those ten days] are a thousand years and that was the Muḥammadan cycle and cycle (daur and kaur) [!] . . . the second manifestation, was the manifestation of the Primal point, may my soul be sacrificed for him, in which the Sun of Truth stopped in that cycle (daur) for twenty years . . . in the cycle (daur) of the blessed beauty . . . whose length will be at least 500000 years . . .” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, pp. 75–76.

3. Start and End of the Baha'i Cycle?

Bahā'u'llāh: Start unclear but is eternal!¹³²³

Shoghi: From the Bab to 500 thousand years!¹³²⁴

Shoghi: From Adam to 500 thousand years!¹³²⁵

`Abdul-Bahā: From Bahā'u'llāh to 500 thousand years!¹³²⁶

`Abdul-Bahā: Eternal!¹³²⁷

¹³²³ "I swear by my True Self, all manifestations have come to an end by this Most Great Manifestation (meaning Baha'ism). Whoever claims (to be a manifestation) after that is a slandering¹³²³ liar. We ask God to make him successful in returning (to the correct path) and if he repents then He will accept the repentance and if he insists on what he is claiming God will send someone who will deal mercilessly with him," Bahā'u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar, p. 327.

¹³²⁴ "Thus ended a life which posterity will recognize as standing at the confluence of two universal prophetic cycles, the Adamic Cycle stretching back as far as the first dawns of the world's recorded religious history and the Bahā'ī Cycle destined to propel itself across the unborn reaches of time for a period of no less than five thousand centuries," Shoghi Effendi, God Passes By, pp. 54–55;

¹³²⁵ "For while the Dispensation of Bahā'u'llāh will last for at least one thousand years, His Cycle will extend still farther, to at least 500,000 years. The Bahā'ī cycle is, indeed, incomparable in its greatness. It includes not only the Prophets that will appear after Bahā'u'llāh, but all those who have preceded Him ever since Adam," Shoghi Effendi, Directives from the Guardian (India/Hawaii: 1973), p. 7.

¹³²⁶ "the second manifestation, was the manifestation of the Primal point, may my soul be sacrificed for him, in which the Sun of Truth stopped in that cycle (daur) for twenty years . . . in the cycle (daur) of the blessed beauty . . . whose length will be at least 500000 years . . .," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, pp. 75–76.

¹³²⁷ In this great cycle (kaur) and in this new cycle (daur) legislation of materialistic laws are mostly referred to the House of Justice for this cycle (kaur) will have a great length and this cycle (daur) will have an eternal unending interval, vastness, and continuity," `Abdu'l-Bahā, Makātīb (Egypt), vol. 2, p. 68.

4. Are visions of the prophets real?

‘Abdu’l-Bahā: Visions of the prophets are not dreams. They are real. ¹³²⁸

Bahā’u’llāh: In a vision, I sexually fondled with the Holy Spirit who appeared to me as a maiden! I yearned for her, removed her veil, and exposed one of her breasts. ¹³²⁹

¹³²⁸ “The visions of the Prophets are not dreams; no, they are spiritual discoveries and have reality. They say, for example, “I saw a person in a certain form, and I said such a thing, and he gave such an answer.” This vision is in the world of wakefulness, and not in that of sleep. Nay, it is a spiritual discovery which is expressed as if it were the appearance of a vision,” ‘Abdu’l-Bahā, Some Answered Questions, p. 251.

¹³²⁹ “She then descended, drew near, and came forward until she stood before me. I was bewildered at the delicacy of her creation and her exquisite behavior. I found in myself a perplexity due to my yearning for her and an attraction due to my love for her. I rose my hand to her and removed the bottom of her veil from her shoulder and found her hair to be spread in wavy curls on her back and hanging down to near her legs in ringlets . . . once I saw her as the fire that had kindled in the Divine Tree . . . she then came forward until she stood opposite my face and spoke with a tone like the tone of a dove . . . when I paid attention with all my being I heard the mention of God the Most Exalted the Abhā in her tunes and the name of God the Most Exalted the Most High in her chants. It was then that I became attracted, perplexed, and hazed from her exquisite voice so I raised my hand once more and bared a breast from her breasts that were hidden behind her dress . . .,” Bahā’u’llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A’lā (Tehran: Mu’assisiyi Millī Maṭbū’āt Amrī, 125 B..[Reprinted, H-Bahai: East Lansing, Mi., 2000]), vol. 4, pp. 383–384.

A Summary and Conclusion of the Three Perspectives:

1) Is the principle the World of Humanity is in the Need of the Breath of the Holy Spirit new?

This principle is not new and has been the reason that God had sent Messengers and Prophets. The Holy Spirit is not a new concept, and has been previously spoken about in religions such as Islam and Christianity.

2) Did the leaders of Baha'ism act upon this principle?

Bahā'u'llāh claims that there will be no new Prophet or Manifestation after him. Furthermore, he views the Holy Spirit as a maiden which he is attracted to and sexually fondles with!

3) Is this principle rational and logical?

The Breath of the Holy Spirit, or in better words, the need for Divine Guidance has been specifically mentioned in Shia traditions and has been the basis of all of God's religions. But, this Divine Guidance cannot be provided by a nine-man committee of fallibles in the UHJ who have no connection to the spiritual world and lack no means of Divine Knowledge and Inspiration.

We showed in this book that what Baha'ism presents as novel and new principles are neither new nor concepts that had not been thought of before the advent of this creed.

Furthermore, there are numerous instances that show that the leaders of this creed had not adhered to these principles and today, their followers are widely unaware of the many contradictory statements from these figures that are scattered in their untranslated literature and books.

In Third Perspective, we spoke about the reasonability of these principles and showed that in most cases these teachings were illogical and unreasonable.

We also showed that the divine knowledge attributed to these figures was virtually non-existent and their claimed revelations consisted of many fallacies, contradictions, and obvious religious and scientific errors.

The Baha'i religion was based on the Bābī religion which in turn was the result of hijacking the concept of the Mahdi in Shia Islam. The Mahdi is the savior who was supposed to come and fill the earth with peace and justice once and for all. Even though both these creeds were based on this concept, both of their leaders failed in fulfilling the prophecies about the Mahdi and the wonders in the world that should have occurred during his reign.

The most obvious of these was the destruction of all evil oppressors and the Kingdom of Gods Representatives on earth in which there would be no war, no poverty, no oppression, no fear, no drought, no hunger, and no agony.

Let us all pray to God, in whatever tongue that we speak, and whatever faith that we believe in, to bring forth the Savior that he has promised all mankind. Let us all supplicate and say:

O Lord, we beg you to relieve us of our hardships and to put an end to our miseries. We beg you to have mercy on us and bestow your graces upon your humble servants. We beg you to dispatch our Savior and allow him to destroy your enemies, to establish Your Kingdom, and to bring peace and justice to earth, once and for all. Amen.

Bibliography

Non-Baha'i sources

1. Al-`Āmilī, Wasā'il a-Shī'a. Tehran: Mu'assisatu Āl al-Bayt, 1409 AH.
2. Al-Kulaynī, al-Kāfī. Tehran: Dār al-Kutub al-Islāmiyya, 1365 AH (solar).
3. Al-Majlisī, Biḥār al-anwār. Beirut: Mu'assisat al-Wafā, 1404 AH.
4. Al-Nūrī. Mustadrak al-wasā'il. Qum: Mu'assisat Āl al-Bayt, 1408 AH.
5. Al-Ṣadūq, Uyūn akhbār al-Riḍā. Iran: Intishārāti Jahān: 1378 AH (solar).
6. `Abd al-Wāḥid `Āmidī, Ghurur al-ḥikam wa durar al-kalim. Qum: Intishārāt Daftar Tablīghāt, 1366 AH (solar).
7. Ferguson, Everett. Inheriting Wisdom: Readings for Today from Ancient Christian Writers. Massachusetts: Hendrickson Publishers, 2004.
8. Jarecki, Eugene. The American Way of War: Guided Missiles, Misguided Men, and a Republic in Peril. Free Press, 2010.
9. Majd, Mohammad Gholi. The Great Famine and Genocide in Persia, 1917-1919. University Press of America, 2003.
10. Mill, John Stuart, The subjection of Women. London: Longmans, Green and Co., 1869. <http://www.sacred-texts.com/wmn/subjwmn.txt> (retrieved, 2/9/2014).
11. Sayyid Raḍī, Nahj al-balāgha. Qum: Intishārāt Dār al-Hijra.

Baha'i sources

1. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Bahā'ī World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahā'u'llāh and `Abdu'l-Bahā ('Abdu'l-Bahā's Section Only). US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1976. <http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/c/BWF/>
2. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Khaṭābāt. Egypt: Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī, 1340 AH. vol. 1.

- <http://reference.bahai.org/download/ka1-fa-pdf.zip>
3. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Khaṭābāt. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 127 B. vol.2 .
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ka2-fa-pdf.zip>
4. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Khaṭābāt. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 127 B. vol.3.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ka3-fa-pdf.zip>
5. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Makātīb. Egypt: Maṭba`at al-Kurdistān al-`Ilmiyya (Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī), 1328 AH. vol. 1.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ma1-fa-pdf.zip>
6. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Makātīb. Egypt: Maṭba`atu Kurdistān al-`Ilmiyya (Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī), 1330 AH. vol. 2.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ma2-fa-pdf.zip>
7. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Makātīb. Egypt: Maṭba`at al-Kurdistān al-`Ilmiyya (Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī), 1340 AH. vol. 3.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ma3-fa-pdf.zip>
8. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Makātīb. Tehran: n.p., n.d. vol. 5.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ma5-fa-pdf.zip>
9. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Makātīb. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 134 B. vol. 7.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ma7-fa-pdf.zip>
10. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Makātīb. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 134 B. vol. 8.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ma8-fa-pdf.zip>
11. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Muntakhabātī az makātīb Ḥaḍrat `Abdu'l-Bahā. Germany: Mu'assisiyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī Ālmān. vol. 6.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/swa6-fa-pdf.zip>
12. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Paris Talks. UK Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1972.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PT/>
13. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Selections From the Writings of `Abdu'l-Bahā. Bahā'ī World Centre, 1982 (lightweight edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/SAB/>

14. `Abdu'l-Bahā. Some Answered Questions. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990 (reprint of pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/SAQ/>
15. `Abdu'l-Bahā. The Promulgation of Universal Peace, 2nd ed. US Baha'i Publishing Trust, 1982.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/PUP/>
16. `Abdu'l-Bahā. The Will and Testament of `Abdu'l-Bahā. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/WT/>
17. `Abdu'l-Bahā, Tablet to August Forel. George Ronald Publishers, 1978.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/ab/TAF/>
18. Bahā'u'llāh, Ad'iyih-i ḥaḍrat-i maḥbūb. Egypt: Published by Faraj-Allāh Dhakī al-Kurdī, 1339 AH.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/ahm-fa-pdf.zip>
19. Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā. Canada: Mu'assisiyi Ma'ārif Bahā'ī, 1996. vol. 1.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/q1-fa-pdf.zip>
20. Bahā'u'llāh, Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā. Canada: Mu'assisiyi Ma'ārif Bahā'ī, 2002. vol. 2.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/q2-fa-pdf.zip>
21. Bahā'u'llāh. Āthār-i Qalam-i A'lā. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 125 B. (Reprinted, H-Bahai: East Lansing, Mi., 2000]). vol. 4.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/baha/A-F/A/aqa4/aqa4.htm>
22. Bahā'u'llāh, Badī`. Tehran: n.p., n.d.
http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/baha/A-F/B/badi/Kitab-i_Badi.pdf
23. Bahā'u'llāh, Epistle to the Son of the Wolf. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1988 (pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/ESW/>

24. Bahā' u'llāh, Gems of Divine Mysteries. Bahā'ī World Centre, 2002 edition.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/GDM/>
25. Bahā' u'llāh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahā' u'llāh. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990 (pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/GWB/>
26. Bahā' u'llāh, Iqtidārāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar. n.p.: n.p., n.d.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/iqt-fa-pdf.zip>
27. Bahā' u'llāh, Ishrāqāt wa chand lauḥ dīgar. n.p.: n.p., n.d.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/i-fa-pdf.zip>
28. Bahā' u'llāh, Majmū'iy-i alwāḥ-i mubārak-ih. Cairo: Maṭba'atu Sa'āda (Published by Muḥyi l-Dīn Ṣabrī Kurdī), 1338 AH (1920).
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/mr-fa-pdf.zip>
29. Bahā' u'llāh, Majmū'iyī az alwāḥ Jamāl Aqdas Abhā ki ba'd az kitāb Aqdas nāzil shudih, 1st ed. Langenhain (Germany): Lajniyi Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī Wa `Arabī, 137 B.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/tb-fa-pdf.zip>
30. Bahā' u'llāh, Muntakhabātī az āthār Ḥaḍrat Bahā' u'llāh. Langenhain (Germany): Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa `Arabī, 141 B.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/gwb-fa-pdf.zip>
31. Bahā' u'llāh, Tablets of Bahā' u'llāh Revealed After the Kitāb-i Aqdas. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1988 (pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/TB/>
32. Bahā' u'llāh, The Hidden Words of Bahā' u'llāh. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1985 (reprint).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/HW/>
33. Bahā' u'llāh, The Kitābi Aqdas. Baha'i World Centre, 1992.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/KA/>
34. Bahā' u'llāh, The Kitāb-i-Īqān. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1989 (pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/KI/>

35. Bahā'u'llāh, The Seven Valleys And the Four Valleys. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1991 (pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/SVFV/>
36. Bahā'u'llāh, The Summons of the Lord of Hosts. Bahā'ī World Centre, 2002.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/b/SLH/>
37. Buck, Christopher, eds. Cole, Juan R. and Momen, Moojan. Symbol and Secret: Qur'an Commentary in Bahā'u'llāh's Kitab-i-Iqan. United States of America: Kalimat Press, 1995.
<http://bahai-library.org/books/symbol.secret/>
38. Cobb, Stanwood. Ārāmish barāy-i jahān-i pur āshūb, 5th ed. trans. Fanāyiān, Jamshīd. New Delhi: Mu'assisiyi Chāp Wa Intishārāt Mir`āt, 1994.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/o/AJPS/>
39. Cobb, Stanwood. Memories of `Abdu'l-Bahā in In his Presence: Visits to `Abdu'l-Bahā. Kalimāt Press, 1989.
http://bahai-library.com/wilhelm_cobb_his_presence&chapter=2 40. Desailly, Paul. Making World Peace Real: The Baha'i Faith and Esperanto. Melbourne: Howard Perkins, 2003.
http://www.bahaindex.com/documents/Making_World_Peace_Real.pdf
41. Effendi, Shoghi. Bahā'ī Administration. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1974.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/se/BA/>
42. Effendi, Shoghi. Directives from the Guardian. India/Hawaii: 1973.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/se/DG/>
43. Effendi, Shoghi. God Passes by. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1979 (second printing).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/se/GPB/>
44. Effendi, Shoghi. Tauqī`āt-i mubārak-i (1945–1952). n.p. (probably Tehran): Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū`āt Amrī, 125 B.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/se/TM4/>

45. Effendi, Shoghi. Tauqī'āt mubāraki khiṭāb bi aḥibbā' sharq. Langenhain (Germany): Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa `Arabī, 149 B. (1992).
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/se/TM/>
46. Effendi, Shoghi. The Advent of Divine Justice. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1990 (first pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/se/ADJ/>
47. Effendi, Shoghi. The World Order of Bahā'u'llāh. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1991 (first pocket-size edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/se/WOB/>
48. Esslemont, J. E. Bahā'u'llāh and the New Era. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1980.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/je/BNE/>
49. Faṭḥ Aẓam, Hūshmand. Naẓm jahānī Bahā'ī muntakhabātī az āthār šādīri az qalam ḥaḍrat walī amr Allāh, 2nd ed. Dundas (Canada): n.p., 151 B. (1955).
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/wob-fa-pdf.zip>
50. Fayḍī, Muḥammad `Alī. Ḥaḍrat Bahā'ullāh, 2nd ed. Langenhain (Germany): Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī Wa `Arabī, 1990.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/o/HB2/>
51. Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asad-Allāh. Amr wa khalq, 3rd ed. Langenhain (Germany): Lajniyi Millī Nashr Āthār Amrī Bi Zabānhayi Fārsī wa `Arabī, 142 B. (1986). vol. 3.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/c/AK3/>
52. Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asad-Allāh. Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī. n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 124 B. vol. 2.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/authors/mazandarani/asrar.htm>
53. Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asad-Allāh. Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī. n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī. 129 B. vol. 3.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/authors/mazandarani/asrar.htm>

54. Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asad-Allāh. Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī. n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī. 129 B. vol. 4.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/authors/mazandarani/asrar.htm>
55. Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asad-Allāh. Asrār al-āthār khuṣūṣī. n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī. 129 B. vol. 5.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/authors/mazandarani/asrar.htm>
56. Fāḍil Māzandarānī, Asad-Allāh. Tārīkh ṣuhūr al-Ḥaqq. Tehran: n.p., 1944 (Reprinted, H-Bahai: Lansing, Mi., 1998), 131 B. vol. 3.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/vol2/mazand/tzh3/tzh3.htm>
57. Gulpāyganī, Abū l-Faḍl and Gulpāyganī, Mahdī. Kashf al-ghitā' 'an ḥiyāl al-'adā'. Tashkent: n.p., 1919.
<http://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/kashf/kag.htm>
58. Hornby, Helen Bassett. Lights of Guidance: A Bahā'ī Reference File. New Delhi: Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1983.
http://bahai-library.com/hornby_lights_guidance
59. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Ganj shāyḡān. Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 124 B.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/o/GS/>
60. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Ganjīniy-i ḥudūd wa aḥkāṃ, 3rd ed. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 128 B.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/gha-fa-pdf.zip>
61. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Mā'idīy-i āsimānī. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 128 B. vol. 1.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/mas1-fa-pdf.zip>
62. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Mā'idīy-i āsimānī. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 B. vol. 4.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/b/MAS4/>
63. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Mā'idīy-i āsimānī. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 B. vol. 5.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/mas5-fa-pdf.zip>

64. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Mā'idīy-i āsimānī. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 B. vol. 7.
65. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Mā'idīy-i āsimānī. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 129 B. vol. 8.
<http://reference.bahai.org/fa/t/b/MAS8/>
66. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Payām-i malakūt. New Delhi: Mu'assisiyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī Hind, 1986.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/pm2-fa-pdf.zip>
67. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Raḥīq makhtūm. Tehran: Mu'assisiyi Milliyyi Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 131 B.
68. Ishrāq Khāwarī, `Abd al-Ḥamīd. Talkhīṣ tārīkh Nabīl. New Delhi: Mu'assisiyi Chāp Wa Intishārāt Mir'āt, 1991.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/db-fa-pdf.zip>
69. Mathews, Gary L. The Challenge of Bahā'u'llāh: Does God Still Speak to Humanity Today. George Ronald Pub Ltd, 2001.
70. Mu'ayyad, Ḥabīb. Khāṭirāti Ḥabīb. n.p.: Mu'assisiyi Millī Maṭbū'āt Amrī, 118 B.
<https://www.h-net.org/~bahai/areprint/authors/muayyad/muayyad.htm>
71. Naghdy, Fazel. A Tutorial on the Kitāb-i-Īqān: A journey Through the Book of Certitude. CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform, 2012.
72. Qadīmī, Riyāḍ. Gulzār-i ta`ālim Bahā'ī, 2nd ed. Toronto: n.p., 1995.
<http://reference.bahai.org/download/gtb-fa-pdf.zip>
73. Rabbani, Rūhīyyih. The Priceless Pearl. London: Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1969.
http://bahai-library.com/khanum_priceless_pearl
74. Stockman, Robert. Revelation, Interpretation, and Elucidation in the Baha'i Writings in Scripture and Revelation, ed. Momen, Moojan. Oxford: George Ronald, 1997.
http://bahai-library.com/momen_scripture_revelation

75. Stockman, Robert H. The Baha'i Faith: A Guide For the Perplexed. Bloomsbury Academic, 2012.
76. Taherzadeh, Adib. The child of the covenant: A Study Guide to the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha. Oxford: George Ronald, 2000.
http://www.bahai-library.net/english/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=151:the-child-of-the-covenant&catid=7:bahai-studies&Itemid=8
77. Taherzadeh, Adib. The Revelation of Bahā'u'llāh. Oxford, 1974.
<http://www.peyman.info/cl/Baha%27i/Others/ROB/V1/Cover.html>
78. Various, Bahā'ī Prayers: A Selection of Prayers Revealed by Bahā'u'llāh, the Bāb, and 'Abdu'l-Bahā. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1991.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/c/BP/>
79. Various, Japan Will Turn Ablaze! Bahā'ī Publishing Trust of Japan, 1992 (revised edition).
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/c/JWTA/>
80. Zarandī, Nabīl. The Dawn-Breakers: Nabīl's Narrative of the Early Days of the Bahā'ī Revelation. US Bahā'ī Publishing Trust, 1932.
<http://reference.bahai.org/en/t/nz/DB/>
81. Zarqānī, Maḥmūd. Badā'i' al-āthār. Bombay: Karīmī Press, 1921. vol. 2.

Bābī sources

1. The Bāb, Arabic Bayān. n.p.: n.p., n.d.
<http://www.bayanic.com/showPict.php?id=abay&ref=0&err=0&curr=0>
2. The Bāb, Farsi Bayān. n.p.: n.p., n.d.
<https://archive.org/details/Bayan-i-Farsi>
3. The Bāb, Lauḥ haykal al-dīn. n.p.: n.p., n.d.

<http://www.bayanic.com/showPict.php?id=din&ref=0&err=0&curr=0>

4. The Bāb. Qayyūm al-Asmā' (commentary on the Surah of Joseph).

<http://www.bayanic.com/showPict.php?id=ahsan&ref=0&err=0&curr=0>

5. `Izziye Khānum (Khānum Buzurg), Tanbīh al-nā'imīn. Tehran: n.p., n.d.

<http://www2.h-net.msu.edu/~bahai/areprint/vol4/tanbih/tanbih.htm>

Writings of Shoghi Effendi concerning the Will and Testament

Why didn't Shoghi Effendi repudiate this RACIST article in the Baha'i World?

Dr. August Forel, an Swiss scientist and member of the Monist League (an association of scientific racists in Europe), wrote an article for "Star of the West" magazine in 1928, and it was also published in "Baha'i World" magazine. In this article Forel writes:

Moreover, one makes a pretext that there are differences in races; but if one excepts those races, altogether inferior, with a lighter cerebrum (according to Wedda about eight hundred or eight hundred and fifty grams instead of one thousand) it is a fundamental error. All Europeans, Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Semites, Americans, and so forth, are equal as races. It is necessary, therefore, to seek for other real causes for the hatreds and the wars than the differences of languages and of race." ("The World Vision of a Savant" Baha'i World III, 1928-1930, p. 284)

If you read that paragraph closely, Forel is saying that the European, East Indian, Semitic, and "American" (he no doubt means white American) races are "equal" but other races "altogether inferior" (because of brain size) he omits—such as the African and Australian and Melanesian races.

What are the chances that Shoghi Effendi did not read or was not aware of this article?

Why did not Shoghi Effendi immediately write an article repudiating this?

Forel goes on to write:

"But while some declare Him [God] personal, we Monists look upon Him as representing the Force (metaphysical) of the Universe, unknowable to human beings." (ibid.)

Forel still considered himself a Monist, even while being a Baha'i. Do YOU know what the Monists taught? They taught that Negroes were closer to the ape than all other races and "inferior" to the "advanced races".

Forel was a member and leader of the "Monist League".

Shoghi Effendi had the opportunity to REFUTE the article by Forel, and politely correct his errors. He did not. He let the article stand!

Were the Monists right? Does brain capacity have anything to do with intelligence? Thousands of scientific papers said they did. Not "one" scientific paper says it does not. Scientists are forbidden even to bring up the subject today for study. If they do, they will be fired or face other sanctions.

Questions for Baha'is:

- 1) Where in the Holy Texts or letters of Shoghi Effendi does it say that the races are equal in intelligence?
- 2) Why did not Shoghi Effendi repudiate or refute this article by Forel which was read by all Baha'is in the English speaking world?
- 3) Why would the "Star of the West" and "Baha'i World" publish a RACIST article?
- 4) Could it be that Forel and the Monists were correct that brain capacity is tied to intelligence (if not, the chimp has the same intelligence as humans)?

Was Shoghi Effendi gay?

<https://groups.google.com/forum/#!topic/talk.religion.bahai/PCgaYZjZ6NY>

According to research done by Jackson Armstrong-Ingram (primarily based on letters of the Afnan family and other firsthand accounts) and Mildred Mottehedeh who confided to Michael Zargarov and several others, Shoghi was a homosexual who struggled with his condition for his whole lifetime. There have also been suggestions that George Townsend was perhaps the one true love of Shoghi's life, and not as popularly believed Mary Maxwell (aka Amatu'l-Baha Ruhiyyih Khanum). Apparently among Ruhi Afnan's papers, there are several letters which explicitly suggest Shoghi's homosexuality as early as his days in Beirut, well before Ruhi and Soheil's expulsion at Shoghi's hands. Perhaps these cousins were in fact expelled because they knew Shoghi's dark secret. Mildred Mottehedeh, who was quite close to the Rabbanis, had also known about this. Perhaps the time has come to psycho-analyze the "Guardian," reassess his ministry and examine his authoritarian style of governance in light of his repressed homosexuality and unrequited love for George Townsend. After all, according some recent historical findings, Adolf Hitler was a bisexual who struggled with his effeminate pounceness and compensated it with political power and the Will to Power (* Ernst Roehm, leader of the Brown Shirt SA, was an out and out ponce). Perhaps a Nietzschean-Freudian probe into Shoghi's life and writings is not that too far off in the horizon, not to mention suggestions by Wombat Joey that one of the Persian Hands who was a lifelong Shoghi devotee was himself also a closet homosexual.

Shoghi Effendi used the money of Charity to go to Oxford university.- Ruth White

The Bahai religion and its Enemy the Bahai Organization by Ruth White, the Tuttle Company, Rutland, Vermont 1929.

In PP. 201-206, Ruth White says: “In the Autumn of 1919 I sent to Abdul Baha [i.e. Sir Abbas Effendi] an American Express Company check of Five hundred dollars and asked him to apply it to some of the many charities he was dispensing.

About four month after we arrived in Haifa as the guests of Abdul Baha. On the day before departure I asked Abdul Baha if he had received the check. Without a moment’s hesitation and very emphatically he said that he had not received it. He repeated this a number of times, and seemed indignant that it had not been turned over to him. I discussed this with various members of the family of Abdul Baha, and one of the brothers-in-law said he would go to town and enquire about the matter.

I asked the American Express Company to Photostat this check for me, which they did. Herewith it is a reproduction of the check with the signature of Sh. Rabbani on the back. Here then is proof positive that Shoghi Effendi cashed out the check and also proof that the son-in-law [presumably Mirza Muhsin Afnan] who purported to enquire of the check did not do it at all. Otherwise, he would have ascertained in a few minutes from the office of the American Express Company at Haifa that the check had been cashed by Sh. Rabbani, as I had given the son-in-law the whole information, the date of sending, the name of sender, etc. All of which shows that there was collusion between the son-in-law and Shoghi Effendi.

For immediately after cashing the check he departed for Oxford, this despite the fact that Abdul Baha did not wish him to go. Some may naturally ask: How could Shoghi Effendi have cashed the check unless he had authority to do so. This he may have had. Yet the fact remain that the proceeds were never turned over to Abdul Baha. My readers may, therefore, draw their own conclusions.”

Why Shoghi Effendi did not appoint his successor ??

Dear Friends,

Baha'u'llah made it incumbent upon every believing Baha'i to prepare a will and testament (the most Holy Book, para 255) during his life time. And he followed his own command when he wrote a will and appointed an heir, so that his family and followers would not face any such difficulties after him.

In the same way, Abdul-Baha considered it necessary to write a will during one's life, having also written his own valuable Will and Testament, which includes his important edicts and recommendations.

According to the most Holy Book, if a Baha'i dies and does not leave a will, all of his or her belongings and properties should be divided among the following seven groups: spouse, children, father, mother, brother(s), sister(s) and teacher.

And according to the Kitab-i Aqdas, if any member of the above categories were deceased, his or her share will be inherited by the UHJ. Finally, according to that same Holy Book, all non-Baha'is, non-believers, Covenant-breakers, and those excommunicated from the Faith, are deprived from a Baha'i's estate.

Now, I would like to draw your attention to a very important event in the history of the Baha'i community. As you are well aware, the Beloved Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, passed away in London in the summer of 1957. He journeyed to London in order to purchase necessary material to complete the archives buildings. There, he died having suffered from a previously-undiagnosed disease. (The story of his departure and all subsequent events can fill an entire article in and of itself, and should therefore be reviewed separately.)

Unfortunately, various disputes about his successor and belongings began after the Beloved Guardian's departure. Naturally, those properties of Shoghi Effendi that belonged to the Baha'i Community should have been given to his successor and the chairman of the first international Baha'i Council, Mason Remey. But the Hands of the Cause, having turned a blind eye to the previous writings of the Guardian—and other evidence of his intentions for his estate—and under the pretense that they did not find any written will from Shoghi Effendi, declared that, according to a divine abrogation of the previous determinism (Badaa), the institution of the living Guardian of the Cause will be discontinued!

By neglecting the succession of Mason Remey, and announcing the end of Guardianship, it became necessary to divide the inheritance of Shoghi Effendi among the seven groups the Holy Aqdas ordains. But because of a number of reasons, including the absence of a majority of the heirs, the Aqdas decree was also abandoned! (Shoghi Effendi's parents had already departed; his brothers and sisters had been excommunicated as Covenant-breakers; he had no children; and no Baha'i could claim to be his teacher.)

Therefore, according to the articles of the Aqdas, around 19% of the inheritance should have been given to his living wife, Ruhhiya Khanum, and the rest—in the absence of the heirs and non-establishment of the U.H.J.—should have been given to the highest Baha'i official of that time, i.e., the second Guardian and Chair of the International Baha'i Council (the precursor to the UHJ), Mr. Mason Remey.

Some of the Iranian Hands, such as Zekrullah Khadem, Shoa'ullah Alaei, Alimohammad Vargha A. Foroutan, Mohajer, and Hassan A. Balyuzi, in cooperation with John Froby, Hadi Rahmani Shirazi, General A. Moqarrabi, and Habib Sabet, and Manoochehr Ghaem Maghami, wanted to procure the inheritance themselves and avoided handing over the inheritance to Mason Remey. Thus, they conjured up a solution: they will meet the excommunicated sisters and brothers of the Beloved Guardian, and will somehow reach an agreement as to how to divide Shoghi Effendi's inheritance.

Since the Baha'i writings explicitly forbid distributing any amount of a Baha'i's estate to the Covenant-Breakers, this meant that the portion of the inheritance that was due his parents, children, and teachers would have been lost. So they decided to distribute the remainder of the inheritance of Shoghi Effendi in Iran, in accordance with the Islamic law of inheritance. And so, they needed to declare to the Iranian court that the Guardian was a Muslim!

It was duly performed, with the approval of Ruhhiya Khanum, the widow of the beloved Guardian and one of the Hands (who according to Islamic law would not have received any part of the inheritance because she was not Muslim). Thus, the first Guardian of the Baha'i Faith, was declared a Muslim. (His inheritance case was filed under No. 1464 in the Iranian Justice Ministry.) And thus, all of Shoghi Effendi's inheritance was supposedly divided among his four excommunicated brothers and sisters: Hussain, Riyaz, Rouhangiz, and Mehrangiz.

Once accomplished, the said Covenant-Breakers, having received a commission for their services, agreed to transfer the ownership of these properties to the name of Mr. M.A. Varqa, one of the Hands, and the trustee of Huquq-ullah. Mr. Varqa, in turn, transferred this inheritance to the name of some famous Iranian Baha'is, individuals like Mr. Habib Sabet. After some time, the Iranian National Spiritual Assembly established a trust, and transferred most of that inheritance to that trust, although some of it illegally remained in the hands of those famous Iranian Baha'is!

This entire undertaking was done in cooperation with some of the Hands and the Covenant-Breakers from the family of Shoghi Effendi. And, it must be noted, these surreptitious acts were expressly protested by some of the Friends and LSAs and NSA; yet their concerns were mostly neglected. When they were responded to, it would be angry ripostes by the Hands, who continuously threatened to excommunicate the protesters on the pretense that they were weakening the unity of the Baha'i Community.

The protesters believed that the Guardian had prohibited any contact with Covenant-Breakers, and had considered it a grave sin. And the perpetrator of such a crime would deserve the harshest of punishments, that of being excommunicated himself. This was quite true about the close relatives of the Guardian, who would unceasingly persecute him. Ruhhiya Khanum, for example, has mentioned in her diary about the Guardian:

“These events are continuous. These fights, which first began with only one of them, and which later united all of his family against him, are seriously wearing him down. Even now, I can see him with his back bent, his heart broken, and his body physically weakened. All his relatives collectively attempt to exhaust him and indeed kill his soul...”

Then he added, “Those relatives who were around the great Abdul-Baha eventually murdered him... And will eventually kill me too.”

(Ruhiyyih Khanum, The Priceless Pearl, pp. 343 & 346)

Such a coalition of Hands of the Cause and long-time enemies of the Cause shook the foundations of the Cause to its very core. Many of the believers left the Baha’i community, while many other Friends had serious questions, which still remain. And, since then, none in the Baha’i administration or current UHJ has given a single satisfactory answer to these Friends, as they continuously attempt to conceal such issues from the Baha’is of the world. Only some of these questions are listed below:

1. When every Baha’i is required to keep a will, how can you claim that the Guardian, who was a great teacher and commentator of the holy words, failed to leave a will for his heirs?!
2. If we account for the decisions and actions taken by the Hands, why should we not assume that some of them had access to the private documents of the Guardian? And having found his will before anyone else, and being unsatisfied by what it contained, took aims to conceal or even destroy it?!
3. Despite the fact that according to Baha’i Law, the Covenant-Breakers and non-Baha’is are entirely deprived from a Baha’i’s estate, how could they distribute the inheritance of the beloved Guardian among his excommunicated brothers and sisters? And do so only after appealing to Islamic law?!
4. How could they claim that the Guardian of the Faith was a Muslim, simply because it was to their own benefit, and so that they could procure his properties that actually belonged to the Baha’i Community? An act, fraudulent, treacherous, and in direct violation of the Guardian’s teachings and the views of the Community.
5. In the absence of the Guardian of the Cause, who protects the multi-billion dollar property of the Baha’i Community? Has the current UHJ, sans-Guardian, issued financial reports, statements, or combined financial statements of the owned properties, assets, or the amounts received as donations and Huquq-ullah? Has the UHJ ever published a statement of its receipts and expenses?

Unfortunately, the Baha’i administration attempts to silence all such questions under the pretext of unity in the Community, unswerving obedience to the UHJ, a possible increase in persecutions by the various states, etc. In other cases, questions and protests have been overlooked by exaggerated, and at times entirely false, reports of progress made by the Cause across the globe. And of course, a last and most intense measure taken by that House, has been that of disenrollment and excommunication of the questioners and/or protesters from the Baha’i Community!

One may suppose that the activities of the Custodian Hands could be justified, and assume they have good intentions, and try to protect the interests of the Faith. But we should know that the Guardian was always angry with Covenant-Breakers, and strictly refused to deal with them.

Ruhiyya Khanum writes in her diary:

“Once, the husband of the Guardian’s close relative died. His widow came to our house, and requested the Guardian to accept his will and presented a donation. She was even ready to hand over to him some of Baha’u’llah’s very own seals, items that Abdul-Baha, at the time of his journey to America, had entrusted to her. Yet, since she kept in contact with the Covenant-Breakers, the holy Guardian refused her donation and gift, and asked me to tell her:

“Until she forever disassociates, in heart and soul, from the Covenant-Breakers, I will not accept it, even if it was a million seals, or a donation the size of Mount Carmel!”

Even though those seals were invaluable to the Guardian, and he in fact needed them for the Archives, he looked at me and ordered me to tell her:

“The Guardian cannot do anything until she abides by this command. Otherwise, she can take the seals, the will, and everything else she brought with her away.”

(Ruhiyya Khanum, The Priceless Pearl, P. 349)

In short, a Community, devoid of a Guardian leading it, with a selfish, sinful, and profit-seeking group governing it, will suffer a quick decline and be utterly and totally lost.

It was for this reason that Abdul-Baha wrote in his Will and Testament:

“It is incumbent upon the Guardian of the Cause to appoint his successor and heir during his own life time.”

The takeaway here is that even if we do not see a written will from Shoghi Effendi—which, as they claim, he did not leave—we believe that he has clearly, albeit indirectly, appointed Mr. Mason Remey on several occasions as his successor. Mr. Remey enjoyed a very close relationship with the Guardian until the very last moments of his life. And the Guardian regarded him as absolutely trustworthy, conferring upon him many important roles and responsibilities.

With the warmest Baha'i greetings.

Kourosh Jamali

Ref: <https://ahdvanisagh.wordpress.com/2015/06/15/%D9%BE%D9%8A%D9%88%D9%86%D8%AF-%D8%AA%D8%A7%D8%B1%DB%8C%D8%AE%DB%8C-%D8%A7%D9%8A%D8%A7%D8%AF%D9%8A%D8%A7%D9%86-%D8%A8%D8%A7-%D9%86%D8%A7%D9%82%D8%B6%D9%8A%D9%86/>

Excommunication By Shoghi Effendi

Following in the footsteps of his grandfather, Shoghi Effendi also chose to excommunicate his relatives who did not show absolute deference to his wishes and views. By the end of his life, he had excommunicated every one of the descendants of ‘Abdu’l-Baha as well as all the descendants of Baha’u’llah’s third wife. Thus, the entire family of Baha’u’llah—except for Shoghi Effendi himself, his wife Ruhiyyih, and ‘Abdu’l-Baha’s widow Munirih and sister Bahiyyih—ended up expelled from the mainstream Baha’i community and shunned.....

<https://shuaullahbehaiblog.wordpress.com/>

Shoghi Effendi's properties in Iran

Mr. Esfandiari from the Ministry of Finance evaluated one of Shoghi Effendi's properties, the third leader of the Baha'is. According to official documents, a mansion in Tehran's 4th sector on Shibani Street was valued at 708,000 Rials at the time of Shoghi's death.

Another property owned by Shoghi Effendi is located in Tehran's 10th district on Briyank St., No. 61. This property includes a garage, warehouse, three houses, and three stores (butcher shop, electrical, etc.), totaling 2480 square meters. The value of this property at the time of Shoghi's death was 4,000,000 Rials.

Despite never setting foot in Iran during his life, Shoghi Effendi owned lands in the country. Mr. Esfandiari also reported that Shoghi Effendi earned an annual income of millions of Rials from farming and agriculture activities in Baba Salman village owned by him and leased to Falah Company for 6 years from July 1331 (Iranian calendar), with the appointment of Waliullah Varqa as a lawyer.

Apart from the above Shoghi Effendi also owned numerous properties in Madbor district and in Ghar village of Ray city (Tehran) and big plots of land in Mashhad also.

Beliefs of Free Baha'i Sect of Baha'i Faith

Website : <https://freebahais.org/>

Do the Free Baha'is believe in the Bab, Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l Baha? Yes, the Free Baha'is believe in Bab, Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l Baha. Bab was the forerunner and prophet of the advent of Baha'u'llah. Abdu'l Baha was the rightful successor and interpreter of Baha'u'llah's writings and was titled as Most Great Branch. However, the Free Baha'is reject the authority of Shoghi Effendi after Abdu'l Baha.

What do Free Baha'is believe about Guardianship? Baha'u'llah in His mighty Will and Testament had appointed Abdu'l Baha as his first Guardian and His second son, Mohammed Ali Effendi as his second Guardian. During Abdu'l Baha's guardianship Mohammed Ali Effendi had broken his covenant with the faith and had played mischief against Abdu'l Baha, hence Abdu'l Baha ex-communicated him. Abdu'l Baha has penned down the pain and agony casted by Mohammed Ali in his Will and Testaments. Free Baha'is believe that Abdu'l Baha was the only Guardian of the faith.

What is the Holy Book of the Free Baha'is? Free Baha'is, being the true Baha'is, follow 'Kitab-i-Aqdas' and encourage deep study and research into it.

Do the Free Baha'is recite prayers? As per Baha'u'llah's teaching, Free Baha'is recite long, medium or short obligatory prayers every day.

Do the Free Baha'is observe fasts? Free Baha'is do observe fast every year for 19 days, in the month of Ala.

What is the Free Baha'i view on participation in politics? As per the Baha'i Laws, participation in politics is prohibited. Although, Kitab-i-Aqdas says, one should obey the laws of the country he resides in.

What do the Free Baha'is say about the Will and Testament of Abdu'l Baha? Free Baha'is believe that the Will and Testament of Abdu'l Baha is genuine, except the part of Shoghi Effendi where he has been declared as the Guardian of the faith. Free Baha'is believe that the Will was forged after the death of Abdu'l Baha and the succession part was inserted by Lady Munirih, the mother of Shoghi.

Do the Free Baha'is accept Shoghi Effendi as the Guardian? Free Baha'is do not believe in the Guardianship of Shoghi Effendi. Abdu'l Baha, in his entire life span, had neither groomed nor declared Shoghi as his successor. His appointment as the successor was forged by his mother, after the death of The Master Abdu'l Baha.

Do the Free Baha'is believe in a Universal House of Justice? Free Baha'is believe in the concept of Universal House of Justice, but not the current established Universal House of Justice, whose members are appointed and not elected. Free Baha'is believe in the true Universal House of Justice which will be established only when the Baha'is are free from the shackles of administration.

What are the duties of a Free Baha'i? A Free Baha'i is required to work hard to attain world peace by following the commandments of Baha'u'llah, with which he was raised. Abdu'l Baha has said, "I have not appointed any officer in the faith." Each and every Baha'i is the Guardian of his own faith, and responsible for spreading the message of Baha'u'llah. One should spread the message of love and peace, eliminate prejudice, and pray to Baha'u'llah for establishing the true Universal House of Justice.

How does one become a Free Baha'i? Free Baha'is do not follow any administration, so there are no declarations required. If someone is following the true teachings of Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l Baha, he will be considered a Free Baha'i. The Free Baha'i Faith is not behind numbers. A Free Baha'i should purify himself from greed of attaining positions, and start working out of love for humanity and world peace.

Do the Free Baha'is believe in the concept of LSA, NSA, or ABM? The Master Abdu'l Baha has clearly stated, "I have not appointed any officers in the faith." These man made assemblies and authoritative positions have pushed the Baha'is to work out of greed of acquiring positions which lead to fake reports and false statistics. But, if a person frees himself from administration, he will fulfill his duties towards Baha'u'llah and not for NSA or UHJ. Thus, he will be rewarded by Baha'u'llah for his efforts. For this reason, Free Baha'is do not believe in Officers or Office Bearers and one has to be the Guardian of his own faith and action.

Do the Free Baha'is hold Nineteen Day Feasts (NDF)? Free Baha'is gather for NDF once every 19 days, where they recite prayers, discuss on teachings, uplifting morals of society. Free Baha'is never ask for contribution and have never asked for huququ'llah.

Where are the Free Baha'is located? Free Baha'is are located worldwide at different locations. As of now, Free Baha'is are majorly located in the USA, UK, Singapore, Thailand, Germany, Russia, Emirates, Oman, Bahrain, Iran, Sri Lanka, India, and Bangladesh.

Nine or Nineteen Members on the Universal House of Justice? – A debate in the Baha’i Faith

When someone joins a religion, it will always be riddled with uncertainty for him or her rather than filled with faith. Even if one was born into the faith or grew up among the most devoted of friends and relatives, this is true. A religion journey is usually distinguished by great joy, astonishment, and exquisite camaraderie, as well as a great deal of doubt, difficulty, and grief.

Okay, so it’s acknowledged that doubts are a natural component of religious beliefs, and when people have concerns, they strive to work through them, investigate them, and emerge stronger and more confident in their views. Perhaps there are good answers to your doubts, and as a result, your faith will be stronger and more solid. On the other hand, if you don’t get any positive replies, you’ll be forced to choose between sticking with a religion you know isn’t logical and abandoning it in favour of ideas that are.

Now, imagine there are contradictions and incompatibilities in what one perceives to be true, only to discover later that it was all untrue and based on selfish gain? There is a laundry list of such items forced down Bahais’ throats that are not supported by the Bahai Scriptures and are not founded on Bahauallah and Abdul Baha’s teachings. Today, I’d want to look at one of the items on that list and compare it to the teachings of the Bahai faith’s founders.

Among the many incompatibilities and inconsistencies in the Bahai Faith’s beliefs, practices, and governance, such as the continuation of Guardianship, the authenticity of Abdul Baha’s Will and Testament, the validity of the current Universal House of Justice, and the non-election of women to the UHJ, to which the current Administration has provided no satisfactory answer, a new controversy is arising that will strike the foundations of the UHJ, and it is the number of members. For these integers that are diagonally opposite each other, we discover various references. Some sources claim 19, while others say between 9 and 19, and some state things that aren’t specifically referenced in the Holy Scriptures.

The Bahai faith is unable to make decisions on a number of contentious problems, one of which being where nine should be used and where nineteen should be applied. There is a clear reference from Abdul Baha stating that the UHJ will have 19 members.

1- We can see that Abdul Baha clearly said that the UHJ will have 19 members.

(Ten days in the light of Acca by Julite M. Grundy, Printed in Chicago December 1907. Published by Bahai Publishing Society Chicago, ILLIONIS, U.S.A. WORDS OF ABDUL BAHÁ)

2-The Present universal House of justice is advocating for membership between 9 and 19.

According to Ali Nakhjavani, Abdul Baha claimed that the number “might be 19,” and that he justifies this by stating, “We had a meeting of UHJ with members of ITC, and the members were 18 and manageable.”

A member of the Universal House of Justice incorrectly attributes this to Abdul Baha. ‘Nineteen’ is plainly referenced in the previous passage.

(a) 1998 letter by / on behalf of Universal House of Justice

(b) ‘Ali Nakhjavani, Shoghi Effendi: The Range and Power of his Pen, Casa Editrice Baha’i, 2006, p 251

3- The number of members is not specifically specified in Holy Text, according to Shoghi Effendi’s secretary. This is also incorrect.

(Women on the Universal House of Justice: by / on behalf of Universal House of Justice, 1988-05-31, date of original: 1998)

4- Another study argues that the UHJ should be made up of 19 people. The Local Spiritual Assembly was most likely formerly known as the Local House of Justice, and the House of Justice had 19 members in 1905.

(A year with the Bahais of India and Burma by Sydney Sprague second edition pa 15 The Priory Press High Street, Hampstead, London, N.W.)

Whatever the cause, the change from nineteen to nine was not a divine decree; rather, it was the kind of deception for which the Bahai faith is notorious. The Bahai Administration is now attempting to justify its nine members. This, along with several other flaws in the Bahai Faith, will cause Bahais to doubt the faith’s authenticity. Without a doubt, the Bahai Faith is a man-made religion that evolves through time. Downsizing became necessary because the Bahai Administration believed that supervising and controlling 9 members would be simpler.

What is the importance of the UHJ in the Baha’i faith?

As per the teachings Bahauallah and Abdul Baha, the UHJ plays a very important role especially because it enacts laws “that are not expressly recorded in the Book,” according to the Baha’i writings, legislating on issues not covered in the original writings of Baha’u’llah and Abdul Baha:

Those matters of major importance which constitute the foundation of the Law of God are explicitly recorded in the Text, but subsidiary laws are left to the House of Justice. The wisdom of this is that the times never remain the same, for change is a necessary quality and an essential attribute of this world, and of time and place. – Abdul Baha, cited in Wellsprings of Guidance, pp. 84-86.

Abdul Baha also promised that the Universal House of Justice is “the source of all good and freed from all error.” Will and Testament of Abdul Baha, p. 19.

To summarize, the UHJ is a group of people who are responsible for looking after the whole Bahai community and for putting the teachings into practice as well as developing laws from Bahauallah's teachings. They are, in a sense, acting as a Guardian who has assumed control of the faith today. Imagine a team that has a big role to play in the Bahai world, but its basis is built on lies?! Also, if a 19-member team can become infallible when they work together, can we be confident that reducing the number to 9 will have the same outcome? Is it really possible to consider them infallible? Is it possible to trust their acts and statements at face value? Perhaps this is why, from the inception of this complete system of existing form of UHJ, the team has strayed so far from the faith. All of their choices have been discovered to have faults and weaknesses.

The big question!

Now comes the big question that every Bahai should consider: Do we still believe in a system despite its numerous flaws? If one is unable to discover solutions to his or her problems and questions, it may be time to change one's path. It doesn't have to be atheism or a different theological perspective; it only has to be one that is based on truth and is rational and clear. You should not be ashamed of seeking to discover your own path in a way that makes sense to you; you are not required to follow the same faith as your family just because you have done so previously.

Source : The Caravan, Volume 6, Edition 3 <https://freebahais.org/the-caravan-magazine/>

Dr. John Fozdar Passed away in Malaysia

Dr. John Fozdar (1928 – 2022) was the son of Khodadad and Shirin Fozdar . He was named Knight of Baha'u'llah by Shoghi Effendi. He converted many Buddhist to Baha'is in Brunei and Sarawak. He was Counsellor in Asia from 1980 to 1995. He was very active in the spread of Baha'i Faith in Malaysia. He died on 22nd October 2022.

In later years of his life he became an open critic of Universal House of Justice and had criticized the working of Universal House of Justice and had also questioned the legitimacy of Nine Member Universal House of Justice – the prime body of Baha'i Faith, located in Haifa, Israel.

The Truth About the Baha'i Faith: A Shocking Expose'

The Truth About the Baha'i Faith examines some of the major claims of the Baha'is, and contrasts those claims with facts. This is an Anti-Baha'i book. This book reveals that The Bab (forerunner of Baha'u'llah) never claimed to be the Mihdih (Mahdi), but rather the 5th "Gate" (channeler) of the Mahdi. This book reveals that Baha'u'llah never intended to be the Funder of a new religion (the Baha'i Faith), but merely the Founder of a Shi'ite Sufi (Mystical) Order. This book reveals that Baha'u'llah never claimed to be a Prophet, but rather Allah (God) himself. This books shows evidence of the racism and violent nature of 'Abdu'l-Baha, the closeted (yet very active) homosexuality of Shoghi Effendi, the forged Will of 'Abdu'l-Baha, and the clever political maneuvers of Mary Maxwell (Ruhiyyih Khanum) that insured her the role as the de facto "ruler" (Guardian in all but name) of the Baha'i Faith from the death of Shoghi Effendi in 1957 to her own death. This book reveals how the Universal House of Justice (Baha'i Governing Body) has suppressed Baha'i history in the hopes of covering up the truth, so that they may "save the world" from a nuclear war.

Product Details ISBN: 9798675716074Publisher: Independently PublishedPublication Date: August 31st, 2020Pages: 426Language: English

Link : <https://www.squarebooks.com/book/9798675716074#about>

Baha'i who worked for the Imperialists and oppressors

Courtesy : <https://bahaism.blogspot.com/2024/04/bahai-who-worked-for-imperialists-and.html>

Photo of 'Ayn ul-Mulk (son of Mirza Reza Qannad Shírází), who was a companion of Shoghi Effendi and the father of former Iranian Prime Minister Amir 'Abbas Hoveyda. He was the ambassador of Iran to Saudi Arabia and an important figure for the British occupying forces.

Some more details here:

<https://iranbahaipersecution.bic.org/archive/tebyan-cultural-institute-biography-hoveyda>

An open letter to Sir Abbas Effendi

Shuaullah The Grandson of Bah'a'ullah The Flag bearer of Baha'i faith to India and Egypt.

Shuaullah was Son of Mohammed Ali Effendi (son of Bah'a'ullah) and grandson of Bah'a'ullah he was born in Kasr-el-Mazraa, Accre district, Palestine in 1878 A.D. and grew up under the supervision of his Holy grandfather Bah'a'ullah. At the tender age of eleven years he was commended by his Grandfather Bah'a'ullah to accompany his father to Egypt and India for propagation of faith, he travelled extensively along with his father to India and Egypt, in his youth he suffered the loss of his beloved grandfather Bah'a'ullah, and got a shock of life by seeing his uncle Sir Abbas Effendi started preaching his commandments and kept aside the teaching of Baha'u'llah.

After Abdul Baha ex-communicated prominent Baha'is like Dr. Ibrahim Khairullah, the rift and conflict arose amongst the followers of American Baha'is while Sir Abbas Effendi was busy in issuing tablets to his supporter. The Noble son of Bah'a'ullah Mohammed Ali Effendi took the responsibility of teaching the faith. He instructed his eldest son Shuaullah to go to America and continue teachings of Bah'a'ullah. In 1904 Shuaullah left for America for the sole purpose of teaching faith. He started a Baha'i quarterly magazine and was busy in propagating the faith of his noble grandfather, while he was in California his uncle Sir Abbas Effendi saw that he is losing ground in western believers so he also made a trip to USA to propagate his own self made ideology. Shuaullah wrote HIS MEMORIES after his returned to Acre (the scan copy is available on internet) here I am quoting his conversation with his Uncle Sir Abbas effendi.

During 1912 while my Uncle Abdul Baha was visiting the United States by the authority of my father, I humbly wrote him a letter and asked him for a conference to settle the existing differences in our cause. I hereby reproduce the copy of the same;

“To His excellency Abbas Effendi Abdul Baha.” Dear Sir, Inasmuch as your views and doctrines in our religion are radically different from those of my father, your younger brother, Mohammed Ali Effendi who was chosen by God in the Book of My covenant, the Last will of Bah'a'ullah, to occupy after you the same position you occupy now: And inasmuch as this difference between both of you spread among the followers of Bah'a'ullah and divided them into two parties; one following you and believing in your personal teachings, and the other party joined your brother believing in the teaching of Bah'a'ullah only and considering them final as he declared; And, inasmuch as we were all commanded in the “Most Sacred Book” Kitab Aqdas, to bring our differences to the utterance of Bah'a'ullah, which sufficed the world, whereby they should be settled: And inasmuch as our duty is to established peace at home, among ourselves first, before we preach others to do so. I hereby beg your Excellency to appoint a conference of peace and spirituality to hold its meetings at the city of Chicago, or some other place, at a certain time, in order to discuss with the language of love and kindness the differences between the said two parties and settle them in accord with the utterance of Bah'a'ullah and His Commandments. If it pleases you the said conference would be composed of your Excellency with some learned ones of your followers, myself and Dr. I. G. Kheiralla, who introduced Baha'ism into America and Christendom with a few of our party. My father Ghusni Akbar, authorized me to state, that he will accept and sanction whatever your Excellency would established with me and with his representative Dr. I.G. Kheiralla. The official language of said conference well be the U.S. language, a neutral interpreter should be hired to translate from Arabic language all that you would like to say and in the mean time to translate to you all the discussions of the conference. Also to ask the associated press to send a reporter to write the minutes of the conference, and to invite three American to attend the meetings and act as witnesses and judges.

I suggest the question and discussions to be the following;

1. Why your Excellency concealed a part of the book of My Covenant, the Will of Bah'a'ullah..? that Will was entrusted to you that you might give all of it to the followers of Bah'a'ullah.
2. Ghusn Akbar was chosen to occupy after you the same position which you occupy, and your Excellency claimed that he was out off and fell. How is it possible that he fell from the said position before having a chance to occupy it.
3. What ground you have to claim that you are the Center of Covenant..? God only is the center of covenant.
4. Why do you claim to be the interpreter of the Utterances of Bah'a'ullah...? He declared in the book of wisdom that there is no Interpreter to them, save Himself.
5. How could it be that you are the manifestation of servitude and Bah'a'ullah declared it to himself only...? Also he taught there are no manifestations after Him until one thousand years passed from His appearance.
6. Why do you claim the great Infallibility calling your letters sacred tablets and revelations..? Bah'a'ullah said; Whosoever claimeth a mission before the completion of one thousand years from His manifestation is a lying imposter.
7. Why do you teach that this greatest Manifestation has three Chiefs, the Bab, Bah'a'ullah and Yourself..? Bah'a'ullah said: There is no one else beside him in the Kingdom. Likewise the Bible taught that at the latter days we shall have one shepherd, only one chief and not three. Also Bah'a'ullah said: he hath no agent, no successor; and no son."

8. Why do you claim and in the same breath deny that which you claim..? 10. Why do you not teach and spread the teachings of Bah'a'ullah as you were commanded to do, instead of spreading you own one..?

I close this open letter, appealing to your Excellency by justice, love and unity to grant my request. Your humble servant, The Grandson of Bah'a'ullah, Shuaullah.

I forwarded the above mentioned letter to Abdul Baha to Chicago where he was visiting but unfortunately I did not receive a reply. When I heard of Abdul Baha's arrival to California, I addressed him the said letter again, this time through the press as an open letter, a copy of the same appeared in several Newspaper throughout the United States.

A reporter from the Los Angeles, Examiner interviewed Abdul Baha and the following reply appears In the said Newspaper; October 20th 1912
"Would you listen to the talk of the drunkard in the street" Reporter asked "do you class your nephew as one no better than a drunkard..? Abdul Baha Replied:- "Worse"

Conclusion Here comes the question: Why Sir Abbas Effendi was not ready to answer his nephew..? What was there in Will and Testament of Bah'a'ullah which he was hiding from the followers..? Why Sir Abbas Effendi has kept aside the teaching of Prophet of faith, was he thinking that the teachings are absurd, or he was looking for some fame for himself? Why he made such a long trip to United States and Europe, and ex-communicated those who propagated faith in those country, and avoided the open challenged made by his Nephew for debate.

Answer:- 1. He wanted to have fame and glory for himself, he was fooling around to simple followers of Baha'u'llah, and were making some fake prophesies to impress them, (like Prophecy: of Daniel 1335 days and made such complicated that the Book Baha'u'llah and New Era has to be revised thrice). Ref. Baha'u'llah and New Era. And prophecies like there will be 24 successors in Baha'i Faith, whereas Shoghi Effendi died childless. 2. The ground was prepared In the US by the faithful like Dr. I.G Khairullah and he went to ripe the fruits. They should not have objected to his lucrative business so he ex-communicated them. 3. To please them he issued a Tablet in praise of country O God! This American nation is worthy of Thy favors and is deserving of Thy mercy. Make it precious and near to Thee through Thy bounty and bestowal. 4. It was as simple as that, the American faithful where not aware about writing of Baha'u'llah, since it was in Arabic and Persian, no one could object him about his talk which was in absolute contrast to the teachings of Baha'u'llah. 5. He was praising them like: they are angel, To Juliet Thompson He said. "You teach well, Juliet," He said. "You teach with ecstasy. You ignite the souls. A great bounty will descend upon you. I have perfect confidence in you as a teacher. Your heart is pure, absolutely pure." 6. The main man who raised the flag of Baha'i faith in United States (Dr. I.G Khairullah) was ex-communicated.

Gamal Naseer

Shoghi Effendi

- Shoghi Effendi's properties in Iran
- Lineage of Guardianship in Baha'i Faith
- Shoghi Effendi contradicts Abdu'l-Baha
- Excommunication By Shoghi Effendi
- Why Shoghi Effendi did not appoint his successor ??
- Shoghi Effendi used the money of Charity to go to Oxford university.- Ruth White
- Was Shoghi Effendi gay?
- Why didn't Shoghi Effendi repudiate this RACIST article in the Baha'i World?
- Writings of Shoghi Effendi concerning the Will and Testament

Why Iranian people does not like the Baha'i Faith?

There are a number of reasons:

1- In the middle of the eighteenth century a man called the Bab started making messianic claims in Iran. His laws were a mixture of extreme forms of violence and forced child marriage:

After his followers caused a great deal of mischief in Iran, he was executed and three civil wars ensued with his followers who were trying to implement his laws in Iran. Luckily the government crushed the fanatics. Baha'is greatly revere this man and pay tribute to him by celebrating his birthday and visiting his shrine.

2- After the Babis were crushed by the government, the remaining Babi leaders plotted to assassinate the Shah of Iran. All were executed except for one bloke by the name of Mirza husayn Ali Nuri, AKA, Baha'u'llah, the founder of Baha'ism. He was saved due to threats by the Russians of laying Iran to ruins:

Today Baha'is continuously spread propaganda against Iran claiming that they have historically been persecuted in Iran, while historically their leaders were a violent people who caused much mischief and suffering for the Iran populace. These are only a few of the reasons that Baha'is have a bad reputation in Iran.

How many wives and children did Baha'u'llah have ?

House of Abbud On pilgrimage in April 2006: . . . Our guide recounted how Abdu'l Baha, upon Baha'u'llah's mention of not having seen a green blade of grass for such a long time procured the mansion of Mazraeh and Baha'u'llah moved there together with his second and third wife and their children. Navvab and her children stayed in Akka until her death. Thereafter Baha'u'llah gave her the title of his eternal companion in all the worlds of God, whereas the other two women and their children ended as covenant breakers at a later date. I think this constitutes grave injustice. Prior to pilgrimage I had known about the second wife and I had heard a hint about the third one. I knew of the official excuse that the second wife was the widow of a martyr and Baha'u'llah was obliged, due to family ties, to protect her according to Islamic Law. I learned that apparently the situation with the third wife was similar. She was needed to help in the household in Baghdad and it was deemed socially impossible to have her in the house as a helper without marrying her. She had a child with Baha'u'llah, stayed behind in Baghdad at first and only later came to the Holy Land. Many years later Shoghi Effendi (Baha'u'llah's great-grandson) tenaciously contradicted rumors of her having been a mistress and confirmed his grandfather had had three equal and legal wives. Nevertheless, virtually nothing is known of her. I also had heard about the children from those unions and their later break with the community. In Akka however I was struck with the reality of the facts. The Bab had already proclaimed the equality between women and men. Baha'u'llah was a Babi. It would have to be expected that he would follow Babi Law. The conference of Badasht (when Babi law was set in force) preceded the second marriage. This is to say that the will of God with regards to the equality between men and women was known by then. Conference of Badasht: One Islamic law was abrogated during each day of the conference After the Báb's arrest in 1848, Bahá'u'lláh made arrangements for Táhirih to leave Tehran and attend a conference of Bábí leaders in Badasht. She is perhaps best remembered for appearing in public without her veil in the course of this conference signaling that the Islamic Sharia law was abrogated and superseded by Bábí law. It was at the Badasht conference that she was given the title Táhirih which means "the Pure One". Furthermore it seems evident that especially polygamy is profoundly incongruent with equality between the sexes. A man can protect a woman, even in the eyes of the world integrate her as a wife into his household without consummating the marriage and making her pregnant. Perhaps she would have had a chance to find another man at a later date and most importantly, she would not have been likely to be declared a covenant breaker. Here the question must be raised what the woman should have been protected from – Yes, perhaps her life would have been harder, poverty, prostitution, bondage – but what is worse than being declared an enemy of God? – Perhaps she would have preferred even the most miserable fate to this condemnation. I at least would have felt like that. How can a living human being be an antagonist to God? This is impossible. I can't see it that a living human being with body, beating heart, hunger, thirst and need for comfort can ever fit this description, not even if she or he would exhibit the most sinful, reckless, irresponsible, malevolent etc. attributes. A human being doesn't have the stature nor the nature to do that. The simplest proof is that a human being will die, cannot and will not continue to live against the will of God. A human being is a talisman for creation and in his or her entirety a reflection of God. To judge a single human to be an antithesis to God equals calling creation evil. What was the situation that Baha'u'llah put the second and third wife into by the consummation of their marriage? – They had to experience him from an angle different from everyone else. For everyone else he was revered prophet who taught about righteousness and how to live a good life, but for them he was the perpetrator against the very law he proclaimed. I feel that with these consummated marriages Baha'u'llah broke the trust with all of us women. But I feel betrayed not only as a woman but as a human being, not only because he consummated those marriages but because his action led to such strife that the women and the children were later ostracized as covenant breakers. By definition he was to be regarded as a manifestation of God, infallible in all his words and actions. I felt as if he had destroyed my trust and my love for God. We must assume, since Tahirih had been an avid teacher, all women associated with the new teachings would have been aware of the new law of equality between women and men. They must have felt the impact, especially the ones in direct contact with the Babi movement. Their spirits would have been raised the first time for centuries. What relief for the souls trapped in women's bodies after the long centuries of injustice and suppression. And then Baha'u'llah humiliated them again, again pushed them back into the old dark abyss. He didn't take equality seriously. He didn't enact it, wasn't a shining example. Was there outrage? Probably not. Not for a long time. Most likely it was just a silent collapse, a shadow cast over the radiance of the face, a dimming of the brightness in the eyes. But who would have noticed? – Perhaps not even the women themselves. It was safer not to notice, what good would it have been to become aware. The centuries-old conditioning would have set in and any potential outrage was suppressed. The result, as with all suppression, is emotional imbalance, aggression and discontent as we know it from the second and the third wife. Or else, suppression can lead to saintly renunciation, self-denial and asceticism as is known from Navvab and the Greatest Holy Leaf. The denial of the women's truth is still happening today. I also succumbed to it in the beginning of my Baha'i life. Most Baha'i I know, don't look behind the story. – Those women and children are effectively excluded from our awareness, they don't belong to us, we think we are different, we think they are "the others" and we have no compassion for them. The women's hurt feelings must have transferred to the children. The children originated in unlawful unions, they were not responsible for the situation they were born into. They were innocent of the family atmosphere of injustice, jealousy and hostility. But as a consequence they were burdened with the terrible weight of breaking the Covenant of God. It's the heaviest load I can imagine for a human soul. It's incomprehensible. A religion, proclaiming to bring unity to mankind, creates within its own central family scores of covenant breakers. And the cause for such conflict is Baha'u'llah's own disregard for the new law and Abdu'l Baha's subsequent judgment, which heavily condemned the victims of the injustice for their opposition and lack of co-operation. It is like adding injury to insult. Imagine you are being attacked and hurt and when you scream in protest you are judged and sentenced for rebellion. Instead of receiving an apology you receive exclusion from the community and a label that says you are the antithesis of God. This is madness. <https://web.archive.org/web/20080517161701/http://bahaiblog1919.blogspot.com/>

Baha'i Views on Polygamy

There is different law for master and the servant. Baha'i adherents have been (formally) asked to be in monogamous relationship but their master Baha'u'llah officially had 3 wives 1 .

1. Baha'ullah married his first wife, Ásíyih Khánum, in 1835.
2. He married his second wife, Fatimih, in 1849.
3. He married his third wife, Gawhar, in 1862.

Footnotes

Hindus, Muslims converting to Baha'i faith in India: The Game of Conversions, Changing Religions

The lady's surname was Patel but she was not a Hindu. She was a Bahai, member of a faith, who believe in Baha'ullah

There were Mishra, Patil and Ghosh. All of them were Bahais. People with seeming Muslim names also.

That was quite confusing initially because of our notions that we associate surnames to religion.

They were born in Hindu, Muslim families but recently turned to Bahaism.

As far as Indians are concerned, what we know about the Bahais is that their most prominent place of worship in this country is the Lotus Temple in Delhi. But apart from this, most of us generally have no clue about Bahais and their religion.

That the Bahais, wherever they live, have a feast every 19 days and that they assemble at the local Haziratul Quds, is also not known commonly. In every city they have a local spiritual assembly. But when you see a Siddiqui or a Sharma as Bahai, what you make out of it?

Hindu, Muslim converts to Bahai religion

That confuses many of us. Because in India, we associate names and surnames with religions. If someone is Rahmat Ali, he ought to be a Muslim and Ramesh Joshi should be a Hindu. Some Christians have Hindi/ Sanskrit/ Arabic names but most of the people can be identified.

Even Jains are often distinguishable due to their surnames—either Jain or Khandelwal/Shah/Kasliwal/Singhai etc. I find many Hindu and Muslim converts to Bahai faith. The Bahais are under intense religious persecution in Iran.

This is a fact. They are not allowed to run schools and kept under state surveillance. That's really unfair. Many, in India, consider them as a sect of Muslims, which they are not—an independent religion. Bahai population is growing quite fast in India though they are not flexing muscles about their population.

Hiding faith: Not too open about conversion, growing figures as yet!

I have met a few Bahais here and there. Recently, at a programme, to highlight their issues in Iran, a journalist got irked with Bahais. 'You hide your identity', he charged them at a gathering they organised to raise the issue of Baha'i persecution in Iran.

"We don't", they said. The journo asked, 'If you believe in all religions equally then why you convert others?', the debate continued. I don't have any thing against Bahais.

If anyone wants to get converted to the faith, he has every right to do so. What I didn't exactly like are incidents like the recent marriage of a Muslim orphan girl to a Bahai family of Muslim names.

The organisers, all of whom were highly educated, deliberately mispronounced the name of the girl and hid her surname to conceal that she was a Muslim. At orphanages such things do happen routinely. As far as preaching to an adult is concerned, I am not much interested but incidents like this one are disturbing.

The Bahais claim to have followers in every country except Vatican. However, their claims of numbers seem exaggerated. In India they claim a population of 20 lakh [2 million] and tens of millions in the world. I don't think these are correct.

But it is quite clear that the Bahai faith may not be growing too fast in Europe and America, but in India, Bahai missionaries are quite active. They are working in rural areas also. However, at state level, there is no recognition of this religion as yet.

Christian and Sikhs have also converted. Among the biggest converts, however, are Parsis [Indian Zoroastrians]. Perhaps, this is because its a new faith that brings a new energy for them, and Parsis who are turned outcast after marriage with a non-Parsi, adopt this faith, which also comes from their ancestors' land—Persia [Iran].

Why Bahaullah had three wives? And Why Abdul Baha advocate monogamy?

After years of practice, promotion and belief in the Bahai Faith, I ran into a book that stated the fact that Bahaullah was polygamist with three wives. I could not believe this. I dug more. An explanation from Shoghi Effendi was not convincing. Shoghi stated that Bahaullah was practicing his old Islamic faith and the practice of his old homeland, as Jesus was a Jew before Christianity. The explanation was not convincing for two reasons:

Bahaullah's first marriage happened prior to the so-called "Babi Dispensation." However, the second marriage took place after the Babi Dispensation, after the Bab supposedly nullified polygamy, and after Bahaullah's attendance in the "Badasht Conference" declaring nullification of Islamic laws and beginning of Babi laws. The third marriage took place in Baghdad, after he himself supposedly became a prophet.

The "practice of his old homeland" of polygamy is not that accurate. 19th Century Persians — unlike Arabs — did not customarily or by large practice polygamy, except for among rare wealthy individuals.

I found very many other discrepancies in Bahaism. One other related one is the fact that the Book of Aqdas allows bigamy, while Abdul-Baha tried to cover the practice by promoting monogamy and innovating "equality of men and women."

Another discrepancy is the general Bahai belief that Bahaullah did not have basic education, and what he acquired was a miracle (like Jesus). This is untrue. He was a son of nobility and did have better education than others.

Reference : <http://www.bahai-faith.com/ex-Bahai-1.html>

Abdul Baha

- Israel, grateful for the contributions of the Bahá'is.
- Abdul Baha: Canine teeth are for hard shells such as almonds
- Was Abdul Baha Beloved of God ?
- What did Abdul Baha think about Africa and African People ?!
- Abdul Baha was a Racist !!!
- Physics according to Abdul Baha :In Baha'i Faith the Sun is Fixed!!!
- Truth Behind Will and Testament of Abdul Baha
- Infallibility and Scientific Knowledge of Abdul Baha!!
- The Secret activities of Abdul Baha
- Abdul Baha regularly attended mosques!!

What will be the food of the future? — Baha'u'llah v/s Abdu'l-Baha

“What will be the food of the future?” “Fruit and grains. The time will come when meat will no longer be eaten. Medical science is only in its infancy, yet it has shown that our natural diet is that which grows out of the ground. The people will gradually develop up to the condition of this natural food.”—Abdul Baha, in response to a question

After reading this I just kind of begrudgingly accepted that the Baha'i Faith advocates vegetarianism. But a few weeks later I found this quote by Baha'u'llah:

“Eat ye of that which God hath made lawful unto you and do not shun meat. God hath, as a token of His grace, granted you leave to partake thereof save during a brief period. He, verily, is the Mighty, the Beneficent. Forsake all that ye possess and hold fast unto that which God hath purposed”—Baha'u'llah

After finding out Baha'u'llah said this, I became viscerally upset at Abdul Baha for teaching against this. I began to question if he was really infallible.

Leader of Baha'i Faith – Abbas Effendi was an Agent of Britishers in Palestine

*Plans were also made for the handling of agents during the advance. Alexander Aaronsohn in Advanced Intelligence prepared a list of potential agents in Zichron Ya'akov and in nearby Arab villages whom he believed could be recruited once the EEF arrived and sent forward to obtain real-time information. Aaronsohn also made a second list of Jews and Arabs who might assist in counterespionage missions, and a third which named suspects to be detained and houses billeting enemy headquarters considered worth searching. He also singled out several Bahai notables in Haifa and in Zahla, Lebanon, including the leader of the Bahais, 'Abbas Effendi, who would be willing to collaborate with the arriving British. He even received a password from a local Bahai which could serve as a 'useful introduction'.

*CAB 314: 115B, GS, memo, App. 11 to 'Report and Appendices of an Enquiry by the Standing Sub-Committee of the CID with the Responsibility of the Navy and the Army for the Defence of the Suez Canal', 2 June 1910; WO 106/212: Hoskins to WO, 2 June 1910; WO 106/211: GS, Army of Occupation, Major A. Solly-Flood probably to DMI (Cairo), 22 Aug. 1910.

(Yigal Sheffy, British Military Intelligence in the Palestine Campaign, 1914–1918, Routledge (1998))

For more information : Visit :

<https://www.routledge.com/British-Military-Intelligence-in-the-Palestine-Campaign-1914-1918/Sheffy/p/book/9781138873605>

Five clear lies of ‘the most great Hypocrite’ Abdul Baha

In this article I want to point out some of the predictions of the so called ‘Great Baha’i Leader’ Abdu’l Baha which never came true. All those predictions proved that he was a Fraud and a Great Liar.

Abdu’l Baha narrated in the book “Some Answered Questions” (Mofavezat) in the Chapter 11: Commentary on the Eleventh Chapter of the Revelation of St. John, page No.29 & 30.

“In each cycle the guardian and holy souls have been twelve. So Jacob had twelve sons; in the time of Moses there were heads or chiefs of the tribes; in the time of Christ there were twelve Apostles; and in the time of Mohammad there were twelve Imams. ”

It is clear from the above that Abdu’l Baha believed that the successors of the past prophets were twelve in number and the successors of Baha’u’llah will be Twenty Four as the manifestation of Baha’u’llah is a glorious manifestation. Abdu’l Baha himself was the first successor and he himself appointed the second successor and the guardian of Baha’i Faith in his life time to Shoghi Effendi. He has written in “Will and Testament” in many places in different manner. He has stated very clearly about the guardianship and different stations of Shoghi Effendi in his Will. Among all those stations the very important station is the Permanent Headship of the Universal House of Justice. Means the Universal House of Justice will always be headed by the Guardian of the faith. And remaining twenty two guardians, who will succeed to Shoghi Effendi, will be from the male children of Shoghi Effendi. Refer the Will and Testament of Abdu’l Baha:

“O my loving friends! After the passing away of this wronged one, it is incumbent upon the Aghsan (Branches), the Afian (Twigs) of the Sacred Lote-Tree, the Hands (pillars) of the Cause of God and the loved ones of the Abha Beauty to turn unto Shoghi Effendi—the youthful branch branched from the two hallowed and sacred Lote-Trees and the fruit grown from the union of the two offshoots of the Tree of Holiness,—as he is the sign of God, the chosen branch, the Guardian of the Cause of God, he unto whom all the Aghsan, the Afian, the Hands of the Cause of God and His loved ones must turn. He is the Interpreter of the Word of God and after him will succeed the first-born of his lineal descendents.

The sacred and youthful branch, the Guardian of the Cause of God, as well as the Universal House of Justice to be universally elected and established, are both under the care and protection of the Abha Beauty, under the shelter and unerring guidance of the Exalted One (may my life be offered up for them both). Whatsoever they decide is of God. Whoso obeyeth him not; neither obeyeth them, hath not obeyed God; whoso rebelleth against him and against them hath rebelled against God... The mighty stronghold shall remain impregnable and safe through obedience to him who is the Guardian of the Cause of God. It is incumbent upon the members of the House of Justice, upon all the Aghsan, the Afian, the Hands of the Cause of God to show their obedience, submissiveness and subordination unto the Guardian of the Cause of God, to turn unto him and be lowly before him. He that opposeth him hath opposed the True One, will make a breach in the Cause of God...

O ye beloved of the Lord! It is incumbent upon the Guardian of the Cause of God to appoint in his own life-time him that shall become his successor that differences may not arise after his passing. He that is appointed must manifest in himself detachment from all worldly things, must be the essence of purity, must show in himself the fear of God, knowledge, wisdom and learning. Thus, should the first-born of the Guardian of the Cause of God not manifest in himself the truth of the words:—“The child is the secret essence of its sire,” that is, should he not inherit of the spiritual within him (the Guardian of the Cause of God) and his glorious lineage not be matched with a goodly character, then must he, (the Guardian of the Cause of God) choose another branch to succeed him. The Hands of the Cause of God must elect from their own number nine persons that shall at all times be occupied in the important services in the work of the Guardian of the Cause of God. The election of these nine must be carried either unanimously or by majority from the company of the Hands of the Cause of God and these, whether unanimously or by a majority vote, must give their assent to the choice of the one whom the Guardian of the Cause of God hath chosen as his successor.

This assent must be given in such wise as the assenting and dissenting voices may not be distinguished (i.e., secret ballot).

By paying attention to the above writings of Abdu’l Baha it is clear that all these things are the hidden news (Akhbar e Ghaibi) from Abdu’l Baha as well as the constitution of the Baha’i Faith. The following results can be derived from the above text:

That in the life time of Shoghi Effendi who was the Guardian after Abdu’l Baha, the Universal House of Justice will be established. And it must be established. That the Head of the Universal House of justice will be Shoghi Effendi and the members of UHJ who are the pillars of the cause of God should obey Shoghi Effendi and whoever disobeys him, disobeys the God. And Shoghi will rule over the Universal House of Justice while all the member of UHJ will be under him. Means Shoghi had the right of dictatorship. That Shoghi will have a male child and his child will also have male child. Progeny of Shoghi will continue. Guardianship after Shoghi Effendi will be fixed by his Will and it is incumbent upon him to appoint guardian in his life time. That the guardianship must be in the male child of Shoghi Effendi means he should have first child as male and not the female (Because the women are having no right to be the member of Universal House of Justice then how they can be the head of the UHJ). And if his glorious lineage not be matched with a goodly character then must he (the guardian of Cause of God) choose another branch of Baha’u’llah (Aghsan) to succeed him.

God proved all these forecast wrong.

Firstly: Shoghi Effendi died and Universal House of Justice could not be established. He died in the year 1957 in London and UHJ was established in the year 1963. This was the first lie of Abdu’l Baha.

Secondly: There should be a head of the Universal House of Justice and must be the Guardian of Cause of God. Universal House of Justice of Haifa established without the guardian. This was the second lie of Abdu’l Baha.

This was the time when Baha'is divided into different sects. Charles Mason Remey proclaimed himself the second guardian of the Baha'i Faith and wrote to Baha'i World that the Universal House of Justice should be established in his (Charles Mason Remey) guardianship. After his demise, group of Mason Remey divided into many groups but a major group of Remey is spread throughout the world and even in India. Head of this group Joel Bray Marangella lives in Australia. Many people have claimed as successor of Remey. Internet is the best source to know the details.

Thirdly:

Fourthly: Shoghi Effendi died without appointing his successor. Thus the disputes started among the Baha'is. Some of them like the goats and sheep attached with them, and gave their milk and skins to the Haifa and some of them scattered here and there and some of them joined Mason Remey, Jamsheed Maani, Neal Chase, Joel Marangella, Jacques Soghomonian and others. Presently there are seven or eight sects of Baha'is. Shoghi died without appointing his successor. This was the fourth lie of Abdu'l Baha.

In short the Wills of Abdu'l Baha humiliated and insulted him completely after about 45 years and made clear to everybody that he was a fraud and a big liar. All his commandments about Shoghi Effendi remained aside and establishment of Universal House of Justice caused the disputes and sects instead of unity and peace.

Surely God punishes and humiliates the liars.

Abdu'l Baha forecasted twenty four successors of Baha'u'llah. It ended with the first successor only. This was the fifth lie of Abdu'l Baha.

Fazil-i-Mazanderani in his book "Amr-u-Khalq" tried to darn and justify the fifth lie of Abdu'l Baha and wrote:

"The twenty four holy souls which are "Adilla-i-Isma'il-Azan" are 19 souls, 18 Huruf-i-Hayy (Letters of Living) and one is Primal Point (Bab) and five souls are hidden in Malakoot-i-Asrar. Wisdom demands not to mention it. It will be mentioned later.

(The title "Letters of the Living" (Huruf-i-Hayy) is used specifically to refer to the first eighteen followers of the Bab who became believers in his Revelation. Abdu'l Baha and Shoghi Effendi are not from Letters of Living).

It is surprising that Fazil e Mazanderani had included the Bab and eighteen Huruf-i-Hayy among the twenty four successors of Baha'u'llah while according to Baha'is Bab himself was a Manifestation. He was the Forerunner of Baha'u'llah. His advent was before Baha'u'llah and his cycle was ended before him.

Why he had hidden Abdu'l Baha and Shoghi Effendi along with those five souls? We do not know who will inform to the Baha'i World about those three souls after the death of Fazil-i-Mazanderani? In fact darning the words of Abdu'l Baha is to lessen the eloquence of the words of Abdu'l Baha.

Anyway from the above it is clear that whatever Abdu'l Baha forecasted all those forecasting became the cause of his humiliation. And guardianship could not continue even after the darning and justifications of Fazil-i-Mazanderani. Today Baha'is are fighting in this matter.

I hope the callers of "Independence Investigation of Truth" will independently investigate the truth.

“The black man must be grateful to the white man”-Abdul Baha

Here is ‘Abdu’l-Baha (Exemplar and Interpreter of the Baha’i Faith) speaking about Blacks:

“The black man must ever be grateful to the white man, for he has manifested great courage and self-sacrifice for the black race.”

Promulgation of Universal Peace, p.111

“If man is left in his natural state, he will become lower than the animal and continue to grow more ignorant and imperfect. The savage African tribes of central Africa are evidences of this.”

Promulgation of Universal Peace, p.308

“If we study human beings such as the aboriginal tribes of central Africa, who have been reared in complete subjection to nature’s rule, we will find them deficient indeed. They are without religious education; neither do they give evidences of any advance toward civilization. They have simply grown and developed in the natural plane of barbarism. We find them bloodthirsty, immoral and cannibalistic in type to such an extent that they even kill and devour each other.”

Promulgation of Universal Peace, p.399

“The inhabitants of a country like Africa are all as wandering savages and wild animals; they lack intelligence and knowledge; all are uncivilized; not one civilized and wise man is to be found among them. On the contrary, consider the civilized countries, the inhabitants of which are living in the highest state of culture and ethics, solidarity and inter-dependence; possessing, with few exceptions, acute power of comprehensions and sound mind.”

Tablets of ‘Abdu’l-Baha, p.576

The Founders of the Baha’i Faith are The Bab and Baha’u’llah. Both of Them owned black slaves; although Baha’u’llah forbade the practice of slavery among His folowers in 1874.

The Bab bought and sold black people who were forced to serve; whether they wanted to or not. They called their Masters by the Persian term for “Master”. They couldn’t do anything without their master’s permission. They were “slaves”; in any language you choose to use. It is not I am trying to rewrite history! Rather, the NSA of the U.S. tried to get the book that reveals this (Black Pearls by Afnan—a descendants of The Bab) “quieted” and “covered-up”. Thankfully, Anthony Lee (the black publisher of Kalimat Press) didn’t listen to them

The argument that ‘Abdu’l-Baha could NOT have considered Africans inferior in intelligence “because” He dedicated His life to Race Unity doesn’t follow. He considered mankind a Family. Even in families, some children are more intelligent than others. I’m not saying I think blacks are (in general) less intelligent. I’m saying that ‘Abdu’l-Baha may have thought so. Isfandiyar was not the only slave/servant of Baha’u’llah—there were _many_ more.

Darrick Evenson

Neil Chase – the Great Grandson of Abdul Baha

U.K Baha'i Activities from 1936 – 1985

INTERNATIONAL GOALS COMMITTEE

In this last phase of the Seven Year Plan, the Universal House of Justice has called for 386 pioneers to be sent by 44 National Spiritual Assemblies to 94 national communities. Our part in this great spiritual drama is to send 24 pioneers to 11 countries.

Since Ridvan 1984 four souls have already arisen and moved to their pioneer posts. Our remaining goals are shown below.

Remaining U.K. Goals, January 1985	Pioneer
Cyprus	3
The Gambia	2
Ghana	2
Sierra Leone	1
Seychelles	1
St. Vincent	2
British Virgin Islands	1
Sri Lanka	1
Venda	3
Malta	4

"Upon our efforts depends in very large measure the fate of humanity", we have been told by the Universal House of Justice. Could you arise to pioneer?

If you are considering pioneering, to one of our goals, or to any other

PIONEER GOAL - VENDA

Venda, an Independent Republic since 1979, is a tiny country surrounded by South Africa's Transvaal Province. It is a very beautiful country, generally very fertile. Venda straddles the Soutpansberg mountain range and has an attractive sub-tropical climate.

Its 500,000 people are largely rural farmers, though Venda also has agricultural, forestry, mining and manufacturing industries. Very generous Government assistance is given to those wishing to establish a business in Venda.

Venda has a University, 3 teacher training colleges, and 57 secondary schools. It also has 5 hospitals, a nursing college and 47 clinics.

There is a very great need for pioneers to Venda, preferably Persians, to take the Message of Baha'u'llah to the people of Venda before they are attracted to leave their peaceful rural life for the incredible hardships and devastating materialism of the South African cities.

Please contact IGC Pioneering Secretary for more details

TRAVEL TEACHING: IGC is organising another Easter travel teaching project, this year a 5-day trip to Holland. There will also be a travel teaching project to Belgium to coincide with the European Youth Conference at Antwerp, 26-29 July. Details from IGC Travel Teaching Secretary, Miss Taraneh Majidi, 15 Bolton Road, Harrow, Middx., (Tel. 01 863 6704)

"Neither the threatening world situation, nor any consideration of lack of material resources, of mental equipment, of knowledge, or of experience - desirable as they are - should deter any prospective pioneer teacher from arising..."

Shoghi Effendi

OPPORTUNITIES FOR TEACHERS

Job opportunities for qualified teachers:
UGANDA - Int. School, Kampala, basic salary
SRI LANKA, GHANA, and CHINA - 21 positions in all, local salaries
Details: IGC Pioneering
There are sometimes opportunities for English Teachers to teach in private language institutes in different towns in Greece.

As some Baha'is may be

An Open Letter to Universal House of Justice

SUBJECT: Persecution of Persian Baha'is in at the Highest Seat of Baha'i Administration

Dear Esteemed Members of Universal House of Justice

Paul Lample

Payman Mohajer

Shahriar Razavi

Stephen Birkland

Stephen Hall

Ayman Rouhani

Chuungu Malitonga

Juan Francisco Mora

Praveen Mallik

It saddens me to write this letter to the esteemed members. Members, who collectively are supposed to be infallible in their decisions. For quite some time, some of the decisions of the members are being viewed as being with a targeted agenda –cleansing the Bahai Administration of Persian Baha'is' very silent callous Racism and fanaticism is engulfing the whole of Bahai Community. The Persian Bahais are being persecuted in which ever land they pioneered and surprisingly the Universal House of Justice is mock spectator to this persecution.

One could argue that these steps are seen with prejudice. However, when sequence of similar actions is witnessed the benefit of doubt reduces.

Let us one by one see such incidences to conclude whether it is co-incidence or otherwise:

1. Recently a prominent Heterodox Baha'i, Omid Seioshansian, who was born in Qatar, was blacklisted in Qatar. Government authorities in the country have levelled criminal and national security charges against him. Mr. Omid now will face severe penalties in Qatar's judicial system. And will be denied entry.

Although Bani Duggal, the BIC's Principal Representative to the United Nations, said that "the Baha'i International Community is saddened that the State of Qatar has chosen to expel members of a community that has peacefully coexisted in and contributed to the progress of the country", the silence of UHJ has raised concerns. Many prominent Bahais are of the opinion that UHJ is behind the expelling of Omid as they are in cleansing process of Persian Bahais and Omid a high ranking Persian Bahai in Bahai Administration, who has an eye on selection to UHJ. He has a lot of cloud in countries like India.

- Another high ranking Persian Bahai, a counsellor, Dr. Jabbar Eidelkhani who had served for many years in Bangladesh was also removed from his post and a very insignificant Indian Bahai was asked to step in his shoes. Was this part of a strategy?
 - Another Persian background lady, a former counsellor and member of NSA of India, Mrs Zeena Sorabjee, was asked to resign/retire from NSA after being elected on NSA. Fate accompli?
 - A prominent Bahai of the USA, Mr. Bahareh Moghaddam has been accused of trying to deceive and misguide the Bahais of Iranian descent by sowing seeds of discord. UHJ just watched silently.
 - Mr. Ali Nakhjavani was hunted for his misunderstood statement resulting into ignorant Bahais daring to ask him that why he gave such statement. UHJ could have defended in this situation.
 - The case of Bahai Scholar Ahang Rabbani has not been forgotten. After working for 15 years at the World Centre, he was heartbroken. UHJ had no comfort to offer.
 - Jamshed Fozdar and Firoz Anaki were on the brink of being declared Covenant Breakers but some better reasoning prevailed on UHJ and they stopped from doing such an atrocious act. Both these gentlemen have bitterness still.
 - The Late Mr. Hasan Sabri along with Isabella Sabri made fun of Persian Bahais and used to call them KHAR (donkey) and used to say that Persian Bahais are misguiding other Bahais. There are several other such incidences of rebuke. UHJ conveniently ignores these. They use to say Panchami is the centre of deviation.
 - The number of Persian Bahais as counsellors have come down drastically and the story is not different for the ABMs. They were asked to leave their place of pioneer (where they had established themselves, gained respect and involved themselves in Teaching of the Faith) and settle in some other parts of the world. This is nothing but humiliation and harassment. UHJ chooses to look the other way.
1. When a non-Persian Counsellor retires from his post, he is immediately offered another post in his own country. But if the counsellor is Persian, and that too a pioneer, never this opportunity of service had been offered to him or his experience used for promotion of the Faith. This happens under watchful eyes of the UHJ.

1. A sincere Persian Bahai Mr. A.S. Furudi who took care of the Bahai property the National Hotel at Pune in India was threatened by one of the members of UHJ that he should come in line with UHJ or face severe consequences.
1. A Persian pioneer a devoted Bahai Dr. Ahmed Ansari was asked to resign after he was elected as a delegate for National convention. It was feared that he was a sure member of NSA
1. Payam Shoghi – A person of capacity, he served the faith as a counsellor but he was sacked by the UHJ and was asked to resign from all his administrative positions, just because he was “accused” for forging Documents? Which was never proved.
1. Shahryar Nooreyazdan – He has such a wide experience about the faith. Has given years as a pioneer to Mumbai Community. A person instrumental in building the Lotus Temple and donating huge amounts of his savings was never given any hearing by UHJ. All his suggestions are ignored and was made centre of mockery.
1. Farida Vahedi – She served the Faith with best of her capacity running the External affair department very efficiently but just some Indian NSA members did not like her success was asked to resign from the NSA of India. In her place a dumb Ram Sevak Yadav was brought to NSA just to appease the Hindu nationalist Government .
1. Afshin and his son Naim now live a life of loneliness. Afshin gave all of his golden years for the propagation of faith in India. Today when he is ill and may be in need of financial assistance, the UHJ is wasting sources on inexperienced, and worthless people like Praveen Mallick, Rajan Sawant etc. All the “soldiers of Baha’u’llah” are being treated like worthless entity.
1. The Bahai Academy in Panchgani was subjected to pressure because its Director Mr. Leson Azadi was a Persian and son of a Martyr. UHJ made his life and of his family miserable. He was sacked as Auxillary Board Member.

Such examples leave us with a bitter conclusion that those having Persian (Cradle of Faith) background need to be sieved. It is as though the UHJ sees the Persian Bahais being responsible for the formation of so many sects. A thought is prevailing in the Faith that Persian Baha’is are working in groups and are having soft corner for the Persian fourth Guardian Nosratullah Bahremand of the Orthodox Baha’i Faith, who is calling his shots from Australia. Such a suspicion has been prevailing for many years now. UHJ has so far not taken any steps to reject this idea.

While all this is happening, the clout of Bahais with Jewish background is increasing. Whether it is happening with connivance of Jewish state, is a question that then comes to mind.

Esteemed members do look into the injustice that has crept in functioning of the Faith. Else history would not forget UHJ being cause of moral and population downfall of our Beloved Faith.

A GROUP OF PERSIAN BAHAI'S

Baha'u'llah in Kitab e Aqdas : “Whoever burns a house intentionally, burn him.” !!

This is the suppressed Elder & Miller translation of the Baha'i "Book of Laws."

It is a more honest and accurate translation than the one belatedly offered by the Baha'i administration 120 years late. The latter ("The Kitab-i-Aqdas: The Most Holy Book") contains obfuscations and distortions designed to protect the fortunes of the Baha'i Faith and preventing the book to cause a drastic falloff in membership, as the text reveals a great disparity between the original message of the founder and what later came to be sold as "The Baha'i Faith." The Elder translation is an important document in the continuing saga of Baha'i efforts to both obscure and alter their own original foundations and texts.

The Elder-Miller translation is an honest translation by two English orientalist and Arabic scholars, one of them an author of an Arabic grammar who had spent many years in Persia and interviewed early Baha'is and Babis. It is the first English translation.

Their agenda was to make available an important religious work of the east for the Royal Asiatic Society that was, unaccountably, still unavailable in the west. Thus their translation became the first translation available in the west. Earl elder remarks on this oddity in his preface:

"Anyone who studies Baha'ism learns very soon of the volume sacred to those who profess this religion and known as "The Most Holy Book." Of this book Baha in his Will said, "...reflect upon that which is revealed in my book the Aqdas." And his son and successor 'Abdu'l Baha said in his Will, "unto the Aqdas everyone must turn." Yet, strange to say, although the teachings of the Baha'is have been widely proclaimed in Great Britain and America, only fragments of al-Kitab al Aqdas have been translated previously into English."

This even though the original text is actually a rather short work. Thus Miller and Earl Elder, a scholar of Arabic and produce of an Arabic grammar, published the first English translation instead of the Baha'is.

Though Elder-Miller's translation was published in 1961, western Baha'is were kept in the dark about its existence. I was an active Baha'i for 15 years and never heard of it. This was deliberate. The Baha'i leadership did not want rank-and-file members to read the Kitab-i-Aqdas. They considered it a problematic. Not because there were major faults in the translation, but because the content itself was something they did not want westerners to be able to read.

Elder and Miller were surprised that the ready market of Baha'is was not interested in their book and Baha'i publishing bodies would not carry it, even though they lacked their own version of their "Most Holy Book." Book suppression is common to Baha'i history. It has long been a habit of Baha'is to find, confiscate, and destroy books they deem to be adverse to their growth. (I recall going through the estate of a famous early Baha'i Ruth Moffet and finding many Baha'i suppressed books that she had removed from libraries over the years.) The early Baha'is also extirpated the writing of their ostensible lineage founder, the Bab. Baha'i book purging is one reason that hardcover copies of Elder & Miller's Aqdas are so rare today.

Kitab-i-Aqdas was long considered a problematic book by the Baha'i promoters in the west. The Baha'i administration, seeking to grow a Faith that was now a sales package for socialist-leaning intellectuals, continued to buy time. They hoped to create their own translations that would soften or obscure the content, while letting the Baha'i Faith develop and grow free of the damaging effect they knew the text would have. So they avoided publishing a text of their own for a full 120 years after the book's creation by their founder. All other Baha'i works of significance were long available and this was ostensibly their central scripture. It's importance is obvious in its very title: "Book of Laws — Most Holy Book." So this Elder-Miller translation was unwelcome to the Baha'i Administration who refrained from making their congregation aware of it.

The first approach the Baha'is took to suppressing the Kitab-i-Aqdas was, indeed, to ignore all translations available. Even after this Elder-Miller translation was out in 1961, they continued to tell their membership "It has not been translated yet." Any versions that were published by others, they ignored and would classify them as negative to their membership. They did not have the proper filters or spin-doctoring. Their second approach, when obligated to translate the text, was to distort and obfuscate its content in the translation. (Examples given here.) Thus the priceless value of the Elder-Miller version.

The Growing Gap Between the Baha'i Promotional Package

And the Baha'i Scriptures

Early in the religion's development certain ideas, only minimally present in the original teachings of Baha'u'llah, began to be enlarged a great deal. These could be called socialist, Marxist, or progressive ideas found in the statements of most mystics. From a text that contained great mysticism, emphasis on obedience to God and devotion to Baha'u'llah arose a religion that instead promoted feminism, world government, and deracination. The feminism is particularly remarkable since the Kitab-i-Aqdas appears to be directed to men, makes certain prohibitions for women, and quite clearly assumes polygamy as normative. Baha'u'llah himself had, according to accounts, four wives.

But a few minor reforms or relaxing of Islamic regulations on women were spun by the Baha'is into a program in which the Baha'i Faith became "feminist" in a Marxist sense. The longer the Baha'is suppressed and ignored the Kitab-i-Aqdas, the larger grew the gap between the Kitab-i-Aqdas text and what Baha'is were teaching. Continually attempting to appeal to progressives, they ended up with a "Ten Basic Principles" list that was quite different than their actual founding texts. Nothing make the gap between teaching and text more obvious than the Kitab-i-Aqdas.

Another statement Baha'is would make to their newcomers was: "Mankind is not ready for it." But as the modern age developed, each passing year made mankind more and more "unready" for the very dated, even culturally primitive content of the Kitab-i-Aqdas. The Elder-Miller translation makes it abundantly clear why the Baha'is hid their most important scripture.

Baha'is state that this Kitab-i-Aqdas is mankind's complete guidance from God the next thousand years. That is rather sad considering they didn't allow us (in the west) to even read the text for the first 120 years. Upon reading its contents the reader will notice a few things.

First, one notices a very Islamic tone and attitude of the harsher variety. One law in the case of arson is put bluntly: "Whoever burns a house intentionally, burn him." This is the straightforward Elder-Miller phrasing.

The official Baha'i text that finally came out had it this way: "Should anyone intentionally destroy a house by fire, him also shall ye burn."

The Strange Laws of the Kitab-i-Aqdas / The Textual Manipulations by Baha'i Officials Perceivable Thanks to the Elder-Miller Translation

Baha'u'llah was a prince. He wanted his followers to be an attractive group. The Kitab-i-Aqdas tells them to get new furniture every 9 years. It outlawed the shaving of the head or men having hair longer than their earlobes. The scripture instructs them to use perfume, to wear silk and furs. This is succinctly and cleanly stated in the form of one of many commands in the Elder-Miller translation:

"Wear sable (sammur) just as you wear silk and squirrel-skin and other things."

In the Elder-Miller version one can usually distinguish easily the difference between a mere "allowing" of an activity (not forbidden) and a command to do it. The Elder-Miller translation has this as a command, like the command to wear perfume. Seeing how absurd this perfume command looks to our present culture the Baha'i administration altered the lines in significant ways:

"Ye are free to wear the fur of the sable as ye would that of the beaver, the squirrel, and other animals."

This puts it as a mere option; as something not prohibited. By comparing the official version to the Miller-Elder version you can see Baha'i officialdom's manipulation of translation outcome from cover-to-cover. The perfume command rendered by Elder-Miller is:

"Use rose water, then pure perfume."

It is clear that the rose water is intended to be worn on the skin, just as with perfume. But the 120-year-late official version translates it cleverly:

"Make use of rose-water, and of pure perfume;"

This rendering obfuscates the original intention and creates loopholes. It opens the possibility that the rose-water does not need to be something worn on the skin, just "made use of." Western women are fussy about things like that, you know. Some of them don't like being told they have to wear perfume. Likely, modern Baha'is won't want to use rose water for their guru and this doesn't sell the faith. Perhaps the rose-water and perfume could be "made use of" a disinfectant? Or for scientific experiments? Or some other use. (The just-mentioned mental scenario would be typical of the Baha'i administrative mind which likes to focus on science and technology rather than its own religious content notwithstanding their founders' anti-science attitudes.) The perfume, in this official rendering, becomes something that is to be 'made use of,' not necessarily worn by the devotees. Perhaps as a substance for insect control, etc.

This is loophole-building. This spin-doctoring and effective alteration of inconvenient passages is frequent throughout the belatedly published official translation of the Baha'is and only the Elder-Miller version (and others) make this clear. Their belated 1993 version also contains a great deal of explanations, apologies, and padding to help to shift the meaning or outright annul Baha'u'llah's statement and help current Baha'is live with the strange text. This occurred early on with Baha'u'llah's apparent assumption of polygamy as a norm. The Baha'i administration wrote a treatment that says, essentially, 'This can't be so.'

Indeed, one pleasure of the Elder-Miller version is reading it straight without the filler, distractions, and excusing explanations of Baha'i officials. One finds out that the original Kitab-i-Aqdas was a terse, thin volume. The original book is only 74 pages with 10-pt. type. The Baha'i administration and spin doctors added so much to their version that their Aqdas ballooned to 315 pages! Most of it written by the administration, not Baha'u'llah. The scholarly Elder-Miller version, intending to present the Arabic as it really was written, makes these manipulations by modern Baha'is clear to see. That is its value.

Baha'is promote their religion as one that is superior due to access to the original founder texts. Further, they state that the problem with religions is that change creeps in, with the original texts and their meanings lost. The Baha'i Faith, is, they say, different. One of the interesting things about the Baha'i Book of Laws, given it is presented by them as full guidance for mankind for a thousand years, is the content it lacks. It requires that marriage be effected with a dowry:

"Relationship by marriage is not realized except by (payment of) dowries." And adulterers have to give the Baha'i "House of Justice" "nine mithqals of gold." (Elder/Miller explain that this amounts to 1-7th of an ounce of gold.) But the Most Holy Book contains no advice or laws about the following urgent problems of mankind:

- Technological manipulation, genetic and bio-engineering, or food monopoly
- Pornography, incest, and nothing apparent regarding pedophilia (he only mentions boys), homosexuality, etc.
- Bio-medical ethics, such as euthanasia

- Punishments or laws for rape (or even mention of rape as a human crime)
- Industrialization, pollution, the environment
- Forms of government
- Mass media and monopolies

.. and many other dire problems.

The scripture does, however, contain laws about falcon-hunting and a great deal of funeral and burial laws. Their royal founder Baha'u'llah enjoined Baha'is be buried in some fancy coffins. Two sentences from the Elder-Miller translation:

Elder-Miller Version: "When in hunting you use birds of prey, make mention of God. Then whatever they catch for you is lawful."

Elder-Miller Version: "God has commanded that the dead be buried in (coffins of) crystal or rare stones or beautiful hard woods, and that engraved rings be placed on their fingers."

Official Version: "The Lord hath decreed that the dead should be interred in coffins made of crystal, of hard, resistant stone, or of wood that is both fine and durable, and that graven rings should be placed upon their fingers."

Notice that hardwoods are no longer needed (rare now!), just "fine and durable" wood. Also note that the administration altered the command for "rare stones" into mere "hard, resistant stone." Only the Elder-Miller translation lets you see all the invention and alteration-of-texts that Baha'i officialdom is engaged with. And it becomes clear why they hid the text from the west for 120 years.

Here is how the Baha'i Administration rendered the line allowing more than one wife to make it come out differently:

Elder-Miller:

"God has ordained marriage for you. Beware lest you go beyond two, and whoever is satisfied with one of the handmaidens, his soul is at rest and so is hers."

While he makes prohibitions in a clear manner elsewhere in the text, there is no prohibition here, merely a "beware" beyond 2, while advising that one has advantages.

Official Baha'i Version:

"God hath prescribed matrimony unto you. Beware that ye take not unto yourselves more wives than two. Whoso contenteth himself with a single partner from among the maidservants of God, both he and she shall live in tranquility."

Notice the big difference in the impressions the versions create. The Elder version assumes two wives as normative and quite acceptable in these two simple lines: "God has ordained marriage for you. Beware lest you go beyond two." Baha'u'llah reportedly had at least four wives. What kindly uncle wouldn't say "beware!" and "careful!" to a young man considering three or more wives? The tone of the official version ends with the impression that both 3+ AND dual wives are prohibited. There is no sense of prohibition of either state in the Elder version, only a warning about 3+.

In the Elder version the man contenting himself with one is simply shown approbation, with the results promoted as worthy of consideration: "whoever is satisfied with one...his soul is at rest." The official version makes monogamy appear to be specified and required: "Whoso contenteth himself with a single partner...shall live in tranquility." Using 'shall live' — the predictive, prophetic, or "ordaining" voice so common to Baha'i literature — ("...he and she shall live...") the mere observation that one-wife men have more peace now feels like a single-wife specification that is, after this stormy reference to polygamy, the one ordained state for the the future.

It took them 120 years to come up with that clever re-working of the original simple sentences, to make it appear that Baha'u'llah did not say what he said. Thus we need the Elder-Miller translation.

The use of the word "partner" in the modern version is particularly jarring in the founding text. A few decades back this would have been "wife." (The sentence is clearly directed to men and refers to how many wives they should have.) The the vague term "partner" has never occurred in any translations of Baha'u'llah heretofore (relative to marriage) or even "spouse." "Partner" is a modern culture-bomb used by those with modern anti-traditional attitudes, particular homosexuals and those who wish to redefine marriage as any amalgam of any sexes. It is there in the official Baha'i version as both anticipation and acceptance of the further degradation of natural sexual roles and traditional marriage, and gives us a hint as to which way the Baha'i Faith is now headed.

Mystical Language in the Kitab-i-Aqdas

One fascinating aspect of Baha'i writings is the Sufic mystical content, and the Kitab-i-Aqdas is loaded with that. After reading official Baha'i translations for a while it becomes very interesting to see how Elder & Miller translate certain mystic phrases compared to official versions. The Elder-Miller translation appears to be more direct with less attempt to fit Baha'u'llah's words into decorous English literary forms. Here is one from the Elder-Miller Aqdas:

“O People, direct your steps with white faces and hearts full of light towards the Blessed Red Spot where the Lote Tree of the Extremity (sidratu l-muntaha) calls, “There is no god besides Me, the Self-Subsistent Overseer.”

Here is the official Baha’i version:

“Turn, o people, with bright faces and illuminated hearts towards the blessed red spot in which the Sadrat-El-Muntaha (divine tree) crieth out, “Verily there is no God but Me, the protector, the self-Existent.”

“White” has become “bright.” “Hearts full of light” (possibly an occult reference referring to inner perceived light, plus the Sufic idea as the “heart” as a meditation point in the body) became “illuminated heart” which suggests a vague intellection or higher thought. The more evocative and instructive “Lote Tree of the Extremity” has been shortened to simply “Lote Tree.” (A truncation reflecting the anti-mystical attitudes of the Baha’i administration.) The “overseer” who witnesses (a word more like “foreman” and “boss”) has been turned into an active “protector.” “Subsistent,” a term with a philosophical and mystical heritage, got dumbed-down to “existent.”

Another fine example of the mystical language in the Aqdas, from Elder-Miller:

“Leave what you have! Then fly with the minions of Separation beyond Innovation.”

Official Baha’i Version:

“Cast away that which ye possess, and, on the wings of detachment, soar beyond all created things.”

It is a noteworthy characteristic of the Baha’i Faith — and I was an active member of 15 years — that none of these curious mystical terms and statements, so abundant in Baha’i writings, are ever explained or even discussed.

Note that the original used the stronger “separation,” and Baha’u’llah did, indeed, want his community to stand apart from the rest and his mystical focus for the Baha’is was making them utterly “detached from all save God,” especially detached from “the world.” This term referred to the ideal of a profound, emotionally ascetic separation from the world which he often advocated. Changing “beyond innovation” into “beyond creation” is a particularly egregious distortion and change to the text and a complete reverse of its meaning. (Just as Baha’is converted the technology-negative views of the founders into a technology-positive message.) “Innovation” in the original refers to the activities of man and mind. “Creation” refers to the creation of God. The original “innovation” referred to the tendency of men to invent ideas, especially conflict-inducing ideas, and change what God created. He also sometimes used the term “invention.”

Side Note: The general attitude of Baha’u’llah toward man’s invention and innovation was negative. (Both the Bab and Baha’u’llah were anti-technology. The Bab outlawed the study of sciences and foreign travel. Baha’u’llah, when hearing of the invention described it as a “hellish engine” (altered by the admin. into “infernal engine” that would destroy the cities. (Altered by the admin into “consume the cities.”)

It is perhaps completely understandable that official Baha’i translators wanted to cover up Baha’u’llah’s disparagement of human “innovation” in religious texts. The Elder-Miller translation of the Aqdas shows that the official Baha’i version is loaded with invention and innovation.

— Julian Curtis Lee

Red Baha'ism: The Universal Poetic Struggle

Buy the Book : <https://www.amazon.com/Red-Bahaism-Universal-Struggle-Communist/dp/B0DCVWP21D>

Over a dozen years in preparation for Red Baha'ism: The Universal Poetic Struggle is a collection of essays, poetry, letters to editors, epigraphs, and more from the pen of Bishop Rev. Dr. Edward James Irvine (November 18, 1896 – 1970)—Baha'i and Communist, and the Violet Ray of the sacred and divine rays of the Divine. From 1918 to 1968 he wrote hundreds of poems and editorials on topics as diverse as Socialism, the treatment of communicable diseases, beauty, peace, war, tax reform, Blue Laws, establishing a Poet Laureate League in each state and having a national Poet Laureate, and giving the right to vote to residents of Washington, D.C.

He started his adult life with scandal and rebellion. He was sent to a military brig when he refused to serve in the Marines in the Dominican Republic. When he returned to D.C., he encountered the Socialists and Bahai Movement. He found life-changing principles in both and blended them creating a uniquely American poetic heresy. Churches based on Whitman, Blake, and Coltrane were not as weird today.

Upon being disowned by Baha'is and Communists, he joined the Washington Institute of Christ (a Spiritualist Church) and ascended the ranks to become its Second Bishop. While there his role was writing trance poetry and giving sermons about the ills in the world and their solutions. His essays and poems deserve study as we must, "Remember Poets are the True Philosophers".

Concept of unity of religions is merely bait by Baha'is

1. Can we say that every religion in the world follows the same source teachings as all other religions? And certainly definitely not!
2. Does every adherent of the same religion have a common aim? And certainly definitely not!
3. Is every religion the same? Does everyone follow the same religion?
4. Is there a universal set of beliefs that is consistent across all religions worldwide? Certainly not!
5. Is the framework of worship identical in every religion? Absolutely not!
6. Is the deity revered in each religion the same? Definitely not!
7. Is the doctrine shared by all world religions uniform? Most certainly not!
8. Is the fundamental nature of all world religions equivalent? By no means!

The preceding analysis clearly indicates that the notion of religious unity is fundamentally unfounded, akin to the divine claims asserted by Bahā'ullāh.

From this examination, it can be inferred that the idea of religious unity serves merely as a lure, intended to trap the uninformed. When an individual adopts the Bahā'ī principle of religious unity, they forfeit their own faith and embark on a misguided journey towards accepting the spurious divinity of Bahā'ullāh.

Top 20 Reasons Muslims can never Embrace Unity of Religions

1. A core tenet of belief in Islām, established through consensus, asserts that there is no authentic Dīn, or religion and way of life, other than Islām. It is recognized as the ultimate religion, which abrogates all preceding faiths, beliefs, and doctrines.
2. The essential principle concerning the Quran is that it represents the final revelation. It supersedes and invalidates all prior scriptures that were revealed before it, including the Tawrāt, the Zabūr, and the Injīl.
3. Muslims are obligated to hold the belief that earlier scriptures have been annulled and that they have been subject to modifications and distortions by human hands. The Prophet Muhammad expressed great displeasure upon witnessing anyone reading a page from the Tawrāt.
4. It is a fundamental belief in Islām that Muḥammad is the last and final messenger. Should any of the previous Messengers be alive, they would be compelled to follow Muḥammad and the sharī'ah bestowed upon him. Consequently, when Jesus returns in the end times, he will govern according to the sharī'ah Muḥammad.
5. Muḥammad has been sent as a messenger to all of humanity, extending until the end of time.
6. It is an essential belief in Islām that individuals from Christianity, Judaism, or any other faith who do not accept Islām are considered disbelievers.
7. Similarly, any individual who fails to recognize other religions as forms of disbelief (kufr) will themselves be deemed a disbeliever.
8. It is utterly unacceptable to entertain the notion that all religions are equally truthful.
9. The call for the unification of religions results in the dismantling of the barriers that separate Islām from other religions, as well as the distinctions between truth and falsehood, and right and wrong.
10. Any Muslim advocating for the legitimacy of another religion effectively exits the fold of Islām. Such advocacy for the unification or reconciliation of religions fundamentally contradicts the core tenets of Islām.
11. A Muslim who expresses satisfaction with the uniformity and unity of religions and promotes it is, in essence, endorsing disbelief and expressing contentment with it.
12. It is impermissible for a Muslim to embrace or engage in interfaith ideologies or practices. Similarly, participation in interfaith events and agreements is not allowed for a Muslim.
13. A Muslim is prohibited from independently printing the Tawrāt and Injīl. Therefore, it is equally unacceptable for the Noble Qur'ān to be published alongside these earlier scriptures in a single volume. Those who undertake such actions or advocate for them are committing a serious deviation and should be wary of their faith.
14. A Muslim must never accept an invitation to a multi-faith prayer venue. Doing so would imply an acknowledgment of another religion as valid, one that does not recognize Allāh as the sole object of worship.
15. It is inappropriate to refer to a church, synagogue, temple, or any other place of worship as a 'Masjid' or 'the house of Allāh.' Furthermore, it is incorrect to assert that the adherents of other religions are worshipping Allāh.
16. Muslims have an obligation to invite Christians, Jews, Hindus, Buddhists, and followers of other faiths to the truth and enlightenment of Islām.
17. Participation in interfaith initiatives signifies a lowering of one's own standards to align with those who do not believe, adopting a perspective that views Islām as merely one of many paths to God.
18. Engaging in interfaith dialogue can lead to significant challenges within the family unit.
19. Advocating for interfaith relations can disrupt societal harmony, even among Christians or Jews. An interfaith advocate may experience turmoil, grappling with the contradictions in their own outdated scriptures, which conflict with the truths of Islām.
20. Islam stands as the superior faith, transcending all other religions and belief systems.

Baha'u'llah Teaches that No one Should Be Cursed, but Curses People Himself

Courtesy : <http://www.bahaibahai.com>

Baha'u'llah states:

“Verily I say, the tongue is for mentioning what is good, defile it not with unseemly talk. God hath forgiven what is past. Henceforward everyone should utter that which is meet and seemly, and should refrain from slander, abuse and whatever causeth sadness in men.” (Baha'u'llah, Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh Revealed After the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, pp. 219-220)

We have already documented some instances where Baha'u'llah practices the exact opposite and directly calls his deniers animals, pigs, donkeys and bastards (here). In this article, we will document a similar contradiction in Baha'u'llah's teachings where he curses different classes of people, contrary to his direct orders not to. In the 13 section of the Tablet of Bisharat (Glad-Tidings) Baha'u'llah prohibits his followers from cursing any soul:

“O people of Bahá! Ye are the dawning-places of the love of God and the daysprings of His loving-kindness. Defile not your tongues with the cursing and reviling of any soul.” (Baha'u'llah, Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh Revealed After the Kitáb-i-Aqdas 1988 pocket-size edition, p. 27)

Apparently this order was so important that Baha'u'llah revealed it again (verbatim) in the 8 section of the Tablet of Ishráqát (Splendours, on page 129 of the same book). As we will show, Baha'u'llah blatantly ignored his own teachings and cursed his enemies, covenant breakers, and even his own followers. We will first show instances from works that have been translated to English. It must be noted that the untranslated Tablets are replete with statements where Baha'u'llah curses his deniers and enemies (these might be added at a later date).

Here is one example where he curses his enemies who killed the Bab:

“The more He exhorted them, the fiercer grew their enmity, till, at the last, they put Him to death with shameful cruelty. The curse of God be upon the oppressors!” (Baha'u'llah, Gleanings From the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh, p. 146)

He curses his own followers who disobey him:

“How couldst thou forget thine own faults and busy thyself with the faults of others? Whoso doeth this is accursed of Me.” (Baha'u'llah, The Kitáb-i-Aqdas, p. 182)

“Breathe not the sins of others so long as thou art thyself a sinner. Shouldst thou transgress this command, accursed wouldst thou be, and to this I bear witness.” (Baha'u'llah, The Kitáb-i-Aqdas, p. 182)

And last but not least the Covenant Breakers that are always given the worst treatment:

“The Supreme Concourse will pray for the one who is adorned with the garment of faithfulness between heaven and earth; but he who breaks the Covenant is cursed by heaven and earth.” (Bahá'í World Faith—Selected Writings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá pp. 435-6)

Even though he curses other people, he expresses outrage when others curse him:

“Now let us beseech God—praised be His glory—to graciously guide aright the followers of the Shi'ih sect and to purge them of unseemly conduct. From the lips of the members of this sect foul imprecations fall unceasingly, while they invoke the word ‘Mal’ún’ (accursed)—uttered with a guttural sound of the letter ‘ayn—as their daily relish.” (Baha'u'llah, Tablets of Bahá'u'lláh Revealed After the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, 1988 pocket-size edition, p. 92)

(The attitude attributed to the Shi'ih sect is merely Baha'u'llah's claim. Some from this group might have cursed him but how Baha'u'llah narrates it is a gross exaggeration). This kind of hypocritical behavior displayed by Baha'u'llah is one that has always been detested in the Divine scriptures:

“Do you order the people to do good but forget about yourselves whilst you read the Book! Do you not use your reason!” (Quran 2:44)

“You, then, who teach others, do you not teach yourself? You who preach against stealing, do you steal? You who say that people should not commit adultery, do you commit adultery?” (Romans 2:21-22)

Actually, Baha'u'llah claims that he detests this behavior too although he applies it in action himself:

“O SON OF BEING! Ascribe not to any soul that which thou wouldst not have ascribed to thee, and say not that which thou dost not. This is My command unto thee, do thou observe it.” (Baha'u'llah, The Hidden Words of Baha'u'llah, p. 10)

Baha'u'llah and Bab claim to be God !

1. "When I contemplate, O my God, the relationship that bindeth me to Thee, I am moved to proclaim to all created things 'Verily I am God!'" (World Order of Bahá'u'lláh, p 113)
2. "Naught is seen in My temple but the Temple of God, and in My beauty but His Beauty, and in My being but His Being, and in My self but His Self, and in My movement but His Movement, and in my acquiescence but His Acquiescence, and in My pen but His Pen, the Mighty, the All-Praised. There hath not been in My soul but the Truth, and in Myself naught could be seen but God." (World Order of Bahá'u'lláh, p 109)
3. "Verily, verily, I am God, He besides Whom there is none other God, and I am the Ancient of Days." (Selections from the Writings of the Báb, p 58)
4. "Verily God and every created thing testify that there is none other God but Me, the Almighty, the Best Beloved." (Selections from the Writings of the Báb, p 31)
5. "He who doeth good unto Me, it is as if he doeth good unto God." (Selections from the Writings of the Báb, p 15)
6. "This is a letter from God (the Báb) the Help in Peril, the Self-Subsisting, unto God (Bahá'u'lláh) the Almighty, the Best-Beloved, toexpress my undoubting faith that there is no God but thee." (Selections from the Writings of the Báb, p 15)

Baha'i Conversion Manual

How Baha'u'llah Referred to His Family

The term Aghsan (Branches) signifies Baha's son and Afrian (Twigs) the Point's kinsmen according to Baha's terminology. Baha considered himself to be Asl-i Qadim (the Ancient Stock). Hence the term Branches for his sons to distinguish which from the Point's kinsmen, since he regarded him as his precursor or harbinger, he used the term twigs in respect of the latter although both terms are synonymous.

Baha conferred high-sounding letters on the members of his own family and chief followers. For titles bestowed on his wife and daughter see supra. For titles bestowed on Mirza Aqa Jan of Kashan.

Specimens of his honours list in respect of his entourage and chief followers are quoted below:

- Mushkin-i-Ilahi (Divine Fragrance);
- Zaynul-Muqarrabin (The Ornament of the Favourable);
- Jabrail-i Amin (Gabriel the Trusty);
- Qannad-al-Samadaniyya (The Confectioner of Divine Eternity);
- Khabbaz-al-Wahidiyya (The Baker of Divine Unity);
- Dallak-al-Haqiqat (The Barber of the Truth);
- Mallah-al-Quds (The Sailor of Sanctity)

The Hasht-Bihisht P. 307.

Holy Mother Lady Munira Khanum

Mirza Badi'u'llah the youngest son of Baha entitled by him as 'محسن انور'
'The Most Luminous Branch'.

Courtesy : <https://bayanic.com>

Mash'aa Land, Baha'i Faith & Colonization of Palestine

Courtesy : <https://www.jstor.org/stable/2803160?seq=25>

HAMULA ORGANISATION AND MASHA'A TENURE IN PALESTINE

SCOTT ATRAN

Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales

and

Museum d'Histoire Naturelle de Paris

The thesis is examined that nontribal masha'a villages in Palestine were inherently socially fragmented and, therefore, susceptible to outside intervention and land expropriation. Some general features of the village patronymic group, or hamula, are explored. It does indeed appear that few, if any, such groups are, or were in the recent past, genealogically integrated patrilineages. There is a short treatment of the agricultural routine in the lowlands where the masha'a system prevailed. The usual claim that the periodic redistribution of communal lands characteristic of masha'a was inimical to economic planning and management proves unwarranted. A comparative analysis is made of the effects of Ottoman Land Registration, British Settlements and Zionist colonization on the social and economic organisation of masha'a villages in and around the Plain of Esdraelon. Physically exposed and socially amorphous plains villages composed of sedentarising semi-nomads and hill migrants did seem prone to outside interference. Those older continuously inhabited hill villages with a stronger social fabric were apparently better able to forestall the alienation of their valley lands. But very different fabrics could show resistance. A village constituted of a few powerful and competitive hama'il, such as Umm el-Fahm, was clearly poised to balance internal socio-economic antagonisms and parry outside threats. Yet, even a socially heterogeneous village containing a number of smaller hama'il, such as Isfiyya, held fast owing to a village-wide network of affinal relationships and persistent inter-hamula ties of matrilineality.

Masha'a, which prevailed in the plains of the Levant through the early twentieth century, was a system of communal land tenure characterised by a periodic redistribution of agricultural plots among peasant cultivators. In Palestine, its practice differed from village to village and also changed in the course of time.

Most accounts, however, have wedded fragmented colonial descriptions of this varied peasant economy to an assumed Bedouin tribal model of social organisation, so providing an all too facile explanation of both the origin and demise of masha'a. The general idea is that masha'a constituted a holdover from a nomadic regime of communal pasturage. Inimical to the colonial political economy set in motion at the end of the Ottoman Empire, and carried through by the British Mandate and Zionism, masha'a was allegedly maladapted to the intensive production and co-operation required of a functionally viable society in the modern world.

While most analysis of masha'a has linked the socio-economic ills of land fragmentation to communal tenure, in fact masha'a often persisted as a protective mechanism against them. Moreover, few, if any, villages in Palestine were patrilineally integrated in the Bedouin mode. As long as masha'a endured, competition between a few strong patronymic groups, or hama'il, could be productively balanced, as in the village of Umm el-Fahm.

Man (N.5.) 21, 271-95

In more heterogeneous villages containing a number of smaller hama'il, such as Isfiyya, masha'a could stress the overriding economic importance relations of affinity and matrilineality might take in a society supposedly organised agnatically. Only in relatively amorphous villages, which tended to mix marginal peasant groups with sedentarising semi-nomads, did masha'a readily fall prey to processes of alienation and community dissociation. But such processes were externally directed, not internally driven.

Are non-tribal villages feudal?

One of the first to question the significance of tribal organisation for Levant villagers was Weulersse (1940: 328-33), who argued that the genealogical mode of reckoning among Alawite groups was incomplete and, where seemingly complete, a highly fictitious post hoc formalisation of non-kin alignments. Barth (19531) further stressed the relative insignificance of genealogy for the 'feudally' organised villages of southern Kurdistan. He classed the Kurdish groups in the area according to three types: Jaf nomads, Hamawand tribal villages, and 'detribalised' villages. The first and second types owned their means of production (animals and land) and were fairly meticulous about their genealogies. For the nomads, genealogy served as the principal means of political recruitment, while for the tribal villagers it provided a strong collective group structure that operated as a powerful agent between governmental authorities and individual villagers. The non-tribal villagers, though, were mainly tenants of absentee landowners, and there was no wider kinship structure that connected non-tribal villages to one another or that linked the vestigial lineal segments of any one village together.

Although there may have been temporary intermediate forms of organisation, supposedly only the tribal and non-tribal poles were structurally stable. The former would invariably devolve into the latter after periods of long centralised rule. This was presumably because central governments and their clients aimed to divide and conquer by promoting factionalism, fragmenting genealogy and scattering patrimony. With the unity of the group thus dissipated, its land could be picked off rapidly in piecemeal fashion (Barth 1953:131-4). Furthermore, since the purpose of parallel cousin marriage was supposed to 'reinforce the political implications of the lineage system' (1953: 137), one would expect a consequent decline in the frequency of such unions.

The apparent social and economic unity of non-tribal tenant villages was illusory, argues Barth, Politically, the village's tendency to disintegration as a result of 'rabid factionalism' was held in check only by a standardised opposition to some 'enemy' village (1953: 120). Since governmental control was strong, the actual threat from such ostensible enemies was minimal. Economically, agricultural co-ordination could not be viewed as an indigenous form of creative economic activity or enlightened co-operation. Rather, as with the collective control of farming organisation in landlord-dependent Iranian villages, the collective scheduling of crop routines 'is administrative rather than wealth-producing' activity which tends 'to retard . . . village economic growth and specialization' (English 1966: 94-6).

While the distinction between tribal and non-tribal organisation does appear to be sociologically significant, the socio-economic consequences imputed to that distinction are less clearly so. There is no rule of the matter that settled tribal groups need eventually suffer a decline in their preference for parallel cousin marriage and lineage endogamy. This may be so no matter how advanced the process of sedentarianisation (E. Marx 1967: 232) and regardless of whether the agnatic section remains weak or strong (Aswad 1971: 72-3, 113), although polygyny may also facilitate a strong section's ability to maintain a wide network of affines on the outside as well.

Indeed, contrary to predictions by both Chelchod (1965; 1969) and Barth, settled non-tribal groups do not differ as a rule in this respect from tribal groups. For those tribal and non-tribal groups who consistently practise parallel cousin marriage, the proportion for such marriages seems to hover between 10 and 5 per cent. (Barth 1954: 169; Grangvist 1931: 81, 194; Rosenfeld 1957: 35, 44; Ayoub 1959: 267; Peters 1963: 177-9; E. Marx 1967: 225; Khuri 1970: 508; Arran 1985b). This figure appears to characterise any statistically functional world where, as generally seems to be the case, no more than one of every two available parallel cousins is actually taken for a spouse (cf. Antoun 1972: 125; Cresswell 1976: 106-9). To be sure, as with non-sedentarianised tribal groups, relative frequency of in versus out marriage may increase among sedentarianised non-tribal groups when external conditions take a precarious or threatening turn, as among Palestinian Arabs following the creation of the State of Israel (Cohen 1965; Rosenfeld 1976); although insecurity could also lead to an increase in exogamy for economically and genealogically weak groups seeking to 'buy' protection from stronger groups by giving women to them (Barth 1954; Peters 1963; Aswad 1971; Cresswell 1976). Furthermore, while it may be the case that tribally organised societies often have a higher degree of independence from centres of urban and government control (cf. Fernea 1970), it does not follow that the socio-economic organisation of non-tribal village societies is 'feudal', as Barth suggests.

Yet, according to Rosenfeld (1968: 732), socio-economic organisation in Palestinian villages was just so: 'Politically, the feudal landlords and overlords . . . promoted an internal hamula (patrilineage) system in order to maintain the collective order necessary to keep their tax, tenant, and rent economy operative'; whereas economically, the system of redistributing "communal" [sasha a] lands, while underwriting a minimal level of subsistence for the peasants, was a creation of the feudal regime. Its purpose was to keep people on the land, fix two or three field wheat and/or barley and durra seed cycle and serve for the orderly collection of taxes and rent in kind. The redistributive system existed also in many tenant villages where it similarly prevented agriculturalists from gaining fixed rights in land or building on or improving plots (Rosenfeld 1964).

At first blush, this claim would appear to contradict Barth's, inasmuch as Palestinian villages are allegedly 'tribally' organised in the sense that a man's corporate status is genealogically defined and patrilineally prescribed: 'families are linked together in patrilineal descent and form patrilineages' (Rosenfeld 1976: 13; cf. Antoun 1972: 87-8; Lutfiyya 1966: 143). But in point of fact, there are scarcely any such villages in Palestine. In virtually all the villages described in the literature, and in those Sunni (e.g. Umm el-Fahm), Christian (e.g. El-Bireh) and Druze (e.g. Isfiyya) Arab villages whose inhabitants I questioned, the constituent patrilineal units (jeb) of any one hamula are rarely connected genealogically. These units vary in depth but never encompass fewer than two, and almost never more than five, generations; and it is recognised by one and all that few, if any, of the component jeb of a hamula are of the same 'sinew' ('asal). As for general social relations between hama'il, these are usually phrased in idioms of affinity (nasab) and matrilineality (makhwal), although relations between groups having the same patronym, but belonging to different villages (e.g. El-Birch and Ramallah), are expressed in terms of patrilinearity (e'ammam).

Since there is admittedly no sense in calling today's hamula 'feudal', the question arises as to whether past practices of social control, hamula endogamy and inter-hamula competition were feudally determined or oriented. The division of Palestinian villages into hama'il competing against one another for the economic and political patronage of the State is attested to by native sources of the first half of the nineteenth century (collected and analysed by Macalister and Masterman 1909: 345-6). The sheikhs of the more powerful hama'il served as intermediaries between the authorities (first Turkish, then Egyptian, then Turkish again) and the peasants and 'guaranteed the taxes due from their several districts' (1905: 3144).

Conditions hardly changed over the course of the century. The hamula operated as a corporate group co-liaable to answer for one another's honour and crimes, and recognised as such by other hama'il and by government authorities. It was also a group of co-succourage, with members helping one another at those various times of the life-cycle that required extraordinary capital outlay (marriage, setting up a new residence), and also jointly contributing to the alleviation of a member's outside debts, especially if those debts carried the risk of alienating a valued portion of the hamula's patrimony (Baldensperger 1906: 14). In matters of physical defence the hamula often acted as a unit: most often a hamula occupied a distinct quarter (ara) of the village and could readily convert the interconnected houses of its quarter into a virtual fortress if need be. Members of the hamula also controlled the disposition of each other's women: 'Cousins have the first right to each other; sometimes they may pay less [dower] than should they be strangers' (Baldensperger 1900: 180). Finally, in regard to the peasants' principal economic activity:

It is commonly ordered that the farmers shall proceed to reap simultaneously, and it is often forbidden to go out to the fields to reap until all are ready. By this arrangement the assessment of the tax on the crop may be made with more uniformity and thieving rendered difficult. In all these matters, requiring the regulating authority of organized overseers, it is the so-called ukhtiyaripeh, or as we should say, selectmen, the chiefs of the tribes [dor or hama il], who decide questions from the day that the land was parcelled out to the feddans [i.e. those who had the right to participate in the lottery that periodically redistributed maiha'a lands] until the crop is gathered (Grant 1907:135; cf. Robinson & Smith 1841: 11, 187).

But for all the collective village responsibility exemplified by the functioning of hamula and the operation of the masha'a system, there is nothing even remotely resembling European feudalism. In the Arab East there was never any 'direct relation of lordship and servitude' (K. Marx 1967, III: 790) that tied the agricultural labourer to the land (cf. Cahen 1953). As Volney (1787: 377) stressed at the end of the eighteenth century: 'the peasants are oppressed by the tyranny of government, but not degraded by feudal servitude'. Nor could the masha'a system simply be the creation of an exploitative system in the manner, of, say the Russian system of communal tenure whatever the latter's superficial resemblances to masha'a (cf. Blum 1971: 527). Rather, as with the original land-equalisation systems of Walachia and Moldavia (Stahl 1969: 32), there is no indication whatsoever that the State officially prescribed the system, or presided over any aspect of its operation; and there is clear evidence that semi-nomadic tribal groups, who more often than not ignored government authorities or directly opposed them, spontaneously cultivated their lands as masha'a (Jaussen 1908: 238; Musil 1908, III: 58-0, 203).

Still, it would be a mistake to see the masha'a system simply as 'a carry-over from the Bedouin tribal organization' (Tannous 1943: 174). For whatever its degree of compatibility with Bedouin relations of production—and it considerable—the masha'a was eminently a peasant system of production (cf. Weulersse 1946: 108). True, the grazing schedule of peasant herders was intimately associated with the agricultural regime. Especially among the marginal peasantry living in mud dwellings in the exposed plains, herding offered the option of assuming an alternative semi-nomadic livelihood should adverse socio-political or climatic conditions warrant it. But masha'a aimed primarily at ensuring a low though constant level of sedentary productivity in a politically and climatically fluctuating environment. This it did by equitably distributing risk, not gain. It was not a primordial form of socialism (as some recent Revolutionary Palestinian critics claim); for, the fruits of cultivation accrued exclusively to the individual or household (before taxes and rent), and there was no general redistribution of surplus.

Assuredly, the Turkish pasha was well aware of the practice of masha'a, as he was of the organisation of the village along hamula lines, and sought every turn to exploit this knowledge. But then so did the powerful Bedouin sheikh or agha who endeavoured to usurp the government tithe ('ashr) by offering the hapless peasant 'protection' (khuwa) from government agents and other Bedouin in return for an even greater share of the crop. Whatever complicity there might have been between Bedouin and government agent in matters pertaining to the milking of the peasantry, it did not directly require, sanction or sustain the masha'a system, at least in the Levant and Iraq. 1

There is, perhaps, a looser interpretation of 'feudalism' meant, namely, ruthless exploitation of the mass of fellahin by powerful agents: Bedouin sheikh, urban effendi, government pasha or nahiyeh (landed gentry) family. According to nearly all colonial reports on the economic conditions of agriculturalists in Palestine (e.g. Strickland Report 1030: 11), as well as the only detailed anthropological piece (Patai 1949), which is based largely on these sources, the masha'a system was an unmitigated socio-economic disaster for the peasantry precisely because it facilitated such 'feudal' exploitation of the village collectivity in manifold ways. The most recent historical treatment of the subject has done nothing to dispel this story:

Curiously, no serious inquiry into the relationship between masha'a agriculture and the social organisation of a Palestinian village was ever undertaken. Nevertheless, British colonial authorities and Zionist colonising agents—often quoting one another (e.g. Peel Commission Report 1937: 233; see also Aumann 1975: 22—3)—argued that the periodic break-up of farms that the masha'a system entailed had to disturb the social harmony of the village profoundly. The celebrated "Five Village Survey" executed in 1944 by the Palestine Office of Statistics (published in the General Monthly Bulletin of Current Statistics, 1945—1946) did examine the relation between plot distribution and social organisation at the time of Land Settlement, that is, after the masha'a system had ceased to operate. But most of the conclusions drawn from this study as to the social and economic fragmentation of the peasantry pertain only to consequences ensuing from the stabilisation (ifraz), or 'freezing', of masha'a into mafruz, that is, permanently allotted parcels. These conclusions echoed earlier inferences as to the supposed long-term economic consequences of masha'a; such analyses wrongly assumed, however, that the baneful effects of the abortion of masha'a were caused by its conception (e.g. Granott 1952: 216-18).

In an important monograph on the tribal Al-Shiukh of the Hatay (formerly part of French and Ottoman Syria, today of Turkey), Aswad (1971) shows that most of the socio-economic evils associated with land fragmentation were avoided by villages that remained masha'a. Moreover, despite persistent attempts by authorities to abolish masha'a, these villages have proved most resistant to outside interference and most successful at economic co-operation and conversion to intensive agriculture. Anthropological studies of Syrian (Sweet 1960), Israeli Arab (Cohen 1965) and Jordanian (Antoun 1972) villages that were formerly masha'a and non-tribal note that the complete coordination of the agricultural routine required by the masha'a system could only have been sustained by a considerable measure of inter- and intra-hamula cooperation. But these studies do not detail past social and agrarian relationships, and they provide no hard evidence for or against the thesis that the maintenance of masha'a in non-tribal villages favoured outside control and exploitation.

The nature of the lowland agrarian regime

The length of each redistributive cycle varied widely across Palestine, but was usually either one, two, three, four or five years. Latron (1936: 188) reports a predominance of triennial redistribution in Syria, whereas Weulersse (1946: 99) sees the 'archaic' form of redistribution as annual. But it is more plausible that the length of the redistribution cycle depended upon the local character of soil and precipitation. Environmental conditions required that the crops grown be adapted to mostly clays, clayey loam and some light soils, and to a seasonally sporadic rainfall varying annually from 100 to 600 mm. In addition, planting and harvesting schedules had to be suited to the water requirements of these crops during their various stages of maturation.

In many parts of Palestine, the two-field system was in vogue (cf. Ruppin 1918: 23; Stavsky 1946: 106). One year half the land would have only a winter crop (shitwi) of wheat and barley, while the other half would have only a summer dew crop (seifi) of sesame and Indian millet (dhura beida, i.e., Sorghum cern). This second half would then have the winter crop the following season, while the first half would remain fallow ('ard bour) until the next summer crop.

The major drawback to Arab cereal farming in the eyes of colonial authorities was simply that it was geared to maintaining, rather than increasing, the standard of living. For the colonists, however, the main problem was that it conflicted with the labour intensive policy of settling the maximum number of workers on the land (kibush avodah or avedah ivr): 'although for technical reasons cereals cannot be avoided, they represent a small proportion of [Jewish] farm income; more labour is needed and more profit is given by other crops' (Keen 1946: 25). Of all crops grains can thrive under the widest range of soil and moisture conditions. They can be cultivated with comparatively little labour and they provide large yields of dry matter: in Palestine during the 1880's, the average return on seed was sixfold, reaching twelvefold in good years (Klein 1883: 45; cf. Cuinet 1896: 345-6). Grains are also high in food value (containing a high percentage of carbohydrates, some protein and fat, and vitamins and minerals) and are relatively easy to handle, transport and store owing to their low water content.

The winter cereal crop of wheat and barley thus furnished the peasantry's basic means of subsistence. The latter also helped to sustain the animals in the winter. Lentils and vetch (Kersenneh, i.e., horse lentils, or Vida ervilia) were also grown at times to supplement the staples and, when ploughed under, to enhance the principal grain crops by fixing nitrogen in the soil (green manuring). Deep rooted legumes opened up the soil, increasing aeration and bringing nutrients from deep layers of the subsoil to the surface: soil moisture increased and additional food was obtained. The quick growing nature of the legume crop also made an effective ground cover to prevent soil erosion and check weed growth.

The summer crop of Indian millet provided a good hedge against partial failure of the grain crop, thriving in marginal areas with poor soils and low, but variable, rainfall and responding well to nitrates. It also provided a valuable short-term grazing crop and prepared the soil for cultivation of a succeeding crop of winter barley. The summer sesame crop was the peasants' main, and frequently only, market crop. But it also had a purely agricultural advantage:

"Wherever it is grown, the succeeding winter crop is larger in consequence' (Brown 1938: 133). The additional two or three ploughings and weeding (thenayeh) the summer crop required left the earth in good tilth and was considered an investment in the coming winter crop. It was the unwritten law of the land that those who had planted a summer crop had the right to plant the next winter crop (Atran 1983a; cf. Hirsch to Pinsker, 4 April 1886, in Druvanov 1919: 751).

The seeding and growth requirements of the various crops required conscientious ploughing. This ploughing, which scraped the earth to a depth of 10 to 15 cm. loosened and cleansed the soil, maintained moisture by increasing the soil's absorptive capacity and killed weeds that prevent transpiration of water. In short, the sporadic rainfall, together with the growth characteristics of the various integrated crop routines, required that ploughing, seeding, weeding and harvesting be done as efficiently, and in as short a time, as possible. This could not have occurred without the complete co-operation and co-ordination of adjacent plot owners.

Clearly, the contention that the agricultural regime of the peasantry took no account of soil management and improvement is unwarranted. In this regard, the significance of the collective discipline involved in the fallowing of masha'a lands can hardly be overestimated:

Not only did fallowing ensure the land's continued productivity, it also supported the village livestock by leaving considerable stubble (20 to 30 cm. high) for fodder. Such livestock included work animals, such as oxen, mules, donkeys and, occasionally, horses and camels, but also sheep and goats. These latter supplied the peasantry with its primary source of meat, milk and durable fabric (Grant 1907: 142). While it appears that pasturing such flocks 'above the altitude of cultivation' contributed to soil erosion in the hills (Post 1891: 106), the implication that 'the plague of sheep and goats has always been reckoned a curse for agriculture' in the valleys (Granott 1952: 91-2) is greatly exaggerated. Indeed, without the weeding and manuring these animals provided, "fertilizer long-term agricultural utilization of alluvial soil would most probably have declined" (Kolars 1966: 584). 3

The social organization of masha'a in the Plain of Esdraelon.

The late nineteenth century witnessed a significant improvement in agricultural production (cf. Schékh 1984) and security of life in the plains of Palestine (cf. Lewis 1955). At the same time, the organisation of production and the distribution of landed property changed markedly. Consider what happened in the interior Plain of Esdraelon (Marj Ibn 'A'amr). From the early 1870's onwards, the Sursuks, a family of Syrian bankers with headquarters in Beirut, acquired title to the bulk of village lands in the Plain of Esdraelon.* By the mid-1920's most of this land had been sold off to the Jewish National Fund, and its erstwhile tenants evicted. Extensive cereal cultivation and herding were replaced by various forms of intensive agriculture and stockbreeding. Towns such as Nazareth and Jenin that serviced and locally marketed cereal production suffered a considerable drop in fortune (cf. Shaw Commission Report 1930: 453), while towns such as Haifa and Afula that were geared to servicing industrial and farming machinery and marketing cash crops and other fair-market items profited and grew accordingly (cf. Vital Statistics Tables, 1922-45, Department of Statistics, Palestine Government 1947: Tables Ag. A7).

The Arab villages in the area had a history of interrupted but recurrent settlement (Robinson & Smith 1841; Schumacher 1887). At the end of the eighteenth century, large tracts of the fertile valley of Esdraelon were abandoned under the rule of Ahmed Pasha 'el-Jezzar' ('The Butcher') (Browne 1806: 423; cf. Volney 1787) with 'barely a quarter of this beautiful country under cultivation' (Archives de la Chambre de Commerce de Marseilles, Série J-835, 10.5.1790).

Although by the middle of the next century much of the Plain was still 'in great part neglected' (Robinson 1856: 91), migrant settlers from the hills mingled with semi-nomadic Arab (as opposed to long-range camel herding Bedu), and 'we could see the tents of nomadic Arabs and the men ploughing the fields' (1856: 116). Once more ravaged by such powerful Bedouin tribes as the Bem-Skur in the early 1860's (Tristram 1865: 490), by the next decade 'many parts' of the Esdraelon were again being cultivated (Thomson 1882, II: 175) when the Turkish authorities began to implement Land Registration. Shortly thereafter it seems that “almost every acre of the Plain of Esdraclon is at this moment in the highest state of cultivation” owing no doubt in part to the fact “that it is perfectly safe to ride across it unarmed in any direction” (Oliphant 1886: 58; cf. Conder & Kitchener 1882, 11: so).

The social composition of the relatively isolated and exposed plains villages consisted of a somewhat amorphous combination of hill migrants and sedentarising semi-nomads (cf. Steuernagel 1925). The newfound security of life in the plains offered migrants from the agronomically poorer and remote hill areas a more regular source of livelihood (cf. Oliphant 1886); whereas the semi-nomads in the region were faced with a constantly decreasing area of manoeuvre that forced settlement (Ashkenazi 1938: 16-20). Among masha’a villages in the hills bordering the Esdraclon that escaped the initial fate of more exposed plains villages were Isfiyya and Umm el-Fahm. These were older continuously inhabited villages with a relatively solid social fabric characterised, in the one case, by a persistent network of inter-hamula ties, and, in the other, by a strong intra-hamula organisation,

The masha’a lands of these villages were nearly contiguous, forming a strip of land extending from the northwest to southwest frontier of the Plain. This strip lay by the ancient via maris linking Egypt with Syria. Isfiyya was perched on the summit of Mount Carmel (Jebel Mar Elias), overlooking its 5,000 dunams of masha’a land in the valley below from a height of over 500 meters, Umm el-Fahm was also situated at an altitude of nearly 500 meters in the Samarian Hills at some distance from its 144,000 dunams of valley land, only a portion of which were held in masha’a. From its branch-village (Khirbeh or eshiyeh) at the ancient tell of Megiddo (Armageddon), encompassing Khirbat Lajjun and Tell el-Mutsellim, the fields of Isfiyya’s branch-village, Jelameh (or Khirbat “Asafneh”) were in view at a distance of some 10 km. For both villages, as throughout Palestine, only valley lands devoted to field crops were systematically held in masha’a. Garden plots in the built-up area of the village (hawakir), as well as olive and fruit orchards, were generally free-hold (mulk).

For Umm el-Fahm, already a large village of some 2000 souls by the 1880’s (Oliphant 1886), evidence for a strong hamula organisation was clear-cut: “The village is divided into four quarters, each under its own Sheikh—el Jabarin, el Mahamin, el Mejahineh, and el Akbaryeh® (Conder & Kitchener 1881, I: 46). The division of masha’a lands followed strictly along hamula lines. Each hamula received a permanent allotment of land: 100 feddan each for Aghbaryeh and Mahamid, 67.5 for Mahajneh and 79.5 for Jabarin⁵ Each feddan represented the amount of land that a team of oxen could work in a season (26 to 30 days).⁶

Each hamula holding was also permanently divided into a number of agrarian zones, each zone (mawqa’) being characterised by its soil quality, accessibility, topography and so on (cf. Bergheim 18035; Latron 1936; Weunlersse 1946; Atran 1985a). The various zones ranged in size from a few hundred to nearly 3000 dunams (the Aghbaryeh mawqa’ of tell el-wayat) and from fairly shallow, rock and hilly land to deep, rich and even soil. For example, the masha’a holdings of the Mahajneh were divided into seven zones. Proceeding in order from the Khirbat Lajjun towards the town of Afula these were:

1. Tell el-asmar (“Tell of the black stones”) was characterised by good yields but difficulty in plowing owing to the numerous stones.
2. Wadi es-sit (“Wadi of the [beautiful passing] woman”) was rugged and rocky (waar) and thus not very productive.
3. Khalt es-suq (“The marketplace”) where formerly livestock were bought and sold had reasonably good yields.
4. Dhaher u dabt esh-sherif (“Hill of [the Bedouin ‘A’] id] Sherif”) had good soil but uneven terrain.
5. Edh-dhra’ (“The winnowing place”) was level land considered the richest and easiest to work.
6. El-khubeh (“The tell of the khubeh [plant]”) was hard to clear because of the underbrush.
7. Tell el-wayat wa el-na’imi (“The place of the wild animals and the na’imi [plant]”) was the least productive (khaffi).

Each zone was divided into exactly as many equal parcels as there were shares (feddan) in the hamula corporation. These shares were then distributed by lot (qura) to member households in proportion to the number of shares each household possessed in the hamula corporation. Originally, the number of shares equalled the number of teams of oxen that a household possessed. After registration, however, the number of shares were fixed. Over time, each household’s share tended to decrease owing to the practice of equal inheritance among sons.

The hama’il of Umm el-Fahm, like most hama’il in Palestine, were corporate patronymic groups that were not genealogically integrated. Nevertheless, membership in the corporation was expressed in a patrilineal idiom: aid due (a’uma) a member of the same hamula was aid owed a patrilineal kinsman (cf. Stavsky 1946: 100-10). If a man were too sick to plough, harvest or thresh, it was incumbent upon his fellow hamula members to come to his aid without recompense. If he was in conflict with someone outside the hamula, then members of his patronymic would be obliged to come to his defence. When this happened, the whole residential quarter of the village might be converted into a veritable stone fortress (this was true of Umm el-Fahm even into the 1950’s). Hamula members also exercised a marked degree of control over the disposition of one another’s women. Although direct lineal kinsmen (in the jeb) had first say as to whom their women should or should not marry, other hamula members could veto giving women over in marriage to other hama’il. Moreover, the fact that hamula members were adjacent plottolders in the masha’a lands required constant co-operation in agricultural details. The political, economic and social integrity of the multifunctional village hamula were thus one.

But the village was also a moral agent that encouraged the political, social and economic association of the different hama’il. Conflict between hama’il was subject to the arbitration of at least those village elders whose own families were not directly involved. The elders (ikhtiyariyeh) assured the common defence of the village against attack, and set the particular modalities for protecting the village patrimony. For example, in anticipation of a Bedouin raid during harvest time, the elders would see to it that hama’il helped one another to cut and bury away (in makmura) the greatest quantity of crop in the shortest possible time (cf. Laorty-Hadji 1856: 514; Voloey 1787: 379). The elders also mediated between government authorities and the various hama’il, although here there was a greater tendency for each hamula to come to its own terms with the agents of the government, especially in matters of tax collection.

Control over the disposition of women at the village level involved persuasion rather than the injunction of rights. A woman should presumably always have been given to a son of the village (ibn el-balad), all things being equal. By doing so one could keep a constant eye on the family honour (ard) that a woman invariably put at risk. Moreover, a wide network of affinal connexions between sections of different hama'il supplied a ready and effective store of potential political and economic allies. If renewed, affinal ties could be converted into matrilineal bonds that would underscore more lasting political and economic relationships. Matrilineal kinsmen, for example, could be expected to bolster one's position in the competition for ascendancy within one's own hamula, and, if one lacked capital, to be available for co-cultivation partnerships.

The overall composition of village and hamula was such as to discourage capital investment in the hamula's masha'a holdings from persons outside the village, but not from members of other hama'il within the village. A member of one hamula, finding himself short of capital, could enter into a partnership (sharika) with a member of another hamula who would supply the necessary oxen or seed for cultivating the land during one masha'a cycle. Such a partnership had to be agreed upon before the allotment of land by the hamula, and could not be dissolved until the next redistribution. In this way, members of one hamula could buy shares in the masha'a holdings of another. Each hamula sought to minimise the extent of the other's infiltration by offering more generous terms to fellow members when possible. But the general requirements of village life also fostered some degree of corporate interfacing between hama'il.

Besides, even if a certain number of shares in the hamula's holdings were transferred to an outside owner, no actual plots of land were lost. The new owner (mallik) only had the right to participate in the hamula's periodic redistributions, just like any other hamula shareholder (sahib fil masha'a). Even then it was usually the former proprietor who actually cultivated the land, paying the outside owner a rent on the land (gism el-'ard) of one fourth of the produce. So, the alienation of land shares did not necessarily entail alienation of the hamula's source of livelihood.

In the long run, regardless of who actually cultivated the land, the outside owner was only assured the right to collect rent on a (mathematical) share of the hamula's masha'a holdings, since plots invariably changed hands among owners after each cycle. The cultivator himself would be entitled to one fourth of the crop for his labour, and the remaining half of the crop would be directly apportioned according to the amount of capital contributed. Seed (bdhar) accounted for a full quarter of the produce, and a team of oxen for the other quarter. The tithe was usually taken from the threshing floor (bedar) before the division of the crop and apportioned among the four main factors of production: labour, land, seed and team.

Owing to its religious prestige as a patron of the Mosque and to extensive private holdings of olive groves and orchards, one section of the Aghbariyeh hamula was able to gain ascendancy over the others. From that position it also managed to acquire a dominant political role in the village by mediating with government authorities and gaining the right to collect the village's taxes. By thus obtaining access to large amounts of ready capital the head of the section, Hassan Sa'ad, having taken the title 'Effendi' managed to acquire substantial economic interest: about one third of the Aghbariyeh's masha'a lands, one fourth of Mahamid's and one fourth of Jabarin's. Only the rival Mahajneh hamula refused to cede land to Hassan Sa'ad Effendi; the Mahajneh did, however, sell off upwards of ten feddan worth of masha'a shares to a Christian resident of Nazareth. Still, members of the Mahajneh hamula worked as co-cultivators (contributing labour and occasionally capital) on Aghbariyeh lands.

Although Hassan Sa'ad Effendi had title to about one fourth of the total masha'a land of the village, he was unable to stabilise his plots and force an end to their periodic redistribution. Not only the Mahajneh, but also the majority of Jabarin, Mahamid and even Aghbariyeh fellahin refused to block or make exceptions to the periodic redistributions of any masha'a lands. Arguments that the land could be converted into more profitable orchards failed to move them: not only because they recognised that it would take at least seven years for the trees to bear marketable fruit, but because they realised that the entire culture of cereal production would thus be undermined. Informants who took part in the controversy over whether to stabilise or 'freeze' the land (ifraz barani) were cognisant of the social effects of the decline in traditional cereal culture. In their eyes, masha'a came to represent the last safeguard against the destruction of a whole way of life—a way of life that was evidently collapsing all around them.

The social corporations that were bound to extensive cereal production not only supplied a reliable, if economically uninspiring, source of livelihood. They also furnished a familiar strategic framework that allowed a certain latitude in directing social (e.g. marriage alliances) and economic (e.g. co-cultivation partnerships) life choices (cf. Atran 1985b). Such a framework thus provided for a continuing measure of control over one's fate at a time when the majority of fellahin seemed destined to become 'partners of the wind' (shrik el-hawa, cf. Post 1891: 105). It is this sentiment that the Palestine Royal Commission acknowledged, but did not seem to understand: "it appears evident that, in certain areas, the Arabs regard this [masha'a] system of tenancy, destructive as it is of all development, as a safeguard against alienation" (Peel Commission Report 1937: 219).

It was the internal strength of the hamula, fostered by competition within and between hama'il, that prevented the dominant shareholder from gaining a controlling and directing interest in the village corporation. Although the village hama'il did permit sale of land shares to persons outside the village, such sales were carefully watched and required at least the tacit assent of the village elders. Sales were prohibited to any outsider suspected of trying to convert land shares into alienable plots. This included representatives of various Zionist agencies. In this way also, the villagers managed to resist attempts by the authorities at Land Settlement, at least until the lands were seized by the new Israeli Government in 1948.⁷

Unlike the original inhabitants of the neighbouring Druze village of Dalich who apparently came from the Aleppo region, the first settlers in Isfiyya probably immigrated from Lebanon.⁸ The retreat of the Egyptian armies in 1840-41, brought in its wake the destruction of all but the two named Druze villages in the Carmel (Oliphant 1884). These two absorbed some of the homeless, as well as refugees from other ruined villages as far away as the Hauran. In 1859, when the British Consul estimated the number of inhabitants of Isfiyya at 400, tilling twenty feddan (Conder & Kitchener 1881, I: 281-822), Isfiyya already had a heterogeneous (though by no means amorphous) social composition consisting of several unrelated patronymic groups.

The twenty feddan mentioned apparently refer to the 'corn-land and olives [that] surround the village'. What is not reported, however, is the fact that the villagers also cultivated the lands of Wadi Kishon (Wadi Mugata'a), a narrow valley linking the Plain of Esdraelon to the Plain of Acre.

Since the grain on the hills matures some weeks later than grain in the valleys the fellahin were able to work both. The yield in the valley, though, could attain double that of a comparable surface in the hills. In the Wadi, which had two productive seasons a year, each feddan represented twenty-five hectares and was correspondingly referred to as a double, or 'Greek', feddan (feddan roumi), which also designated the amount of land that could be worked in a year." 9 Shares of land in Isfiyya were distributed directly to shareholders, and not indirectly through their hama'il as in Umm el-Fahm. Thus, each shareholding was counted as a fraction of the twentyfeddan roumi of the village corporation. Accordingly, each of Isfiyya's several agrarian zones were divided into twenty equal parcels. A quadrennial lottery would then award a full shareholder, who was usually capital owner (shaddad) as well, one parcel (maress) per zone; holders of half a share (shagha) received half a parcel, etc.

As the village grew the reduction and disproportion of household shares in the masha'a lands increased." 10 Reduction ensued from the practice of equal inheritance. This meant that sons would receive like fractions of the household share when their father died, or when he no longer felt able to administer household budget and farming operations. 11 Disproportion resulted from differential reproduction of families, and from the buying and selling of shares. Yet, until its abrogation in Isfiyya in the early 1930's, the masha'a remained the socio-economic linchpin of the village corporation in general, and the extended family household in particular. With its demise, factionalism would become the dominant mode of social integration above the level of the patronymic group, and the extended family household would soon fragment into nuclear families (Atran 1985a).

The corporate efficacy of the masha'a system in the face of reduction and disproportion depended to a significant extent on the availability of land elsewhere. Such land existed on the Carmel itself as open woodlands (ahrash)

Although appreciably less fertile and harder to work and clear, this land served as a safety valve against the fracturing of the domestic community and the fragmentation of its joint farm. Indeed, villagers considered both jointly farmed lands and open woodlands as masha'a.

In Isfiyya's masha'a days, the village family ('ayli) was generally a patrilocal extended household consisting of as yet unmarried sons and daughters, married sons and their families, spinster sisters, and, on occasion, bachelor brothers. 12 Married sons with grown children could only remain economically viable if they had about eight to ten hectares of land to work. Moreover, if they were bound exclusively to their share of the masha's lands their contribution to the labour of the joint household would be greater than that of the unmarried sons; their parts of the inheritance and the disposable budget, however, would be the same. In that event, the unbalanced relation between production and consumption would prevent the extended family farm from persisting, much less from increasing, at a rhythm at which new individual households formed. But if, as was the case until 1921, the woodlands around the village could be opened up and held privately by anyone desiring to do so, then the excess labour represented by the individual households of married sons could be productively channelled off and their greater land needs met. In this way, division of the father's estate and the setting up of separate households would represent a natural fissioning, rather than a brutal scission and fragmentation.

In fact, the old estate, that is, the patrimonial masha'a farm, might still be, and often was, managed jointly since the criteria for efficient economic planning would not have changed. Although there would no longer be a common budget, nor necessarily a common residence, agricultural management need not suffer. Furthermore, sisters-in-law would no longer be subject to the domestic pressures of a common account or to the ensuing suspicion that the brothers-in-law take advantage of their husbands. Still, sisters-in-law would work together seeding the joint farm (when their husbands shared the ploughing), minding each other's children, fetching water and generally offering sympathy and help to one another. Finally, there would be a tendency to create a jural link that would solidify the social, political and economic bonds of the domestically divided extended family by taking a brother's daughter as spouse for a son.

Now a father did not always decide that a son should exercise what the community recognised as a right to take one's patrilateral parallel cousin (bint 'amm) in marriage. Although it is impossible to obtain accurate statistics for unrecorded marriages that occurred from fifty to a hundred years ago, it appears that the decision was taken in regard to only about one of every two available patrilateral cousins. Yet, such marriage, while ideologically sanctioned and undoubtedly preferred as a consecratory union incarnating the integrity of the joint estate, was by no means the only sociologically significant or normative form of union. For once the preferred union had served to preserve the family patrimony, further economic, political and social calculations could not but favour various degrees of exogamous alliance (see Arran 1985b for recent statistics).

By thus keeping a woman in the family, one would be in a position to give up a woman to a more distant kinsman, and even to a villager from another patronymic group; or, since little or no brideprice would be given for a parallel cousin, one could better afford the capital outlay required to take in a woman from the outside. Such 'exogamous' unions could well serve to strengthen further the internal solidarity of the domestically divided extended family, by opening the joint farm to a wider network of potential suppliers of land, capital and labour. These other sources could then be tapped by the joint farm or the individual domestic unit as the need arose. With economic integrity comes political integrity, and affines might thus not only aid in the production of wealth but also in the accumulation of power and prestige.

The institutional importance of exogamy within the system of preferential exogamy is even more crucial to an understanding of masha'a operations beyond the level of the joint farm. The general structure of co-operation and co-ordination between members of the village corporation was expressed in the idiom of affinity (nasah); that is, villagers interpreted their mutual dependence in all masha'a operations other than those of the joint farm in terms of the duties and obligations that belong to affinal relationships. Thus, aid given was aid due to an affine; conflicts resolved were conflicts that were not supposed to have arisen between those 'whose wives are our sisters'.

The Druze of the village still consider one another affines (nasayib). Today, village endogamy runs to over 80 percent, and was doubtless higher in the past owing to the relative isolation of the Carmel villages. Informants of the older generation visualised relationships with their various sets of adjacent masha'a plottolders chiefly through the women (wives and sisters) relating them. Unless a neighbour happened to be a Christian, it was seldom that an affinal chain could not be found to link up adjacent plottolders, and often several alternate chains could be elicited. Yet, even Christians were treated as if they were affines in masha'a matters, being entitled to all considerations due affines in this respect.

If adjacent plottolders happened to be agnates or close cognates (one generation removed) genealogies were invoked; for neighbours who were neither agnates nor close cognates, however, there need not be any significant genealogical segment interposed in the affinal chain ultimately linking them. When it came to partnerships, though, the mode of reckoning was generally mediated by genealogy, unless the partnership was between Druze and Christian. In other words, informants usually tried to visualise their various partnerships in an idiom of consanguinity (see Atran 1985a for a schematic representation). Partners were considered ultimately married to the sisters and daughters of either agnates ('ammam) or cognates (ikhwal). Most often, it appears, partnerships were not renewed from one redistribution to the next, except those between brothers; although some partnerships were later repeated and partnerships between close consanguines were seemingly more frequent, such as those involving paternal or maternal uncles and their nephews. Thus, despite the fact that partners tended to change as often as neighbours, the former were treated in an idiom that implied some measure of social-structural duration. In fact, partnership (sharika) was not infrequently compared to 'mother's-brotherhood' (makhwal). Both imply, rather more informally than wikh patrikinship, mutual material aid, with the emphasis in the comparison on aid in tilling the land.

Yet, the conceptual line between neighbour and partner was not hard-and-fast. Yesterday's neighbours were potentially tomorrow's partners and vice versa. Indeed, the village as a whole was not only bound together by overlaying networks of affinity, but also thoroughly integrated through overlapping relationships of matrilinearity (the consequences of affinity in the ascending generation). This is not to say that such relations were always or generally harmonious, but by cross-cutting lines of social and economic division, they did prevent, or at least dilute, tendencies to scission in the community.

Unlike the idiom of patrilineality, the idioms of affinity and matrilinearity bespoke a situational rather than mechanical solidarity. But affinity and matrilinearity underscored different aspects of the village condition. Recourse to the idiom of affinity allowed the villagers to respond to an indeterminate set of needs. It was an eclectic means of expression, forming a kind of social canopy allowing villagers to configure all contingencies that might arise: for example, any of the various sets of circumstances that the lottery might turn up with each redistribution of masha'a. The ties expressed in the idiom of matrilinearity were also widespread throughout the social body politic, but they branched out in particular directions. Through them, the affairs of the moment became transactions between groups. Matrilateral links thus represented special nodes where hamula corporations interfaced. The partnerships that interlinked the more enduring joint estates might dissolve; the matrilineal relationships that interlaced the more permanent patronymic stocks might wither (if the affinal link were not renewed after a couple of generations); but in their passing they would knot and strengthen the social fabric.

As long as the social fabric held firm, Isfiyya, like Umm el-Fahm, was able to avoid alienation of its common landed patrimony. Nevertheless, two extraneous developments combined to put an end to the masha'a in Isfiyya by the early 1930's. Informants cite the British decision to close off the woodlands to further expansion as one of the two main causes of the masha's system's demise.

The other cause cited was the acquisition of titles to some of the communal land by Jewish colonists who pressed the Mandatory Government to allow them exclusive cultivation rights under the Land Settlement Ordinances.

In Turkish times, a village's confines were set as the limits beyond which a man shouting from a house in the village could no longer be heard (a court decision at the beginning of the British Mandate fixed this at 2.5 km.). All land not cultivated and lying outside the territorial limits of the village was considered 'dead' (mewar), and any land left fallow for three consecutive years was deemed 'abandoned' (mahiul). Until the Mahlul Land Ordinance (1920) and the Mewat Land Ordinance (1921) rights to cultivate such land could be obtained by payment of a 'redemption price' or upon proof that it had been under continuous cultivation for at least ten years. After passage of the ordinances these lands could only be opened with prior consent of the authorities. Any lands cleared without consent were subject to seizure by the State. Despite Isfiyya's stiff resistance to the ordinances (cf. Sawyer 1925: 8), in the end opportunities for the expansion of village farming were greatly reduced, if not eliminated.

Although Umm el-Fahm also disposed of communal woodlands, they were not part of a large forested block of territory such as the Carmel, which the Mandate authorities sought to convert into a prime example of the State Domain. Nor did Umm el-Fahm's woodlands serve quite the same 'safety-valve' function as Isfiyya's. Not only did Umm el-Fahm have considerably more income from olive and fruit orchards, but its richest families also brought in income from land and land shares acquired from other villages,

In the late nineteenth century, Badi'a Effendi of Acre (one of the principal benefactors of the Bahai faith) began buying into Isfiyya's masha'a lands with the consent of the Mukhtar and the village elders. Ultimately he acquired about one fourth of the total. In the mid 1920's he sold the titles to the Jewish National Fund (Keren Kayemer) without consulting the villagers (cf. Granovsky 1931: table 8). When the villagers discovered this they decided to end the periodic redistributions of the land in order to benefit from the law granting title to anyone who could prove continuous cultivation for ten years.

The Land Settlement Ordinance (1928) and the Land Settlement Amendment Ordinance (1930) had just come into effect. These aimed to end masha's in the country as a whole through a village by village cadastral. Henceforth, individuals would receive title deeds for each separate plot of land they had cultivated in the last masha'a cycle. Between June 1929 and February 1932, however, masha'a had been abolished by official action in only eight villages (see Granott 1952: 241). In Isfiyya, the last redistribution had occurred in 1927, Thus, when Nejib Mansour became Mukhtar in 1932, the decision was made to 'unofficially freeze' (ifraz barani) the land in the knowledge that the Settlement Officer was unlikely to reach the village for some time.

As it turned out, the Settlement Officer did not reach Isfiyya until 1941 despite the entreaties of the Jewish National Fund representatives. Although the representatives had official deeds to the land (gawashin) and signed documents from the villagers naming locations and proprietors of the sold plots, the latter documents proved problematic in the Land Court. This is because those same plots had since been redistributed to several other villagers in succeeding lotteries. The village finally came to an out-of-court settlement by granting the Fund lands in the extreme northwest and east. So, for the time being, the villagers had managed to save the bulk of their masha'a lands. But these were now stabilised (mafruz), with individual holdings permanently fixed and scattered. Much of this land was later bought off, especially after the establishment of the State of Israel; it had, in any case, since ceased to function as a patrimony for the village corporation and the joint farm.

Conclusion

For the marginal population of the plains, the masha'a system proved particularly susceptible to outside interference that would eventually dismantle it. First of all, it was a native system that imperial and colonial authorities had little, if any, economic regard for. The authorities were also largely oblivious of the social nature of masha'a, that is, of the organic relationship between village social organisation and the agrarian regime. They were thus content to force, or allow the peasantry to suffer, economic changes with minimal consideration of the social consequences."

Secondly, for the increasingly large marginal population of the plains, the social-structural mechanisms most apt to resist, or at least stall, the economic fragmentation and social disintegration of the village were lacking. Forced registration of lands and the consequent large-scale transference of titles placed the economic fate of the marginal peasantry in the hands of absentee landlords.

In the competition for the economic control of Palestine that pitted the capital of the Arab landlord against Jewish capital in a depressed agricultural market, it was the latter that proved more in tune with the market forces then prevailing in the world economy and which, through the Mandate, predominated in Palestine (Stein 1984; cf. Bonn  1935: 117; Firestone 1975). Thus, the fact that Arab landlords were compelled to sell off (surreptitiously) their holdings to the colonists, coupled with the inability of the peasants to block the decisions of their landlords, meant that the peasants would have to give up their familiar, if not wholly chosen, way of life.

The case was otherwise, however, for a significant minority of older, continuously inhabited, hill villages. For the most part, they had evolved flexible, self-sustaining mechanisms of economic isolation and internal social integration. Before registration, these mechanisms had enabled the hill villages to implement masha'a when conditions allowed, and to retreat from it when circumstances were no longer favourable. With registration, retreat became possible only on pain of forfeit. But income from the hills, coupled with a history of socio-economic coordination, maximised the possibilities of wholesale registration of their valley lands and minimised the opportunities for piecemeal alienation.

Political considerations briefly alluded to above have doubtlessly abetted in the often rigid and simplistic interpretation of the intricate relationship between social organisation and the agrarian regime in the masha'a villages of Palestine and elsewhere in the Levant. While the area was under Ottoman rule, European inquiries into the region's political, social and economic character were almost exclusively devoted to biblical and geographical surveys. There was little interest in the people as such. Thus, Thomson, who joined in Robinson's explorations and was acknowledged by Oliphant as an authority on the country, typically remarked:

To this day, the only competent descriptions of masha'a agriculture in Palestine consist in a handful of pages written by a few contributors to the British-run Palestine Exploration Fund Quarterly Statement in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. The discussions are fairly general and barely suggest the wide variation in the forms of masha'a prevalent throughout the country. There is no sustained case-by-case (or even a single detailed case) study of the relationship between village social organisation and the actual implementation of masha'a. In Syria as well, the only serious, but still summary, evaluations of masha'a are those of the French colonial geographer-historians, notably Latron and Weulersse. Although Weulersse especially had a decided anthropological bent, he did not attempt a systematic analysis of village social organisation, much less its relationship to the agrarian regime.

Only in the last three decades has anthropology turned its considerable analytic skills on the Middle East. Understandably, it is the evolving relationship between agriculture and social organisation over the last thirty years that has come most clearly into focus. The actual operation of masha'a is generally excluded from this purview, having largely disappeared by the time methodical fieldwork commenced. Yet, to reconstruct this many-faceted socio-economic regime, anthropologists and historians usually depend on the often limited and unreliable reports of explorers, colonists and colonial functionaries.

This has done much to obfuscate, but little to clarify, the politically sensitive issue of the land problem in Palestine.

To be sure, there is something to Barth's suggestion concerning the internal strength of a village's social fabric and its susceptibility to outside interference and control. But apart from a few noteworthy exceptions (e.g. Peters 1976), an unfortunate tendency to assume the adequacy of Bedouin tribal models vitiates many of the generalisations about the nature of colonial and precolonial peasant societies in the Middle East. For these all too comprehensible and beguiling accounts of agnatic association and dissociation fail to capture crucial regional differences in the history of social and agrarian interrelations. Given a heavily added dose of political sensibility often leading to biased appraisals of the Palestine land problem in particular, knowledge of the varied course of sedentary organisation and plains agriculture remains in a predictably lamentable state. This article, while still woefully insufficient, aims simply to introduce some subtlety into the question,

NOTES

1. Concerning Egypt, in particular, and the Middle East, in general, Baer (1966: 151) concludes:

Now, in Upper Egypt where masha'a was common, detailed knowledge of landholdings was available to authorities from an early date, unlike the case in the Levant and Iraq. This circumstance may indeed have facilitated a ready exploitation of the peasantry, specifically by appropriating the collective discipline of the masha'a system (cf. Poliak 1939: 69-70). But this state of affairs by no means warrants the conclusion that masha'a was intrinsically disposed to, or created by, a 'feudal' management.

Similar considerations apply to North Africa. Some see masha'a as the creation of a fiscal system imposed by the authorities on settling tribes. This supposedly had nothing to do with agrarian collectivism, but was a creation of the Turkish or Moroccan system of government (see Bonn  1955: 117-18). Nevertheless, even when government control was lax, peasants kept to the system (Hoffherr 1932: 124; cf. Ageron 1968). In Tunisia:

'In certain tribes (Frachich, Nefzaoua), a periodic division of plots was decided upon by the mi'ad after the rains' (Valens: 1981: 714; of. Bardin 1039); while in Libya, too, tribes spontaneously decided that, 'whenever the rain falls, the land is available for all, in equal measures, to plough; the decision concerning the detailed allocation of strips of ploughland is taken summarily by casting lots as soon as the rain falls' (Peters 1976: 70).

2. According to the Johnson-Crosbie Report (1930: 45), where masha'a prevailed in Palestine, It is useless to expect that any land will be weeded or fertilized, that trees will be planted, or, in a word, that any development will take place'. In the case of Transjordan, Walpole (1944) opines: 'it is doubtful if a tenure more inimical to farming could have been devised by any community'. For Syria, Klat (1957: 19) avers that: 'Musha tenure is, undoubtedly, one of the main reasons of the present low productivity of the once prosperous plains of the interior of Syria and constitutes an obvious bar to any form of agricultural progress'. Likewise for Warriner (1966: 76), commenting on masha'a in the Levant and Iraq: "Of course the system has great disadvantages, since it prevents any investment in the land and is an obstacle to any attempt at progress. The individual cultivator is precluded from manuring the land or undertaking any improvement such as terracing against erosion .

3 In fact, Ottoman attempts to end fallowing and grazing by imposing a 'thorn' or 'weed tax (malshok) on the 'last' produce of temporarily idle land could not but undermine the system of extensive agriculture in the country (Shaw Commission Report 1930: 450). Without rest or the enrichment and weeding contributed by grazing animals, the fertility of valley lands would inevitably decline. Forced into the hills, flocks would do considerable damage to the vegetation protecting against the erosion of shallow hill soil. In sum, the peasant would have to expend ever increasing amounts of (unavailable) capital and labour on an ever decreasing return for both high and lowland cultivation.

It is worth noting in this respect that the first serious disputes between the fellahin and Jewish colonists in the 1880's at the Gedera and Petah Tikvah settlements in the Martime Plain have been attributed to what "was really a customary village quarrel (fiprah kifarit rigilak)" (Dinor 1954: 96); that is, 'the Jewish purchasers were not acquainted with local customs regarding freedom of pasturing' (Porath 1975: 375). Yet like other disputes that followed, the quarrel over "grazing rights" was nearly always a quarrel over attempts by the fellahin to recover at least partial use of lost sasha'a lands, as eye-witness accounts by the colonists themselves make clear (e.g. Hirsch to Pinsker, 4 April 1886, in Druyanov 1919: 747-53). But inasmuch as the first colonists were generally unaware of the intermittent nature of masha'a and its intimate relationship to peasant herding, the erroneous conception of the Palestinian plains as largely given over to pasturage is comprehensible, The mistake is less comprehensible, or at least less easily dismissed as ingenuous, when repeated by modern commentators (cf. Haycraft Commission Report 1921: 57).

4. Articles 8 and 9 of the Ottoman Land Code of 12 Ramadan 1274 AH. (21 April 1858) prohibited communal ownership of the land and granted a prescriptive right of usufruct (tasarruf) only to individuals who could demonstrate actual possession and cultivation of a plot for at least ten consecutive years (hag el-garar). Since land previously held in masha'a precluded prior possession for more than a few years (i.e. for not more than one redistributive cycle of the masha'a), peasants could only obtain usufruct rights under the second and third provisions of Article 78. Here registration (tabu) was granted against payment of a redemption price (bedal el-nithl or hedat er-fabui). Villagers refusing to pay the tabu lost any claim on the land, which could then be auctioned off.

5 This permanent division of masha'a lands among hama'il was somewhat unusual for Palestine. Most villages with strong hama'il periodically apportioned land among the hama'il; and each hamula, in turn, then redistributed parcels among its member households by lottery (cf. Stavsky 1946; Cohen 1965; Antoun 1972). In Umm el-Fahm, though, there were only periodic redistributions within the hamula, and not first between hama'il. But the method of redistribution current in Umm el-Fahm was not unheard of elsewhere. For example, in the village of Isdud about a quarter of the land was held in masha'a, as with Umm el-Fahm (Auvhagen 1907: 50). Also, Isdud's masha'a land was divided into four blocks and given to four hama'il that lived in four separate quarters of the village,

Each hamula received its holding with fixed boundaries. A given block was reckoned as the property of the hamula and could not be exchanged. Within the hamula, land was divided among the individual households by lot every two years. In Umm el-Fahm, redistributions were sometimes every two years, at other times every (our, as with Isfiyya.

6. Conder (1878, II: 245) sets the feddan in the plains at 112-144 Turkish dunams (one Turkish dunam equaling 0.00193 hectares). By the 1880's the Ottoman Government had fixed the standard feddan at 100 dunams (Schumacher 188g: 163-4). During the British Mandate the Turkish dunam was superseded by a metric dunam equal to 1/10 hectare. Occasionally, however, the double, or 'Greek', 'feddan (feddan roumi) was the accepted surface measure. For example, Isfiyya's masha'a lands measured 20 feddan roumi, each feddan FOtiHI comprising 240 dupnams.

7 The opposition of certain segments of the Arab landowning elite to the political ambitions of Zionism did, it is true, slow the process of breaking up the masha'a and alienating the land. But this political strategy of resistance proved economically most effective with those villages whose internal corporate structure was strong enough to meet that of the landowning elite half way (see Atran in press).

8. With the permission of the editor of L'Homme, this description of masha'a in Isfiyya is taken from a more detailed discussion of the historical relationship between the village's social organisation and agrarian regime (Atran 19854).

9. Isfiyya was the subject of a study by Leonard Kasdan (1961) in the mid-1950's. In line with Murphy and Kasdan's (1959) thesis about Arab kinship generally, Kasdan argues that: 'the Druze are patrilineal in descent, yet their pattern of integration 1% bilateral'.

Furthermore, Within Isfiyya . . . consanguinity can only operate as a basis for the organization of ongoing groups of a corporate nature when conflict occurs between unrelated groups. As a consequence, integration at larger levels of magnitude must be based upon some other principle . . . the principle at work is affiliation with factional groups (1941: 9o).

The two chief sources of error in Kasdan's analysis of this purported 'type case' of Arab sedentary society are the related presuppositions that (1) patronymic groups cannot constitute social corporations because they cannot structurally discriminate agnates from cognates, and that (2) the practice and ideology of preferential endogamy applies only to agnatic groups. Concerning (1), however, even if (2) were correct, the fact that the various jeb of a hamula are not genealogically linked entails that the hamula is not bilaterally integrated, since matrilineal connexions thus also cannot ramify through the genealogy of the kamula. Moreover, as indicated below, (2) does not apply to Isfiyya, in particular, nor to sedentary Arab villages, in general (Atran 1985b). Indeed, in the past the faction scarcely had a corporate function in village life. Up until the end of the village masha'a, the village as a whole constituted a political and economic corporation based on affinity and matrilineality, which was largely undivided along factional lines (Arran 1985ad), Kasdan, though, makes no mention of masha'a, arguing that 'economic co-operation is a strictly family affair. Consequently it plays no part in defining solidary kin units. Land is not only alienable but must be divided among one's heirs' (1961: 85).

He further errs in his contention that Isfiyya's valley lands, where masha'a was practised, were since "Turkish times © . . . secondary in importance and value to the villagers from an agricultural standpoint", as supposedly were valley lands elsewhere in Palestine (1961: 30).

10. The population of Isfiyya increased by about 50 per cent, over the second half of the last century. Three quarters were Druze and a quarter Greek Catholic (Schumacher 1887: 178; Millinen 1907: 150). By 1932, following the last masha'a redistribution on record, the village numbered 750, with about the same proportion of Druze to Christians (cf. Ben Zvi 1934: 71).

11. Under Muslim law, which also applied to the Druze, sons were entitled to equal parts of the father's estate and daughters to half parts. In practice, however, daughters rarely pressed their claim. To do otherwise would mean losing the protection of her father's family, which would leave her completely at the mercy of her husband's family for whom she always remains a stranger,

12. Ayli is also a generic term for something in the order of 'family'. As such it may also designate the members of a hamula, a jeb (or 'azab), or a nuclear family. The same applies to dar, which encompasses a more general notion of 'household'. It may also denote the members of a hamsda, a jeb or an isolated dwelling unit. "Ayli and dar, however, are by no means synonymous. Although both may have identical extensions, their intensions differ. "Ayli signifies a kin group in its relationship to other like kin groups, whereas dar refers to a given 'ayli's domestic constitution. Thus, political alignment is usually ascribed to the 'ayli, while dar indicates domestic activity and co-residence (to the extent it exists: for example, in the 'quarter', or bara, of a hamula).

13. As a political aftermath to the disturbances of 1929, two different inquiries by representatives of the colonial government on the state of Arab agriculture in 1930 indicated that the traditional methods of extensive cereal cultivation, in general, and masha'a, in particular, could not accommodate both an increasing Arab rural population and continued colonisation (Shaw Commission Report 1930: 120—1; Hope-Simpson Report 1930: 142). The official Zionist response insisted that accommodation was possible far into the future if only the Arab peasantry were to learn to live intensively on less land, as the colonists obviously were capable of doing (Granovsky 1931). Since it was economically impossible for the Jewish population to continue to grow apace with the fellahin by adopting the methods of Arab agriculture, it was up to the latter to retool their economy and reorganise their culture accordingly: "A very important point bearing on the development of the colonization is that the Jewish authorities rejected the idea that the standard of living of the colonists should be dictated by the economics of the farming system at any given time" (Keen 1946: 25).

REFERENCES

- Ageron, C.-R. 1968. Les Algériens musulmans et la France, 2 vol. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France.
- Antoun, R. 1972. Arab village. Bloomington: Indiana Univ. Press.
- Ashkenan, T. 1938, Tribus semi-nomades de la Palestine du Nord. Paris: Paul Geuthner.
- Aswad, B. 1971. Property control and social strategies: settlers on a Middle Eastern plain (Anthrop. Pap. 44). Ann Arbor: Museum of Anthropology, University of Michigan.
- Atran, S. 1985, Démembrement social et remembrement agraire dans un village palestinien, Homie 28: 111-35, 1985. Managing Arab kinship and marriage. Social Sci. Info. 24, 650-06. in press. Le rôle du masha'a dans la question foncière en Palestine, 1858-1948. Annales Economies-Sociétés-Civilisations.
- Auhagen, H. 1907. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Landesnatur und der Landwirtschaft Syriens. Berlin: Paul Parey.
- Aumann, M. 1975. Land ownership in Palestine 1880-1948. In The Palestinians (ed.) M. Curtis. New Brunswick: Transaction Books.
- Ayoub, M. 1959. Parallel cousin marriage and endogamy. J. Anthropol. 15, 266-75.
- Baer, G. 1966. Population and society in the Arab East, New York: Praeger.
- Baldensperger, P. 1900. Women in the East. Palest. Explor. Fd. Q. Statist., 171-90.
1906. The immovable East. Palest. Explor. Fd. Q. Statist., 13-23, 191-97.
- Bardin, P. 1939. Les Jebalia de la région de Gafsa. Rev. Tunis, 30, §7-126.
- Barth, F. 1953. Principles of social organization in Southern Kurdistan (Bull. 7). Oslo: Universitets Etnografiske Museum.
1954. Father's brother's daughter marriage in Kurdistan, SWest, J. Anthropol. 10, 164-71.

- Ben-Zvi, I. 1954. The Druze community in Israel, Frac! Explor. |. 4, 65-76.
- Bergheim, S. 1895. Land tenure in Palestine. Palest. Explor. Fd 0). Statemt, 191-99.
- Blum, J. 1971. Lord and peasant in Russia from the ninth to the nineteenth century. Princeton: Univ.Press.
- Bonné, A. 1935. Paldstina: Land und Wirtschaft. Berlin, 1955. 1955. State and economics wvm the Middle East. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul.
- Brown, M. 1938. Agriculture. In Economic organization of Palestine (ed.) S. Himadeh, Beirue:American Press.
- Browne, W. 1806, Travels in Africa, Egypt, and Syria from the year 1792 to 1798. London.
- Cahen, C. 1953. L'évolunon de liga' du IX® au XIII siecle. Annales Econ. -Soc.-Civilis 8, 25-52.
- Chelhod, J. 1965. Le mariage avec la cousine paralléle dans le système arabe. Homme 3-4, 113-73.
1960. Les structures dualistes de la société bédouine. Homme 9, 8g-112,
- Cohen, A. 1965. Arab border-villages in [srael. Manchester: Univ. Press.
- Conder, C. 1878. Tent work in Palestine, 2 vol. London.& H. Kitchener 1881-1880. The survey of Western Palestine, o vol. London: Palestine Exploration Fund Publications.
- Cresswell, R. 1976. Lineage endogamy among Maronite mountaineers. In |. Peristiany, ed.Mediterranean family structures. Cambridge: Univ. Press.
- Cuinet, V. 1896. Syrfe, Liban et Palestine. Paris: Ernest Leroux.
- Dinor, Ben Zion 1954. Sefer toldor ha-haganna, vol. 1, Tel Aviv: Hasifiya Ha-tsiomt (in Hebrew).
- Druyanov, A. 1919. Kitavim li-ioldot Hibbat-tzion wi-yishuv Eretz Yisrael, vol. 1. Odessa: Omanut (inHebrew),
- English, P. 1966. City and village in Iran: settlement and economy in the Kirman Basin. Madison: Univ. ofWisconsin Press.
- Ferneu, R. 1970. Shaykh and effendi: changing patterns of authority among the El Shabana of Southern Iraq. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard Univ. Press.
- Firestone, Y. 1974. Crop-sharing economics in Mandatory Palestine. Middle East. Stud. 11, 3-22,175-95.
- Granott [Granovsky], A. 1952. The land system in Palestine. London: Eyre & Spottiswoode.
- Granovsky, A. 1931. Land and the Jewish Reconstruction in Palestine, Jerusalem: Miskhar va-Ta'asia.
- Grangvist, H. 1931. Marriage conditions in a Palestinian village. Helsingfors; Centraltryckereit.
- Grant, E. 1907. The peasamiry of Palestine. Mew York: The Pilgrim Press.
- Haider, 5. 1942. Land problems in Irag. Thesis, University of London.
- Haycraft Commission Report 1921. Palestine disturbances in May, 1921: Report of the Commission of Inquiry with Correspondence Relating Thereto. London: HMSO,
- Hoffherr, R. 1932. L'#conomie marocaine. Paris: Librairie du Recueil Sirey.
- Hope-Simpson Report (1930) Palestine: report on immigration, land, settlement and development. London: HMSO,Jaussen, A. 1908. Cowtames des Arabes au pays de Moab. Paris: J. Gabalda.
- Johnson-Crosbie Report 1932. Report on the economic conditions of agriculturalists in Palestine.Jerusalem: Government Printing Office.
- Kasdan, L. 1061. Isfiyya: social structure, fission and faction in a Druze village. Thesis, University of Chicago.
- Keen, B. 1946. The agricultural development of the Middle Eas: a repent to the Director General, Middle East Supply Centre, May, 1945. London: HMSO.
- Khuri, F. 1970. Parallel cousin marriage reconsidered. Man (N.5.) 5, 500-618.
- Klar, P. 1957. Musha holdings and land fragmentation in Syria. Mid. East econ. Pap. 4, 12-23.
- Klein, F. 1883. Life, habits, and customs of the fellahin of Palestine. Palest. Explor. Fd ©). Statemi, 41-48.

- Kolars, J. 1966. Locational aspects of cultural ecology: the case of the goat in non-Western agriculture, Geogr. Rev. 56, 577-84.
- Laorty-Hadji, P'. 1856, La Syrie, la Palestine et la Judée. Paris: Bolle-Lasalle.
- Latron, A. 1936. La vie rurale en Syrie et au Liban. Beyrouth: Mémoires de Institut Français de Damas.
- Lewis, N. 1935. Frontiers of settlement in Syria, 1800-1950. Int. Aff. 31, 48-60.
- Lutfiyya, A. 1966. Baytin, a fordanian village. The Hague: Mouton.
- Macalister, R. & E. Masterman 1905. A history of the doings of the fellahin during the first half of the nineteenth century, from native sources, Palest. Explor. Fd ©. Statemt, 343—56.
- Marx, E. 1967. Bedouin of the Negev, New York: Praeger,
- Marx, K. 1967. Capital, vol. 3. New York: International Publishers.
- Mäilinen, G. 1907. Beiträge zur Kenntnis des Karmels. Z. dtsch. Paläst.-Ver. 30, 117-207.
- Milinen, G. 1907. Beiträge zur Kenntnis des Karmels. Disch. Verein Erforsch. Paläst.-Z. 30,
- Murphy, R. & L. Kasdan 1959. The structure of parallel cousin marriage. Am. Anthropol. 61, 17-20.
- Musil, A. 1908. Arabia Petraea (vol. 3.). Vienna: Ethnologischer Reisebericht.
- Oliphant, L. 1884. The Khurbets of Carmel. Palest. Explor. Fd Q.Q. States, 30-44.
1886. Haifa, or life in modern Palestine, Edinburgh: Blackwood.
- Partai, R. 1949. Musha'a tenure and co-operation in Palestine. Am. Anthropol. 51, 436-45.
- Peel Commission Report 1937. Palestine Royal Commission Report. London: HMSO,
- Peters, E. 1963. Aspects of status and rank amongst Muslims in a Lebanese village. In Mediterranean countrymen (ed.) |. Piee-Rivers, The Hague Mouton, 1976. Aspects of affinity in a Lebanese Maronite village. In Mediterranean family structures (ed.
1977. Peristiany. Cambridge: Univ. Press.
- Pinner, L. 1030. Wheat culture in Palestine. Bull. Palest. econ. Soc. (2).
- Poliak, A. 1939. Feudalism in Egypt, Syria, Palestine and the Lebanon. London: Royal Asiatic Society.
- Porath, Y. 1975. The political awakening of the Palestinian Arabs and their leadership towards the end of the Ottoman period, In Studies on Palestine during the Ottoman period (ed) M. Ma'oz. Jerusalem; The Magnes Press.
- Post, G. 1891. Essays on the sects and nationalities of Syria and Palestine. Palest. Explor. Fd Q.Q. Statemi, QO=147.
- Robinson, E. 1856. Later biblical researches in Palestine and the adjacent regions: a journal of travels in the year 1852. London: John Murray.
- & E. Smith 1841. Biblical researches in Palestine, Mount Sinai and Arabia Petrae (3 vols). London: John Murray.
- Rosenfeld, H. 1957. An analysis of marriage and marriage statistics for a Moslem and Christian Arab village. Ine. Arch. Ethnogr. 68, j2-62.
1964. From peasantry to wage labor and residual peasantry: the transformation of an Arab village. In Process and pattern in codtire: essays in honowr of Julian H. Stewart (ed) R. Manners. Chicago: Aldine.
- 1968, Change, barriers to change, and contradictions in the Arab village family. Am. Anthropol. 70, 732-52.
1976. Social and economic factors in explanation of the increased rate of patrilineal endogamy in the Arab village in Israel. In Mediterranean family structures (ed.) J. Peristiany. Cambridge: Univ. Press.
- Ruppin, A. 1918. Syria: an economic survey. New York: The Provisional Zionist Committee.
- Sawer, E. 1925. Report of the Department of Agriculture, Forests and Fisheries. Palestine Annal Report, Jerusalem: Government Printing Office.
- Schiolch, A. 1984. Le développement économique de la Palestine: 1856-1882. Rev. End. palesr. (10), 93-114.
- Schumacher, G. 1887. Population list of the Livi of "Akka. Palest. Explor. Fi ©). Statemt, 169-01. 188g. Deer arabische Plug. Z. disch, Paläst.-Ver. 12, 157-66.

Shaw Commission Report 1930. Palestine Commission on the Disturbances of August, 1929. London: HMSO.

Stahl, H. 1966. Les anciennes communautés villageoises roumaines, Paris; Editions du CNRS.

Stavsky, M. 1946. Ha-Kfar ha-aravi, Tel Aviv: Am Oved (in Hebrew).

Stein, K. 1984. The land question in Palestine, 1917-1939. Chapel Hill: Univ. of North Carolina Press. Steuernagel, D. 1925. 'Der "Adschun nach den Aufzeichnungen' von G. Schumacher. 2. Die sesshafte Bevölkerung des "Adschun. Z. Dtsch. Paläst.-Ver, 48, 201-352, Serickland Report 1930. Report by Mr. C.F. Strickland of the Indian Civil Service on the possibility of introducing a system of agricultural cooperation in Palestine. Jerusalem: Government Printing Office.

Sweet, L. 1960, Tell Togaan, a Syrian village. Ann Arbor: Univ. of Michigan Press, Tannous, A. 1943. Land tenure in the Middle-East. Foreign Agr. (Office of Agricultural Relations) 7, 170~7.

Thomson, W. 1882. The land and the book (2 vols). New York: Harper, Tristram, H. 1865. The land of Israel. London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

Valensi, L. 1981. The Tunisian fellahs in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. In The Islamic Middle East, 700-1900 (ed.) A. Udovitch, Princeton: Univ. Press.

Volney, C.-F. 1787. Voyage en Syrie et en Egypte. Paris: Volland.

Walpole, C. 1944. Land settlement in Transjordan. Proceedings of Conference of Middle East Agricultural Development. Cairo: Middle East Supply Centre.

Warriner, D. 1966. Land tenure problems in the Fertile Crescent in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. In The economic history of the Middle East, 1800—1914 (ed.) C. Issawi. Chicago: Univ. Press.

Weulersse, J. 1940. Le pays des Alamites, vol. 1. Tours: Arrault.

1946. Paysans de Syrie et du Proche-Orient, Paris: Gallimard.

Baha'i Planning for Non-Baha'i Children

The Baha'is always claim that they want to create a spiritual atmosphere for the development of the society .That is the reason they want to conduct children moral classes.

Their apex body the Universal House of Justice have asked the Baha'is all over the world that to establish children moral classes in their neighborhood inviting all the non Baha'i children and their parents. In these classes the Baha'is give small doses of Baha'i Faith teaching to these tiny tots who are as young as 5 years. Naturally when they reached maturity they are already vaccinated by Baha'i Faith and they will easily accept the Faith. In the process they will invite their non-Baha'i parents also towards the Faith. The unaware parents will think that somebody is spiritualising their children on truthfulness , honesty, obedience to the parents etc. But the real purpose is attracting them towards the Baha'i Faith.

1. The Christian priests have openly objected and warned them not to conduct Baha'i classes with Christian children. In Sri Lanka the Buddhist Monks have warned the Baha'is that do classes only with Baha'i children not with Buddhist.
2. In Uzbekistan when the Government officials raided a Baha'i meeting they found that many small non Baha'is children were being proselytised. When the officials asked them have you taken the permission from their parents? The Baha'is replied that we are having Tea and for that we need not take permissions. The officials gave them a strict warning and deported a few of them.
3. In many Junior youth programmes of the Baha'is the Baha'i Administration facilitate the meetings between young boys and girls so as the spread immorality.
4. Here are two letters as a reference which the Baha'i apex body has sent for conducting Baha'i children classes.

“With regard to neighborhood children’s classes, this is a most promising development which will undoubtedly attract to the Faith many families concerned about the spiritual and moral education of their children, and the friends should not underestimate the power of their children becoming involved in them. Indeed, many stories have been received that describe a strengthening of Baha’i identity as Baha’i children participate in classes with children from the wider society.”

“The establishment of children’s classes, one of the core activities of the Five-Year Plan, is intended to address young people’s need for spiritual education up to about age 11. An outward-looking orientation in this sphere of service has enabled Baha’is across the world to reach out to greater numbers of children than could ever have been contemplated heretofore. In particular, Baha’i communities have increasingly come to conceive of the education they offer as being for all children, without distinguishing between those that come from a Baha’i background and others. Clearly, this has implications for the organization and coordination of classes. It also has a profound impact on the conception of the Baha’i community in terms of its interactions with wider society.”

The Baha'i Faith is hypocrisy personified.

(رسالة مؤرخة 9 تشرين الأول/أكتوبر 2007 كتبت بالنيابة عن بيت العدل الأعظم إلى أحد الأحياء)

أيها الحبيب العزيز

تلقى بيت العدل الأعظم رسالتك الإلكترونية ... المتعلقة بصفوف الأطفال ... ، وقد طلب منا إرسال الرد التالي

... نقدر اهتمامك القلبي بتربية الأطفال البهائيين ورغبتك في توفير مناهج دراسي بهائي مركزي يتبع برنامجاً مدروساً ومنهجياً للتعليم

إذا كانت لديك اقتراحات حول طبيعة البرنامج الذي يجري تطويره على الصعيد المركزي، فإننا نشجعك على تبادل أفكارك مع محفلك المركزي

وفيما يتعلق بصفوف الأطفال التي تعقد في الأحياء (الجوار)، فإنها من أهم التطورات الواعدة وستؤدي بلا شك إلى جذب عائلات كثيرة مهتمة بالتربية الروحانية والأخلاقية لأبنائهم، وعلى الأحياء ألا يستهينوا بقوة انخراط أطفالهم بها. في الواقع، لقد استلمت قصص عديدة تصف كيف تتعزز الهوية البهائية عندما يشارك الأطفال البهائيون في صفوف تضم أطفالاً من المجتمع الأوسع

أردنا أن نؤكد لكم دعاء بيت العدل الأعظم في العتبت المقدسة عسى أن تستجيب جهودكم المبذولة في سبيل تقدم أمر الله والنهوض بالتربية الروحانية والأخلاقية للأطفال تأييدات الجمال المبارك

مع التحيات الحية البهائية

بيت العدل الأعظم

(Letter dated 9 October 2007 written on behalf of the Universal House of Justice to an individual)

Dear Bahá'í Friends,

Your email letter...regarding children's classes...has been received by the Universal House of Justice, and we have been asked to respond as follows.

Your heartfelt concern for the education of Bahá'í children and your desire for a national Bahá'í curriculum which follows a well-conceived and systematic program of learning are appreciated...

Should you have suggestions to make about the nature of the program that is being developed at the national level, you are encouraged to share your ideas with your National Assembly.

With regard to neighbourhood children's classes, this is a most promising development which will undoubtedly attract to the Faith many families concerned about the spiritual and moral education of their children, and the friends should not underestimate the power of their children becoming involved in them. Indeed, many stories have been received that describe a strengthening of Bahá'í identity as Bahá'í children participate in classes with children from the wider society.

We are to assure you of the prayers of the House of Justice in the Holy Shrines that your efforts to advance the Cause of God and to further the spiritual and moral education of children will attract the confirmations of the Blessed Beauty.

With loving Bahá'í greetings,

Department of the Secretariat

(رسالة مؤرخة 22 تشرين الثاني/نوفمبر 2009 كتبت بالنيابة عن بيت العدل الأعظم إلى أحد الأحياء)

أيها الحبيب العزيز

تلقي بيت العدل الأعظم رسالتك الإلكترونية المؤرخة... والتي تطلب فيها إيصالك بشأن صفوف الأطفال البهائية. نقدر عاليًا اهتمامك بتوفير تربية فعالة للأطفال البهائيين. إن بيت العدل الأعظم يشعر بأنه يجب النظر في المسائل التي أثيرتها في سياق التطورات الجارية حاليًا في العالم البهائي، وفي هذا الصدد، طُلب منا تقديم الملاحظات التالية، ونعتذر عن التأخير في الرد.

إن تأسيس صفوف الأطفال، وهو أحد النشاطات الأساسية لخطة السنوات الخمس، يهدف إلى تلبية حاجة الصغار للتربية الروحية حتى سن الحادية عشرة. إن التوجّه نحو الخارج في مجال الخدمة هذا قد مكّن البهائيين في جميع أرجاء العالم من الوصول إلى الأطفال بأعداد أكبر من أي وقت مضى. وعلى وجه الخصوص، ازداد وعي الجامعات البهائية بأن التربية التي تقدمها هي تربية موجهة لجميع الأطفال، دون تمييز بين أولئك الذين يأتون من خلفية بهائية وغيرهم. ومن الواضح أن هذا له آثاره على تنظيم الدروس وتنسيقها، كما أن له تأثيرًا عميقًا على فهم وتصور الجامعة البهائية من حيث تفاعلها مع المجتمع الأوسع.

النظر، بموقف يتسم بالتواضع، في أفضل السبل لتوفير التربية (locality) كل هذا لا يعني بالضرورة زيادة دروس الأطفال المركزية، بل على الأصح، يجب على كل جامعة الروحية لأعداد متزايدة من الأطفال. وفي ضوء هذا، لا ينبغي أن يفهم موضوع دروس الأخلاق سواء التي تُعقد في الأحياء أو المركزية منها على أنها مقاربتين مجزأتين متبادلتين بل باعتبارهما وسيلة عملية يمكن عن طريقها استخدام موارد الجامعة المحدودة بالضرورة، على أفضل وجه، للقيام بالأولويات المتلحة. وفي (mutually exclusive approaches) رسالة كتبت بالنيابة عن بيت العدل الأعظم مؤرخة 9 تشرين الأول/أكتوبر 2007، لوحظ أن صفوف الأطفال التي تُعقد في الأحياء (الجوار) هي من أهم التطورات الواعدة وأنها أتت في كثير من الحالات إلى تعزيز الهوية البهائية عندما يشارك الأطفال البهائيون في صفوف تضم أطفالاً من المجتمع الأوسع. والعلمين الماضيين قنما دليلاً آخر على الإمكانات التي لديها. ومن المتوقع أن تتحسن الصفوف المنعقدة في الأحياء باستمرار، من خلال التجربة والتشاور مع المؤسسات المعنية، حتى تصل إلى مستوى أية صفوف مركزية كانت موجودة سابقاً أو تفوقها.

نأمل أن تساعدك الملاحظات أعلاه، وإن كان لديك مزيد من الأسئلة حول موضوع التربية البهائية للأطفال في جامعتك، فمن الأفضل إحالتها بدايةً إلى محفلك الروحاني المركزي.

مع التحيات الحبية البهائية

دائرة السكرتارية

(Letter dated 22 November 2009 written on behalf of the Universal House of Justice to an individual)

Dear Bahá'í Friend,

The Universal House of Justice has received your email letter dated... seeking clarification regarding Bahá'í children's classes. Your concern for the effective education of Bahá'í children is warmly appreciated. The House of Justice feels that the issues you raise should be considered in the context of current developments in the Bahá'í world and, in this connection, we have been asked to provide the following comments, acknowledging with regret the delay in our response.

The establishment of children's classes, one of the core activities of the Five Year Plan, is intended to address young people's need for spiritual education up to about age 11. An outward-looking orientation in this sphere of service has enabled Bahá'is across the world to reach out to greater numbers of children than could ever have been contemplated heretofore. In particular, Bahá'í communities have increasingly come to conceive of the education they offer as being for all children, without distinguishing between those that come from a Bahá'í background and others. Clearly, this has implications for the organization and coordination of classes. It also has a profound impact on the conception of the Bahá'í community in terms of its interactions with wider society.

All this does not necessarily imply the redundancy of centralized children's classes. Rather, in each locality consideration must be given, with a humble attitude of learning, as to how best to provide a spiritual education for ever-growing numbers of children. In this light, the issue of neighbourhood and centralized classes should not be understood as a dichotomy of mutually exclusive approaches, but as a question of the practical means by which the necessarily limited resources of the community can best be applied to the priorities at hand. In a letter written to you on behalf of the House of Justice dated 9 October 2007, it was observed that neighbourhood children's classes are a most promising development and that in many instances they have led to a strengthening of Bahá'í identity as Bahá'í children participate in classes with children from the wider society. The past two years have offered further proof of the potential they hold. It is expected that, through experience and consultation with the relevant institutions, the classes held in neighborhoods will continually improve until they equal or surpass the standard of any centralized children's classes that previously existed.

It is hoped that the above comments will be of assistance to you. Should you have further questions on the subject of the Bahá'í education of children in your community, it is best to refer them in the first instance to your National Spiritual Assembly.

With loving Bahá'í greetings,

Department of the Secretariat

Different Titles of Baha'u'llah

- the “Light and the Splendor of God”
- the “Lord of Lords”
- the “Most Great Name”
- the “Ancient Beauty”
- the “Finger of Glory”
- the “Pen of the Most High”
- the “Hidden Name”
- the “Preserved Treasure”
- “He Whom God will make manifest”
- “He Who is the Lord of all religions”
- the “Most Great Light”
- the “All-Highest Horizon”
- the “Most Great...
- the “All-Highest Horizon”• the “Most Great Ocean”• the “Supreme Heaven”• the “Pre-Existent Root”• the “Self-Subsistent”• the “Day-Star of the Universe”• the “Speaker on Sinai”• the “Sufferer of Men”• the “Lord of the Covenant”• the “Tree beyond which there is no passing”• the “Judge”• the “Lawgiver”• the “Redeemer of all mankind”
- the “Lord of Revelation”

Courtesy : <https://bahaitexts.blogspot.com>

What do Muslims think about the Baha'i faith ?!

The founder of Baha'ism

Baha'ism or Babism is a sect attributed to Mirza Ali Mohammed who was known as al-Bab. He initiated his call in 1260 AH (1844 AD), announcing his aim to reform the corrupted conditions of Muslims. He made his call public in Shiraz—south of Iran—where he gained some followers. Later, he sent a group of his followers to different parts of Iran to announce his advent and spread his claims, mainly that he is a messenger sent by Allah.

Mirza Ali Mohammed authored a book entitled Al-Bayan, and claimed that it contains a divinely revealed code of laws. Moreover, he claimed that his message abrogates the laws of Islam and innovated rulings for his followers similar to those of Islam. He instituted a 19 day fast that ends with the spring equinox, so that 'Eid al-Fitr always coincides with the day of Nairuz (Coptic New Year). In the Baha'i faith, the fast starts from sunrise and ends at sunset. In Al-Bayan, he said: "We have enjoined upon you fasting for a fixed number of days, and designated for you Nairuz as a feast after completing them"

The founder of the Baha'i faith called for the conference of Badasht which was held in Iran in 1264 AH-1848 AD. In this conference, he outlined the faith and declared its independence from Islam and its laws. Scholars of his time resisted this call; they proclaimed its corruption and issued fatawa declaring him a disbeliever. He was incarcerated in Shiraz and then in Isfahan. After wars and clashes between his followers and Muslims, Mirza Ali Mohammed was sentenced to death and was crucified in 1265 AH.

His successor, Mirza Hussein Ali, called himself Baha'ullah and authored a book entitled Al-Aqdas, in which he followed the footsteps of his late leader and founder of this belief, Mirza Ali Mohammed, as outlined in his book Al-Bayan.

In Al-Aqdas, Mirza Hussein Ali contradicted the principles of Islam and the other faiths. He annulled the doctrine of Islam and its laws by prescribing nine prayers to be performed each day and night and designating the place of his residence as their qibla [direction of prayer]. In Al-Aqdas, he said: "When you wish to perform prayer, turn your faces towards my holy direction." He further annulled pilgrimage and commanded the destruction of the sacred House of Allah (Ka'ba) after the advent of an able and brave man from among his followers.

The Baha'is [followers of Baha'ism] followed the opinion of former philosophers. They stated the eternity of knowledge saying: (Baha' teaches that the universe is without beginning in time. It is a perpetual emanation from the First cause. God and creation are co-eternal

Opinions on Baha'ism

Generally speaking, Baha'ism is a fabricated faith; it includes elements from Buddhism, Brahmanism, idolatry, Judaism, Christianity, Islam and beliefs from the Baatini school of thought.

Baha'i beliefs

- Baha'is do not believe in the afterlife, Paradise or Hellfire. In this respect, they imitated the Dahriyas.
- The first Baha'i leader claimed in his interpretation of Surat Yusuf that he is better than Prophet Muhammad (peace and blessings be upon him) and his book Al-Bayan is better than the Qur'an.
- They do not acknowledge the prophethood of our master, the Messenger of Allah, Prophet Muhammad (pbuh), or that he is the seal of all Prophets. Hence, they are not Muslims since all Muslims believe that the Qur'an is the Book revealed by Allah and believe in the words of Allah Almighty:

Muhammad is not the father of any of your men, but he is the Messenger of Allah, and the seal of the Prophets. [Qur'an 33:40].

The rulingBased on this, Muslims have unanimously agreed that Bahai'sm or Babism is not an Islamic doctrine and that whoever believes in it is not a Muslim but an apostate from Islam; an apostate is a person who abandons Islam for another faith.

Mainstream Baha'i Faith is heading for a vertical split.

Persian Baha'is vs the Rest

The Baha'i Faith the youngest of all the Faiths and supposedly the most united is now suffering from existential crisis. Already divided into many fractions and sects, the Faith is now faced with its existential threat of a power struggle between the Persian Baha'is and the rest. This crisis may lead to the already decimated Faith into vertical split shaking the roots of the faith.

There is no denying the fact that the Baha'i Faith is born in Persia and Persians have had a great sacrifice in spreading the Faith across the globe.

We will have to go back into the history to recollect that the Persian Baha'is pioneered to places far and wide and have devotedly served the faith. The progress of the faith in golden era from 1970 to 2010 was mainly due to the efforts of Eidelkhanis, Nakhjawanis, Razavis, Afshins, Rouhanis, Mohajers, Azadis and so on. All familiar names to the Baha'i community, known for their selfless services. While these individuals offered their service they also led administrative positions – so we had people who had practical experience for managing the affairs.

Subsequently the faith saw some unfortunate developments. While the Persian front-runners toiled, a big section of the Persian Baha'is felt that it was their right to govern the affairs. They had a sense of superiority and prided that they were connected to the cradle of the faith. Perhaps as a result of this, resentment crept in amongst other sections. Added to this was the fact that growing tension between Israel and Iran, made Israel suspicious of the Baha'is of Persian background visiting Israel. And the crack widened.

During Chile Temple inauguration in 2016, many Persian Baha'is used to boast that Faith is spreading in Iran and many family members of the former Iranian President Ahmadinejad are taking part in Ruhi curriculum. The non-Persian Baha'is used to take this new-found interest of the Iranians in the Faith as an attempt of penetration rather than acceptance. As Ahmadinejad was seen as the arch-enemy of the Faith.

So today, while superficially Baha'is express perfect harmony, for most of us it is clear that the gap is too large now and cannot be bridged. Administrative responsibilities have started slipping from the hands of Persians and they make no attempt to hide their discontent. After all, they represent a section who has sacrificed most and have had to face severe hardships for the Cause of God. The rest of the community just enjoyed the outcome of their hard work and yet walked away with administrative posts.

The non-Persian Baha'is feel that the Persian Baha'is have enjoyed enough limelight and it is high time they take a back seat. There have been few cases of disloyalty by some Persian Baha'is which has added to the demand that Persian Baha'is cannot be trusted entirely.

As this split widens, though ideologically, the mainstream Baha'i Faith will not break, the future will see a risk of Persian Baha'is forming a separate body for governance of their affairs. Much to the dismay of the founding fathers of the faith and to the pleasure of the enemies of the Faith and Covenant-breakers, there is an enemy within.

The grievances of Persian Baha'is are expressed in this open letter to the UHJ which is being widely circulated amongst Baha'is.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE UNIVERSAL HOUSE OF JUSTICE

Dear esteemed members of The Universal House of Justice

Paul Lample, Payman Mohajer, Shahriar Razavi, Stephen Birkland, Stephen Hall, Ayman Rouhani, Chuungu Malitonga, Juan Francisco Mora Praveen Mallik

It saddens me to write this letter to the esteemed members. Members, who collectively are supposed to be infallible in their decisions. For quite some time, some of the decisions of the members are being viewed as being with a targeted agenda –cleansing the Baha'i Administration of Persian Baha'is' very silent callous Racism and fanaticism is engulfing the whole of Baha'i Community. The Persian Baha'is are being persecuted in which ever land they pioneered and surprisingly the Universal House of Justice is mock spectator to this persecution.

One could argue that these steps are seen with prejudice. However, when sequence of similar actions is witnessed the benefit of doubt reduces.

1. Recently a prominent Heterodox Baha'i, who was born in Qatar, was blacklisted in Qatar. Government authorities in the country have levelled criminal and national security charges against him. Mr. Omid now will face severe penalties in Qatar's judicial system. And will be denied entry.

Although, the BIC's Principal Representative to the United Nations, said that "the Baha'i International Community is saddened that the State of Qatar has chosen to expel members of a community that has peacefully coexisted in and contributed to the progress of the country", the silence of UHJ has raised concerns. Many prominent Baha'is are of the opinion that UHJ is behind the expelling of Omid as they are in cleansing process of Persian Baha'is and Omid a high ranking Persian Baha'i in Baha'i Administration, who has an eye on selection to UHJ. He has a lot of cloud in countries like India.

2. Another high ranking Persian Baha'i, a counselor, who had served for many years in Bangladesh was also removed from his post and a very insignificant Indian Baha'i was asked to step in his shoes. Was this part of a strategy?

3. Another Persian background lady, a former counselor and member of the NSA of India, was asked to resign/retire from NSA after being elected on NSA. Fate accompli?

4. A prominent Baha'i of the USA, has been accused of trying to deceive and misguide the Baha'is of Iranian descent by sowing seeds of discord. UHJ just watched silently.

5. was hunted for his misunderstood statement resulting into ignorant Baha'is daring to ask him that why he gave such statement. UHJ could have defended in this situation.

6. The case of Baha'i Scholar has not been forgotten. After working for 15 years at the World Centre, he was heartbroken. UHJ had no comfort to offer.

7. and were on the brink of being declared Covenant-Breakers but some better reasoning prevailed on UHJ and they stopped from doing such an atrocious act. Both these gentlemen have bitterness still.

8. The Late along with made fun of Persian Baha'is and used to call them KHAR (donkey) and used to say that Persian Baha'is are misguiding other Baha'is. There are several other such incidences of rebuke. UHJ conveniently ignores these. They use to say Panchami is the centre of deviation.

9. The number of Persian Baha'is as counselors have come down drastically and the story is not different for the ABMs. They were asked to leave their place of pioneer (where they had established themselves, gained respect and involved themselves in Teaching of the Faith) and settle in some other parts of the world. This is nothing but humiliation and harassment. UHJ choses to look the other way.

10. When a non-Persian Counselor retires from his post, he is immediately offered another post in his own country. But if the counselor is Persian, and that too a pioneer, never this opportunity of service had been offered to him or his experience used for promotion of the Faith. This happens under watchful eyes of the UHJ.

11. A sincere Persian Baha'i who took care of the Baha'i property the National Hotel at Pune in India was threatened by one of the members of UHJ that he should come in line with UHJ or face severe consequences.

12. A Persian pioneer a devoted Baha'i was asked to resign after he was elected as a delegate for National convention. It was feared that he was a sure member of NSA

13. – A person of capacity, he served the faith as a counselor but he was sacked by the UHJ and was asked to resign from all his administrative positions, just because he was “accused” for forging Documents? Which was never proved.

14. – He has such a wide experience about the faith. Has given years as a pioneer to Mumbai Community. A person instrumental in building the Lotus Temple and donating huge amounts of his savings was never given any hearing by UHJ. All his suggestions are ignored and was made centre of mockery.

15. – She served the Faith with best of her capacity running the External affair department very efficiently but just some Indian NSA members did not like her success was asked to resign from the NSA of India. In her place a dumb Ram Sevak Yadav was brought to NSA just to appease the Hindu nationalist Government .

16. and his son now live a life of loneliness. Afshin gave all of his golden years for the propagation of faith in India. Today when he is ill and may be in need of financial assistance, the UHJ is wasting sources on inexperienced, and worthless people like Praveen Kumar Mallik, Rajan Sawant etc. All the “soldiers of Baha'u'llah” are being treated like worthless entity.

17. The Baha'i Academy in Panchgani was subjected to pressure because its Director was a Persian and son of a Martyr. UHJ made his life and of his family miserable. He was sacked as Auxiliary Board Member.

Such examples leave us with a bitter conclusion that those having Persian (Cradle of Faith) background need to sieved. It is as though the UHJ sees the Persian Baha'is being responsible for the formation of so many sects. A thought is prevailing in the Faith that Persian Baha'is are working in groups and are having soft corner for the Persian fourth Guardian Nosratullah Bahremand of the Orthodox Baha'i Faith, who is calling his shots from Australia. Such a suspicion has been prevailing for many years now. UHJ has so far not taken any steps to reject this idea.

While all this is happening, the clout of Baha'is with Jewish background is increasing. Whether it is happening with connivance of Jewish state, is a question that then comes to mind.

Esteemed members do look into the injustice that has crept in functioning of the Faith. Else history would not forget UHJ being cause of moral and population downfall of our Beloved Faith.

Baha'i Faith and LGBT Community

Believe it or not, contrary to the Baha'i claim of oneness of humanity Baha'is view the LGBT community in a very derogatory manner. The following is a small list of the terms Baha'i leaders used to refer to the LGBT community and describe homosexuality:

- “defilement of evil passions”
- “satanic deeds”
- “shameful sexual aberration”
- “immoral conduct” or “Immorality” or “abhorrent”
- “wrong” or “corruptive” or sometimes borderline insanity: “conduct borders on insanity”
- “being against nature”
- an affliction and great burden: “afflicted this way is a great burden to a conscientious soul”
- “handicap” or “aberration” or “abnormality”
- an act that is a disgrace to the Baha'i cult: “disgracing the Cause”
- “cause of suffering”
- unhealthy use of the sex impulse: “Outside of marital life there can be no lawful or healthy use of the sex impulse”
- A problem whose solution is this: “with the help of doctors, by prayer and meditation, by self-abnegation and by giving as much time as possible to serving the Cause in your community you can eventually succeed in overcoming your problem”
- lustful desires that must be overcome: “pride, greed, selfishness, lustful heterosexual or homosexual desires, to name a few which must be overcome, and overcome them we must if we are to fulfil the purpose of our human existence”
- LGBT community must face punishment from society: “Sex relationships of any form, outside marriage, are not permissible therefore, and whoso violates this rule will not only be responsible to God, but will incur the necessary punishment from society.”

The source for all the above statements is an article compiled by the Baha'i cult Universal House of Justice that can be found here:

Letter of BUPC Baha'is Guardian Neal Chase in the United States District Court

What is “The Covenant” of the Baha’i faith?

Letter to the LSA by Jenifer Tidwell

March 21, 1999

The Local Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Arlington, Massachusetts

My dear Baha'i friends,

I hope this year's Fast found you happy and healthy. This special season, which seems to arrive sooner every year, always makes us slow down and reflect upon spiritual matters — why we go through this physically exhausting fasting process, what we expect from it, and what we believe about God's laws and our obligation to follow them. The Fast is a test, but it's also a time of spiritual rejuvenation, and I have always looked forward to it.

But this year was different for me. I was not fasting with the rest of you. This year, I am observing Lent instead; and at the end of it, I will celebrate Easter, for the first time in my entire adult life.

You see, I've been going through a crisis of faith over the past several months. The problem is this: I love the Baha'i Faith dearly, but there are some doctrinal and spiritual issues in it that I can no longer accept. Since I began attending an Episcopal church last year, many of those issues have been thrown into sharp relief. Seeing them "from the outside" has helped me understand the latent problems I've had with being a Baha'i all these years.

What it ultimately comes down to is that, now, I feel closer to God and to my fellow human beings than I did while I was an active Baha'i. That's the only factor that really counts, I think. Everything else either contributes to it, or is secondary to it.

I think I should explain some of my reasons for making this rather unusual move (I don't personally know of anyone who has gone from being a Baha'i to being a Christian, let alone an Episcopalian). This letter is my apologetic. I hope that it will also help some Baha'is and Baha'i communities understand some of the factors that I think are causing them problems, at least in the United States; some of these points, while controversial, should at least spark some good discussion or soul-searching.

* * *

1. Our Feasts are not spiritually nourishing. They must be for some Baha'is, but for me, they don't even come close to a good church service, or a private meditation, or even a walk in the woods.

The big problem is the content. It's limited to readings and prayers from the Baha'i Writings (which truly are a wonderful source of wisdom), and sometimes instrumental music or singing. Nothing else. There's no spontaneous prayer, or personal reflections, or creative praise. There's no ritual, either; even though the Writings don't actually rule out the creation of new rituals for short-term use, they discourage ritual use over the long term (such for Feasts and for marriage ceremonies), and Baha'is as a rule stay away from ritual altogether.

I think that's a sad loss. Ritual is a "door to the sacred" — the familiar repetition of a ritual, combined with one's periodic reinterpretation of the traditions and symbolic meanings attached to it, really do help open one's mind and heart to God. It lends focus and framework to our worship, gives rhythm to our spiritual lives, connects us to our history, and constantly reminds us of what's important in our chosen faith. Yes, it has the potential to mechanize worship (I'm sure many churchgoers have this problem) and to distract us from our core beliefs, but that's something each person can learn to rise above. Besides, Baha'is already have individual rituals such as the 95 repetitions of the Greatest Name. Why are community rituals so much worse?

(Incidentally, I didn't understand these truths about ritual when I was growing up in the Christian faith. At the time, it just seemed repetitive and boring. I readily believed what Baha'is told me about ritual — that it calcifies the faith of a community, and becomes an end in itself, supplanting a living and creative worship. This is not at all true in the church I now attend, which is as vital and creative a faith community as I've ever been in. Maybe I needed to be deprived of the blessings of ritual for a while to appreciate it!)

Another problem is that I need music when I worship, and Baha'is do not have a strong musical tradition yet. There are a few well-known songs here in the United States — other countries may have more — but not nearly enough to provide a source deep enough to dip into at every Feast. Of course, it's not fair to expect that a 150-year-old religion will have a musical tradition as large as the 2000-year-old church! But the Faith is culturally so diverse. It has so much talent in its ranks. Baha'is all know each other and travel everywhere. Countless wonderful songs should be flowing all over the Baha'i world by now! Where are they? And lacking those, why don't Baha'is reach into the musical traditions of other faiths more often?

Finally, I am saddened by the exclusion of non-Baha'is from Feasts. I understand that people who have not chosen to be a member of the Baha'i Faith shouldn't take part in the business-meeting part of the Feast, but why can't they merely observe? And why should they be excluded from the worship aspect of the Feast? I'm sure it must be discouraging for people looking into the Faith, who want to experience how we worship. Their presence may enhance the Feast in unexpected ways, too. I will have more to say about this exclusion later.

In short, it seems like different people simply have different needs with regard to worship. Many people I know (including some Christians) honestly don't like church services. Some need different kinds of rituals, some need private meditation, some need to get out into the woods and mountains. To each their own. Unfortunately, the Baha'i Faith doesn't allow much choice in how to conduct Feasts, and what it does allow doesn't work for me.

2. There's no clergy. I find this issue difficult to discuss because it's a core doctrine of the Baha'i Faith, but I really think the Faith has "thrown the baby out with the bathwater" — there are good reasons to have clergy, and the lack of clergy causes problems for individual believers and for the community.

It's my understanding that the Baha'i Faith does not have a priesthood partially to avoid the trouble that an overly-powerful clerical class can cause (witness the history of the Faith in Iran), and partially to drive home the point that each one of us is responsible for our own spiritual life, with no intercessors necessary between us and God. Both are valid arguments. However, many Protestant denominations (among other groups) have solved both problems, through theology and church structures that have evolved over time. They do fine. I think it's healthier to meet such problems head-on than to do away with the priesthood altogether.

I've also sensed a naivete on the part of some lifelong Baha'is about what clergy actually do, especially Christian clergy. In mainline Protestant churches, which is all I have any real experience with, a priest's or rector's job includes these roles:

- Facilitator for worship. They act as sort of a "living center" for sacred rituals, or they preach, or they are simply responsible for planning and executing the regular worship services. This is not a bad thing, and Baha'is might do well to have knowledgeable people responsible for planning and carrying out Feasts, for instance.
- Teacher. They've spent years learning about history, theology, other faiths, and so on. In sermons, in Bible studies, in Sunday school classes, and in private conversations, they teach us all this.
- Spiritual advisor. Since priests are trained in theology, and sometimes also in such things as psychotherapy, marriage counseling, or conflict resolution, they are people you know you can go to when you need guidance. In fact, that's their job. Thus, there's a higher level of responsibility that you can't get from volunteers or from random members of a Baha'i community. (Just before I got married, I really needed someone like this to talk to. I did not find such within the Baha'i communities that I knew, and since I wasn't living in a town that had an LSA, I didn't "have" an institution available to talk to either. It was a terribly lonely time, at a point when I feel like I should have had loving support from a religious organization.)
- Community leader. Each church has its own personality, and some of it (though not by any means all of it) comes from its priest. They are partially responsible for the health of a community, and again, that's part of their job. No one in a Baha'i community has its health and happiness as their primary concern, day in and day out.

Of course, Baha'is have their Local Spiritual Assemblies to take care of administrative and spiritual matters. But it's much harder to run things effectively with a committee. And you know what? If I have a real crisis, I don't want to talk to a nine-member LSA, even if it does have God's blessings. I want to talk to a single human being. I want to talk to someone one-on-one, someone who has experience and knowledge that may help, someone with whom I have an ongoing personal relationship, someone whom I know will find time for me. Yes, I know no priest is perfect. But I'll take my chances with a trained priest who has chosen to make serving God his or her life's work, rather than go before an LSA with its nine volunteer members, all of whom I know socially and are probably tired, pressed for time, distracted by their "real" jobs, and woefully untrained in difficult personal issues.

As much as I love my fellow LSA members, I have never felt comfortable going before them with anything personal. It wasn't their fault; nine people is just too many, and their time was always in such short supply that I didn't want to add one more thing to their agenda. Even while I was on the LSA, I never felt we were fully qualified to deal with other people's problems that came before us, even though our ranks did include professional therapists!

In general, I'm hard-pressed to believe that the Baha'i Faith can throw out a role as old as the oldest religions, and not suffer the consequences. The role of priest / elder / shaman / teacher probably exists for good social and psychological reasons (not to mention spiritual ones), and it's present in every other religion that I know. It does not have to be incompatible with the Baha'i tenets of personal spiritual responsibility, the independent investigation of the truth, or anything else.

3. Chronic community fatigue and "burnout." The Baha'i Faith seems to attract more than its share of responsible, intelligent overachievers. This is wonderful, up to a point — the Faith's small numbers in the Boston area belies the huge amount of activity that goes on! But this takes an enormous toll on people. I think the typical active Baha'i works a 50-hour week (either in a job or at home), serves on at least two committees or an LSA, gets lots of Faith-related email every day, goes to talks and deepenings and Feasts, and maybe somehow finds time for daily prayers in the midst of it all. Then they're asked to host a talk or a party or something. Or to make something for a potluck. Or to serve on one more committee. And they cannot say "no" to the Faith they want to serve, until they are just too tired to say "yes" anymore.

After all, the Faith's needs are so great; who are we to decline the opportunity for service?

I've thought about this issue for a long time. I now believe that the Baha'i Faith in the United States is simply too demanding of its active members. Except in the really big urban areas, everything is done by volunteers, who all have their own lives to deal with. (Hired administrators and secretaries and such would help, but there's never enough money for such luxuries.) Furthermore, service to the Faith is implicitly expected of its members — and active teaching is explicitly expected. There's always so much that we're being asked to do, to fulfill teaching plans and meet fund-raising goals. Plans are made by LSAs, Regional Councils, National Spiritual Assemblies, the World Center, the Universal House of Justice, and so on and so on. We constantly overreach ourselves, often fall short of our goal, then set the next goal higher. Sometimes victories are won, but at a high human cost: people who were once enthusiastic "burn out," or just get too discouraged to keep going.

I think a religion should allow for more balance. We should all have time for contemplation and reflection. Time to be with our families, time to do our jobs really well without being tired, time to allow spontaneous things to happen like talking to a friend or taking a walk. Can we be spiritually whole without that? When we're so busy serving and running around, we can't hear the "still small voice" of God whispering into the ears of our souls. And that's so important.

Why do we have an endless conflict between taking the time we personally need, and giving the Faith the time and energy it needs? Faith and sacrifice go hand in hand, but does God want us to sacrifice our spiritual well-being for the immediate needs of the Faith? I just can't believe that.

4. The pressure to teach. This is directly linked to the burnout problem: if we had more people, the work would be spread out more, but at the same time, teaching is the reason we spend so much time and effort and money in the first place! Sometimes it seems that the Baha'i Faith's whole purpose is to spread itself. In fact, this is probably a sound theological point — if the Faith's only ultimate purpose is to bring about the Kingdom of God on earth, then growth to a "critical mass" is exactly what it should be trying to do.

But is this what religion is all about? No, of course not. A religion is also about an individual's relationship with God and the rest of humanity. It's about seeking truth, and it's about learning how to love other people beyond love for one's self. The Christian denominations that I grew up in keep these things paramount; growth is secondary (though it's certainly wonderful when it happens). That comes closer to matching what I know, deep in my soul, to be true.

Now, if I truly believed that the Baha'i Faith is the right answer for everyone else, then teaching it would come naturally. But I don't. I know that many of my closest friends and family are spiritually content where they are; or maybe they're not interested in religious topics, and would be bored or put off by my constantly mentioning the Faith. Love and consideration for the people in my life should take precedence over teaching them.

In a more sinister vein, the Faith sometimes encourages us to use friendship as a means to the end of teaching. A recent letter from the Regional Council for the Northeastern States recommends that we choose a single seeker to take under our wing, and make friends with them — with the express purpose of opening their heart through kindness and friendship, so that they will be more receptive to the Faith. Isn't this putting the horse before the cart? If I were that seeker, I would be offended if I found out that such a "friendship" was built on the other person's drive to teach, not on a genuine liking and respect for each other.

Finally, I think the emphasis on teaching pulls energy and resources away from non-teaching-oriented service and charity efforts. Perhaps if Baha'is were less focused on teaching, and less overwhelmed by the weight of all their other activities, they could do more in the way of community service, which they are enjoined to do by the Writings. Then again, maybe what's really needed is a change of heart — away from growth as a primary goal, and towards love and compassion for all people regardless of their beliefs. (Mind you, individual Baha'is are among the most loving and compassionate people I've ever met; here I'm talking about the Baha'i Faith as an institution.)

5. An uncomfortable split between Baha'is and non-Baha'is. We talk about unity this and unity that, but we still use that declaration card to draw a sharp dividing line between who can attend Feast and who can't, who can read certain letters and who can't, who can give money and who can't, and so on. It creeps into our language — "I'm inviting a non-Baha'i to this deepening, is that OK?" "We had six non-Baha'is and ten Baha'is come to this event." It affects our social lives — we draw a cozy circle around "us Baha'is" and occasionally widen it to include a new declarant or an enthusiastic seeker. It subtly alters the way we view humanity, so that we no longer see one world, but two: Baha'i and non-Baha'i.

This is a particularly thorny problem for those of us who have spouses who are not Baha'is. For instance, if there's a special event coming up that my husband and I want to go to, I have to ask if we can both go, or if only I can go. Yet we both enjoy the company of our beloved Baha'i friends (not to mention each other's company), so tension is the result. Another side of this issue came up a few months ago, when I told a Baha'i group that I was willing to loan or give them a large amount of money, but I had to discuss it with my husband first to make sure it was financially feasible at that point in time. Even though it would ultimately have been my own money, I was turned down flat, because he was not a Baha'i and shouldn't be involved with giving money to the Faith!

In contrast, the church we now attend welcomed us right from the beginning, regardless of where we were in our spiritual journeys. Nothing was barred to us before officially becoming members, except for voting rights in the annual meeting. In fact, we didn't even know there was such a thing as officially signing up, until just before that annual meeting. No one made a big deal out of it. Even Vestry meetings (the Vestry being the lay governing committee of an Episcopal church, roughly the equivalent to the administrative aspect of an LSA) are open to anyone who wants to observe. Overall, I felt much more welcome there than I probably would have if I had visited Baha'i events as a non-Baha'i.

Isn't this Revelation for everyone? What are Baha'is afraid of? Why can't we welcome people into our events and lives with open arms and no prejudices based on whether or not they've signed a card? Maybe in some countries there's a security issue, but here in the United States, there's no political reason to fear outsiders! Are we afraid people will laugh at us, or that they'll think we're foolish or naive? Are we afraid they won't approve of us if they see how we talk to each other or conduct our community business? Surely the Faith is stronger than that.

This kind of insularity can only hurt the Faith. Worse, it undermines our belief in unity, and borders on hypocritical. I can't imagine Abdu'l-Baha' making a big deal out of whether or not someone has signed a declaration card; on the contrary, I think he would welcome everyone, without even pausing to ask whether they were technically Baha'is or not.

6. An uncertain intellectual foundation. I've been fighting against this one for years, afraid to look too hard at some of the belief structures given to us in the Writings. I still can't force myself to study some of the more pedantic works, like "Some Answered Questions," because I can't reconcile myself to believing what's in them.

For example, the unity of all religions is a wonderful idea, and for ten years, I truly wanted to believe it. Guided by the Baha'i Writings, I tried my best to make myself believe in it. There are some assertions in the Writings about other faiths that I never could believe, though. One is about the resurrection of Christ being strictly symbolic. Yes, a physical resurrection is hard to understand and accept, but isn't that the whole point of the ends of the Gospels? Over and over again (in three of them, anyway), they emphasize that he really did physically return, wounds and all, to the shock of his friends and disciples; the letters in the rest of the New Testament keep coming back to that point. It's so fundamental to Christian doctrine that to reinterpret it as "only symbolic" is to dismiss nearly the entire history of Christian theology, not to mention the obvious meaning of the Gospels. In my opinion, it's intellectually dishonest for Baha'is to claim unity with a theological construct that most Christians never believed in the first place.

But that isn't the half of it; that doesn't address the central core of beliefs that the Baha'i Faith says is common among all the revealed religions, like a belief in a monotheistic God. Buddhism does not necessarily teach this belief. Some individual Buddhists do believe in God, which may be OK within the tenets of some Buddhist schools (I don't know this for sure), but the earliest Buddhist writings we have — the Pali texts — apparently indicate that Buddha himself did not teach monotheism at all! Yet Abdu'l-Baha' claims he did. Again: how can Baha'is honestly claim unity with this religion whose doctrine they have changed to be something different from what was historically taught, and against all evidence found by historians and scholars?

The Baha'i counterargument I have heard most often is that Baha'u'llah and Abdu'l-Baha' had direct knowledge from God about these other religions, and therefore we should believe them and not what the other religions currently teach. That may be so; we can't prove or disprove such a claim, at least not in this world. But in a sense, this is a false unity — the theological sleight-of-hand may help Baha'is feel like they're standing on a firmer foundation, but it does nothing to help them find genuine common ground with modern-day Christians and Buddhists and others. If anything, it hinders any such efforts, because it tends to put people of other faiths on the defensive by essentially telling them they've been wrong all this time. I've seen that happen on the Net, and it's not pretty.

Besides, at some point, our own common sense has to kick in and decide whether or not a revelation is correct, or else we'd be blindly following every nut case who claims direct revelation from God. We chose to believe in Baha'u'llah not just because he told us to, but because his teachings resonated with us at some level; either logically or intuitively, we already believed most of what we heard him teaching. Now if Abdu'l-Baha' had seriously told us that the moon was made of green cheese, and that in the year 2000 we'd all follow the cow in jumping over it in order to bring about the lesser peace, wouldn't a rational person begin to question the fundamental correctness of the Writings? At some point, credibility vanishes and one ceases taking everything on faith. I have reached that point.

7. A lack of open intellectual discussion. This isn't entirely true, of course; since the spark of truth comes from the clash of differing opinions, open discourse is fine, as long as it stays within certain bounds. But those bounds have felt awfully constricting lately. Personally, I haven't wanted to be accused of not being "firm in the Covenant," so I have avoided certain topics that I'd really have liked to talk openly about. This includes many of the issues I've brought up in this letter. (Even if my dear Baha'i friends didn't explicitly accuse me of anything, I know they would still be saddened and disturbed to hear me bring up these topics, and they would probably feel torn between their friendship with me and their loyalty to the Faith. I'd hate to put them through that.)

I did a Web search a few months ago and ended up on Frederick Glaysher's Web site. While exploring there, I found an article called "A Modest Proposal," written by a handful of Baha'is in 1987 for the now-defunct "Dialogue" magazine. It was an excellent article, well-written, insightful, and full of courageous and loving suggestions for revitalizing the Baha'i Faith in the United States. But the National Spiritual Assembly did not allow its publication. Personally, I could see nothing in it that might be considered blasphemous, or disrespectful of the Covenant, or even disunifying; to this day, I have no idea why its publication was prevented.

That got me wondering why it's still necessary to review articles written by Baha'is before publication. Is it really just to make sure the Faith is presented in a dignified manner, and to guarantee factual accuracy? If so, why wasn't the Dialogue article corrected and then published? Or is it because certain ideas are considered dangerous, even when they don't directly conflict with the Writings? That frightens me. If the Faith is true and from God, it should be strong enough to remain standing in spite of all our questions and reinterpretations. Eternal truth is like that. If all serious Baha'i discourse has to be vetted for intellectual acceptability before publication, that belies a deep insecurity on the part of the Baha'i institutions.

In relation to this incident, the Talisman email list incident, and other things, I have heard many anecdotes that indicate that academics engaged in Baha'i studies feel ignored, belittled, or distrusted because of their work. Add to this the May 1997 correspondence between the Universal House of Justice and Susan Maneck, and I'm almost certain there's an anti-academic undercurrent running through the Faith, in America and elsewhere. (This letter implied that traditional, non-religious methods of analyzing religious texts and histories by Baha'is are less worthy than a faith-based approach, in which the basic tenets of the Faith are already accepted as truth by the investigator.) Again, one wonders what the UHJ is afraid of. Shouldn't we be eager to learn more about the historical context of our Faith, regardless of the source of the knowledge? Why would a dispassionate analysis of the Faith, done by methods widely accepted by the world at large, be worth less than those done from the perspective of faith? It seems to me that we need both, for balance.

Finally, there's the matter of Covenant-breakers. We're not supposed to talk with them, nor read what they write. Why not? We're adults, not children; for the most part, we're not so fragile that we can't hear bad things about our Faith and not be seduced into believing them. We might believe on an individual basis that we're not prepared to read such stuff, or that we just don't want to, but that should be a personal decision, not one imposed upon us. For the most part, I bet their arguments against the Covenant couldn't stand up to logical analysis or spiritual wisdom. (The few I've read aren't worth the electrons they're printed on!) If they can, well, maybe it's good for us to argue against them, up to a point — we could learn from the experience, and grow spiritually and intellectually. Maybe we could even bridge the chasm between us, and view them as human beings deserving of respect and empathy. But sticking our heads in the sand gets us nowhere. Once again, it indicates a fundamental insecurity about the truth of the Faith — or, even worse, a lack of trust in the faith of individual Baha'is. Either way, it's very authoritarian, and I can't bring myself to agree with it anymore.

8. An overemphasis on unity as an ultimate good. Unity is wonderful, of course, but odd things happen when it becomes the highest ideal that we try to attain. I'm not sure that it ought to be.

When I began looking into the Episcopal Church a few months ago, they had just held the Lambeth Conference, a worldwide bishop's conference which happens every ten years. I read the news stories. Boy, did they have unity problems! There were conservative factions, and liberal factions, and harsh words, and behind-the-scenes politicking, and a near meltdown of the Anglican Communion — all over the single issue of the Scriptural acceptability of homosexual behavior. I found myself thinking, "How awful. This would never, ever happen in the Baha'i Faith."

Later I thought, "Maybe it should."

Look at what brought about the conflicts at Lambeth: many different interpretations of Scripture, to be sure (which Baha'is aren't supposed to have), but also a love for God, for the truth, and for the Church's spiritual direction. And, importantly, a knowledge that they could express their opinions freely, even if those opinions were unpopular with other bishops or were a break with the past. Now wouldn't it be wonderful if they ever do find unity, given these circumstances? That would be a hard-won, genuine unity. That would be a unity based not on an order that "Thou shalt be unified!", but on care and respect, forged in the furnace of real conflict. On love, not on law.

I think this "difficult unity" is ultimately better and stronger than one that tends to subsume the search for truth in the name of unity. This happens among Baha'is, like during LSA meetings — for instance, someone may want to keep discussing a point they know is right, but according to consultation rules, shuts up in the name of unity. It also happens in public discourse, as I discussed above — if someone has an interpretation of some aspect of the Writings that differs from the standard one, they may feel discouraged from talking about it, for fear of causing strife and disunity (or, horror of horrors, being seen as a schismatic).

Instead of resolving such conflicts honestly, Baha'is tend to bury them, lest those conflicts fester and cause disunity. It seems a little cowardly to me now.

Also, there's a little logic problem in Baha'i doctrine that has bothered me for a while. Baha'is believe that the Faith has never been split into sects (lasting ones, anyway), and will in fact remain basically undivided. But those groups that do separate from the mainstream of the Faith are declared non-Baha'is, simply because they separated. It's a semantic trick, no more. I'm sorry, but there are other Baha'i groups that do not consider the Universal House of Justice an authority. They do believe in Baha'u'llah (though not in the Covenant as we understand it, hence the term "Covenant-breakers"), so the rest of the world would consider them Baha'is. They consider themselves Baha'is too. Only mainstream Baha'is don't, and they have a powerful psychological motive for not doing so: the bedrock of their faith would be shaken if these breakaway groups were acknowledged as Baha'is.

This is very shaky ground for the claim that this faith is superior to Christianity and Islam, with respect to a lack of internal division. It also causes mainstream Baha'is to actively shun the company and opinions of certain other people who believe in Baha'u'llah; my soul tells me this is neither healthy nor just, and paradoxically, it makes the Faith less tolerant of diversity than many other religions.

And at some levels, what's really wrong with division, as long as it doesn't cause hatred or unloving behavior? I can choose to worship in a progressive church and still love conservative parishioners who leave to go someplace more suited to their beliefs. I can be an Episcopalian and still love my Unitarian and Catholic friends. (And my Muslim friends, and my Baha'i friends, and my Pagan friends, and so on!) I can even play Democrat to my Republican friends, or vice versa. It may be a little harder to understand where they're coming from, since I don't share their beliefs, but tests such as these are opportunities for intellectual and spiritual growth, not an indication that we need enforced uniformity of beliefs. I think what the world really needs is not a ban on divisions, but a spiritual discipline that prevents those divisions from causing hatred and prejudice.

9. Too many answers, not enough mystery. The Baha'i Writings are vast. In my ten years as a Baha'i, I'm sure I haven't read even half of all the English works, and of course I don't stand a chance at reading all the untranslated Arabic and Persian works. Between the writings of the Central Figures and the decisions of the Universal House of Justice, there's probably something authoritative written on almost any topic of spiritual significance!

It really does make life easier, having such an extensive set of laws and beliefs that I can subscribe to as a body. It means I don't have to think all the time. I can just say, "Sorry, I don't drink," rather than having to decide how much alcohol is too much. It means I can believe in the ultimate unity of the religions and then shape my observations to that belief, rather than doing the hard work of forming hypotheses based on what I observe. It means I don't have to have any doubts about the humanity's future, since we pretty much know what's eventually going to happen. It means I have a perfectly good explanation of Christ's Resurrection; no need to keep going back to it year after year, looking for new layers of meaning. It means that there are very few unanswered questions left.

And this is supposed to help me grow spiritually?

It seems to me that all my real spiritual growth has come during periods of doubt, when I was unconvinced that the answers offered by the Christian or Baha'i doctrines were true. (This is one of those periods.) During those times, I have to go looking for my own answers; those that are given free, without the search, somehow lack the same weight. I feel like I have to use the mind that God gave me, even — especially — in religious matters, and to do otherwise would be something less than human. I take the independent investigation of truth very seriously.

The Baha'i Faith tells us that humanity has finally outgrown its adolescence and reached adulthood. Why, then, are we given yet more laws and answers than before? To me, it just doesn't seem to fit.

Furthermore, the set of Baha'i beliefs and laws can only grow over time, as the Universal House of Justice issues more infallible interpretations over the years. They certainly don't seem to be in the business of abrogating anything that the Central Figures have said, nor what they themselves have said in the past. Therefore, the amount of authoritative “stuff” in the Faith cannot shrink; it can only grow. If it continues this way, it seems to me that the Faith will calcify — with so many unchangeable answers, it will gradually lose its ability to adapt, even if it must do so in order to fulfill its divine station.

There is one non-religious idea that I’ve concluded is a fundamental truth about the world: the concept of incremental change, of slow adaptation to changing conditions while retaining an unchangeable core of individuality or “self.” It’s required for anything to thrive, whether it be an organism, a species, a personality, a building, a city, a software artifact, even a belief system. Christianity tried for centuries to resist change, only to be rocked by periodic upheavals like the Reformation. Now many denominations have learned to adapt to a changing world and an advancing understanding of morality, and they work pretty well. The Episcopal Church, at least, offers a relatively simple Gospel-based core doctrine, but its non-core beliefs change with the times. The changes are done thoughtfully, not according to whims or fads, but slowly — just enough to maintain a certain aliveness. The Church once condoned the subordination of women; now it doesn’t. It may once have been silent on the issues of slavery and racism in America; it certainly isn’t anymore. The institution learns and adapts.

(Ironically, the Baha’i Faith explicitly teaches incremental change, in the form of progressive revelation — each religion teaches a core of unchangeable truths, but with a set of beliefs and laws that change from one revelation to another. But the time scale is all wrong: will we really be living with all these same early-twentieth-century interpretations for a thousand years? I find that hard to believe.)

Christianity in general seems to fit this incremental-change model particularly well. There are many Gospels, and none of them are guaranteed to have accurately recorded the exact words and deeds of Christ. Their authors had certain audiences, certain agendas. They contradict each other sometimes, in fact. But because of these loving yet human retellings, the story of Christ’s life takes on a mythic status, more so than a historical one. And here the importance of mystery arises: because the Christ story is myth-like, its meaning shifts and deepens throughout a person’s life (or a culture’s). How can there be any one interpretation to something as profoundly simple as the Last Supper? It’s a holy mystery. Different interpretations are appropriate for different people, or at different stages of a person’s life, or in different cultures. No one can force a certain interpretation on me, nor should they — it would lose its mystery, and ruin any chance that I can get other meanings out of it later. Nailing down a single interpretation would damage the myth beyond repair, by stripping it of its mysterious aspect.

I’m convinced that this is why Christianity has lasted so long, and is still growing, in spite of its fragmentation. Its mythic basis allows for changing interpretations, while still remaining firm on the fundamental Christian truths (those pronounced uniformly by all the Gospels). It permits a diversity of denominations, for people with different needs and values. And above all, it offers an infinitely deep pool of spiritual truth, never running dry, no matter how many times a person goes back to it during his or her lifetime.

In contrast, the Baha’i Faith offers a pool which is large, but necessarily finite; definitive answers are always there for the asking.

* * *

As you can see, I seem to have irreconcilable differences with the Baha’i Faith. The question remaining to me is: am I still a Baha’i? If I believe in Baha’u’llah as the Manifestation of God for this day, then I would still be a Baha’i. That’s the only test that counts.

The answer is, I just don’t know anymore. I no longer have the certitude I once had. I know I’ll find out if He is or not in the next world, but until then, I just can’t make myself believe it. Because of the solidity, coherence, and authority of its teachings, the Baha’i Faith is not a religion in which one can just pick and choose what to believe or not believe.

My soul is still moved by Baha’u’llah’s writings, and probably will always be; their beauty is simply incomparable. I’m sure they’re divinely inspired (though I’m no longer sure exactly how). But most of the issues I’ve described here come from later interpretations, not from His own pen. Therein lies the problem. With the Covenant, Baha’u’llah made it very clear that Abdu’l-Baha’ was his successor, and that what he said was authoritative; and then it passed to the Guardian, and so on down to the Universal House of Justice. To believe in the authority of some of these institutions and not others is to break the Covenant, which is emotionally impossible for me. It’s also illogical. I don’t see how I can believe that Baha’u’llah was who He said He was, and yet discount what He clearly said about the succession of His authority.

That leaves two choices: I accept all of it, or I accept none of it.

Now you know what I have to do. Since I can’t make myself accept all of it anymore, I feel like I have no choice but to resign my membership in the Baha’i Faith.

Please understand that this was not an easy decision for me to make. It took months. It’s still deeply painful, and it will remain so for a very long time; I have been a Baha’i for my entire adult life, and it is part of my identity. Its teachings are deeply entwined with my personal value system, to the point where I don’t know sometimes where my own beliefs end and the Baha’i doctrines begin. I still have a great love for my Baha’i friends, and I’m acutely aware of how much pain this will cause them. To spare them this pain, I considered quietly “going inactive,” but I don’t think that would be intellectually honest, especially since I plan to be active in the church that we’re attending. I also need closure to this whole matter, and leaving it open-ended like that just prolongs it unnecessarily. And besides, every new beginning requires an ending!

I hope that the Baha’is that I know and love can understand why I am doing this. I don’t think the Faith is entirely wrong — I’m just not sure it’s entirely right, that’s all. It’s definitely not right for me, at this point in my life. I know that many of my Baha’i friends do know it’s right for them; may they continue growing happily in the Faith! My prayers will always be with them. And the Faith will be right for many seekers. I do think that growth will come, in time; the Faith offers so many wonderful solutions for the problems of this world.

But I also hope that if “entry by troops” does not happen in the way that Baha’is expect it to, that they may better understand why the Faith is not right for many seekers. I tried my best to make it right for me, but couldn’t do it — and I was a deepened Baha’i with a strong incentive to stay with it! One of the ways I think the Faith must adapt is to accept its place as one of many, many diverse religions in the world, not as a tiny religion which assumes that it will eventually claim the majority of the world's people. It will not appeal to all those people, because many people's spiritual needs will not be fulfilled by the Faith. If this letter can help the Baha'is understand that better, then that's really the best I can hope for.

I read a book recently called "Things Seen and Unseen." It's an autobiographical work by an Episcopalian woman who describes her slow transition into a church community as being "pushed by God" — as though there was an invisible hand at her back, gently pushing her in the direction that she needs to go to achieve spiritual maturity. That's what I've been feeling for the last six months. When you feel the hand of God, you go with it. I don't know where I'm going. But I trust that it will be where God wants me to be.

I love you all dearly, and I pray that God may walk with you through all your journeys.

Jenifer Tidwell

Baha'is in Exile: An Account of Followers of Baha' u' llah Outside the Mainstream Baha'i Religion

Author Vernon Elvin Johnson considers Baha'is in Exile a sequel to his doctoral dissertation. In this book, Johnson seeks to continue the history he briefly covered in the last chapter of his dissertation. Baha'is are followers of Baha'u'llah, the main founder of the Baha'i religion. The Baha'is mentioned in this book have been rejected, cast out, or exiled from the faith by the majority – or mainstream – body of Baha'is, creating what some consider divisions in the Baha'i faith.

About the Book

Vernon Elvin Johnson holds four degrees: B.S., Oklahoma Baptist University; two Master's degrees from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, B.D./M.Div. and Th.M.; and a Ph.D. from Baylor University. He has served as a pastor of a mission in Texas and a church in Oklahoma and was a librarian and teacher in an aeronautical school in Tulsa. He is a Southern Baptist evangelical minister with an interest in the Baha'i faith. Johnson plays the guitar and sings and has performed in various churches.

To Buy the book Visit : <https://www.booktopia.com.au/baha-is-in-exile/ebook/9781645303800.html>

Religious Conversion in Malaysia by Baha'i Faith

Deceptive religious conversion in Malaysia – Chinese Malaysian converts 100s of Malaysians to the Baha'i cult

Baha'i missionary Soon Kam with his wife Sarah Greenspoon (from Jenjarom, Malaysia) with Malaysian dignitaries.

Soon Kam has deceptively converted many Chinese Malaysians to the Baha'i cult.

The Caravan Magazine – Free Baha’i Faith

The Caravan of East and West was established in 1929 by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler and his wife Julie.

The Caravan was a foundation that had a quarterly magazine called The Caravan in 1929. They also had a quarterly magazine called The Children’s Caravan in 1935, which ‘helps to keep children in touch with each other’. (Educational Digest). They also apparently published some other works.

Originally a part of the Bahá’í Faith, that relationship ended shortly after the New York administration was denied oversight by its founders. Sohrab refused and was ex-communicated in 1939, which then led Julie to also refuse to appear to answer questions. The foundation severed ties, but continued to do work for the Bahá’í cause, without official sanction.

“At its height, just after World War II, the Caravan had grown to a membership of almost 250,000.... and its business soon overshadowed the New History Society.”

Chapter 15 An article in the New York Times, states that in 1949 the German contingent alone had 100,000 members.

Two of the members of the Board of Directors were Syud Hossein, ambassador from India to Egypt and Minister to Trans-Jordan; and Basant Koomer a lecturer and educator.

Following the passion of Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, we are proud to be back with ‘The Caravan’ Magazine. It will be a quarterly magazine and can be read online through our website. You can also subscribe to our magazine simply by writing to us at info@freebahais.org with the subject line – “Sign up for the Caravan Magazine” and all our magazines will be delivered to you right in your inbox.

For Details Refer the Website Link : <http://freebahais.org/the-caravan-magazine/>

Free Baha'i Faith – Books by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Courtesy : <http://freebahais.org>

The Song of The Caravan by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

The Story of the Divine Plan by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Abdul Baha's Grandson By Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Broken Silence by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Abdu'l Baha in Egypt by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

Living Pictures. In the Great Drama of the 19th Century by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab and Julie Chanler

The Story of the Divine Plan

Taking place during and immediately following World War I

by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab

The New History Foundation
132 East 65th street, New York 21, N. Y., U. S. A.

[Title page]

Date of publication
August, 1947

Copyright, 1947
By
New History Foundation
All Rights Reserved

[Inside Title page]

By the same author

Heart Phantasies

The New Humanity

Poems on Hollywood Bow (illustrated)

Abdul Baha in Egypt

Renaissance (a booklet)

Message to the Youth of Europe (a booklet)

The Song of the Caravan

Living Pictures (co-author, Julie Chanler)

Silver Sun (co-author, Julie Chanler)

The Bible of Mankind

Broken Silence

Abdul Baha's Grandson

The Will and Testament of Abdul Baha

The Human Charter

(edited from the writings of Baha-O-Llah and Abdul Baha)

[Vanity page]

CONTENTS

Foreword.....i

Chapter I

The Farmer of Galilee.....1

Chapter II

The Tablets to the United States7

The North-Eastern States.....9

The Southern States11

The Central States.....12

The Western States.....13

Chapter III

The Tablets to Canada.....18

Chapter IV

Tablets to the United States and Canada.....22

Chapter V

The Last Tablet.....32

Chapter VI

Accident Insurance.....40

Chapter VII

American Bahais Carry On.....	44
Chapter VIII
Bahai Committee of Investigation.....	57
Chapter IX
The Doors Open.....	67
Chapter X
My Steeple-Chase.....	75
Chapter XI
The Tube and the Book.....	82
Chapter XII
Preparations for the Convention.....	93
Chapter XIII
The Convention of Reconciliation.....	102
Prayers in the Divine Plan.....	117

[Contents page]

To the teachers who will arise in the casts of the earth and in the wests thereof to carry the message of Abdul Baha
this book is dedicated

“Formerly they were as moths, but they will become as royal falcons.
Formerly, they were as bubbles, but they will become the sea.”

[Dedication page]

FOREWARD

Nearly two thousand years ago, after his earthly mission had been completed, the inspired hero of Israel addressed his disciples:

“Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature” (St. Mark, chapter 16, verse 15).

To all intents and purposes, the voice of Jesus had been silenced on Mount Calvary, yet his spirit, so vital that it surmounted the very tomb, appeared to his humble disciples, commanding them to carry on his work beyond the confines of their native land and to the limits of the earth. It was an incredible assignment.

I am ignorant of the phrasing of this sentence in Aramaic, the language supposedly used by Jesus, but the English translation consists of thirteen words and I wonder if any other thirteen words have had such a profound influence on the destiny of mankind. As a result of this injunction, the men who heard it set aside the limitations of birth, upbringing and character, and arose to peaks of valor and accomplishment; after which thousands upon thousands renounced the security and comfort of home to travel in their footsteps. Missionary bands were organized and sent to the five continents and the islands of the seas; libraries, schools, universities and hospitals were built; the New Testament was translated, in whole or in part, into a thousand languages, all to bring the message of the Man of far-away Galilee into the hearts and lives of the people, everywhere.

No more brilliant records can be found than are those of the staunch and selfless teachers who marched the length and breadth of pagan Europe, scaled the snow-capped mountains of Asia, ventured into the jungles of Africa and faced untold hardships in the lands of the Americas. These men and women were indeed the disciples of Christ, for with their spiritual ears they had clearly distinguished his voice as it receded over the centuries, and obeyed it with the awe and devotion of the eleven who had heard it first.

During our times, the command has sounded again: Go ye into all the world — a smaller world, it is true, yet, today as before it is not the glaciers and jungles of nature that obstruct and delay progress, but the glaciers and jungles in the human heart. Frontiers as obtuse as ever on the fair surface of the globe and in the minds of men, with traditions, superstitions and customs grown weightier with the years. It was the name ungainly world that Abdul Baha took into his protective arms in the pages of the Divine Plan and upon which he conferred the teachings of his Prophet-father; it was the same rank and file of humanity that he called upon to teach the same message, in an hour of acute need.

[i]

Some years earlier, when Baha-O-Llah had arisen to the realms beyond, he had left behind him a plan for the union of all races and nations — a detailed, practical plan to be put into execution by the maturing men and women of modern times. It was a blueprint for the ending of all wars and the establishment of a world civilization. Baha-O-Llah had left this priceless legacy in the care of his great son, Abdul Baha, and it was during World War I, while he was living in Palestine, that Abdul Baha transferred this trust to the Bahais throughout the world.

The Divine Plan was dictated to me by Abdul Baha in fourteen Tablets and was carried to the United States. Here he considered the needs of all nations and, as a spiritual geographer, took into account the resources of the countries of the earth and the islands of the seas, calling most of them by name. These Tablets with their wealth of knowledge, instruction and inspiration constitute the Magna Charts of a new civilization. It is according to its name, a Divine Plan.

In these Tablets, the teachers of the New Day are summoned so specifically, so personally, that each reader must feel himself addressed and chosen. Then, even as the cautious fishermen were transformed into saints and martyrs, so will posterity, in the actual words of Abdul Baha, evaluate the station of individuals as yet unknown:

“Formerly they were as moths, but they will become as royal falcons.
Formerly they were as bubbles, but they will become the sea.”

Two thousand years ago, Christ in the most general way commanded his disciples: “Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.”

Today, Abdul Baha, calling the countries and islands by name, repeats the same injunction in a more precise manner.

We are in a position to estimate the miracles which were accomplished as a result of the command of Jesus given to eleven men, but can we faintly imagine the nature of our world when the Divine Plan is a story fulfilled?

It is the beginning of a new pilgrimage, launched simultaneously in the East and in the West, in the North and in the South: Go ye into all the world.

[ii]

[photo of 'Abdu'l-Baha omitted]

[iii]

THE STORY OF THE DIVINE PLAN

by MIRZA AHMAD SOHRAB

CHAPTER I

THE FARMER OF GALILEE

A sphere is the most complete thing in the Universe: the world itself, the round notes of a lark, the full life that faces all horizons.

To Abdul Baha's searching spirit, every aspect of existence was familiar. He knew the literature of the religions which have dominated the great sections of humanity. He knew the histories of the countries, their customs, manners, aspirations. He knew politics as it should be — an art: he knew it as it was — a tangled web of intrigue and group-interest. He knew the heart of man very well, and he knew the plan of God.

He was familiar with all these things and with others of a quite different nature, for he had been tested in the crucible of experience. He knew the luxury of his father's mansion in Teheran where he had spent his early childhood — the eldest son of a noble and honored house. He knew the lightning change to destitution, the breaking of familiar ties, the long road into exile. He knew the anguish of prison life, the monotony of endless decades of confinement; and then a second lightning change to complete freedom — the touring of two continents, the meeting with thousands of all nations, classes, professions. He knew how to meet men on their own ground, whatever that ground might be.

So, both spiritually and practically, Abdul Baha was fitted to deal with life. In whatsoever circumstances he was the man of God and the man of the world.

When in 1912 he had completed his epoch-making journey through Europe and throughout the United States and Canada, during which he had warned the people and the governments that nothing but a complete reversal of attitude could prevent a world cataclysm, he returned to Palestine as the center of an international movement. There, while the storm clouds gathered in the countries where he, had so lately spoken on file practical ways to peace, he took up his patriarchal life in the quiet town of Haifa.

1

After the war had broken and words were of no more avail, he immediately turned his attention to the safe-guarding of the populace of the region in which he lived and those adjoining. He set out for the Sea of Galilee and spent months at Tiberias and Adassieh laying extensive agricultural plans and supervising the planting of corn, wheat and other food stuffs. The latter village especially, inhabited altogether by Zoroastrians became the headquarters of a vast farming project. Thus, through his foresight and resourcefulness, the Bahai community and the poor living on the curve of the Bay of Acca were to a large extent ensured against the calamity that was to follow.

With the transfer of the scene of war from the Dardanelles to Syria, the already depleted inhabitants had been subjected to fines, requisitions and exorbitant taxes. The Turkish government took everything: horses, cows, camels, donkeys, sheep; also wood, iron railings, copper and brass vases. Household furniture was not exempted. The people were deprived of their mattresses, cauldrons, cooking utensils, even their clothing. The majority of houses and shops were swept clean. Then came the famine.

The famine in Palestine derived from several sources, chief among which was the advent of armies of locusts in numbers unprecedented as far as the memories of the oldest inhabitants could reach. At times, these unwelcome guests brought night in daytime as they covered the face of the sky for hours. To this condition, coupled with the extortion and looting by the Turkish authorities, was added the wholesale buying of supplies by the Germans to be shipped to the "Fatherland." In short the land, stripped by locusts of two varieties, insect and human, was no longer able to meet even a percentage of the normal requirement. Death was the order of the day. Thousands upon thousands prolonged their lives on the peelings of oranges and bananas, the rind of watermelons or simply on grass, and then fell in their tracks leaving none behind sufficiently animate to mourn for them or bury their corpses. In Lebanon alone, more than one hundred thousand persons succumbed to starvation.

The famine killed the finer emotions and sentiment also. Men, impelled by the instinct of self-preservation, became like wild beasts and fought the fight to the finish. At the same time, the girls of the cities and villages, pure and lovely only a short year ago, trod the awful path of prostitution in order to keep alive just a little longer. Thus, communicable and contagious diseases began to spread with such alarming rapidity that the press, braving the restrictions of censorship, came out with statements that the survival of the nation itself was in jeopardy. Finally the sluggish government, goaded into some action, opened a few free clinics.

2

Food coupons as issue by Abdul Baka during the famine in Haifa, Palestine. The writing, in Arabic, is from a verse in the Koran expressing God's will to feed the hungry. The author has in his possession nearly two hundred of these coupons, from among the thousands which were distributed. All coupons were numbered. The above, from left to right are 66-69-81-84.

3

Although no town could be protected from the perils of these terrible days, the communities of Acca and Haifa lived in a comparative oasis. Trains of camels coming from Tiberius and Adassieh were ever on their way to the Master's house in Haifa. Here, sacks of wheat, corn and barley, and cases of vegetables, olive oil, fruit and nuts were unloaded and piled in the vast store room. Then, after an over-night rest, the caravan returned to the plantations for another consignment.

The soil around and adjacent to the Sea of Galilee, where Abdul Baha's agricultural enterprise was going on, being remarkably rich and fertile, yielded three and four crops in the season. Consequently the supplies were abundant and continuous. The Master managed the project himself, while responsibility for transportation was in the hands of Mirza Jalal Esphahani, husband of his daughter Ruha. My duties lay at the distributing end. The people would call at the house and I would provide them with coupons, were they Christian, Jew or Mohammedan. Some coupons bore Abdul Baha's seal together with specifications in his own handwriting on the provisions to be collected. The Master computed the amount required by each family. It was a thoroughly organized ration system.

All this applied to the very poor, but there were others to be considered also: the formerly rich or well-to-do families, now destitute but still proud. In these cases, the Master himself was the visitor, the bringer of provisions and good-cheer. With all the obligations that rested on him, he was willing to go out of his way in order to shield from possible humiliation those who were not accustomed to ask.

Of course there were impediments to be overcome. I well remember a certain instance which threw all of us into a state of consternation. One day Mirza Jalal arrived alone and strode into the presence of the Master. The caravan had been intercepted in Nazareth and the provisions commandeered by the Turkish officers. On receiving this information Abdul Baha acted immediately. His carriage was ordered and he set out alone for Nazareth.

Few of us slept that night for we knew that in such turbulent times, almost anything might happen; and when morning dawned we gathered at the gate and on the road, waiting for news. A long, long day, another anxious night, and then — late in the afternoon, the carriage came to view.

Food coupons in Abdul Baha's handwriting given to distinguished families which had become destitute. These coupons bear the name of recipient and the measure of flour or grain to be claimed.

We raced to meet it, tears streaming down our cheeks, and saw Abdul Baha sitting back very comfortably, a smile of satisfaction on his face.

We didn't learn much about his experience. The Turks had been rough, yes, quite uncompromising in their attitude; and then, all of a sudden, a telegram had been sent to Jemal Pasha at his military headquarters in the interior. Result: everything was to be returned. Mirza Jalal could set out right now and bring back our poor camels and the supplies. I can tell you that there was rejoicing that evening in Haifa. The townspeople crowded around the house and could hardly tear themselves away.

And so the years of war rolled on while Abdul Baha, the father, attended to the needs of his enormous family.

CHAPTER II

THE TABLETS TO THE UNITED STATES

After affairs in Haifa had been organized to a point where they could run on without his daily care, the Master would on occasion retire to the other side of the bay and sojourn awhile at Bahjee. In the beautiful house for so long occupied by Baha-O-Llah and where his sacred bones now rest, Abdul Baha would shift his thoughts from things as they were and plan for things to come.

The agonies to which Palestine was subjected were only a small part of the world-agony. Abdul Baha was acutely conscious of the trials of the people in every country and he feared lest with all their sacrifices they were playing a losing game. He mourned over the inability of mankind to forestall these recurrent calamities. The only hope was a coalition of the nations with agencies that would protect the interests of all. Had not Baha-O-Llah addressed the kings and rulers of the earth on these matters! Had not he himself travelled in his old age and explained to the people of Europe and America the steps that should be taken for the welding of humanity into one family! But no, the mind was slow to relinquish shabby old ideas and grasp new ones, however brilliant these new ideas might be; so, by long and painful process, it must be modernized and turned toward the future. That was the task — the task for the followers of Baha-O-Llah.

During these periods of physical relaxation at Bahjee, it was my inestimable privilege to live at the side of Abdul Baha — to follow him on his walks in the garden and through the meadows, to watch him in his moments of meditation and hear the words which fell from his lips like hyacinths of divine wisdom. One day, he approached me as I was poring over a book, making notes. “What are you studying?” he asked. I laid before him a World Geography published by The MacMillan Company in 1912, which volume had been given me by a student of the University of Beirut on one of his visits to Haifa.

Abdul Baha turned over the pages and examined the maps with interest. “These are the countries that must arise in the cause of peace!” he exclaimed, “Every one of them.” Then he pointed to the text. “Translate what it says.” So I began: The climatic conditions of the different regions, the methods of transportation, the produce, the industries, figures as to population, language, commerce. He took up my notes which were in Persian. “Oh, I see, you have started a skeleton listing already. Very good. Now proceed with it, and later bring the material to me.” I still have this geography in my possession — a book which was destined to be associated with a spiritual plan for the healing of nations — a practical plan for world union.

7

One Monday morning, it was March 26, 1916, Abdul Baha was sitting at the window of his room, looking past the olive grove, over the sea and far into infinitude. Suddenly, he turned and asked me to chant one of the Prayers of Baha-O-Llah. I obeyed, keenly feeling my own unworthiness and the extraordinary conditions under which I lived. When I had finished chanting, the Master looked at me with a soft, dancing light in his eyes and said: “You must be infinitely grateful to Baha-O-Llah for having chosen you to be with me for such a long time. Surely it must be for a great purpose that is not apparent at present. Now bring pen and paper. I will dictate a Tablet to America.” He began:

To the friends and maid-servants of God in

THE NORTH-EASTERN STATES

upon them be greetings and praise!

This was the first Tablet in a series which later was to become known as “The Divine Plan,” a mighty work of the spirit in which Abdul Baha was to call upon the people of North America, section by section, commanding them to arise simultaneously and spread the Cause to all the inhabited parts of the earth. In this first Tablet, he says in part:

Throughout the coming centuries and cycles, many harvests will be gathered. Consider the work of former generations. During the lifetime of his Holiness Christ, the believing, firm souls were few and numbered, but the heavenly benedictions descended so plentifully that in a short time countless souls entered under the shade of the Gospel. God has said in the Koran: ‘One grain will bring forth seven sheaves, and every sheaf shall contain one hundred grains.’ — In other words, one grain will become seven hundred; and if God so wills, he will double these also. It has often happened that one blessed soul has become the cause of the guidance of a nation. Now we must not look at our own ability and capacity; nay, rather we must in these days behold the favors and bounties of God, who has made the drop to find the expression of the sea and the atom the importance of the sun.

8

[photo of Mansion of Bahji omitted]

9

The above Tablet was forwarded to America and caused a great deal of active interest, but during the months that followed, various remarks of Abdul Baha pointed to the fact that the Tablet was not final and that it would be supplemented by another. Then on February 2, 1917, the Master, from his house in Haifa, dictated to me a second and longer Tablet likewise addressed to the believers of God in Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Vermont, Pennsylvania; New Jersey, New York.

This Tablet, coming as it does from Abdul Baha who saw all things with the eye of equality, is interesting in the fact that he singles out the region that he in addressing an being unique and especially favored. He begins thus:

All the regions in the estimation of the True One are one region, and all the cities and villages are ideally equal and similar to each other. Neither holds distinction over another. All of them are the fields of God and the habitation of the souls of men. But through faith and assurance and the precedence of one part over another, the dweller imparts holiness and sanctification to the dwelling and some of the countries becoming exceptional, attain to the most great distinction.

For example, notwithstanding the fact that some of the countries of Europe and America are distinguished for the purity of the air, the wholesomeness of the water, the charm of mountains, plains and prairies, and are preferred above the rest, yet Palestine became an honor to all other regions of the world because all the divine Manifestations from the time of His Holiness Abraham to the time of the appearance of the Seal of the Prophets, have either lived in this region or have emigrated to or travelled through it.

Likewise Yathreb and Batha attained to the most great bounty, and the lights of the Prophets have shone from that horizon. For this reason Palestine and Hedjaz are distinguished above all other regions.

Likewise as the continent of America, in the estimation of the True One, is the field of the effulgence of lights, the Kingdom of the Manifestation of Mysteries, the home of the righteous ones and the gathering-place of the free, therefore every section thereof is blessed; yet because these nine states have been favored in faith and assurance, hence through this precedence they have obtained spiritual privilege.

The next morning, I took the transcription of the Tablet to the Master. He read it slowly, adding a few words here and there. Then raising his head, he said: "Let me see what the friends of God in these States will do. Will they arise with superhuman energy and spread the lights of the Sun of Reality in all those cities, towns, villages and hamlets? I have pointed out to them the highway of service. Will they walk in it? I have drawn for them the plan of God. Will they, like experienced generals, attack the enemy from all sides? And what will you do? Are you going to take a hand in this divine campaign, the birth of which you are now witnessing?"

10

These were words uttered a long time ago as the Master summoned the North-Eastern States to his side. It was the opening shot.

Abdul Baha sent an initial Tablet to the Southern States: Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas. Later from his house in Haifa, on February 3, 1917, he dictated a longer and more significant Tablet:

To the friends and maid-servants of God in

THE SOUTHERN STATES

upon them be Baha-O-Llah El Abha !

Again we find that Abdul Baha stresses the specific advantages enjoyed by the people on which he is now focussing his attention. Theirs is an unusual opportunity. He speaks to them as follows:

The philosophers of the ancients, the thinkers of the Middle Ages and the scientists of this century have agreed that the best and most ideal region for the habitation of man is the temperate zone, for in this belt the intellect and thoughts rise to the highest stage of maturity, and the ability of civilization manifests itself in full efflorescence. When you read history critically and with a penetrating eye, it becomes evident that the majority of the famous men have been born, reared and have done their work in the temperate zone, while very, very few have appeared in the torrid and frigid zones.

Now these sixteen Southern States are situated in the temperate zone, and in these regions the perfections of the world of nature have been fully revealed. Consequently the moderation of the weather, the beauty of the scenery and the geographical configuration of the country make great effect in the world of mind and thought. This fact is well demonstrated through observation and experience.

11

Therefore in these sixteen States, the Divine Teachings should unquestionably reveal themselves with added effulgence, the Breaths of the Holy Spirit display a more penetrating intensity, the ocean of the Love of God be stirred with higher waves, the breezes of the Rose-garden of Divine Love be wafted at a greater speed and the Fragrances of Holiness diffused with rapidity.

After my copy had been corrected. Abdul Baha said:

“The importance of this Tablet will be revealed in the future. In these vast sixteen States, the lights of the Sun of Reality will shine with great power, and the dark clouds of ignorance and prejudice will be dispelled from their horizon. Tell them: Do not let your thoughts and ideals be crystallized around particular matters. Close your eyes to outward differences and look upon each other with the eye of oneness. . . . Upraise the banner of unity, fraternity, cooperation and reciprocity amongst all the peoples, so that there may be left of prejudice, naught but a name, and of ignorance, not even a shadow; that the religion of God may pitch its tent over the East and the West, the radiance of the Kingdom illumine all hearts, perfect agreement and association be realized between the races, religions and nationalities Find the world of creation find composure and rest.”

According to procedure, both a short and long Tablet were written for the people of Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio, Michigan, Minnesota, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas. The second one was dictated on February 8, 1917, from Baha-O-Llah's room in Acca.

To the believers and maid-servants of God in

THE CENTRAL STATES

... These twelve Central States are like unto the heart of America, and the heart is connected with all the organs and parts of man. If the heart is strengthened, all the organs of the body are reinforced, and if the heart is weak, the entire physical structure is subjected to feebleness.

Now praise be to God that Chicago and its environs, from the beginning of the diffusion of the Fragrances of God, have been a strong heart. Therefore, through Divine Bounty and Providence it has become confirmed in certain great matters.

Firstly: The Call of the Kingdom was at the very start raised from Chicago. This is indeed a great privilege, for in future centuries and cycles, it will be as an axis around which the honor of Chicago will revolve.

12

Secondly: A number of souls with the utmost firmness and steadfastness arose in that blessed spot for the promotion of the Word of God and even to the present moment, having purified and sanctified the heart, they are occupied with the promulgation of the Teachings of God.

Thirdly: During the American journey, Abdul Baha several times passed through Chicago and associated with the friends of God. For some time he sojourned in that city. Day and night he was occupied with the mention of the True One and summoned the people to the Kingdom of God.

Fourthly: Up to the present time, the effect of every movement initiated in Chicago was spread to all parts and in all directions; just as everything that appears in and manifests from the heart influences all the organs and the structure of the body.

Fifthly: The first Mashrekol-Azkar (Temple) in America was instituted in Chicago, and this honor and distinction is infinite in value. Undoubtedly, out of this Mashrekol-Azkar thousands of other Mashrekol-Azkars will be born.

In reviewing this Tablet, Abdul Baha said: “The believers in America must be like lighthouses, lightships and searchlights, so that in the tempestuous sea of the world, the arks of their lives may reach the haven of security. Each individual Bahai must be a life-saver who, facing the rough waves of the sea, plunges into the whirlpool and saves souls from drowning. To sit, to talk, to listen — there is no virtue in that. To rise, to act, to help that is the Bahai life. The sincerity and earnestness of the friends in the Central States must appear through deeds. Deeds are the standards. I have done all that is necessary. I have drawn for them the plan of God which must guide them through all the coming years. I have explained to them the Principles of Baha-O-Llah. Now the promotion of those principles depends upon their Co-operation with one another and the turning of their faces to the Kingdom of Abha.”

Two Tablets were written to New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona, Nevada, California, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Utah. The second one, dictated on February 15, 1917, from the room of Baha-O-Llah in Acca, was addressed to:

The believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in

THE WESTERN STATES

Here the Master finds similitude between the furthestmost Western state and the Land of the Prophets. He says:

13

The blessed State of California bears great similarity to the Holy Land — that is, the country of Palestine. The air is in the utmost temperance, the plain very spacious, and the fruits of Palestine are seen in their freshness and delicacy. When Abdul Baha was traveling and journeying through those States, he found himself in Palestine, for from many standpoints there was a remarkable likeness between the two regions. In some instances, the shores of the Pacific Ocean show marked resemblance to those of the Holy Land, the flora even of Palestine appearing there. A study of this phenomenon has led to much speculation.

Likewise in the State of California and other Western States, scenes, of the world of nature which bewilder the minds of men, are manifest: lofty mountains, deep canyons, majestic waterfalls and giant trees are wit- on all sides, while the soil is in the utmost fertility and richness. That blessed State is similar to the Holy Land and that region like unto a delectable paradise, in many ways identical with Palestine. Now just as there are natural resemblances, heavenly resemblances must also be acquired...

California and the other Western States must earn an ideal similarity with the Holy Land, so that from these regions the Breaths of the Holy Spirit may be diffused to all parts of America and Europe, the Call of the Kingdom of God exhilarate and rejoice all ears, the Divine Principles bestow a new life, the different parties become one party and the once divergent ideas revolve around one unique center; that the East and West of the continent may embrace each other, the anthem of the oneness of the world of humanity confer a new life upon all the children of men and the Tabernacle of Universal Peace be pitched on the apex of America.

When the original of the above Tablet had been corrected by Abdul Baha, he returned it to me, at the same time slapping me smartly on both cheeks. "It is very good" he laughed, "and this is your wage for copying the Tablet . Now let us take a walk in the town."

As we passed through the narrow streets of Acca, he turned to me and said "Speak!" I had to obey as best I could; so, assembling my thoughts which had been focused on the last Tablet, I began to relate the story of the discovery of gold in the stream gravels of California which had taken place in 1848, and told how, when the news was spread, tens of thousands of persons in the Eastern States left their farms, factories and homes in a mad rush for the gold-fields — many thousands dying on the way. The Beloved thought for a while, then he spoke: "Consider how men, in order to gain wealth and honor, threw themselves into the midst of all kinds of dangers. How cheerfully they accepted all day, the mines of the Kingdom of Abha are being discovered and the precious Jewels of the Spirit are exposed. These mines are inexhaustible. The more they dig, the greater will be the output of the ideal silver, gold and diamond. The believers in the Western States must find their way from these earthly mines to the spiritual mines. They must realize how their forefathers, in order to obtain gold, underwent the most incredible adversities, exposed their lives to danger and accepted all difficulties with firm resolution. The friends also, in order to guide the souls, to promote the Word of God, to discover the unseen treasure of the Kingdom and to prospect the invisible mines of the Realm of Might, must be willing to undergo any difficulty, so that they may achieve results and enrich the world with the boundless wealth of Truth. To the believers of the Western States, the self-sacrifice of the old pioneers and the patient gold-diggers must serve as a great example of perseverance.

14

[photo of house of Abdullah Pasha where 'Abdu'l-Baha lived in Acca omitted]

15

Another day, when the Master and I were speaking about the system of irrigation which had turned the wastes of Southern California into a paradise of flowers, he said: "When you travel in those parts, tell the people: The Heavenly Irrigator appeared 70 years ago in Persia and showed his disciples how to flood the dry fields of the hearts. Through his knowledge and inspiration, they were enabled to transform the waste deserts of the minds and souls into luxuriant gardens through which rivers of light flowed from the inaccessible Mountains of God."

He continued. "Say to them:

O ye friends of the Western States! Just as your Government is these extraordinary hardships, and travelled thousands of miles through deserts and over mountains, in order to reach the gold mines. But now in this spending extraordinary effort and money in the matter of irrigation, building dams on the tablelands to save the winter rain, so that the valleys, the plains and the orchards may be flooded during the summer season — you also must exert yourselves in the irrigation of the hearts of men. Learn perseverance from your universal teacher, Baha-O-Llah, who was not disheartened by any obstacle from irrigating the hearts of humanity. Kings and nations arose against him and banished him to distant lands. Nevertheless, whenever he entered a new place, he fearlessly occupied his time in the spiritual irrigation and the sowing of the seeds of knowledge and wisdom in the prepared fields of Spirit. Through his tender care, the wildernesses were changed into rose gardens, the sad hearts were made happy, the sleepy ones were awakened and the weak ones strengthened. Irrigation! This is the real and permanent irrigation of the Lord. One drop of this water will allay the thirst of all mankind, suffering the fields of the hearts to become green and luxuriant throughout all eternity. If the ground of the spirit is flooded with this pure water, it will not be followed by drought; its flowers will not fade and its freshness will never pass away. I hope that the Western friends may become the spiritual irrigators of the Kingdom.”

16

Again, in speaking of his hopes for the people of the Western States, Abdul Baha expressed himself in glowing terms: “If we concentrate our attention on the spiritual world and the rich results issuing therefrom, we observe that through the Teachings of Christ and the self-sacrifice of his disciples, Europe and America were adorned with the bright jewels of divine civilization, ferocious characters were refined and the love of humanity spread.

“In a similar manner in the Bahai Cause, there must appear extraordinary spiritual geniuses, wonders of the Kingdom of God, souls who in knowledge, sociability, tenderness, loving kindness, universality and joyfulness, may be considered as unique and peerless. Should such heavenly beings appear in the Western States: souls who have discovered their ways to the mines of the Kingdom, souls who are the irrigators of the grounds of the hearts of humanity, souls who are the wonders of the realm of Truth. The power and creative energy of the Kingdom of Abha will become manifest and apparent. Then and not until then will the spiritual creation of the Almighty become perfected in those States, the miracles of the transforming power of the Spirit embodied, the Mysteries of the Holy Rooks revealed and the golden age of pence and brotherhood established.”

In this manner did Abdul Baha call upon the Western States, even as he had invoked the Northern, Southern and Central States, to take part in the great practical and spiritual combat of the Twentieth Century.

17

Chapter III

THE TABLETS TO CANADA

The time had now come for Abdul Baha to turn his attention to Canada and the northern stretches of this hemisphere. In a first Tablet, he gives especial consideration to the inhabitants of Iceland, Greenland and the Franklin Islands. These ice-bound regions shall be tempered with the knowledge of God, and melted with the love of God. In it not said in the Koran: “A day will come wherein the lights of unity will illumine all the world”?

The second and longer Tablet to Canada was dictated On February 21, 1917 in the room of Baha-O-Llah at Acca. It is addressed thus:

To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon, Mackenzie, Keewateen, Ungava, Franklin Islands and Greenland.

In opening this Tablet, the Master as usual strikes the note of equality and then proceeds to mention the rare privileges that have been conferred upon Canada together with the promise of its future.

In the great Koran, God says: 'Thou shalt see no difference in the creatures of God.' In other words, He says: From the ideal standpoint, there is no variation among the creatures of God, because all were created by Him. From the above premise, a conclusion is drawn, that there is even no difference among the various countries; at the same time, the history of the Dominion of Canada is infinitely glorious and its future great. Thus it shall become the object of the Glance of Providence and the manifestation of the Favors of the Supreme Lord.

The Master admits that he had been warned against visiting Montreal. Many persons had thought that he would not be well received there because the majority of the inhabitants of that province were Catholic. In the estimation of his advisors, they were, submerged in the sea of dogma, imitation and formalism, and in no condition to hearken to the call of Reality. In writing of himself in this situation, he continues:

But these stories did not have any effect on the resolution of Abdul Baha. He, trusting in God, turned his face toward Montreal. When he entered that city, he observed that all the doors were open; he found the hearts in the utmost state of receptivity and the ideal power of the Kingdom of God removing every obstacle and obstruction. In the churches and meetings of that Dominion, he called men to the Kingdom of God with the utmost joy, and scattered seeds which will be irrigated by the hand of Divine Power. Undoubtedly those seeds will grow, becoming green and verdant, and many rich harvests will be gathered. In the promotion of the Divine Principle he found no antagonist and no adversary.

18

[photo of 'Abdu'l-Baha in Palestine omitted]

19

Then he speaks directly to the believers:

Do ye not took upon the smallness of your number and the multitudes of the nations. Five grains of wheat will be endued with heavenly blessing whereas a thousand tons of tares will yield no results and have no effect. One fruitful tree will be conducive to the life of society, whereas a thousand forests of wild trees offer no fruits. The plain is covered with pebbles, but precious stones are rare. One pearl is better than a thousand wildernesses of sand, especially the Pearl of Great Price which is endowed with Divine Blessing. Ere long thousands of other pearls will be born from It. When that Pearl associates and becomes the intimate of the pebbles, they also all change into pearls.

Therefore, again I repeat, that the future of Canada, whether from the standpoint of civilization or from the viewpoint of the virtues of the Kingdom is very great. Day by day, civilization and freedom shall increase. Likewise, the cloud of the Kingdom will water the seeds of guidance sown in that Dominion. Consequently rest ye not, seek ye no composure, attach not yourselves to the luxuries of this ephemeral world, free yourselves from every attachment and strive with heart and soul to become fully established in the Kingdom of God. Gain ye the heavenly treasures. Day by day, become ye more illumined. Draw ye nearer and nearer unto the Threshold of Oneness. Become ye the manifestors of spiritual favors and the dawning-places of infinite lights. If it is possible, send ye teachers to other portions of Canada; likewise dispatch ye teachers to Greenland and the home of the Eskimos.

In regard to the teachers, they must completely divest themselves from the old garments and be invested with a new garment. According to the statement of Christ, they must attain to the station of rebirth: that it, whereas in the first instance they were born from the womb of the mother, this time they must be born from the womb of the world of nature. Just as they are now totally unaware of the experiences of the foetal world, they must also entirely forget the defects of the world of nature. They must be baptized with the Water of Life, the Fire of the Love of God and the Breaths of the Holy Spirit; be satisfied with little food, but take a large portion from the heavenly table. They must disengage themselves from temptation and covetousness, and be filled with the spirit. Through the effect of their pure breath, they must change the stone into the brilliant ruby and the shell into pearl. Like unto the cloud of vernal shower, they must transform the black soil into the rose-garden and orchard. They must make the blind seeing, the deaf hearing, the extinguished one enkindled and art aglow, and the dead quickened.

20

Upon ye be Baha-O-Llah El Abha!

The acid test of every movement is its practicability. The right cause will at first strengthen the character from better habits and enrich the spirit. When this state has been arrived at, the next logical one is that of sharing.

The Bahai Cause is a failure if it simply remains as a source of inspiration to its adherents, because from its inception it was viewed as a creative power for the readjustment of world affairs. Its principles can never be too often reiterated, for each one is an adventure in modern thinking and constitutes a vast field of endeavor: The fact of the Oneness of the world of humanity. The ideal of independent investigation of Truth. Realization that the basis of all the divine religions is one. Emphasis on religion as being the cause of love and harmony; not hatred and discord. A new outlook on religion as being in conformity with science and reason. Equality of the rights of men and women. A universal auxiliary language. Education for all, everywhere. The elimination of want everywhere. Economic justice. A world government.

What a program! And to it is added the knowledge that it has been given to this generation by the list of God's Messengers, the modern Moses who descended from the Sinai of Inspiration with a charter for today. Small wonder that Abdul Baha, the closest companion of the Prophet as well as the closest in understanding, strove with all the intensity of his mighty spirit to share the burden of responsibility with all of us. It is the cause of every man, will he but take it.

21

Chapter IV

TABLETS TO THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Abdul Baha now writes four more Tablets, all of them addressed to the believers of the United States and Canada as a whole.

No. I

In the first, dictated in the garden of Bahjee on April 8, 1916, he speaks of the countries of this hemisphere that are awaiting the Great Message. On the North, Alaska must be visited and the principles of unity divulged and explained. It is a great enterprise: the territory is vast and the call of the Kingdom of God has not yet been raised thereon. Then turning his attention to the numerous countries southward, the Master continues in most specific terms.

Likewise the Republic of Mexico is very important. The majority of the inhabitants of that country are devoted Catholics. They are totally unaware of the reality of the Bible, the Gospel and the New Divine Teachings. They do not know that the basis of the religions of God is one and that the Holy Manifestations are like unto the Sun of Truth, rising from the different dawning-places. Those souls are submerged in the sea of dogma. If one breath of Life be blown over them, great results will issue therefrom. It is advisable that those who intend to teach in Mexico should be familiar with the Spanish language.

Similarly, the teachers to the six Central American Republics, situated south of Mexico — Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and the seventh country Belize or British Honduras — should also be familiar with Spanish.

You must give great attention to teaching the Indians, i.e., the aborigines of America, for these souls are like unto the ancient inhabitants of the Arabian Peninsula, who previous to the Manifestation of His Holiness Mohammad were treated as savages; but, when the Mahammedic light shone forth in their midst, they became so illuminated that they brightened the world. Likewise, should these Indians and aborigines be educated and obtain guidance, there is no doubt but that through the Divine Teachings they will become so enlightened as to shed light on all regions.

22

[photo of 'Abdu'l-Baha in Acca omitted]

23

All the above countries have significance, but especially the Republic of Panama wherein the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans come together through the Panama Canal. It is a center for travel — a passage from America to the other continents of the world. In the future it will gain most great importance.

The Islands of the West Indies, such as Cuba, Haiti, Porto Rico, Jamaica, the Islands of the Lesser Antilles, the Bahama Islands, even the small Watling Island — all have great value, as have the two black Republics, Haiti and Santa Domingo, situated in the cluster of the Greater Antilles; also the cluster of the Islands of Bermuda in the Atlantic Ocean.

Attention must be given to the Republics on the Continent of South America — Columbia, Equador, Peru, Brazil, British Guiana, Dutch Guiana, French Guiana, Bolivia, Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Venezuela; also to the islands on the north, east and west of South America, such as Falkland Island, Galapago, Juan Fernandez, Tabago and Trinidad. The city of Bahia situated on the eastern shore of Brazil is notable. Because for sometime it has become known by this name, its efficacy will be most potent.

In short, O ye believers of God! Exalt your effort and magnify your aims. His Holiness Christ says: 'Blessed tire the poor, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.' In other words: blessed are the nameless and traceless poor, far they are the leaders of mankind. Likewise is it said in the Koran: 'We desire to bestow our gifts upon those who have become weak on the face of the earth, and make them a nation and the heirs of Spiritual Truth.' Or, we wish to grant a favor on the impotent souls and suffer them to become the inheritors of the Messengers and the Prophets.

Therefore, now is the time that you may divest yourselves of the garment of attachment to this phenomenal realm; be wholly severed from the physical world and became angels of heaven, travelling and teaching through all these regions.

I declare by Him, beside Whom there is no one, that each of you shall become the Israfel of Life, blowing the Breath of Life in the souls of others.

Upon ye be greeting and praise!

We know quite well that this world of ours has many races and tribes, but through the law of scientific classification the historians and geographers have reduced them into four groups.

24

1. The white or Caucasian people, consisting of 770 millions, are the largest group and the most highly civilized.

2. The black or Ethiopian races consisting of 175 millions, mainly inhabiting Africa. With a few millions in other parts of the world.

3. The yellow or Mongolian people numbering about 540 millions, all of whom live in Asia, mostly in China and Japan.

4. The red man Or American Indian — approximately 22 millions, a few living on this continent and the rest in South America.

All these people, living from the Arctic to the Ant-arctic, in all latitudes and longitudes in the north, south and torrid zones, must come to know God and His Revelation in this latter day, and be taught the lessons of the brotherhood of all mankind.

To this overwhelming mission, Abdul Baha had dedicated himself. Not the smallest island was to be overlooked; and now from Bahjee on April 11, 1916, the Great Teacher writes again to the Bahais of the United States and Canada, offering them the world as field for their activities.

A group speaking the languages, severed, holy, sanctified and filled with the love of God, must travel through the three great Island clusters of the Pacific Ocean; Polynesia, Micronesia and the adjacent Islands, such as New Guinea, Borneo, Java, Sumatra, Philippine Islands, Solomon Islands, Fiji Islands, New Hebrides, Loyalty Islands, New Caledonia, Bismarck Archipelago, Ceram, Celebes, Friendly Islands, Samoa Islands, Society Islands, Caroline Islands, Low Archipelago, Marquesas, Hawaiian Islands, Gilbert Islands, Moluccas, Marshall Islands, Timor and the other Islands. With hearts overflowing with the love of God, with tongues making mention of God, with eyes turned to the Kingdom, they must deliver the Glad-Tiding of the Manifestation of the Lord of Hosts to all the people. Know ye of a certainty that in whatever meeting ye may enter, at the apex of that meeting the Holy Spirit shall be brooding and the heavenly Confirmations of the Blessed Perfection will encompass all.

The Master wishes that he himself might essay the superhuman task, he who never was discouraged by obstacles; but he knew that the time had come for others to grasp the banner that he had upheld for almost a lifetime.

O how I wish that it could be made possible for me to travel through these parts, if necessary on foot and in the utmost poverty, and while passing through the cities, villages, mountains, deserts and oceans, cry at the top of my voice: ‘Ye Baha El Abha!’ and promote the Divine Teachings. But now this is not feasible for me, therefore I live in great regret; perchance, God willing, ye may become assisted therein.

25

Abdul Baha envisions groups of voyagers setting out on world. conquest:

Likewise, if some teachers go to other Islands and other parts, such as the Continents of Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, also to Japan; to Asiatic Russia, Korea, French Indo-China, Siam, Straits Settlements, India, Ceylon and Afghanistan, most great results will be forthcoming. How good would it be were there any possibility of a commission composed of men and women, travelling through China and Japan, so that the bond of love might become strengthened and, through this going and coming, they may establish the oneness of the world of humanity, summon the people to the Kingdom of God and spread the Teachings.

Similarly, if possible, they should travel to the Continent of Africa, the Canary Islands, Cape Verde Islands, Madeira Islands, Reunion Islands, St. Helena, Zanzibar, Mauritius, etc., and in those countries summon the people to the Kingdom of God and raise the cry of ‘Ya Baha El Abha!’ They must upraise the Flag of the Oneness of the world of humanity in the Island of Madagascar also.

Books and pamphlets must be either translated or composed in the languages of these countries and Islands, to be circulated in every part and in all directions...

O ye believers of God! Show ye an effort and after this war spread ye the synopsis of the Divine Teachings in the British Isles, France, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Portugal, Roumania, Serbia, Montenegro, Bulgaria, Greece, Andorra, Liechtenstein, Luxemburg, Monaco, San Marino, Belearic Isles, Corsica, Sardinia, Sicily, Crete, Malta, Iceland, the Faroe Islands, the Shetland Islands, the Hebrides and the Orkney Islands.

In all these countries, like unto the morning stars shine ye from the horizon of Guidance. Up to this time you have displayed great magnanimity but after this, you must add to your effort a thousand times and throughout the above countries, capitals, islands, meetings and churches, invite mankind to the Kingdom of Abha!

Now the Master asks what result is forthcoming from rest, tranquility, luxury and attachment to this corporeal world. Man will not become as independent as the cow, who is at liberty to graze over all the meadow and drink from the rivers and streams; and certainly he will not be as unencumbered as the bird, or live in such exhilarating surroundings. No, man was created for the acquirement of infinite perfections and to be drawn near unto the Divine Threshold.

22

Later, when the Tablet was concluded, Abdul Baha again spoke of the bird, pointing to one which was flying overhead: "The teachers of the Cause of God in these countries must be like this bird — always on the wing. Should they alight, it must be with the intention of a short rest from fatigue, on that at the next moment they may rise higher and sing more sweetly. Never should they think of a protracted rest. Ever and ever should they soar in the divine atmosphere of the Spirit. Should they for one second think of rest, they will immediately start on a downward course. They must detach and free themselves from all physical limitations, and purify the mirrors of their hearts from the dust of racial, religious and national prejudices. Not the least trace of these prejudices should linger in the minds. They must become spirit personified, love incarnate, truth embodied. They must set aside egotism, selfishness and suspicion. They must always journey through the world of universal ideals. They must not restrict themselves to particular matters, for the Cause of Baha-O-Llah is not sectarian. Let them walk in the highway of the Divine Teachings. Let them look to God, and not to man; behold the light, and not the glass. There is no doubt but that this Cause shall encircle the globe. So long as there remains one soul whose heart is not touched by the love of God and divine Illumination, the friends must not sit silent. This is their duty."

No. 3

The third Tablet to the Bahais of the United States and Canada was dictated from Bahjee in three parts — the first on April 19, the second on April 20th and the third on April 22, 1916. It is the only Tablet, in the entire series of fourteen, in which the Master's attention is not fixed on special portions of the globe. He is thinking of the teachers themselves, those who are to arise in all countries, hasten to all regions and transmit the message. He speaks of the type that lie is seeking, of the transformation that shall be effected in these persons and of the station which they will attain. With the yearning of a father, with the assurance of a seer, he speaks to them thus:

27

O ye apostles of Baha-O-Llah may my life be a ransom to you!

The blessed Person of the Promised One is interpreted in the Holy Book as the Lord of Hosts; the heavenly armies being these souls who are entirely freed from the human world and transformed into celestial spirits. Such souls are the rays of the Sun of Reality who will illumine all the continents. Each one is holding in his hand a trumpet, blowing the Breath of Life over all the regions. They are delivered from human qualities and the defects of the world of nature; are characterized with the characteristics of God, and clothed with the Fragrances of the Merciful. Like unto the Apostles of Christ who were filled with Him, these souls also have become filled with His Holiness Baha-O-Llah i.e., the love of Baha-O-Llah has so mastered every organ, part and limb of their bodies that the promptings of the human world can make no impression.

These souls are the armies of God and the conquerors of the East and the West. Should one of them turn his face in some direction and summon the people to the Kingdom of God, all the ideal forces and lordly confirmations will rush to his support. He will behold all the doors open, and all the strong fortifications and impregnable castles razed to the ground. Singly and alone, he will attack the armies of the world, defeat the right and left wings of the hosts of all the countries, break through the legions of all the nations and carry his attack to the very center of the powers of the earth. This is the meaning of the Hosts of God.

Any soul from among the believers of Baha-O-Llah who attains unto this station, will become known as the Apostle of Baha-O-Llah. Therefore, strive ye with heart and soul so that ye may reach this lofty and exalted position; be established on the throne of everlasting glory, and crown your heads with the shining Diadem of the Kingdom, the brilliant jewels of which will irradiate upon centuries and cycles.

The Master then states that the teacher should comply with certain conditions, firstly: Firmness in the Covenant of God, i.e., Baha-O-Llah has chosen Abdul Baha as his interpreter, as the center of a Covenant with his followers; therefore fidelity to Abdul Baha and adherence to his teachings must be considered as of paramount importance. No other power can conserve the Unity of the Bahai world.

The second condition is fellowship and love amongst the believers. They should know one another, become intimate with one another, sacrifice for one another — then the power of the love of God will make of them, the waves of one sea, the flowers of one rose-garden and the stars of one heaven.

28

[photo of Acca omitted]

29

As a third condition, the teachers must continuously travel to all parts of the continent, nay rather to all parts of the world, even as did Abdul Baha who journeyed throughout the United States and Canada. He was sanctified and freed from every attachment. Did not Christ say: “Shake off the very dust from your feet”?

Abdul Baha then describes the system that should be adopted: Meetings must be held at which the old Bahais, and those who know the Cause well, should gather with the new souls seeking instruction. They should relate the history of the movement, explain the teachings and interpret the prophesies and proofs regarding the Manifestation of the Promised One, as they are recorded in the Holy Books and Epistles. Through much training, the young ones will be enabled to go forth in knowledge and assurance.

Furthermore in all meetings, whether public or private, nothing should be discussed save that which is under consideration, and all articles should be centered around the Cause of God. Promiscuous talks must not be allowed and contention is absolutely forbidden. Here let it be remembered that whenever contention and disputes occur between two souls in connection with divine subjects — both are wrong.

A committee should be formed consisting of scholars well versed in Persian, Arabic and other languages to translate Tablets and works on this Revelation. Then the books should be published and widely circulated.

The “Star of the West” (magazine at that time published by the Bahais, now out of circulation) should appear with utmost regularity, its pages being devoted to matters concerning the Cause, so that it may be a means of instruction to the people of East and West. In the future, other publications are to be established according to the national or local needs of the various countries.

The teachers travelling in different directions should be familiar with the language of the countries to be visited.

A few days later, in reviewing the conditions under which a teacher should work, the Master spoke of the characteristics to be looked for in the teacher himself. He said: “First of all he must have a sweet disposition. A sweet disposition will make the teacher loved by all the pupils. With arguments, controversies and contention, people are driven away; but with love, gentleness find sweetness, they bloom forth like unto it rose.

30

I desire that every one of the believers may become like an ignited candle in the assemblage of the world of humanity, and conducive to the Eternal Life of others. Today, the Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abha are with those who renounce themselves, forget their opinions, cast aside personalities and think of the welfare of others. Whosoever has lost himself, has found the universe and the inhabitants thereof! Whosoever is occupied with himself is wandering in the desert of heedlessness and regret! The master-key to self-mastery is self -forgetfulness. The road to the palace of life in through the path of renunciation.”

31

Chapter V

THE LAST TABLET

No. 4

Abdul Baha had a great appreciation of the United States and he always looked toward this country with expectancy. One day, he spoke to me at length about the American institutions. At that time I could not take down his words, but immediately after he had finished speaking I went to my room, as was my custom on such occasions, and recorded the things he had said to the best of my ability. Through long practice, my memory enabled me to write the sentences spoken in fairly good sequence. These were as follows: “There are some matters that I cannot speak of publicly, because the time has not yet arrived for their disclosure and the people are not prepared to hear them; but I can speak about them to you. For example: The Republican or Democratic form of the Government of the United States is so organized and the relations between the States and the national administration, the Congress and the Legislature so defined and determined that, generally speaking, all work together smoothly for the public weal. The founders of the Republic and the writers of this Democratic Constitution were in reality the well-wishers of the world of humanity. They laid down such a body of laws, the mighty effect of which was to change the course of history on the surface of the globe. The influence of the American idea of freedom, right and equality and the representative form of government, slowly spreading far and wide, was indeed an inspirational example to other down-trodden nations to rise against absolutism and shake off the yoke of drudgery and serfdom. In the future, all the Governments of the world, including the Asiatic Governments, even this part of Asia called the Near East, will become democratic and constitutional. This is certain. No doubt can be entertained regarding the matter. The spirit of the time will remove every obstacle and crush out every opposition, for the Constitution of the United States gives to men all the sacred rights of political and individual liberty: the protection of life, the pursuit of happiness and the free exercise of religious belief. Every country, with certain modifications and changes having regard to climate, education, aptitude and the progress of the inhabitants, will take that Constitution as a guide to draw up its own Bill of Rights. All the future governments of the world, large and small, will become democratic, based upon the will of the governed. This also is assured. In the course of years, the North, Central and South American Republics will draw nearer and nearer together, and become united in a general Confederated Democracy; in other words, the various Republics will find their national and international interests so akin and identical, that they will forget all their petty jealousies and apprehensions, and work together for the advancement and prosperity of America. There will be a Pan-American Parliament meeting regularly, at which all questions of a general nature, affecting the vital interests of the Western Hemisphere, will be discussed and deliberated upon. In reality, the Pan-American Union in Washington is already engaged in rendering this great service.”

32

[photo of circle of cedar trees on Mount Carmel omitted]

33

The closing Tablet in the great series was dictated in Haifa in March, 1917. On reading it, we observe with interest that the Master, having encircled the globe with his attention and concern, fixes his mind yet again on the Republics of the Western Hemisphere. He counts on them to merge their interests in a mighty Collective Center. He trusts that the New World will lead the Old World; and so once again he turns with infinite yearning to the Americas.

Following is the last Tablet of the Divine Plan. It appears in its entirety.

To the assemblies and meetings of the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful in the United States and Canada

Upon them be Baha-O-Llah El Abha

He is God!

O ye heavenly souls, sons and daughters of the Kingdom!

God says in the Koran: ‘Take ye hold of the Cord of God, all of you, and become ye not disunited.’

In the contingent world there are many collective centers which are conducive to association and unity among the children of men. For example, patriotism is a collective center; nationalism is a collective center; identity of interests is a collective center; political alliance is a collective center; the union of ideals is a collective center, while the prosperity of the world of humanity is dependent upon the organization and promotion of these collective centers. Nevertheless, all the above institutions are in reality, the matter and not the substance, accidental and not eternal, temporary and not everlasting. With the appearance of great revolutions and upheavals, all these collective centers are swept away. But the Collective Center of the Kingdom, embodying the Institutes and Divine Teachings, is the eternal Collective Center. It establishes relationship between the East and the West, organizes the principle of the oneness of the world of humanity and destroys the foundations of differences. It overcomes and includes all the other collective centers. Like unto the ray of the sun, it entirely dispels the darkness, encompassing all the regions; bestows ideal Life, and causes the effulgence of Divine Illumination. Through the Breaths of the Holy Spirit, it performs miracles; the Orient and the Occident embrace each other, the North and South become intimates and associates; conflicting and contending opinions disappear; antagonistic aims are brushed aside; the law of the struggle for existence is abrogated, and the Canopy of the oneness of the world of humanity is raised at the apex of the globe, casting its shade over all the races of men. Consequently, the real collective center is the body of the Divine Teachings, which include all the degrees and embrace all the universal relations and necessary laws of humanity.

34

Consider! The people of the East and the West were in a state of utmost strangeness. Now to what a high degree are they acquainted with each other and united together! How far are the inhabitants of Persia from the remotest countries of America; and now observe how great has been the influence of the Heavenly Power, for the distance of thousands of miles has become identical with one step! How various nations that have had no relations or similarity with each other are now united and agreed through this Divine Potency! Indeed, to God belongs Power in the past and in the future, and verily He is powerful over all things!

Consider! When the rain, the heat, the sun and the gentle zephyrs co-operate with one another, what beautiful gardens are produced! How the various kinds of flowers, trees and plants associate with each other and are conducive to the adornment and charm of one another! Hence the oneness of the bounty of the sun, the oneness of rain and the oneness of the breeze have so overcome all other considerations that the variety of hues and fragrances have increased the adornment, the attraction and sweetness of the whole. In a similar manner, when the Divine Collective Center, the outpouring of the Sun of Reality and the Breaths of the Holy Spirit are brought together, the variety of races and the differences existing between countries will become the cause of the embellishment, decoration and elegance of the world of humanity.

Therefore, the believers of God throughout all the Republics of America must, through the Divine Power, become the cause of the promotion of heavenly Teachings and the establishment of the oneness of humanity. Every one of the important souls must arise, blowing over all parts of America the Breath of Life, conferring upon the people a new spirit, baptizing them with the Fire of the Love of God, the Water of Life and the Breaths of the Holy Spirit — so that the second birth may become realized. For it is written in the Gospel: 'That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the spirit is spirit.'

35

Therefore, O ye believers of God in the United States and Canada, select ye distinguished personages to travel, or may they by themselves, becoming severed from rest and composure, arise and journey throughout Alaska, the Republic of Mexico; in the Central American Republics, such as Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama and Belize; and through the great South American Republics, such as Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Brazil, French Guiana, Dutch Guiana, British Guiana, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Chile; also in the group of the West Indies, such as Cuba, Haiti, Porto Rico, Jamaica and Santo Domingo, and the group of the Islands of the Lesser Antilles, the Islands of the Bahamas and the Islands of Bermuda; likewise to the Islands to the east, west and south of South America, such as Trinidad, the Falkland Islands, the Galapago Islands, Juan Fernandez and Tobago. Especially visit ye the city of Bahia on the Eastern shore of Brazil. Seeing that in past years this city was given the name BAHIA, there is no doubt but that this was through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

Consequently, the believers of God must display the utmost effort, upraise the Divine Melody throughout those regions, promulgate the heavenly Teachings and waft over all the Spirit of Eternal Life, so that those Republics may become so illumined with the splendors and the effulgences of the Sun of Reality that they may become the objects of the praise and commendation of all other countries. Likewise, ye must give great attention to the Republic of Panama, for at that point the Occident and the Orient find each other and unite through the Panama Canal. That region shall therefore assume importance in the future and the Teachings, once established there, will unite the East and the West, the North and the South.

Hence, the intention must be purified, the effort ennobled and exalted; so that ye may establish affinity between the hearts of the world of humanity. This glorious aim will not become realized save through the promotion of the Divine Teachings which are the foundations of the holy religions.

Consider how the religions of God served the world of humanity! How the religion of the Torah became conducive to the glory, honor and progress of the Israelitish nation! How the Breaths of the Holy Spirit, through His Holiness the Christ, created affinity and unity between divergent communities and quarreling families! How the sacred power of His Holiness Mohammad became the means of uniting and harmonizing the contentious tribes and the different clans of the Arabian Peninsula, and this to such an extent that one thousand tribes were welded into one tribe, strife and discord were done away with, while with one accord they strove to advance the cause of culture and civilization! Thus were they released from the lowest degree of degradation and set soaring toward the height of Everlasting Glory. Is it possible to find in the phenomenal world a greater Collective Center than this? In comparison to this Divine Collective Center, the National Collective Center, the Patriotic Collective Center, the Political Collective Center and the Cultural and Intellectual Collective Center are like child's play.

Now strive ye that the Collective Center of the sacred religions, for the inculcation of which all the Prophets were manifested and which is none other than the spirit of the Divine Teachings, be spread in all parts of America, so that each one of you may shine forth from the horizon of Reality like unto the morning star; that divine illumination may overcome the darkness of nature, and the world of humanity become enlightened. This is the most great work. Should ye become confirmed therein, this world will be changed into another world, the surface of the earth transformed into a delectable Paradise and eternal Institutions founded.

Let whosoever travels as it teacher, over mountain, desert, land and sea, peruse this Supplication.

O God! O God! Thou seest my weakness, lowliness and humility amongst Thy creatures; nevertheless I have trusted in Thee and have arisen in the promotion of Thy Teachings.

O Lord! I am a broken-winged bird, yet I desire to soar in Thy Space, to which there is no limit. How it is possible for me to do this save through Thy Providence and Grace, Thy Confirmation and Assistance!

O Lord! Have pity on my weakness and strengthen me with Thy Power.

O Lord I Have pity on my impotency and assist me with Thy Might and Majesty.

O Lord! Should the Breaths of the Holy Spirit confirm the weakest of creatures, he shall attain to the highest station of greatness and possess anything that he desires. In the past, Thou hast assisted Thy servants, and they were the lowliest and the most insignificant of those who lived upon the earth; yet, through Thy Sanction and Potency, they took precedence over the most illustrious of mankind. Whereas formerly, they were as moths, they became as royal falcons; whereas formerly they were as bubbles, they became the sea. Through Thy Bestowal, Thy Mercy and Thy Most Great Favor, they became stars shining on the horizon of Guidance, birds singing in the rose-gardens of Immortality, lions roaring in the forest of Knowledge and Wisdom, and whales swimming in the Oceans of Life.

37

[photo of 'Abdu'l-Baha on donkey in Haifa omitted]

38

Verily, Thou art the Clement, the Powerful, the Mighty and the most Merciful of the Merciful

(signed) Abdul Baha Abbas."

39

Chapter VI

ACCIDENT INSURANCE

During the days when he was dictating the great Tablets, Abdul Baha was exceedingly happy. The sense of responsibility and the anxieties imposed on him by war conditions seemed to have lifted, and his mind and spirit were already on the march in the campaign that was to encircle the earth and extend from pole to pole.

The fourteen Tablets, now fully corrected, were presently placed in the hands of Noured-Din Zeine to be transcribed on great sheets of velum. Noured-Din Zeine was an expert calligraphist, and the Tablets when completed, with borders of intricate tracery illuminated in gold, were veritable works of art.

As has already been shown, two Tablets each had been consigned to the North-Eastern, the Southern, the Central and the Western States, also to the Dominion of Canada; the first of all of these pairs being very much the shorter. At the time of writing, postal restrictions had begun to set in, besides the contents of the communications were international in feeling, to say the least; consequently, in order to ensure their safe transmission, each of the five short Tablets was copied serially on postal cards and mailed. All the cards arrived safely at their destination.

The question of dispatching the nine long Tablets was one for the future, but the Master was already considering means to be taken. Sometimes I felt that I was to be the messenger, and I realized that it would be a hazardous task to take such documents out of the country. Actually, it was dangerous to have them in one's possession at all.

In order to safeguard the Tablets and ensure the delivery of his message when the time came, Abdul Baha took precautionary measures. One day he called me to him and explained: The Turkish government was suspicious of everybody in these times, and of himself at all times. His house might be searched momentarily and in such case, the Tablets would doubtless be confiscated. Therefore, certain steps had to be taken. Abdul Baha wished to have the Tablets placed underground.

Preparations were made. The fourteen great sheets of velum were rolled up and inserted in a strip of metal tubing. These, together with many other papers of value, were packed in my steamer trunk. Then one dark night, Abbas Goli, keeper of the shrine of The Bab, and I carried the trunk up the slope of Mount Carmel to a secluded spot at the rear of the Shrine, where we dug a pit, approximately six feet in depth. We lowered our treasure to its resting place and covered it with earth.

40

[photo of the Shrine of the Bab and Haifa Bay panorama omitted]

41

The second precautionary measure was more difficult and took a much longer time to fulfill. I now learned that the Master's intention was to send me to America, immediately at the close of hostilities. I was to take the Tablets and perform the mission successfully, if this were possible. Otherwise, in case the Tablets were lost or taken, they must remain with me in intangible form. To use other words, I was to carry the text of the fourteen Tablets in my mind.

I set to work on the original copies, starting with the first short Tablets which had already been sent in much unsatisfactory form. Every day I studied, repeating and repeating to myself, and so becoming perfected in one Tablet after another. In the afternoons the Master, manuscript in hand, would hear my lessons, and often on our walks I would recite as we went along. With the passage of time and in my absorption in gaining mastery over new Tablets, the difficulty was to retain fluency in the ones already learned. So I made it a habit to get up very early in the mornings, around five o'clock, and recite aloud from the very beginning before going on with the material yet to be learned. This work took a long time, many months, but at the end I had committed to memory the fourteen Tablets, in full. It was a feat of mental gymnastics. Looking back, I don't see how I could have done it; yet it must be taken into account that I was quickened by the Master's daily presence. That was enough to make the impossible, easy. Meanwhile, all else had slipped away from my consciousness and I lived only in the Divine Plan. Sleeping and waking, the five continents loomed in my mental vision and the islands of the sea paraded before me; while the globe balanced to the Master's rhythmic words and the nations merged into one.

The translation of a valuable work is of inestimable importance, yet never can it be compared satisfactorily with the original. At that time, no translation of the Tablets had been made or even thought of; they were in the writer's own scholarly and poetic style, just as they had come from him. Incidentally, Abdul Bohn was recognized as a master in the Persian and Arabic tongues. The Tablets were in Persian with a few prayers in Arabic.

When I had reached the stage of letter-perfection Abdul Baha summoned the Bahais to a meeting and we gathered together in the great room adjacent to the shrine off The Bab. The women, as was the custom sat in a smaller room to one side, the door between the two being open. It was late afternoon. Before us stretched the waters of the bay, dazzling in the sunlight; around us, the perfume of the orange blossoms clung like a garment. Abdul Baha began to speak: Did his friends think that he had been doing nothing during all these months; that he, for so long accustomed to prison life, had again become resigned to captivity? No, the war was soon to end, the doors would be opened and communication with the outside world established. With this thought in mind, he had made preparations, had drawn up an order of the day concerning all nations and all races, to the end that they might come together in the realization of the oneness of all phenomena and in the consciousness that the source of all inspiration is one. He concluded saying: Now, Mirza Ahmad will recite for you the Divine Plan.

42

I began to chant the first Tablet to America. The Master's eyes were on me; the Bahais were listening with attentive curiosity. It was just five o'clock. As I proceeded, the heroic words of the message and its scope began to affect the hearers, and they sat immovable hanging on every syllable. A pause, during which no one moved, then I launched on the second Tablet — and the third — and the fourth. Abdul Baha was watching me at times; but for the most part, he was sitting with closed eyes, his face alive as he silently took part in every word. Presently the Bahais, unaccustomed to so long an address or recitation began to relax. The charm of the hour, the perfume of the flowers, the measured insistence of my voice, all took effect. They settled down a little more comfortably; some began to nod. I continued. An hour had passed — two. Some of the sleepers wakened and looked around anxiously; then they took up the watch and others drifted off. Once in a while, Abdul Baha scanned his court and his eyes would meet mine. He smiled encouragement and I went on. We were nearing the end; We Were on the last Tablet — finished it, and I stopped. It was eight o'clock.

Such was my try-out — my dress rehearsal; and a very successful one it turned out to be, for my Master was pleased.

43

Chapter VII

AMERICAN BAHAIS CARRY ON

While World War I was in progress, the Atlantic Ocean lay, an impassable barrier between Palestine and America. No communication was possible, and during all those years both Abdul Baha and the Bahais of the United States carried on their missions without interchange of thought and according to their own views. We have seen the great patriarch as he lived out his period of seclusion on the slope of Mount Carmel and on the plane of Acca, and have watched the workings of his mind as it reached in agonized yearning to embrace all the people of the earth. Now in order to balance the picture, we might transport ourselves over seas so as to observe the activities of the followers, as they strove in their ways to carry out the teachings of the Master. Meanwhile, as a preliminary, we will go back a few years to better understand conditions, Ever since the appearance of the Cause in America in 1893, the Bahais had been in a state of constant correspondence with Abdul Baha, receiving direct instructions; also as pilgrims, they had visited him in the Holy Land and had had opportunity to profit at first hand from his Wisdom. Added to this, the Master had come to the United States in 1912 and for nearly nine months had travelled from coast to coast, lecturing before hundreds of Bahai and non-Bahai groups, with the result that, on his departure for the East, he had left behind a very large number of admirers, friends and believers, together with crowds of those who were merely interested.

To me, who had accompanied the great teacher on that historic tour, it was evident that people of widely different social, cultural, spiritual and intellectual background were attracted to him for a variety of reasons, and, through the enchantment of his presence, were caught up in a whirlpool of exaltation and happiness. The noble appearance of Abdul Baha, his benevolent and gentle philosophy, his broad and tolerant viewpoint, his balanced and serene nature, the bubbling fountain of his good humor, his inexhaustible store of oriental stories, his hearty and infectious laughter, his astonishing ability for hard work and above all, the heights and depths of his knowledge — these characteristics and many others had endeared him to multitudes.

Now, the attraction was on the personal plane rather than on that of the teachings, but the Master felt that this attitude would in time develop into appreciation of the Cause itself. Therefore, when his American tour was completed, and later during the war when correspondence was halted, the task of keeping in touch with those who were revolving around the circumference of the movement fell into the hands of the Bahais. This opportunity of continuing the work, when the impression made by Abdul Baha was at white-heat, was one that never could return. It required something of the tact and diplomacy of the great educator himself, but more especially it involved understanding of the essential of the message. A lesson must be grasped by the teacher if it is to be imparted to others.

44

[photo of 'Abdu'l-Baha omitted]

45

Now, many of the Bahais really valued the message, and practically all of them were irretrievably committed in love and devotion to Abdul Baha. They expended themselves untiringly to serve the Cause and some extremely good work was accomplished. At the same time, certain mentalities which had been suddenly charmed into liberalism reverted to type with a bang, and the flock, deprived of its shepherd, was witness to some very strange antics, indeed.

An occasion suited to an effective gesture in spreading the ideals of the movement presented itself on the One Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of Baha-O-Llah, falling on November 12, 1917. The Chicago Assembly sent out an invitation to the Bahais of the United States and Canada with accompanying letters, written by the Secretary of the Assembly and the President of the Bahai Temple Unity, wherein the significance of the anniversary was heralded. It was to be a great event and the prospect of taking part in it must have thrilled the hearts of all the Bahais, for another hundred years had to roll into the lap of eternity before a similar gathering could occur, and by that time none of the present generation would be alive. Now, how was the scene prepared for this festival, and to what purpose was the Centenary of Baha-O-Llah to be harnessed? We shall see.

The contents of the invitation and the accompanying letter do not give us any clue; nevertheless it would not be out of place to quote a paragraph showing the declared object of the occasion.

The Secretary of the Bahai Assembly of Chicago wrote:

And, that the Message of Baha-O-Llah — that dynamic message of love for all peoples and rates, that great unifying message — shall fittingly be acclaimed on this significant occasion, the House of Spirituality, in behalf of the Bahai Assembly of Chicago, calls you to participate in the commemoration of the day... Let the Centennial Celebration be, in reality, a festival of love, and let this Twelfth Day of November, 1917, be forever remembered in the annals of the Bahai Movement. Let this gathering demonstrate to the world the power of the Message of Baha-O-Llah to dispel all superstitions of the past; to unite the hearts of humanity and bring them into direct harmony with the divine will. A program of great beauty and attraction has been prepared. Prominent speakers from the various Assemblies of America will be in attendance, and altogether the occasion will be one of complete joy and fragrance.

46

As President of the Bahai Temple Unity. Mr. William H. Randall, expressed himself as follows:

The Peerless Century for which all centuries existed, in which all the horizons of the world have been illumined and which encircles the world of man with the Glory of God, completes the span of its centennial, November 12th, the Hundredth Anniversary of Baha-O-Llah... In a world torn with dissensions and rent with division, the Bahai body must be the dayspring of composure, the organism of unity sustaining the breath of the Holy Spirit.... The mystery of unity consists in spiritually breathing together, that the arteries of the world may be purified by the respiration of heaven. In all the Assemblies gathered together on November 12th, lovingly to commemorate with joy and glad-tidings the birth of Baha-O-Llah individually and in Assembly, let us supplicate the Lordly Oneness to bestow upon His servants, as an -organic body, the breath of the Holy Spirit to unite us and show forth to mankind the fruits of unity; for this breath of oneness is the attribute of God in the world Of His humanity.

(Star of the West. Vol. VIII, no. 11 and 12
September 27th and October 16, 1917, pages 145, 140, 147. 148)

A Report of this Centenary and the speeches delivered by various visitors, along with a general photograph is published in Vol. VIII, No. 14, November 23, 1917, of Star of the West (pages 191, 196, 197 to 203).

The ceremonies attendant upon this majestic and soul-stirring anniversary lasted three days, which days, according to the record, "were full of spiritual joy and heavenly harmony." The record is enhanced by, one of the most beautiful of Abdul Baha's utterances, which reads as follows: "The principles of His Holiness Baha-O-Llah, like unto the Spirit, shall penetrate the body of the world, and the love of God, like unto an artery, shall beat through the five continents. The East shall become illumined, the West perfumed, and the children of men shall enter beneath the all-embracing canopy of the oneness of the world of humanity."

So much significance was attached to this Centennial celebration that Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi predicted that: "The names of those who have attended this glorious gathering will be recorded in the history of this great Cause." Dr. Bagdadi's talk, given on this occasion reads in part:

47

Baha-O-Llah broke the chains of superstition and error, proved the unity and singleness of Truth, and removed the chains of imitation. He also removed pride and the feeling of superiority of one nation over another. Another chain he removed was that of prejudice. The most bitter prejudice among Orientals is religious. He proved that the foundation of all religions is one. He also removed racial prejudice, showing the races that their colors are like the different colors of birds and flowers. And so with national prejudice, He proved that the earth was one home. In like manner he freed the women from oppression and proved the harmony between science, religion and reason. He freed the world from the fetters of misunderstandings and raised the banner of the oneness of humanity from his great prison... Do not teach the youth the prejudices of past ages. Baha-O-Llah has revealed the means of harmony and happiness for the whole world... Man, in order to know and have peace, must fill his heart with love. Love is the creator of peace. Let us conquer ourselves.

Mr. Charles Mason Remey spoke of the birth of the new architecture in connection with the Bahai Temple. Mrs. Corinne True explained the great purpose of the Bahai Movement in the following happy phrases!

In this day the Sun of spiritual Truth has again arisen in the Orient, and its radiance is seen in the Occident as well. Baha-O-Llah has said that the human family was once one, dwelling together in the greatest state of harmony. Then differences crept in, and racial and religious bias appeared until discord and hatred were found among the children of men. The great purpose of the Bahai movement is to restore the foundation of human solidarity.

Mr. Louis G. Gregory who wrote the account of the Centennial, lauded the occasion with these words:

The efforts of the House of Spirituality and the Chicago Assembly to arrange for the comfort and happiness of all, the love of those present for each other, the mingling of the various elements of humanity, the eloquent addresses and spiritual songs, were all signs of the confirmations which descend from the Throne of Majesty... the effect of such gathering is far-reaching, as the hearts are attracted by the fire of divine love. This Festival of Commemoration was an occasion of historic value in the growth of the divine Cause. The friends left for their homes with longing and grateful hearts.

Now, no intelligent reader could object to anything that was said from the public platform, and nothing to cause anxiety appears on the record save for one allusion, made by Mr. Albert R. Windust, which the uninitiated might scan without being disturbed. This, a distinctly cryptic allusion, runs as follows: "The hour has struck. From now on those who serve the Cause must be firm in the Covenant. They must also be well-known as such. . . . This is especially true of those who would teach."

48

The, above lines do not seem to carry portentous implication, yet they contain the crux of a long and sinister story

During many years, the question of "firmness in the Covenant" had agitated the Bahai World. In simple language, it meant no more and no less than this: Baha-O-Llah, in his Will, had appointed Abdul Baha his successor or as the Centre of a Covenant with his followers, which Covenant the Bahais had to enter into, to keep and to hold.

Now, in spite of the simplicity of the proposition, a battle royal had developed around this issue, and the Bahais, although few in number, were divided into two warring camps: those who held themselves as "firm in the Covenant" and those who were considered as "violators", or to use the Persian term, Nakezeen. In time, this Persian word became quite popular, striking terror to the hearts of all who were suspected, or were liable of being suspected of the least trice of Nakz or violation-. From the very first, the self-styled firm-ones were the more aggressive, being by nature pamphleteers and letter-writers. Soon, they developed quite a body of literature on Firmness versus Violation, and in order to give validity and weight to their arguments, they took advantage of, and incorporated in their writings detached statements from the tablets, speeches and intimate talks of Abdul Baha which had been written or spoken in connection with a variety of local matters.

Notwithstanding the universal and constructive principles of Baha-O-Llah which they repeated in parrot manner on all occasions, certain persons harbored in their minds and souls the most exclusive, the most parochial and the most destructive beliefs — all grounded on the thesis: Firmness versus Violation. The result was that when Bahais came in contact with one another, the spoken or unspoken question uppermost in their minds was: Is he firm in the Covenant?

As I stated in the beginning, large numbers from among his audiences had become attracted to the personality of Abdul Baha, and in time these men and women began to study the words of Baha-O-Llah. Presently, some of them set themselves to a campaign of teaching and writing, and in utter innocence, spread their untried wings in the heaven of service. Being as yet unfamiliar with much of the literature of the Cause, they, on occasions, made mistakes in interpretation and even historical errors, natural in students; but the firm ones in the Covenant made no allowances on these points. Therefore the tom-toms beat out, the war-cry was raised and the announcement made that Chicago, Boston, Washington and a number of other cities had become cancer spots of violation, and that something drastic had to be done in order to free the Cause from the disease of Nakz. This accusation, mainly directed against the new Bahais who had put their foot in it, included many of the Bahais of long standing who were in opposition to the practice of witch-hunting. To meet this situation, a Committee of investigation was appointed to study, explore, and report at a later date, as to whether violation existed in the United States and, if so, to designate the violators or Nakezeen. This inquisitorial Committee consisted of four members: Mr. Louis G. Gregory of Washington, D. C.; Miss H. Emogene Hoagg of San Francisco, California; Mr. George O. Latimer of Portland, Oregon and Mr. Charles Mason Remey of Washington, D. C., Chairman.

49

At a meeting held on November 11, 1917, at the house of Mrs. Corinne True, 5338 Kenmore Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, which was one of a series carried on in conjunction with the One Hundredth Anniversary Celebration of the birth of Baha-O-Llah, a Committee of Investigation was founded. The report reads:

The Condition was discussed, and those attending saw the necessity for taking immediate steps toward an investigation, in order that all might know whether or not a center of violation existed in Chicago. By unanimous vote a committee for investigation was appointed by the meeting to inquire into the matter and to report the findings to the Friends in America.

This Committee of Four must have accomplished its investigations with lightning speed, for a letter, shortly issued, urged as many Bahais as possible to be present in Chicago to hear its findings on December 9, 1917 — just twenty-seven days later.

The “Report of the Bahai Committee of Investigation 1917-1918” is a mimeographed book of fifty-one pages, single-spaced. It is a strange document the like of which one can find only in the records of the Middle-Ages which were periods of apostasy, heresy, expulsion and excommunication. It is a distorted, abnormal document, replete with fantastic assertions and somnambulistic hallucinations. It is an incredible document for no one would believe in its existence unless he actually read it himself or touched it with his own hands. Having originated at the Centennial of Baha-O-Llah, it constitutes the most gruesome blasphemy imaginable against the Great Teacher of universal tolerance.

50

In answer to the summons of the Committee, forty-eight Bahais from eleven states and Washington, D. C., presented themselves in Chicago on the appointed day to bear the Findings; their names are registered on page 32 of the Report. The representation stands as follows:

California.....	2	New York.....	2
Washington, D. C.	3	Ohio	4
Illinois.....	20	Oregon.....	1
Maine	1	Pennsylvania.....	3
Massachusetts.....	4	Wisconsin.....	3
Michigan.....	4	—
Minnesota.....	1	Total.....	48

Thus, these forty-eight persons, constituting themselves a religious tribunal, under the chairmanship of Mr. Charles Mason Remey, undertook the task of dividing the sheep from the goats. They met at the house of Mrs. Corinne True, because she was considered as one of the few firm ones and they also “knew that in that place ... no sympathizer of violation would venture and if they did come, they could easily be ejected and the meeting made safe.... All the members of the committee had had past personal experience with the Nakezeen, so they were particularly alive to the danger of contamination.”

The friends assembled at 5338 Kenmore Avenue (Mrs. Corinne True's House) at 10 o'clock in the morning of December 9, 1917, but because of belated arrivals, the report was not commenced until about two o'clock the same afternoon. In the presence of about fifty friends... the detailed report and various testimonies from friends present, were given... In a wonderful and harmonious spirit after lengthy consultation and prayer, a unanimous acceptance of these findings was voted.

So, in a wonderful and harmonious spirit and with prayer on their lips, did these forty-eight self-constituted inquisitors pronounced anathema on all those in whom they thought to have discovered the least trace of violation, while the alleged violators being absent, had no opportunity of pleading their own case.

As soon as the Report had been unanimously accepted by the tribunal of Forty-Eight, copies were made and mailed to all the Bahai Assemblies and to a selected list of individuals. The committee must have considered the Report of unique importance, for the Copies are numbered and marked at the bottom of the page with the words: - "A Limited Number of Copies for Private Circulation Only." The one in my possession is No. 33.

51

The members of The Tribunal were apparently not satisfied with the mere circulation of the Report but "prolonged the work of the Committee of Investigation by commissioning them to travel to various assemblies and to explain and elucidate the facts of violation; to warn the friends in all parts of the country of this danger to the Cause."

Then began one of the strangest crusades in the annals of religious intolerance, a crusade, the object of which was to broadcast far and wide the glad-tidings of Nakz (violation).

Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Chairman of the Investigation Committee, wrote:

Since December 9th one member of the Committee has travelled to the Pacific coast, where in several assemblies, he explained the matter, while the other three members of the Committee have divided their time between Chicago, Boston, New York, Washington and other centers in the pursuance of their labors, and in addition to holding meetings in these various cities, they have written and circulated their report, so that people in all parts could have their definite statement. They have also done individual work of explaining, through personal interviews and correspondence, the facts of the matter in question.

The purpose of this intensive propaganda was to force the Bahai world to accept the Report. It was not easy, and a murmur of discontent began to reverberate among the Assemblies, finally growing into open revolt. To their credit, be it said, that loud protest came from many of the best known Bahais.

According to the Report, a certain Mrs. Luella Kirchner was one of the most obstinate among the violators and the charge against her was a serious one. Mrs. Kirchner had taken a leading part in opening a Bahai Reading Room in Chicago without permission of the Assembly of that city; and from there had disseminated "injurious teachings" as contained in two booklets by Mr. W. W. Harmon of Boston. Now, in the booklets of Mr. Harmon, the claim was made that God dwelt "within" the individual, a claim well justified in Bahai literature for Baha-O-Llah said: "Turn thy sight unto thyself, that thou mayest find Me standing within thee, powerful, mighty and supreme." However, the Bahai teaching includes the theory that God is "without," and as the Bahai leaders were more partial to this latter concept, found in Judaism, Christianity and Islam, they considered Mr. Harmon's attitude rather too Hinduistic and Pantheistic. Consequently, they regarded his writings, and especially his commentary on the Seven Valleys, as misleading and dangerous.

52

It seems, from page 24 of the Report, that in the past Abdul Baha had been pleased with the work of Mrs. Kirchner for he had sent her a Tablet, wherein he said: "I became very happy on account of thy sincerity and uprightness." Nevertheless, the Chicago Assembly had thought fit to summon her to its presence, and there she had been put through a gruelling cross-examination conducted by Dr. Zia Bagdadi. It appears that Mrs. Kirchner had accepted all that the Assembly had demanded of her, so Abdul Baha was notified by cable and his answer came: "Friends accept Kirchner."

One would naturally think that Abdul Baha's message would have been sufficient. But no! Other charges, such as causing division among the friends, were trumped-up against this helpless woman, and her situation in the Cause looked pretty black until, one day out of the clear Sky, an open letter printed on one sheet of paper and signed: "Some Washington Bahais," was distributed far and wide. This letter, a sincere and noble document which embodied a rejection of the Report of the Committee of Investigation, stands on the record to the everlasting credit of those who wrote it.

Open letter to Mrs. Kirchner

Washington, D. C., April 14, 1918.

Beloved Friend in the Cause of Abdul Baha:

We have read with amazement and dismay a report of a so-called "Committee of Investigation," headed by our Mr. Charles Mason Remey, a hitherto beloved and trusted member of our little flock. We can scarcely believe our ears! We do not speak of the charges brought against you, which, taking them as stated by Mr. Remey and without inquiring into your side of the case at all, do not constitute valid charges, but are the querulous complaints of an offended would-be dictator.

What amazes us is the general tone of the report. We look for a spirit of Bahai love and tolerance; we look for broad-mindedness, generosity, charity; we look for the all-inclusive spirit of this newest and greatest faith, which will overwhelm all opposition by the sheer weight of undiluted love and we look in vain! We find a writing that might grace the archives of the Holy Roman Inquisition! Instinct with bigotry, intolerance and a narrow interpretation of chosen passages, it declares: "Thou shalt shun the sinner!" Ah, and who is he, who amongst us shall point the finger and cry: "Thou art the sinner whilst I possess virtues, yea, and omniscience too, since I am able to detect these?" Since when Abdul Baha declared it to be the Chief Aim of his followers to search for sins amongst their brethren, and not for sins only, but for the "least trace" thereof? And, which of the brethren is he who shall set the standard of virtue? The reply will readily occur to you, and will give the Key to the animus of the whole "report."

53

You have been too broad for them, Mrs. Kirchner; you have shown too much tolerance; you have been too active in the Cause — too much of a true Bahai, in short, for these narrow and undeveloped souls, who would arrogate to themselves all virtue. Our blessing be upon thee, good and faithful servant. Such charges harm thee not at all.

Are they therefore harmless? Alas, not so. They harm the Cause, perhaps irretrievably. We are all too few for our great purpose, even though we bend all our energies in unison to the promotion of this vast enterprise, which is no less than to unite all mankind in, the bonds of the love of God. Not convert nor proselytize; not to found a new religion nor usher in a new dispensation; no, our task is to show to all men that the foundations of all religions are one, even as one God reigns supreme, and therefore disharmony can exist only through ignorance and misunderstanding. Our task is to clear away the clouds of ignorance, to dispel the vapors of sects and creed; to broaden, broaden, expand and include. With enmity for none and charity for all, to forge upward toward the light

What then of this report? Oh, Mrs. Kirchner, can we mention it in the same breath? Fifty believers, headed by our once beloved and trusted Mr. Charles Mason Remey (yea, still beloved!), have been engaged in detective work, suspicion, charges, the inquisitorial chamber, the harsh decision, the excommunication! And they call themselves Bahais! Would that they did not, for how shall we now present this broad and inclusive Cause to the world as it should be presented? Bahais! And engaged, in such deeds! Oh, the indignity, the stultification, the prostitution of our beloved Cause! Wolves in sheep's clothing! They made their charges against you, Mrs. Kirchner! We wonder that they dared!

Go on with your labors, beloved sister. Heed not such charges; fear not such "Committees!"; listen not to the barking of the ravening wolves. There will be more of such things. And know that not all the believers have been deceived by this "investigation."

We are not going to write you our names. The others have done that, and for us to do likewise would be to array believers against believers and make an open division in our midst. We will, not do that. We love them, all still. They are but blinded by ignorance. Peradventure they may learn to see. It will be our task to help them, and to show them by our example what miracles can be accomplished by love, patience and tolerance — Bahai love, Bahai patience, Bahai tolerance — can anything be greater or more long-suffering? We beseech for you the Confirmation of El Abba.

(signed) SOME WASHINGTON BAHAIS.

It is obvious that such a plain and unequivocal statement, earning from "Some Washington Bahais" (the identity of whom was unquestionably suspected by Mr. Charles Mason Remey, himself a member of that Assembly) was very disturbing indeed. Besides, voices of protest from other parts were becoming audible. Something had to be done, unquestionably and immediately! Therefore, the Open Letter of the Washington Bahais was met by "An Open Letter to the Bahais in America," dated March 21, 1918. This is an eight-page, single-spaced mimeographed document with the following introduction:

Written to refute certain erroneous statements which are being made with reference to the activities of the Bahai Committee of Investigation in its endeavor to free the Cause of Baha-O-Llah from the spirit of Violation.

Like the Report itself, this letter tries to prove the righteous attitude of the Bahai Committee of Investigation and then goes on to answer twelve objections raised against it by the Bahais of the United States. Mr. Remey wrote:

People have spread false reports and stories, and letters misstating facts have been circulated in various parts of this country, until the minds of many souls are confused and troubled. Therefore, I feel moved to write this letter in order to try to protect the minds of the friends from some of the slander and untruths which are being circulated about the country regarding the stand of the Bahai Committee of Investigation in its endeavor to protect the Cause from the subtle and disintegrating effects of the violation.

The last page bore the facsimile of another letter, prepared by Mr. Remey himself and addressed "To the members of the House of Spirituality in Chicago and to all who stand with them." The letter commended the action of the Committee of Investigation and carried the signatures of 27 Washington Bahais. Now, a careful study of these signatures very clearly revealed the names of the members of the Washington Assembly who did not figure on the list. In other words, "Some Washington Bahais" who had signed the Open Letter to Mrs. Kirchner were, by this means, unmistakably spotted. In explanation of the transaction, Mr. Remey wrote:

A sincere effort was made in order that every Bahai here in the District, (Washington, D. C.), should be given an opportunity to sign this letter to the Chicago friends, if he or she so desired. This was in no sense put forth as a test to the firmness of these friends, but it was an expression, to our brothers and sisters, co-workers and upholders of the standard of firmness in Chicago, of our appreciation of their good work, for prior to the drawing up of the letter in question, the Committee of Investigation in several meetings had rendered verbally a comprehensive report of the violation in Chicago, so these friends were fully informed of the affair before the matter of the letter was presented to them. It was well known among those who took an active part in arranging and sending the letter that certain of the well known and staunch Washington Bahais, for reasons of their own, which they explained, deemed it wise not to affix their signatures to this document. The Committee has never questioned the wisdom of their stand in this matter, nor their firmness in the Covenant.

55

The Committee of Investigation was the fruit of the First Centenary of Baha-O-Llah in America. It was a ghastly tribute laid at the threshold of Him who came to the world with his mind and heart laden with love. May it be that the Bahais on this continent will find a more fitting offering to present on the occasion of the Second Centenary!

56

Chapter VII

BAHAI COMMITTEE OF INVESTIGATION

The Committee of Investigation, which had come into being at the One Hundredth Anniversary celebration of Baha-O-Llah (whether or not in tribute to that occasion. I do not venture to state), had been enjoined to travel throughout the country and warn the various Assemblies of the fact that the Nakzeen were in their midst. It was a provocative task, one which the Chairman of the Committee himself did not shirk. In the eyes of the firm ones, he appeared as the Angel of the Lord descending sword in hand upon the irregulars; and the regulars showered their blessings upon him as he journeyed from city to city, a veritable Peter the Hermit, preaching on the dangers of Nakz.

During this time, as an auxiliary service, Mr. Remey managed to write a great deal on the subject of violation. Two such documents are in my possession: the first one, entitled Firmness, is a mimeographed pamphlet, of five pages, single-spaced; the second, named Protection, is another mimeographed pamphlet of twenty-eight pages, single-spaced. These articles, which were released on the same date, March 27, 1918, were intended to bolster up and fortify the Report of the Bahai Committee of investigation. In them, the author relates his personal experiences in the East and West during the many years of his travels in the interest of the Cause; and the argument goes to prove that violation or Nakz is contagious like a poison that pollutes the water supply, like a disease that eats into the vital organs of the spiritual community. Many of the anecdotes and stories in Protection have little or no bearing on the problem under discussion, but the author, through a strange process of rationalization, tries to make them applicable and conclusive. He ends thus:

Now that we are all awake to the present vital issue in the Bahai Cause in America, let all the firm friends who have come through these fires of tests unite in the fulness of the love of the Covenant, rejoicing in the cause to which God in bounty and mercy has called us, to go forth to give this message to the world.

The Bahai Committee of Investigation had done a noteworthy job. To sum up: in less than a month, it had produced a voluminous Report which had been unanimously accepted by the religious tribunal of Forty-Eight, sitting in Chicago on December 9, 1917. It had mimeographed the Report and mailed it to all the Bahai Assemblies in the United States; after which, the members of Committee had made a coast to coast pilgrimage, giving lectures and interviews, and corresponding with those who could not be reached in person. Besides, the Chairman had written three apologetic pamphlets, namely: An Open Letter to the Bahais in America, Firmness and Protection, all of which had served as campaign literature; yet, in spite of all this, a percentage of the Bahais remained unaffected by the propaganda, and a complete black-out of conscience had not been obtained. What was to be done?

57

[group photo of early American Bahai leaders including Windust, Remey and True omitted]

58

Now, the Tenth Bahai Convention was in the offing and this even, held great possibilities. If the Report could be adopted (unanimously, if possible) by the Bahai Assemblies of the United States and Canada in convention assembled, then it would be as though the very conscience of the American Bahais had spoken; then the Report would have authority equal with the Word of God, and woe unto any who would oppose it! If such would indeed arise, that man would himself be branded as a rebel, a blasphemer, a child of perdition — a Nakez.

The plan was a risky one, for if it failed the committee would be in a tight place. Therefore it must not fail! All the ingenuity of the Forty-Eight and their sympathizers would be used to bring the issue to a triumphant finish.

I can give but a brief review of this historic event which took place in Chicago, from April 27th to 30th (inclusive) 1918. Those who are interested may read the dramatic story of this Tenth Bahai Convention in the three successive issues of Star of the West, Vol. IX, Nos, 4, 5, 6 May 17, June 5 and June 24, 1918.

At preliminary proceedings, a Committee on Credentials had been appointed, the duty of which was to see to it "that no representatives of the said group (suspect persons) be admitted to this Convention or seated therein as delegates. Thus, the undesirables (alleged Nakezeen) were eliminated, and the Tenth Bahai Convention opened its doors to the delegates and the perfectly safe visitors.

In order to prepare the ground Mrs. Claudia Cole spoke on obedience, stating that we must recognize and realize that violation is, as it were, pathological, like gangrene in the spiritual body of the world, even as are other poisons in the physical body. Unless one can realize that, one does not understand the actual meaning of violation,

59

Mrs. Edward Struven made it plain that people receiving Tablets from Abdul Baha could not count very much on his commendation at a time when "this great question of their firmness in the center of the Covenant is before us to decide."

Mrs. Imogene Hoagg made a distinction between love and obedience. "It seems to me today that we have to have more than love, we have to have obedience. . . . Let us call for obedience, and love will come."

Then Dr. Zia Bagdadi, one of the most zealous of the Nakezeen-hunters who was also at times a constructive speaker as I have shown earlier, delivered a long talk on the necessity for firmness in the Covenant: "The most important subject to the real Bahais is firmness and obedience. We know a violator when we see him as we know a donkey, because violation has a pungent odor, a pungent smell — a sickening smell. We must inhale with the nostrils of the spirit, then we can distinguish between violation and firmness."

After giving an outline of the difficulties that, on account of violation, had descended upon the Cause in Chicago, and the consequent dwindling of believers, Dr. Bagdadi continued:

We have tried many experiments. I have seen that. But now, praise be to God, that cancer is cut out, and the body of the Cause is perfect. Many, on account of ignorance and self-interest tried to spoil the work. . . . On the 12th of November (the Hundredth Anniversary of Baha-O-Llah) that great feast was held in perfect harmony, and the Committee of Investigation was elected, and they were efficient, and whenever communication is resumed, you will hear commendation from the Center of the Covenant, for always he recognizes, always he confirms those who stand for the Covenant; always he shuns those who oppose the Covenant. The members of that Committee have sacrificed their time, their energy and their money, and they have received arrows of criticism from all parts and they have come here and finished their work. . . . Criticisms were raised and yet those souls who criticized the Committee, never contributed any help in removing the conditions. That is, they did not remove the stagnation in Chicago, and they did not cut any of the cancerous tissues. . . . It is characteristic of the violators to sit down and criticize, and do nothing else. The friends in Chicago are not tying the bands of anybody. Those who want to work in harmony are welcome. . . . There is no compromise where violation is. . . Baha-O-Llah never said, "Pray for the violators." His only command was to shun them. Maybe the opinion of one is not to shun them, the opinion of another to be a little kind. But what is best? . . .

60

[photo of Dr. Zia Bagadadi omitted]

61

The Committee of Investigation has done its part, and the Convention is here. If any one did not receive the Report, a copy can be had by asking for it; and if they wish, let them withhold judgment until an opportunity can be had to read it. But I beg of those who have read the Report to stand with a rising vote and commend the committee for its work, and they may rest assured that the divine confirmation will surround them.

This sudden command of Dr. Bagdadi, which was intended to stampede the Convention into a rising vote, must have taken the Chairman of the Convention, (Mr. Alfred E. Lunt) by surprise, for he said:

I did not hear your closing remarks, Dr. Bagdadi.

DR. BAGDADI: May I repeat them?

THE CHAIRMAN: Yes.

DR. BAGDADI: I said let those of the friends here who have not yet received the Report of the Committee wait and read the entire Report; but I beg of those who have received the Report of the Committee of Investigation, if they find that it has done a great piece of work — in order to preserve the Cause, in order to stop the stagnation in this city, that they stand up and commend the Committee.

MRS. MAY MAXWELL: May I make a motion that this Report of the Committee (if Investigation be accepted?

DR. BAGDAD: That is what I mean, by a rising vote.

THE CHAIRMAN: The matter now before us is that the Report of the Committee of Investigation on violation in America be accepted. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor will rise. The purpose of this, as I understand it, — if I am mistaken, Dr. Bagdadi will inform me. . . .

DR. BAGDADI: Delegate or non-delegate, all those who received the Report.

THE CHAIRMAN: The secretary will call the roll.

The delegates arose and remained standing during the roll call.

THE CHAIRMAN: It appears officially that the Convention has recorded its unanimous approval and acceptance of the Report of the Committee.

MR. GREGORY: I suggest that we let all the friends vote.

THE CHAIRMAN: All right. Kindly sit down, you who are delegates. Now, for a general expression, which I know many of you wish to make, those who are not delegates, who are present, kindly rise, if you share this feeling.

62

The remainder of the attendance at the meeting arose to their feet.

THE CHAIRMAN: Are there any who vote no on the motion? If so, please rise. It appears that by the unanimous vote of the entire body gathered here this morning, you have approved and ratified the Report in full of the Committee of Investigation on violation in America. AND I SO DECLARE IT.

In this manner, the most sanguine expectations of the four members of the Bahai Committee of Investigation were fulfilled. The chain of slavery, forged on the anvil of fanaticism, was officially fastened on the Cause by the entire body of delegates and visitors, on Tuesday morning, April 30, 1918, at the Tenth Bahai Convention held in the Auditorium Hotel, ninth floor, Chicago, Illinois under its permanent chairman Mr. Alfred E. Lunt and its permanent secretary, Mr. Louis G. Gregory. A masterful stroke of political strategy had been effected. The plot had succeeded. That hour, when the chairman pronounced the words: "And I so declare it," was the zero hour of the Cause of Baha-O-Llah in North America. It was an hour of degradation for the Movement; it was one of despair for the vanquished forces of liberalism, and of triumph and jubilation for those now in complete control.

To all outward appearances the American Bahai conscience died at that Convention; and the black pall of a full-fledged inquisitorial policy fell upon its mutilated body, as it was laid to rest under the rising feet of the delegates and non-delegates. Then upon the grave-site, and without loss of time, the Bahai leaders turned to the election of the executive committee for the coming year.

Here, Mr. Charles Mason Remey suggested:

Before we proceed with this election, we have a few moments of prayer and supplication, that we may elect a Board, that we may entrust into the hands of those who are most fitted for it, the work of this Unity for the next year. We are up against many, very, very vital problems. We have had some very vital problems to meet this last year, and we have met many in this gathering yesterday and today. And it occurs to me to make this suggestion of prayer, that we may be spiritually guided.

Following the prayer, the Chairman, Mr. Alfred Lunt, spoke:

We have been sent here this year as no body of delegates has ever been sent in the history of the world. You have been sent here after hearing the divine injunctions towards firmness in the Covenant, you have been sent here because you are firm . . . therefore, what cannot you accomplish if you realize your oneness ... and what it has meant to us ever since we came into this room? and if we will only come in line with that center, . . . will we not all become melted into one soul, one thought and one purpose, to choose those whom he desires to be chosen today to represent this Bahai Temple Unity of America? And not only to choose them, but to perform every act which this Convention has come here to perform.... So shall we not enter into this blessed flame of the love of God at this moment, and do his will?

63

Then Dr. Bagdadi again raised his voice, prophesying: —

Whatever you do under this roof will be proclaimed from the housetops. That is the law. "The whole world is looking toward America.... All of you are confirmed; all of you are firm and steadfast believers; otherwise we would not be here. The time has come for the separation of violation from firmness. There is no doubt about the sincerity and firmness in this cause of God on the part of all those who are here. If you become members of the Board, it means one, and if one becomes the Board it means all.... And the main issue, which is firmness in the Covenant, is the greatest qualification in all elections of committees.

As a master magician, Dr. Bagdadi well knew the methods with which to arouse the religious emotions of the already overwrought delegates, and how to appeal to their loyalty to Abdul Baha in order to control their votes. The right people had to be chosen to direct the affairs of the Cause in the months ahead, or all the work of the Committee of Investigation Might yet be undone. He therefore dramatized the sufferings of The Bab and Baha-O-Llah, enumerated the martyrs and closed by picturing the meeting, face to face, of each and every one with Abdul Baha, when the words: Well done would be the reward of those who had voted wisely. Listen to Dr. Bagdadi: —

Abdul Baha wants us to look in our hearts at this moment and see how we stand, and each one will be the cause of making others who are firm, firmer. This is in obedience to Abdul Baha, and I am going to do as we all must, think of that in this election. So far, my dear friends, we must not think of it as if he were my friend or my sweetheart, or my old friend, or my associate — the time has come when we are on a plane higher than that. To show that this Cause is the Cause of God, the Bab gave his life; Baha-O-Llah spent his life in agony; Abdul Baha has lived in prison; 24,000 or more gave their lives. We are to serve such a Cause. Who is going to be my friend, my wife, my child, when I look at the sacrifices that have taken place? Will it not be a shame, more than a shame, to put any name on this paper before I in my heart and soul hear Abdul Baha say to me, "Well done." Because I am going to face him; you are going to face him sooner or later. We are facing him now in the spirit. He is watching and counting all these things we are doing now. What can I say more than these words of his, those who are to be elected must be well known Bahais; they must be known for their firmness in the Covenant. Can I make a statement stronger than this? Is it possible? Let us begin.

64

Following this appeal, the delegates were herded into the center section of the hall and the roll call of delegates and alternates was read.

The outcome of the election was completely satisfactory. From the point of view of the High Command, it could not have gone better. Three from among the four members of the Bahai Committee of Investigation were elected to the National Board on the first ballot, to wit: Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Chairman; Miss H. Emogene Hoagg and Mr. Louis G. Gregory, simon-pure champions of orthodoxy against whom nothing could be said or thought. Five other persons were likewise chosen: Dr. Zia Bagdadi, evangelist of the Bahai Committee of Investigation; Mrs. Corinne True, in whose residence the Bahai Committee of investigation had held its sessions; Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, Permanent Chairman of the Convention; Mr. I Harlan F. Ober, Delegate from Cambridge, Mass., and Reporter Of the Convention and Mrs. May Maxwell. Completing the Board of Nine, entailed some difficulty. Mr. William H. Randall, President of the Board which was going out of office had on various occasions laid himself open to the charge of liberalism and, although he had voted on all the proposals Of the Convention, he still did not quite come up to the mark. Therefore, on the first two ballots he fell short of a majority, but he came to the front on the third, and was elected with a small number of eighteen votes. Mr, Charles Mason Remey was chosen as President for the coming year and Mrs. May Maxwell as Vice-President.

The election of the Board of Nine. completed the infamous structure of Bahai orthodoxy as dreamed and planned by a small group of reactionaries who now found themselves in undisputed possession Of the Cause, standing ready to impose their decisions upon the helpless Bahai Assemblies throughout North America. The Convention had been a success from start, but the election had capped it to an exhilarating climax.

65

Through its report, we are given a glimpse of the new Board of Bahai Temple Unity at its first meeting, held immediately after the election; and it seems that the members were so overpowered by the complete victory that had been obtained, that all were well-nigh speechless. Mr. Harlan F. Ober, who had been chosen as Secretary for the coming year, interpreted the silence of the group with more transcendent significance than I can allow. He writes the following:

One of the greatest evidences of the unity and love of the Convention was found in the first meeting of the Executive Board, which was held in the evening of April 30th immediately after the Convention. The members of the Board gathered and began the meeting with prayer and chanting, which was followed by an indescribable quiet and peace. No one spoke, for it seemed that the door of the Rizwan (Paradise) had opened, and the breath of the holy Abha spirit had encircled all. We found infinite rest and wonderful consolation beyond the capacity of words to describe.

It may have been a moment or many moments, we could not tell, but with hearts overflowing we turned to each other, and from all lips came the words: "This is unity." "This is the mystery of unity."

Star of the West, Vol IX, No. 6. June 24. 1918 — page 76

66

Chapter IX

THE DOORS OPEN

It would be difficult to describe the feelings of the people of Palestine on the memorable day of September 23, 1918 when, at three o'clock in the afternoon, isolation and oppression were suddenly substituted for glorious freedom. It would be impossible to give a fair account of their bewilderment and ecstasy when the final scene of the war, as enacted in the East, came to view.

The first indication of release was the sound of stray shots among the hills; then detachments of a Hindu cavalry regiment appeared simultaneously on the crest of Mount Carmel and in the adjoining valley, converging on the town of Haifa. As the riders tore down the mountain-side at full speed, I ran out on the road, in my excitement forgetting the Master's orders that all of us were to keep indoors. Never will I forget those troops as they thundered past, and especially one horseman who descended upon me, lance poised, the fire of battle in his eyes. He missed me by an inch, and I scuttled back to the house with my curiosity definitely assuaged.

The Turks and Germans had raised a barricade on the waterfront, but the Hindus drove straight toward it, their leader falling in the impact. Then, wild with rage at this loss, they cut down everyone in sight, natives as well as soldiers, and they drove their enemies before them through the streets of Haifa and around the bay, continuing past Acca and down the road toward Tyre and Sidon. At evening General King, arriving at Haifa at the head of the British troops, received the keys of the city.

The first words of General King were these: "Is Abbas Effendi safe?" and, the answer being in the affirmative, he was presently conducted to the house of the Master. The general carried with him a little gift which he presented to Abdul Baha. It was a package of sugar, an almost forgotten luxury, sent with the compliments of General Allenby.

That night, the plane of Haifa from end to end glimmered with, the lights of the bivouacking troops. The fighting was over.

The work of readjusting civil conditions began immediately, and the cooperation of the natives was needed; so a request was made of Abdul Baha to recommend, from among his entourage, men of education who could speak English. There were many to come up to the requirements and an interview was arranged for. General King met us and conversed very affably; then he made his choice. Abdul Baha was ready to comply on all points, but when it was found that I was included in the selection, he said "This one, you cannot have. I have other work for him to do."

67

By this time, the news agencies had cabled the announcement that Abdul Baha and his followers were safe and well on Mount Carmel, but this news did not reach the American Bahais until October 4th. "Star of the West", of October 16th, published the following telegram from Mr. William H. Randall:

Just received cable from London saying official cable received there states Master well and protected. Notify friends. Abha greetings.

A short editorial follows:

Allaho Abha!

Momentous changes are taking place in the Holy Land. The doors of communication between Abdul Baha and the outer world are opening. A few days ago the above telegram was received by the Star of the West. The full significance of these events cannot be grasped at this moment; only the future will reveal them. It is likened unto the appearance of the sun after long obscurity.

The dark clouds seem to be scattering.

A tumult of happiness and expectation reverberates in the hearts of the Bahais.

Ya Baha El Abha!

Immediately after the opening of the doors, Abdul Baha instructed me to write a series of letters and post-cards to individual Bahais in the United States, giving snap-shot news of the happenings in Palestine, and quite a number of these were published in "Star of the West", Vol. IX beginning with issue no. 14, November 23rd. One of the communications was addressed to Mr. Alfred Lunt, who was a liberal at heart and a sincere Bahai well loved by the Master, although he at times, and against his own better judgment, became involved with the orthodox. As has already been pointed out, in this letter, I described a quiet afternoon on Mount Carmel and finished with some informal Words of Abdul Baha which I had taken down in my note-book. These words, so fortunately preserved, are one of the jewels of the Master's utterance and constitute an immortal page in Bahai literature:

The darkness of this gloomy night shall pass away.

68

Again, the Sun of Reality will dawn from the horizons of the

Have patience-wait, but do not sit idle.

Work while you are waiting.

Smile while you are wearied with monotony.

Be firm while everything around you is being shaken.

Be hopeful while the ugly face of despair grins at you.

Speak aloud while the malevolent forces of the nether-world try to crush your mind.

Be valient and courageous while men all around you are cringing with fear and cowardice.

Do not yield to the overwhelming power of tyranny and despotism.

Serve the cause of democracy and freedom.

Continue your journey to the end.

The bright day is coming.

The nucleus of the new race is forming.

The harbinger of the new ideals of international justice is appearing.

The trees of hope shall be clothed in verdant leaves,

The copper of scorn and derision shall be transmuted into the gold of honor and repute.

The arid desert of ignorance shall be transformed into the luxuriant garden of knowledge.

The threatening clouds shall be dispelled and the stays of faith and charity will shine in the clear conscience of the children of men.

Following the Armistice, streams of communications from all parts of the world began to pour into Haifa. Once more, Abdul Baha was in touch with the Bahais of Persia, India, China, England, France, Germany and other countries where the Cause had taken root, and his relief and gladness knew no bounds. But what of America!

One night, Abdul Baha called me to his room and handed me a package which had just reached him. "Open it," he said. I cut the envelope and drew out four mimeographed manuscripts: (1) "Report of the Bahai Committee of Investigation", (2) "An Open Letter to the Bahais in America" (3) "Firmness", (4) "Protection", (5) A few recent issues of "Star of the West" containing an account of the Tenth Bahai Convention.

While I paged these documents in an effort to grasp their general purport, the Master was watching me narrowly. "Come. Mirza Ahmad," he urged. "Don't keep everything to yourself. Tell me the news."

My heart was palpitating and my eyesight had become blurred; actually, my hands were shaking so much that the papers fell to the ground. Abdul Baha arose, gathered them together very quietly and handed them back to me. Then I made a supreme effort and, without further visible emotion, started to translate aloud the four documents. It took a long time.

For nearly an hour, the Master sat motionless: then he jumped to his feet and began to pace the floor. His face was flushed and he was pushing his turban back from his brow; taking it off, putting it on again, and walking, always walking. If I slowed down, he thundered at me "Go on, go on! I must hear all." So I read to the end and when I stopped and looked up. I saw the tears running down his cheeks.

"What have they done to the Cause!" he was speaking as if to himself. "What have they done to the Cause!" Then he went on, saying that he had been waiting for such a long time to receive news from America and this was the news! Did we have so many believers that we could spare even one; and was the birthday of Baha-O-Llah a fitting occasion for persecuting the innocent children of the All-Merciful? Who had given these people authority to excommunicate? And now they expected commendation and approval. No, he had no commendation to give, and no approval.

Then he went on: Something must be done. Something can be done. Baha-O-Llah will not allow this condition to remain in the Cause. He looked straight at me: "You will go to America. You must dispel these clouds. The time has arrived when you are to render a mighty service."

I gasped, and started to make excuses. This was the one time, within scope of my memory, that I balked at the Master's commands; but he would have none of it. "Baha-O-Llah will support you," he assured me", and I will pray for you. Have no fear. This division amongst the believers must be removed; the two factions must be brought together without delay. You will leave at the earliest possible moment in order to reach America in time for the Convention. This Eleventh Convention shall, God willing be one of reconciliation and unity!"

I left Abdul Baha's presence and went out. Slowly, I dragged my feet up the familiar slope of Carmel. My nerves quivered as if ice-water were being poured over them; my face was burning. Half way up, I stopped and looked at the night, and a million stars descended upon me; then, close at hand I heard the words ""Shoja-at, Mosafar! Shoja-at!" It was the voice of Rahmat-U-Llah, caretaker of the shrine of The Bab, who was standing on the veranda of the Pilgrim house, lighting my way with a flickering candle. "Courage Pilgrim, courage," he repeated as I passed him and entered my room. I stretched myself on the bed. "Courage, pilgrim, courage," I murmured to myself, as I fell asleep.

70

[photo of 'Abdu'l-Baha walking on slopes of Mt. Carmel omitted]

71

The next few weeks was a period of intensive training. Almost every day, I followed Abdul Baha on his long walks and when we reached our turning point, I watched him as he sat on a rock facing the Mediterranean Sea, and listened as he outlined the course I was to adopt on my arrival in the United States. Immediately after returning home, I would retire to my room and make copious notes for my guidance in the future. Following the more specific instructions, the Master would conclude along general lines in words such as these: Now the time has come! Out of this Divine College you must go into the world. Purify and sanctify your heart from every desire. I am sending you forth with the Powers of the Kingdom, the Breathe of the Holy Spirit, the Confirmations of the Merciful and the Glad-Tidings of the Supreme Lord. This will constitute your capital. You must be the means of the reconciliation of hearts; you must create love and fellowship amongst the friends. Soar always in the atmosphere of universal concepts. Do not attach yourself to particulars. Do not interfere in local affairs. I will pray for you at every midnight.

Rest assured. I will be with you in your journeys and in your sojourns. You must do your utmost to be present at the Convention. Associate with the people with love and kindness. Gladden the hearts of friends and strangers. Endeavor as far as you can to sadden none. Sorrow is the dust over the mirror; cleanse the mirror and let the light of the sun of happiness reflect therein. Ponder day and night over my words, deeds and life. These must serve you as general and particular examples. If all the people of the world turn their faces from you, and God is with you — you are victorious. Do not engage in fault-finding and backbiting. If anyone comes to you and opens the first chapter of such a book, tell him: O my dear friend, I have not come here to listen to these talks! I have come to call the people to the Kingdom of Abha. I have come to tend assunder the veils of old superstitions and traditions. I have come to call you to love, friendship, unity and the brotherhood of the human race. These stories and this gossip are conducive to the extinction of the fire of the love of God; they are like poisonous winds which, blowing over the flowers and hyacinths of the spirit, wither them; they are like gloomy, black clouds that prevent the shining of the Sun of Reality. Baha-O-Llah has not commissioned us to discuss these petty questions and infantile problems. You must be the vivifiers of the world — light-bringers to the inhabitants of the globe.

72

These daily instructions, given by the Master, were energized by his personality and heightened by his self-oblivion. Sometimes, he utterly forgot that I was the only witness to the rush and tumult of his inspiration and emotion. He was addressing thousands in distant lands — and there I stood a solitary spectator to a divine drama, a very ordinary human being caught in the whirl-pool that ever surrounds the chosen of God.

The words of Abdul Baha made me realize that in the task ahead, I was to rely not only on his support but also on my own mental and spiritual resources. Consequently, I began to write numerous letters and post cards to the American Bahais in which I embodied, in a general yet unmistakable way, the broad instructions given by Abdul Baha. These letters containing news of the Master, and direct and indirect messages from him, were on receipt copied and distributed far and wide. They likewise gave hints of my early return to the United States.

It was clear to me even at that time that the contents of those letters and cards, pouring upon the American Bahais, would disturb the minds of the orthodox and especially those who had voted for the adoption of the Report of the Committee of Investigation. These persons had fully believed in Dr. Bagdadi's promise that Abdul Baha would commend them and approve their Report, and now apparently commendation and approval were not forthcoming. On the contrary, these letters of mine contained implications which boded no good to the anti-liberals.

The letters and post cards were written in long hand and no copies were kept. However, I find the contents of two of the cards published in "Star of the West", Vol. IX, no. 17, January 19, 1919, page 199. In order to show the reader how I started on this campaign of education I will reproduce one of them as an example.

Haifa, Palestine
December 2, 1918

"Dear brothers and sisters:

The friends in Colorado are especially remembered by the Beloved, and to them he conveys his noble Abha greetings. He desires them to be the promoters of good-fellowship among the nations of the world and the torch-bearers of unity between the disunited children of men. Like unto the Rocky Mountains, they must raise their heads above the low plains of human thought. They must be the cause of the descent of the rain of mercy upon the dark and barren desert of humanity, suffering the hard hearts to be covered with verdure, blossoms and fruits. Are you able to render this service to the Cause of your Master?

73

(signed) Ahmad Sohrab"

Letters such as these brought hope to the routed Bahais and discomfort to the reactionaries in high places; and the latter, feeling in their bones that a show-down was at hand, began to strengthen yet further the ramparts of orthodoxy, preparing themselves for the assault.

The stage was set for the impending struggle.

74

Chapter X

MY STEEPLE-CHASE

According to army regulations, only government officials could obtain leave from Palestine during the months following the Armistice. I made a series of appeals for a pass, one of them addressed to Major W. Tudor Pole, Deputy Assistant Administrator stationed in Cairo; and when this attempt was unsuccessful I realized that if Major Tudor Pole, who was a Bahai of long standing with a good deal of authority, could not help me, all the others to whom I had written would be unable likewise. So Abdul Baha, took the matter in hand and wrote a personal letter to General Allenby. Shortly afterwards I was called into his room.

"Baha-O-Llah has performed the miracle," the Master said. "Here is your permission. Now, go and pack. You will leave Haifa tomorrow."

So suddenly did it come about: my sanction to go to America — my dismissal from home and all that I held dear!

That night, I assembled my things which were few and of no consequence, and packed them in my bag with the long metal tube which for so long had lain underground and was to me the object of the greatest consequence in all the world. Then I bade farewell to the mountain slope of Carmel and to its canopy of stars.

After breakfasting in the usual manner on tea, bread and cheese, I came down from the Mountain of God and took leave of my friends and associates. Then I sought the presence of the Master.

I was with him for three hours, from eight until eleven, and when I arose to leave, he kissed me on both cheeks, gave me some strings of rock-candy, a handful of gold sovereigns and his tablet — my spiritual passport to America. Then he blessed me and bade me farewell. According to my notes which I recorded at the first opportunity, some of his words were as follows:

"Concentrate all your time in the service of the Cause. Soar ever in the atmosphere of universal concepts. Attach not yourself to particulars. Endeavor, as far as possible, to sadden no heart. I will never forget you. Day and night you are before my sight. Few souls have stayed with me for so long a time. I declare by Baha-O-Llah that always at midnight I shall pray for you, saying: Oh God! Confirm Mirza Ahmad, my son."

75

[two photos of Sohrab omitted]

76

As I looked into those eyes which mirrored all of life and eternity too, and listened to that heart-stirring voice, I well realized that the separation would be a long one, but how long — that I could not have imagined. On the morning of December 22nd, 1918, I stood before Abdul Baha for the last time on this earth.

The train steamed out of Haifa at eleven thirty. It was full of officers, so Dr. Aflatoon, a Bahai on his way to Bagdad, and I thought fit to tell them a little about the Cause. They seemed interested and we left them at Toul-Karem in a position either to continue investigation or to drop the matter out of their lives.

In Toul-Karem, the dark skinned West Indian soldiers afforded us shelter from the inclement weather and made us feel welcome. They were very receptive to conversation pertaining to the New Testament and themselves had a great deal to contribute. The following afternoon, we boarded a train which was packed with Mohammedan Indian soldiers returning home. The train which was composed of open cars was receptive also, in this case to the torrents that were now pouring from the heavens: but the physical discomfort did not impede discussion, between ourselves and our Muslim fellow-travelers, on the modern aspects of Islam. Arriving at Ludd in the late afternoon we were enabled, through the kindness of some soldiers, to find space in another train bound for Kantara. Here we fell in with a Persian Jew from Jerusalem and passed the time most agreeably in reviewing the prophesies of the Old Testament and computing the time of their fulfillment,

After a long night in cramped quarters, we awoke to find ourselves speeding through untrodden wildernesses of sand, the very wilderness in which Moses and the people of Israel had lived during forty years: and my mind was struck by the change that had been brought in this region since those times. especially in that all of it had been accomplished in the last few years under war conditions. Now, a double-tracked, broad-gauged railroad stretched from Cairo to Toul-Karem, and this was shortly to be extended to Haifa and Acca — a vast engineering feat due to the ability and resourcefulness of the British.

As we began to move about, bidding sleepy good morning to our companions, we became conscious of the fact that this was no ordinary day. Far from it, for the date was December 25th. It was Christmas; it was a holiday, and long before our train reached Kantara we could observe the British soldiers as we passed their camps, already engaged in their various sports and games. In Kantara, the frontier town which actually was but a populous city of tents, our luggage came up for examination.

77

A customs house is always a little nerve-racking, but in my case, knowing as I did that it was simply out of the question to carry papers or documents of any kind over the border line, the moment was one of unadulterated fear. The British official went through my things minutely, penetrating deeper and deeper into my capacious bag, and then from the very bottom he drew up the metal tube. "What is this?" he asked, balancing it between his fingers. My heart was in my mouth, so I was not in a position to answer. Everything in me was calling for help: Abdul Baha! Abdul Baha, don't forsake me now! The inspector extracted the parchments and spread out the heavy roll. As I wondered how he could be so deft about it while the tent was rocking. The tent appeared to be caving in on our heads, his as well as mine; but he was speaking again — no he was reading from the first Tablet which lay on top: "Kodah" and again "Khodah, Khodah." He had picked out a word that means God, probably one of the few Persian words that he knew, and was finding it here and there on the page. Then he looked up, obviously pleased with his scholarly attainment: "Your diploma, I suppose." Yes, yes, I nodded as the tent regained its equilibrium and the blessed Britisher passed on down the line. "Thank you, "I called after him and began to gather up my things: then in a lower tone: Thank you, Abdul Baha.

Hurdle number one in my hazardous steeple-chase — goal: America in good time for the Convention; but before I could take even a breath of relief, the next hurdle was pressing in upon me, high and imposing. Just around the corner, the travellers were being separated into two groups: Occidentals, having the privilege of boarding the train for Cairo, and Orientals to be retained in quarantine for six days. Six long days every one of them valuable to me!

When I realized what was happening, I boldly addressed myself to the officer in charge: "Why this discrimination? — and was told that a certain malady was prevalent at that time, to which Orientals were subject. "But I'm not an Oriental," I flashed back, so quickly that I actually spoke without thought. "I am of Aryan descent, just as you are, just as the French and Germans are, and all Europeans." Then, having become familiar with the idea, I concluded forcibly: "Persians are Europeans you know."

The officer eyed me with distaste: "Can you corroborate this statement?"

"You might call up Cairo find speak with Major Tudor Pole of the Intelligence Department," I offered casually. So my friend was called to the telephone on the spot and within my hearing.

78

"I never heard of such a thing.," the officer blustered, when he got the connection "A man — name Sohrab, a Persian, mind you, and he says he's European. What's your impression? "Pause — a long one, then: "What! I have to pass him? It's all right? Well, if he's a European, I'm a . . ." he turned and looked me up and clown; then he began to laugh: "Very well! Hurry along, your train is leaving." Hurdle number two!

We preceded on to Cairo through the fertile lands of Egypt which spread themselves around us in smiling detachment from the devastation of war. Arriving at evening, we put up at Eden Palace Hotel, travel-strained and weary; but I could not remain indoors simply to rest. Five years of the quiet life of Haifa had made me hungry for people and action; so I sought the brilliant streets and walked about for hours, a veritable country boy, round eyed and doubtless open-mouthed too.

Dr. Aflatoon and I had many friends in Cairo whom we saw the next day: Mohammad Taki, a pioneer Bahai; Sheikh Mohyeddin, pupil of the great Mirza Abul Fazl and himself a brilliant teacher, and others, all anxious to receive tidings of Abdul Baha. We lunched at a Persian restaurant and dined with a Persian family, and talked much, both in groups and tête-a-tête; but the next morning I went to work seriously. First, I visited Major Tudor Pole, who gave me a hearty welcome and promised to help me through the maze of officialdom in acquiring a passport; and later I called on the Persian Consul General for the same purpose. I had my picture taken, so as to be in readiness in case the coveted passport were granted suddenly; conferred with editors in newspaper offices and dropped in at the shipping agencies. This procedure, with the exception of the photo-taking, was repeated regularly for weeks. On January 12th., I received a letter from Shoghi Effendi which informed me that Abdul Baha had sent the following cablegram to Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm: "Ahmad Sohrab will soon reach New York;" so, as time was dragging on and help from my side of the water not forthcoming, I decided to appeal to Mr. Wilhelm in New York: "Request State Department send permission Consulate immediately, waiting." I cabled a similar message to Mr. Joseph Hannen in Washington.

Waiting indeed! How long would this waiting last, and the Master also was counting the days. January had brought me no luck. We now were in February. An urgent Tablet from Abdul Baha reached me on the 7th.

Verily, I have received the letter which thou hast forwarded care of Shoghi Effendi and have become acquainted with its contents. In regard to thy journey to America, it is incumbent on thee to make the utmost haste and if possible to get a direct passage from Egypt to the United States. Thy presence in America is an absolute necessity. Hasten, hasten to fulfill this obligation and do meet Mrs. Parsons.

80

It is incumbent upon thee to make the utmost exertion to leave now at once for America, to display the greatest effort to unite the friends around the Word and dispel the clouds of sorrow and misery.

Upon thee be greeting and praise!

(signed) Abdul Baha Abbas

"It is incumbent upon thee to make the utmost exertion." What might be done that I had not thought of as yet? I racked my brains, but could bring up no original, thought, so, after making the daily rounds of Consulate and shipping agencies, I resigned myself as usual to spending the time with my friends.

Here in Cairo. I had run across one of my fellow-students at the University of Beirut, Alphonse Toniatti by name. Half Italian, half Arab, he was an amusing personality, hiding a warm heart with small success behind a casual and even cynical attitude. He was one of the many with whom I could pass agreeable hours, but my mind was set in one direction — America — and I could not content myself for even a little while, with less.

The American Consulate was an imposing building into which I had never penetrated further than the outer office, which was always crowded. One morning, as I wedged my way in, the secretary greeted me with unusual affability. "We have good news for you. Come this way." I was led into a large, luxurious room which was occupied by the Consul and a tall, well dressed American traveller. The Consul looked up: "Your permit has arrived, though how you did it I can't imagine. You must have some good friends in Washington."

Here the American began to indulge in a series of explosions. "This is preposterous! It's a crime! It's a travesty on our country and all that it stands for! A permit for this Oriental — when I have been hanging around your office for weeks! What has he got that I haven't?"

What, indeed! Hurdle number three!

There was nothing now to keep me in Cairo, so I went that night to Port Said where I stayed in the apartment of Mirza Ahmad Yazdi, Persian Consul and son-in-law of Abdul Baha. It was home to me in a way, for I had lived there and worked in Ahmad Yazdi's store years before when I was a boy; and I immediately fell in with the old routine, spending regular hours behind the counter. However, my first daily duty consisted of visits to the shipping agencies, of which there were many; in fact all the great lines have offices in Port Said, and these were always crowded with frantic persons waiting for steamers that apparently did not exist. Actually, none had as yet sailed for America. "Yes, you can put your name down if you wish," they told me. "There are four hundred ahead of you."

81

Feeling that I must give an account of myself to the Master. I sent him a cable stating that my passport was in order but that there were no ships. Almost immediately the answer returned: "The ship is coming."

On a certain morning as I was working in the store, one of the assistants ran in to inform me that a Japanese freighter was sailing into port on its way to America. I dropped my work and ran to the Japanese shipping bureau: Could I get passage?

"Impossible," was the answer. "We carry only cargoes. Passengers not allowed."

"But I will pay," I insisted. "Anything! I will bring my own food, sleep on the deck."

"Sorry. Against the rules."

I hastened to the apartment of Ahmad Yazdi, my heart beating with determination, and found among my effects an old passport which I had used in the days when I was secretary at the Persian Legation in Washington. I returned to the agency and without a word, laid the open passport on the desk. The clerk examined it and raised his eyebrows: "Official business?"

"Yes," I answered.

"Well, in that case-all right,"

I flew home, picked up my things, bade farewell to Ahmad Yazdi and was on the wharf in no time. "Yeboshi Maru," the argosy of my desire, lay alongside. I passed up the gang-plank and placed my two bags on the deck. "This way, please," an officer addressed me politely. "You are to have the doctor's cabin."

"But the doctor," I objected. "Where will he sleep?"

"He will bunk with another officer. Come please. It is all right."

And so, taking hurdle number four with a high heart, I landed on the broad bosom of the Mediterranean and went into the home-stretch.

81

Chapter XI

THE TUBE AND THE BOOK

Yeboshi Maru was a primitive little craft, making two hundred miles per twenty-four hours. Its officers and crew were friendly, and there was much information to be acquired on both sides. I made no secret of the Cause and what it stood for, as a program for establishing World Peace; while my hosts brought me up to date on current news, for I was totally unacquainted with the developments that had brought about session of hostilities. There also was the Japanese language to be dabbled with, and the immediate necessity for learning to eat with chopsticks. It was a long passage of thirty-eight days, during which we were the recipients of every attention from the weather.

Sometimes, while the little boat was laboring on its way, the deck submerged by swirling, foaming cascades of water, it seemed to me, as it did to Aeneas in the long ago, that the pounding torrents were driving us to the very bottom of the sea, where the yawning waves would uncover unknown lands upon which their surges were breaking. Yet through it all, I knew that we would reach our destination. Abdul Baha had so promised, and that was enough for me.

Living in a walnut shell surrounded by the expanses of the universe, and to all intents and purposes alone, was a new experience in which I sought to find myself. For years, I had been in the presence of Abdul Baha, as a fish swimming in the translucent lake of his dreams and hopes; or as a lump of warm wax upon which the images of his ideals had been printed. Now I was thrown on my own resources and could find out what the me within me really was. I could be an individual. So I paced the deck for hours; stood at the rail, delving into the horizons — and what did I find? Abdul Baha was there. He had not followed me, he was not, at long range exerting his influence upon me; he simply was of me and in me. Now at a distance, I knew that I could never again say: These thoughts are glorious and beautiful, but they are not really mine.

As I proceeded with my meditations, day by day and night by night, a great joy began to take hold of me and I realized, as I never had realized before, that the disciple must become identified with the teachings of the Master. Unless he does so, he is merely a parrot repeating words that he does not understand: or a plastic disk recording a glorious song.

82

[photo of Dr. J. Uyeda, ships doctor with Sohrab; another view from the ship, both omitted]

83

When, in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, this truth was unveiled before my soul, I became a new being, endowed with assurance coming from myself. The light that Abdul Baha had shed across my path was my light; the Cause that he had endowed me with, was my Cause. His divine Springtime had come to stay in the garden of my own being.

These excursions into the abstract did not divert my mind from the duty in hand. I was the guardian of a treasure, consisting of the metal Tube which contained the Divine Plan and, even as valuable (for the Divine Plan was recorded in my mind word for word), a Note Book in which were set clown the dates in which the Tablets had been revealed, together with the places and circumstances connected with them; the Master's instructions regarding each and every one, and his supplementary talks, some of which were as important as the Tablets themselves. These two objects, the Tube and the Book, were to me the greatest treasure between earth and heaven; and no anxious duenna, tending royal princes, could have had a more acute sense of responsibility than was mine. The Tube lay under my pillow, a magnet that drew me back to the cabin every few hours; but the Book was with me always, in my coat pocket by day and along side of the Tube by night. Sometimes, I would wake out of my dreams, thinking that the long fingers of Neptune had closed about one or the other of my darlings and swept it out to sea. After such dreams I would take firm hold of them both and, after the beating of my heart had subsided, fall asleep again, exhausted and happy.

As Yeboshi Maru sailed into American waters, I began to concentrate on my coming encounter with Bahai officialdom. What were my assets? The Plan itself, of course-tangible evidence of my mission. I carried besides Abdul Baha's written permit to return to the United States a copy of which had sometime previously been sent to Mr. Joseph Hannen, in Washington. I learned afterward that Mr. Hannen had forwarded a copy of this communication to "Star of the West" with his note which read as follows:

I am in receipt of a letter from Shoghi Effendi in which he quotes the Tablet which Mirza Ahmad Sohrab will bring with him to America, the original being in the Master's hand. I think it would be well to publish this in the Star as soon as possible, so that all may know of his coming with permission, as I have heard this question raised.

Star of the West — Vol. IX No. 17, Jan. 1919

A third asset which I valued greatly was my deep friendships with Bahais all over the country. I had lived in America before the World War and had taken part in all the activities of the Cause. Also for more than five years, I had served as secretary to the Persian Minister in Washington during which time I had made of the legation a headquarters for the distribution of Bahai information. Finally, I had made extensive preparations for Abdul Baha's visit to this continent in 1912, and had accompanied him throughout his travels in the United States and Canada. My happy memories of association in this country were limitless, giving me much confidence; but I had liabilities too.

84

I was born of a liberal family and taught never to connive with any brand of orthodoxy, were it Mohammedan, Christian or Bahai. I was brought up in the environment of Abdul Baha, and the flame of liberalism within me was fanned at the very altar of his heart. I believe that he kept me with him for so long a time because of this characteristic. At the same time, this liberalism had repeatedly brought me into sharp conflict with many American Bahais. Because I could not agree with some of their interpretations of the Cause, which seemed to me both antediluvian and infantile, they had come to look upon me as a menace. Consequently, in order to discredit me in the sight of Abdul Baha and my fellow Bahais, they had fabricated numerous stories about me which had been spread far and wide. Actually, for the preservation of the orthodoxy they had appended to the Cause, their zeal knew no bounds. I will relate one instance of this, among many.

During the Master's visit to Chicago, he stopped with a certain Bahai lady, and she later on gathered her friends about her and confided to them a secret. The secret was that Abdul Baha had on an occasion summoned her to his room and, through an interpreter, had warned her as follows: "Do not trust Ahmad Sohrab."

After my return to Palestine with the Master, this confidence, treated as most confidences are and doubtless as many are intended to be, was extensively circulated. In fact, the lady herself carried the news to the Assemblies throughout the land. Thus it was not long before every Bahai had received the message, still transmitted with bated breath, with the result that the phrase: "Do not trust Ahmad Sohrab" became a pass-word in the Bahai underground.

Naturally the story reached Haifa, creating a situation that was bizarre to any the least. There was I, opening and translating to the Master a flood of letters, addressed to him in the care of various members of his family, which began something like this: "Mrs. of Chicago says that you told her in secret 'Do not trust Ahmad Sohrab'. So, as Ahmad Sohrab is your secretary, I am mailing this care of" Then came listings of my alleged delinquencies, rascalities and villainies which would have stood up very well in the police courts of Chicago itself; while of course, "the snake in the grass" and "the wolf in sheep's clothing" figured prominently in these character studies, forwarded to the Holy Land by the sons and daughters of light in America.

[illegible]

86

"Well, well, Mirza Ahmad" the Master would say. "you are indeed a clever man. Such a record of crime, piled up under my very eyes, while I was totally unaware of what was going on! Possibly. you have a double!"

He would laugh, yes, but presently he would change his tone. "These are your brothers and sisters — ignorant, deceived and attentive to every whisper; yet believers in the Cause. Come, sharpen your pencil. We are going to drown them in an ocean of love."

Such memories were brought to mind in the stocktaking of my liabilities; but the time for dwelling on the past had come to an end. Yeboshi Maru was nearing port and I had to express my thanks to the crew for the comradeship which had been extended to me. Then dinner at the Captain's side, at which he complimented me at my proficient use of chopsticks, and a hard and fast engagement made with a number of the officers (which included the generous doctor who had lent me his cabin) to meet them some days later on the train to Washington. I promised them and myself that we would have a good time together in the nation's capital and that a fraction of my deep obligation would be repaid,

Next morning I was up early, still pacing the familiar deck but with a new spring to my stride. The Statue of Liberty was rising out of the mist; the dawn was breaking on Manhattan; I had reached New York.

Scarcely glancing at my two small valises, the Inspector of the United States Immigration Service handed me a piece of paper bearing the word "Passed" and I descended the gang plank. I looked for customs officers, but none were in sight; so I left the wharf and took a taxi to a small hotel in the downtown district, from where I called Washington on the telephone asking to speak to Mr. Joseph Hannen.

Mr. Hannen was taken off his feet when he heard my voice, and his questions came over the wire like shots out of a gattling gun. I answered few of them for I was intent on receiving news myself; and after a short conversation, proceeded to ring up a succession of Bahais in New York. Soon, the news of my arrival began to spread and I did not have to make any more calls. For the rest of the day, the line was kept busy, while the hotel lobby as well as my room filled up with eager excited friends, all of whom were firstly anxious to hear about Abdul Baha and secondly concerned with imparting details regarding the harrowing condition of the Cause in the United States.

I well remember a visit which I paid a day or so later to Mr. Mountford Mills in his apartment on upper Broadway. Mr. Mills, a man of distinction and accomplishment, was one of the very valuable Bahais of those early days. He gave me a graphic account of the situation in the Cause and took no pains to hide his disillusionment and grief. It was clear that he considered the orthodox element to be in full power and on the ascendent, and although I injected into the conversation some of my optimism and enthusiasm, I felt that I had not been able to lessen his discouragement. I left him, asserting that a concerted effort against the forces of dogmatism would be made and that I had no doubts concerning the outcome.

The Feast of Nau-Rouz (Persian New Year — March 21st) was the occasion of my first public address. The Bahai community arrived in full force; the majority settling in their places with the light of hope in their eyes, while a few neophytes of the newly established system watched the proceedings with furtive attention. My talk, which I thereafter repeated in several cities, with few changes, ended along this line:

"These are the days of Armistice; it is an era of adjustment. The nations are forming a Covenant of Reconciliation. The sword is sheathed and the hatchet is buried. Let us pocket our affronts, gather around the camp-fire and smoke the calumet of peace. Unresentful and unavenged, let us hold out the olive branch to friend and stranger alike. As Bahais, we have the chance to set this new example to the distracted inhabitants of the world."

The next morning I began to receive numerous telegrams, some of them from members of the National Executive Board. I will quote a single one from Boston coming from Mr. Alfred Lunt under whose chairmanship the "Report of the Committee of Investigation" had been ratified. Mr. Lunt's message read:

"Loving welcome, yearning to consult with you. Great good can be done if possible for you visit Boston now."

My answer in part was as follows:

"Important meet members Board. Telephoned Hannen inform Remey return Washington for consultation. If you come to Washington soon, you will be fully repaid."

88

My short sojourn in New York was crowded with activity, and on the final day, I made calls and delivered talks from morning till night. My last engagement was at "Stepping Stones" in the Bowery, a unique establishment presided over by the very genial and original Urban Ledoux, better known in the newspaper world as Mr. Zero. Here, hundreds of derelicts of all kinds were fed without charge or at a nominal cost, while their host, who gave his life and all his money to this work, drew no line between himself and the most wretched of his visitors. Instead, he was a comrade to all, a confident and guide; and the men loved him and accepted his word in all things.

This group later on chose to designate itself as the "Old Bucks and Lame Ducks," and through its various doings and antics gained much notoriety; but at the time of my visit, it consisted simply of Mr. Zero's boys who were eager to hear of the great being whom their benefactor called "Master."

It was long past midnight when I returned to my room in the hotel, and I was to be up early to meet the officers of Yeboshi Maru on the train to Washington. I threw myself on the bed and immediately went to sleep.

On waking, I hurriedly gathered up my things and stuffed them into the bag. I drew the Tube from its accustomed resting place and laid it on top. Everything ready, I could leave. Only the Book. I again felt under the pillow, but could not find it. It must be there; it always was! No! Maybe, it had slipped under the covers! I tore them off. Under the mattress! Nothing! My heart began to thump; then I thought: I had been so tired when I went to bed, I had forgotten to take it out of my pocket. I felt my coat; I pulled all my pockets inside out — empty. Then I sat down, while a burning wave spread over me from head to toe. The Book of the Divine Plan was gone!

A few moments passed while the heat in my body slowly turned to cold — painful transformation from life into death; but I still could think. Very dispassionately, I summed up the situation: The Book was missing and my train to Washington about to leave. Would I stay; would I go? On the one hand there was the apple of my eye, my first responsibility, my duty to the Master; on the other, a casual connection with persons who were nothing to me, and my word given. For the fraction of it minute I weighed the two obligations; then I decided: I would keep my appointment with my Japanese benefactors.

89

What came next? I thought of Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, a whole-sale coffee merchant who carried on a successful business with plenty of Bahai work on the side; or, to be more exact, I should mention the Bahai work first with the business as a supplementary issue. Now, Mr. Wilhelm was blessed with a secretary, Nellie Lloyd by name, an assistant whom any executive might covet-both of them would come to the rescue. I could count on that. I crossed the room and spoke to Mr. Wilhelm on the telephone:

A book had been lost, very valuable to me. Would Nellie take a cab find call at all the places I had visited yesterday, and at the "Lost and Found" departments of the taxi, subway and surface car bureaus? Would she insert advertisements in the afternoon newspapers, offering a reward - a thousand dollars if necessary. Would Mr. Wilhelm keep me posted? I was on my way to Washington. I was leaving the matter in his hands.

The supreme sacrifice having been made for my Japanese acquaintance, I should have lived up to it by making of myself a fairly agreeable travelling companion, as I think I had been in the past; but I found that I could not even make an attempt at conversation, much less, show a trace of good humor. The trip was long and depressing and it was a relief to all of us when we parted at the station in Washington. Mr. Hannen and Mr. Gregory who were awaiting me, conducted me to a cab. They must have wondered at the dull-eyed, pallid-faced messenger from the Holy Land whom they had been looking forward to greet, but they were too polite to question me. At the house of Mr. Hannen, the door was opened by his mother. I brushed by, unable to respond to her affable welcome, "is there a telegram for me?" "Why, yes," she answered, "I have one here. It just came." I tore open the envelope, read the message and with a shout threw the paper into the air. Then I grabbed the bewildered lady, carried her bodily into the drawing room and proceeded to shower her with kisses. A strange messenger from the Holy Land! Mr. Hannen and Mr. Gregory looked at each other anxiously, then Mr. Hannen picked up the telegram from the floor and read:

"Ahmed Sohrab

C/o Joseph Hannen
1252 — 8th Street, N W
Washington

Detective Nellie Lloyd has found book. Sending registered today.

(signed) R. C. Wilhelm Co."

90

This is a fast Day Telegram unless otherwise indicated by signal after the number of words—"N. L." (Night Lettergram) or "N. T." (Night Telegram)

21 NYPE 4 9

NY NEW YORK MAR 22

AL INAD SOVIAT

CARE JOS HANNEN 1252 8TH ST NW WASHN

DETECTIVE NELLIE LLOYD HAS FOUND BOOK SENDING REGISTERED TODAY

R C WILHELM CO

1116A

Telegram from Roy Wilhelm.

91

As I afterward learned, the Book had been found at Mr. Zero's "Stepping "Stones" in the Bowery; but for the moment, it did not matter where or how. It certainly did not matter if my friends thought me crazy, or if I actually were. I knew only that the Book was safe; that life could go on, and that the worst day in all my experience was over.

92

Chapter XI I

PREPARATIONS FOR THE CONVENTION

Now that I was actually in America with my treasures in my possession, the campaign for reconciliation had to start without delay. In a letter to Shoghi Effendi dated March 25th, I wrote: "I have called a meeting of a number of prominent believers of New York, Boston and Chicago, as well as a few here in Washington, to meet with me that they may have a clearer vision of the Master's hopes."

The meeting was scheduled for the evening of March 26th at the house of Mrs. Agnes Parsons. Mr. Mills and Mr. Wilhelm of New York accepted the invitation, as did Mr. Randall, Mr. Lunt and Mr. Ober of Boston; likewise, Mrs. Maxwell of Canada, and Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hannen of Washington. There remained Mrs. Corinne True and Dr. Zia Bagdadi of Chicago, but try as I would by telegraph and telephone, I could not alter their decision to be absent. Mr. Charles Mason Remey, chairman of the Bahai Committee of Investigation, who was in South Carolina, also declined. So stood the group which made up the meeting, with possibly a few others whom I do not remember.

To these outstanding Bahais thus hastily gathered together, I presented the Master's plan, outlining the contents of the Tablets to the Northeastern, Southern, Central and Western States; those to Canada, and the four final Tablets addressed in conjunction to the Bahais of the United States and Canada

— the Magna Carta of the New Humanity. Then I brought out the metal tube, drew forth the fourteen Tablets and unrolled them to public view for the first time.

The effect made by the vast panorama of ideas was instantaneous. All were swept off their feet. Silently and with utter humility, they touched the parchments, examined the elegance of script and illumination, the while trying to grasp the portent of the stupendous plan that had so suddenly been revealed to them. Mr. Randall pressed my hands with tears in his eyes, saying: "My God, and all these years we thought that we were serving the Cause! What have we done! How do we dare call ourselves Bahais?" Mr. Lunt picked up the telephone and spoke, right then and there, to Mrs. True in Chicago: She and Dr. Bagdadi had to come to Washington right away to take part in a most important conference, and he would not take no for an answer — he would not consider no! But no, it turned out to be, just the same. Then he wrote out a telegram to Mr. Remey, as follows:

93

"New and epoch-making plans and authentic instructions, Master, for complete organization, Convention, and great work of future. Call for new solidarity in Cause and for immediate cooperation. Your temporary return Washington for conference Ahmad and friends urgently needed. Responsibility to make this the great Convention desired by Master rests upon each one."

I do not know who signed the above telegram, but I have the copy in my possession as it was written by Mr Lunt and corrected on the spot.

The hastily improvised committee meeting was conducted in a spirit of harmony and happiness; the past was forgotten, while these lending personalities of two camps applied themselves to the task at hand — preparations for the Convention. It was thought advisable to hold it in New York.

This issue set the opposition into immediate motion. Mrs. True, Dr. Bagdadi and Mr. Remey were determined to hold the Convention in Chicago where the anti-violation forces were firmly entrenched. This was exactly what Abdul Baha did not wish, and he had told me so explicitly. Although I was not at liberty to divulge his views on particular matters. I had to bring them about through other means.

In order to be in a position where I could meet without restraint the opposing groups, I rented a small apartment in Washington. Here every day, from two to five o'clock, I kept myself free to receive whoever wanted to call on me; and many came. It was quite an uphill work, and much tact was needed to prevent clashes when three or four were in the room together; but I kept in mind the Master's command that the two factions were to be united in love before the Convention, and did my utmost to promote a spirit of tolerance and good humor. I took part in many meetings, besides; did some visiting on my own part, and little by little became conscious of the fact that the atmosphere was beginning to lighten.

Meanwhile, I was deeply engaged in translating the fourteen Tablets into English, together with the explanatory notes and the instructions so contained in my note book. These were arranged in sections, to be used consecutively at the coming Convention on April 26th, and also to be printed in book form for distribution at that time. As these sections were completed one by one, I turned them over to Mr. Hannen to be typed. Thus, we worked together at top speed, many a night until 5 A.M. and completed our task on April 15th when we gave the material to the printer. I did not know any one in those days who could have assisted me as "Brother Joseph did — so much efficiency, enthusiasm and devotion; nor do I know many now, after twenty-six years.

94

[photo of National spiritual Assembly of 1935-1936 omitted]

This task completed, I took a flying trip to Boston where I stopped with Mr. and Mrs. William Randall. Under their benevolent care, I came in contact with small groups and individuals, and together we spoke of the true aims of the Cause. Mr. Randall, a man of much wealth who had given his all to the Cause in money and time, sat at these meetings, his face shining like the sun; and, under his warm sponsorship, we saw the traces of suspicion becoming less apparent, and felt the vapors of misunderstanding drifting away. Truly, the spirit of Reconciliation was on the march!

[photo of William Randall omitted]

The preparations for the Convention were now in full swing and the Bahais were working in complete cooperation with one another. The place set was New York and the time was drawing close. On April 22nd, I took the midnight train from Boston and installed myself in the Hotel McAlpin at Sixth Avenue and 34th Street, where the Eleventh Bahai Convention was to be held.

The Convention had before it two definite objects:

1. To cancel in an unofficial and natural way the Report of the Bahai Committee of Investigation, adopted at the Tenth Convention in Chicago, and to remove from the hearts of the members all ideas of limitation and exclusion.

2. To inaugurate a universal campaign for the promotion of the teachings of Baha-O-Llah, and to set before the world a new standard of international relationship, based on all-inclusive fraternity, comradeship and self sacrifice.

From that March morning in Bahjee when Abdul Baha had dictated to me the first Tablet in the mighty series of the Divine Plan, through February of the following year, when in Haifa, he closed with the last Tablet, and on to the time when his followers were to gather at the Convention to receive the instructions thus set forth, the one concern of the Master was to awaken the Bahais to their responsibility and prepare them for a field of service no vast, that it cannot be likened to any task imposed by the initiators of the religions of the past. Shall we use other words, fewer and more concise: Abdul Baha gave us the world!

Preparations for the Convention were proceeding apace; every detail had to be worked out in conference. Committees had been appointed, such as publicity, music, decoration, finance, all of which to a large extent were working under the personal supervision of Mrs. Maxwell. This beautiful, delicate and altogether charming personality was able to combine a mystic fervor with unusual practical ability. From the time of my arrival in Washington, when a small group had united in purpose, I had been in constant communication with her by telegraph, telephone and through the mail. She wrote: "We are all one in heart and spirit, and united in the most glorious service that has ever been offered to any people . . . Sutherland (Mr. Maxwell) has certainly been inspired regarding the frames for the Tablets. They are to be in turquoise and gold . . ."

In regard to publicity, she continued:

Salita Salano is not a Bahai consciously, but she loves Abdul Baha, which is the kernel of the whole matter; and the proof of this is that she is willing to do things for him. She is willing to undertake all the press work in New York and in any other papers that she can reach during a period of twelve days, if we will pay her one hundred dollars. Any other press agent would charge from three to four hundred. . . . This arrangement will not preclude the work that Horace Holley can do in his own line or any big pull that Zoraya Chamberlain may have with the Associated Press . . . Berthelin Osgood has charge of one album of photographs of the Beloved to be prepared for exhibition at the Convention, and Edith Inglis of another.

97

Marjorie Morton is going to cut in two a most gorgeous piece of blue velvet she has to make curtains for the unveiling of the most Holy Tablets. She has also offered a contribution of one hundred dollars, and I wish to give a similar one; for I feel that this is no time to hold back either spiritually, bodily or financially, lest we be carried out dead, like Annanias.

So, everybody was working, everybody was happy, matters were preceeding well in New York; and in regard to the Bahais throughout the country, I personally had mailed two letters to everyone. These have been incorporated in "Star of the West" vol. X, no. 2, pages 21, 22, 23. Following are some extracts from these letters.

Dear brothers and sisters in the Cause:

It is indeed a great joy to be back in America and feel the warmth and heat of the love of Abdul Baha in the hearts of the friends I had brought for you his boundless love and greeting . . . his earnestness and enthusiasm to serve the Cause and promote love and unity amongst the friends. Aside from these ideal gifts, I have carried with me from his presence some most wonderful, world-wide, heavenly instructions; the unfoldment of which will give the vision of the future humanity, perfected and beautified . . .

From every standpoint, the coming Bahai gathering will be unique the history of the movement . . . Let us come to the Convention with nothing but love in our hearts, and with nothing but the light of service on our faces, and with nothing but humility and submission at the Threshold of Baha-O-Llah . . .

The whole world, now weary with war and bloodshed, must receive great spiritual blessing from the Bahai movement, and now is the time for us to show and demonstrate whether we can rise to the heights of this golden opportunity; whether we can serve our fellow men unitedly and with one accord; whether we can forget the past and, grasping the imperial sceptre of light, walk in the pathway of the Kingdom of Abha and raise a great acclamation of rejoicing in the hearts of the people of the earth.

Hoping that we will all meet in that sacred Convention, receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit and go forth into the world with a new power, a new vision, a new strength, and dedicate anew at the Convention, our service to the world of humanity through the divine teachings of the Center of the Covenant.

Your sincere brother in the Cause Ahmad.

98

[photo of Miss May Bowles, prior to her marriage to Wm. Sutherland, omitted]

99

The official invitation, which is to be found in "Star of the West." Vol. X no. 2, pages 20-21, reads in part as follows:

Eleventh Bahai Convention and Congress
To be held in New York City, April 26th to April 30th.

Letter sent forth by Bahai Temple Unity — April 9, 1919.

Dear friend in the love of the Most Glorious.

The Eleventh Bahai Convention and Congress will be held at the Hotel McAlpin . . . This attendance should not be limited to delegates and alternates, but should include everyone who is attracted to the universality of the divine teachings. The doors are flung open to the lovers of Truth everywhere.... To a degree never before known, these gatherings are being planned and carried forward under the direct guidance of Abdul Baha. In a more wonderful sense than ever before realized, it is the Convention of Abdul Baha. The program for the Convention and Congress will revolve around these great messages which will be brought forward in nine presentations.

The writers of this letter unquestionably felt the guidance of Abdul Baha: his spirit had re-entered their hearts, and the misunderstanding of past years was melting away. The invitation ends thus:

In the name of Abdul Baha, we bid you welcome, all ye who are thirsty, all ye who are hungry, all ye who are confused, all ye who are longing, all ye who are hopeless, for He has come. The doors are open, the call is raised, the sacrificing hearts are yearning for servitude. Will ye come?

In the love of the Spirit

Convention and Congress Committee of the Executive Board

by Harlan Foster Ober, Secretary.

The headquarters of the publicity, and of other committees, installed in the Hotel McAlpin were now beehives of feverish activity. Releases had been sent out to the press, and advance notices began to appear in the metropolitan newspapers. The delegates from North, South, East and West were arriving hourly; photographers clamored for pictures of the leading Bahai personalities. I was a much interviewed and photographed man, and some press pictures of myself in Oriental robes, looking I admit more like an Arab bandit than a dignified emissary of Abdul Baha, caused a measure of anxiety in the ranks of my co-workers; but this concern was swept away by the rolling waves of a spiritual revolution. Enthusiasm was mounting; excitement, happiness swelled and rocketed; affection shone in all eyes. Abdul Baha's banquet table of Reconciliation was spread, and on April 26th at eight o'clock in the evening, the doors of the Eleventh Bahai Convention were flung open.

100

101

Chapter XIII

THE CONVENTION OF RECONCILIATION

The Convention was conducted under highly favorable circumstances. Bahais of all colors, figuratively speaking, were there in full force; the friends of the Cause from years back had assembled expectantly, while public interest was demonstrated to such an extent that, as the sessions succeeded each other, people thought themselves fortunate to gain standing-room, as others milled through the corridors unable to get even a glimpse of the beautifully decorated Convention Hall.

In nine successive afternoons and evenings, I delivered an address and presented one by one the great Tablets which were concealed behind folds of silken curtains. These were drawn aside at the proper moment by young girls dressed in white, to the accompaniment of music, while lighting effects designed and executed by Miss Beatrice Irwin added to the imposing effect.

I cannot convey an idea of the impression made on the audience by the Tablets of the Master. The people sat spell-bound, faces glowing and eyes brimming, and after the meeting they walked about in semi-trance, rapturously recalling what had taken place that day and in hushed anticipation of that which the morrow would bring. The spirit of service, awakened by the clarion call of Abdul Baha, pounded in the hearts of all. Women stripped off their jewels as an offering, men emptied their pockets and, as far as could be judged by appearances, the entire meeting dedicated itself then and there to the propagation of the Bahai principles throughout the world. At the close of the sessions, the following cablegram was dispatched by the Teaching Committee to Abul Baha:

Convention united all hearts, all differences removed. Convention appointed teaching committee, nineteen members, to send teachers. Teachers already selected start immediately. This committee unanimously begs Beloved permit Abroad Sohrab by cable travel and teach United States and Canada. His expenses already provided.

(signed) Randall, Ober, Mills.

A cable from Abdul Baha in response to the above arrived Shortly:

Appointment of committee conducive to joy. Abroad Sohrab permitted to travel throughout states. Let him inform us from Washington.

(signed) Abbas.

102

[photo of Joesph H. Hannen omitted]

The Convention wound up with the distribution of a book of 82 pages entitled "The Unveiling of the Divine Plan," which contained the translation of the fourteen Tablets together with the incomparable talks of the Master as recorded in my note-book. The edition of 2,000 went in no time and a second one of 5,000 was duly ordered. A detailed official report later put out constitutes a record of the proceedings. We have also a panoramic photograph taken on the steps of the Post Office, just across the street from the Hotel McAlpin, which serves as a graphic exhibit.

In conjunction with the Convention, a banquet was held in the hotel a few days earlier which in many ways was as inspiring as the Convention itself. The guests included many personalities of note in New York who gave outstanding talks. Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, Rector of the Church of the Ascension on lower Fifth Avenue, will always have a niche of his own in Bahai annals, because of the fact that he was the first minister in this country to invite Abdul Baha to give an address from his pulpit. Dr. Grant spoke in a beautiful and poetic manner, saying that introspection and communion in a garden marked the beginnings of the Bahai Cause. It became the religion of a prison. Now it must go forth into the practical affairs of men and rear the structure of the divine civilization.

Mr. Topakyan, Persian Consul General in New York, spoke of the deep feeling which every true man and woman experiences in honoring Abdul Baha, who has devoted his life to the enlightenment of his fellow men. Dr. William Norman Guthrie, of St. Marks in-the-Bowerie, pointed out that even as Christianity had brought a new power, a new passion, a new perspective which gave life to the ideal thoughts of the past, So the Bahai movement is bringing a new power to the great social program, and unity and fusion to the many splendid individual thoughts of past and present. Khalil Gibran, Syrian poet and artist, spoke of the appearance of the Prophet, the seer, who comes from time to time in history to string again the heavenly instrument, and Mr. Alfred Martin of the Ethical Culture Society of New York summed up the value of the Cause in the following succinct words:

I am drawn to this movement because it is not a sect, but it fellowship. While the vast Christian church is but a sect, the vaster Buddhist church is but a sect, the little Bahai movement is no sect at all, but a fellowship; because it lives not for a sectarian end, but rather for the purpose of serving as a leaven through which the world shall be helped to live up to the level of its own highest and noblest ideals. May I express my very fervent hope that you of the Bahai movement will remain true to your present distrust of organization.

ای حواریین بهسا، الله روحی لکم افعلوا نفس بیکم موعود در کتاب
 نفوس برت بخود تغییر گشته یعنی خود آسمانی و مقصود از جنود آسمانی
 نفوسی هستند که بجای از عالم برتریت بشیخ و منتقب نفوس مکتوبه
 و پاک آسمانی گشته اند این نفوس الله شمس حقیقت اند
 که آفتابی را روشن نمایند و هر یکش صوری در دست و نفع و حیات
 بر آفتابی میدهند از صفات برتریت و عالم طبیعت نجات یافته
 متعلق با خلاق الهی گردند و بجنب نجات دهانی شوند مانند حواریین
 مسیح که ملواند مسیح شوند این نفوس نیز ملواند حضرت بهسا، اند گردند
 یعنی محبت بهسا، الله جهان ستوی بر اعضا و اجزاء دار کائنات آنها گردد
 بگر عالم برتریت را حکم نماید .

این نفوس جنود الهی هستند و فاتح شرق و غرب اگر نفوس از
 این نفوس توجیه بجتنی نماید و ذلالت بملکوت الهی کند جمیع قوای معنویه و
 قائمه است بر تافته معنویه و ظهور او گردد و در سلطنته و سلطنته

A page from the book of "The Divine Plan" in Persian script as copied by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab, beginning : "O ye apostles of Baha-O-Llah".

"To the believers of God and the maid-servants of the Merciful of the Bahai Assemblies in the United States of America and Canada!
 Upon them be Baha'o'llah El Abha!

He is God!

"O ye apostles of Baha'o'llah - May my life be a ransom to you!

"The blessed Person of the Promised One is interpreted in the Holy Book as the Lord of Hosts, i. e., the heavenly armies: By heavenly armies those souls are intended who are entirely freed from the human world, transformed into celestial spirits and have become divine angels. Such souls are the rays of the Sun of Reality who will illumine all the continents. Each one is holding in his hand a trumpet, blowing the Breath of Life over all the regions. They are delivered from human qualities and the defects of the world of nature, are characterized with the characteristics of God, and are attracted with the Fragrances of the Merciful. Like unto the apostles of Christ, who were filled with Him, these souls also have become filled with His Holiness Baha'o'llah, i. e., the love or Baha'o'llah has so mastered every organ, part and limb of their bodies, as to leave no effect by the promptings of the human world.

"These souls are the Armies of God and the conquerors of the East and the West. Should one of them turn his race toward Rome direction and summon the people to the Kingdom of God, all the ideal forces and lordly confirmations will rush to his support and reinforcement. He will behold all the doors open and all the strong fortifications and impregnable castles razed to the ground. Singly and alone he will attack the armies of the 'world, defeat the right and left wings of the hosts of all the countries, break through the li es of the legions of all the nations and carry his attack to the very center or the powers of the earth. This is the meaning of the Hosts of God.

"Any soul from among the believers of Baha'o'llah who attains to this station, will become known as the Apostle of Baha'o'llah. Therefore strive ye with heart and soul — so that ye may reach this lofty and exalted position, be established on the throne of everlasting glory, and crown your heads with the shining Diadem of the Kingdom, whose brilliant jewels may irradiate upon centuries and cycles.

"O ye kind friends! Uplift your magnanimity and soar high toward the apex of heaven — so that your blessed hearts may become illumined more and more, day by day, through the Rays of the Sun of Reality, i.e., His Holiness Baha'o'llah; at every moment the spirits may obtain a new life, and the darkness of the world of nature may be entirely dispelled — thus ye may become incarnate light and personified spirit, become entirely unaware of the sordid matters of this world and in touch with the affairs of the Divine World.

The same posts from the book of "The Divine Plan" in English as distributed at the close of the Eleventh Bahai Convention held in New York April 1919.

106

At the banquet, besides the distinguished guests, the outstanding personalities in the Cause took part also; but in the Convention itself, all the addresses were given by Bahais, such as Mr. Mountford Mills, Mr. Louis I. Gregory, Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Rev. Albert R. Vail, Mr. Harlan Foster Ober, Mr. William H. Randall, Mr. Joseph H. Hannan, Mr. Hooper Harris, Mr. Howard Ives, Mrs. May Maxwell and many others.

In this manner was conducted the Eleventh Bahai Convention — the Convention of the Divine Plan. It was carried on in accordance with the wishes of Abdul Baha and remains to this day the high-water-mark of public Bahai activity. Actually, we well may call it the Convention of Reconciliation for so it was. Through the spirit of the Master, through the power of his Tablets, through his support by cablegrams and letters and through the fervent cooperation of those who loved him — those who understood the Cause as he taught it, the impossible had been accomplished and the Bahais were get again on the path of unity and service.

Such was the Convention in fact and implication for the future, but the road had been hard; many a time the outcome had wavered in the balance and from first to last, I was walking on thin ice.

My main difficulty was in myself presenting the Tablets at the Convention even as I had been commanded by the Master. The moving spirits in the "Orthodox Party" thought that the Tablets should be read by different persons in succession, for they openly doubted the authority which I claimed and even the authenticity of my credentials. My translation of the Tablets was likewise questioned, the addresses which I intended to give were objected to, and when the press came out with references to me as the "Ambassador of Abdul Baha," the cup of their exasperation overflowed.

In addition to the personal element which actuated so much suspicion in my regard, there was also the certainty of what I intended to do. To put it in one word, it was "Reconciliation," no more, no less; and this was the last thing desired by those who had created and firmly established the Bahai Committee of Investigation.

On the morning of the second day of the Convention, I appeared at request before the National Executive Board and was put through the third degree, the points in question being the following: my authority; my tablet of permission from Abdul Baha; my rumored repudiation of the Report of the Bahai Committee of Investigation; my unyielding determination to unveil the Tablets one by one, according to the Master's instructions; the elimination which I had engineered of certain individuals from important committees; the "undignified and flamboyant" publicity; the use of the Tablets of Abdul Baha to "lionize myself"; my "socialistic and communistic tendencies," and my repeated allusions to a coming era of Reconciliation. A few members of the Executive Board, who had been caught up in the spirit of tolerance and liberality, which I had tried to impart and which was now coming in frequent messages from the Holy Land, watched me in helpless anxiety as the inquisitorial flames rose high and menacing.

107

Fortunately for me, my hide contained an element of asbestos, and my tongue a coating of honey, I answered back question after question, not defiantly, but with assurance and truth. My opponents were discomfited, but not beaten. I watched them as they shifted in their chairs, exchanging glances, and in a flash read what was going on at the back of their minds. "Come friends" I assured them, "Don't feel awkward about it. Play your trump card."

What is that? ", the inquiry came in a cold voice.

"Are you not thinking of an alleged confidence which Abdul Baha made to a lady in Chicago. The words being: 'Don't trust Ahmed Sohrab'?"

"Do you claim to be a mind reader?" I was asked.

Not at all" I answered. "It is as plain as two and two. For eight years I have heard about this confidence. News of it has travelled from coast to coast, and across the Atlantic and Mediterranean. It is an underground pass-word. Every Bahai knows it, even I, for I have translated it to the Master in numberless letters written to him. So, when I looked at you a minute ago, I couldn't help seeing that old slogan written on your faces."

They remained silent, and I continued:

"Now, I propose that this message has been circulated for the last time. The cable office is open. Write out the following, addressed to Abdul Baha. 'Mrs. True of Chicago claims that you warned her in secret: Do not trust Ahmed Sohrab. Is this so?' And if the answer comes back: 'it is so.' I will retire from the Convention and leave all its affairs in your hands."

This demand took immediate effect. The committee as it whole, blanched, wavered and broke up. Needless to say, the cablegram was not sent. Undoubtedly, I had scored a victory, but equally certain is it that I had not come to the end of my troubles.

At one of the afternoon sessions of the Convention, in the presence of the delegates and the Bahai community, I was put on the carpet in a more public manner, the main objection being that it was I who was reading the Tablets to the audience night after night. Why not some one else? At any rate, I did not have to add historical data on how, and when, and where the Tablets had been revealed; and then who knew whether or not I had incorporated some of my own words in this Holy Writ and were all the time playing a dastardly trick on the whole Convention!

108

Chiefly, my newspaper title: "Ambassador of Abdul Baha" rankled. Was it I who had put forward such a claim, and, if so, on what authority? I was asked to make a public recantation in the very newspapers which had printed these articles.

Here Mr. Louis Gregory spoke in my defense, something along this line: He did not see anything wrong in the title. Kings and presidents sent ambassadors to foreign parts, and was not Abdul Baha a spiritual king? Whether Abroad Sohrab is called an ambassador, or a representative, or a messenger, it is all the same. He has come to us from our Master, from whom we have been waiting to receive news, lo, these many years of war. Mr. Gregory felt that he had witnessed in me signs of humility and devotion to the Cause. I was very grateful to him at that moment,

But the demands continued, unceremoniously; then my character went up for dissection, while I sat quietly in my seat in the audience, wondering if it was really I who was the cause of no much tumult. Of course Mr. Joseph Hannen spoke for me, he always did; and my other friends felt for me, they always did; but the opposition was so overwhelming, it had been gathering force ever since I had set foot in America, and the stakes were very high. If the Convention continued in the spirit in which it was going, all the work of the Bahai Committee of Investigation, and its plans for the future, would be set at naught. It amounted to that and to nothing less.

At last the Chairman of that session turned to me and asked if I had anything to say in my defense, and I slowly arose from my seat and began speaking from the floor. According to my notes taken down later (and my memory was in the pink of condition at that time), my argument ran as follows:

"As an opening statement, I must confess that I am no lawyer. The most friendless criminal would not accept my services; but I can tell a story. You see, when at a very early age I was driven from my home in Esphahan, because I was a Bahai — and Bahais are not liked in Persia (it seems that they are not liked anywhere). I was forced to earn my living in some way, as I wandered from hill-village to hill-village, and so I told stories to the people and they rewarded me with food and presents. Therefore, as my talent lies in this direction, and forgetting that this gathering which I thought was a feast of love has assumed the aspect of a court of justice, I will just tell you a story.

109

Not long ago (yet it seems like hundreds of years), there came to this country a Wise Man from the East. Maybe you saw his picture in the newspapers; maybe you remember his name — a strange one to American ears. In English, it means the Servant of God; in Persian, it is Abdul Baha.

Now this visitor to our shore taught an unusual and unwanted doctrine, namely: Universal Tolerance, Universal Charity, Universal Love, and he passed through the length and breadth of the land summoning all men and all women to the Kingdom of God. Thousands heard his message; hundreds acclaimed and followed him, and a few believed in him.

When the Servant of God had completed his mission in this country, he returned home, taking with him a boy whom he had befriended in the East at an earlier time and found again here; and in the Holy Land, he educated this boy and trained him for work that lay ahead.

